
The questions which the court refused to give were intended to elicit from the jury findings of fact relating to the care exercised by the motorman. No. 2 related to his sounding the bell and slowing down his car upon approaching the wagon. There was no conflict in the evidence as to the ringing of the bell, the driver admitting that he heard the gong, and there was no denial of the motorman's statement that he slowed down his car. No. 3 asked at what speed the car was moving when the motorman first noticed the wagon. There was no substantial conflict in the evidence as to this. No. 4 inquired whether or not the driver of the wagon turned off the track to the right when the car approached. If the answer to this had been that "he did," then No. 5 was a request that the jury find whether he drove far enough to one side of the track to enable the car to pass without striking the wagon. If the answers to the last two questions justified the motorman in passing the wagon, then No. 6 requested the jury to answer whether he increased the speed of the car. Again, if the preceding question had been so answered that it might be assumed that the wagon passed far enough to the right to escape the car, No. 7 asked: "Did the motorman suppose that he would be given the right of way and allowed to pass the wagon?" Presupposing all these matters except the last to be answered in accordance with defendant's theory, No. 8 inquired: "Did the motorman sound his gong to give warning of the fact that he was about to pass said wagon?" No. 9, presupposing the same answers to the preceding questions, asked: "Was the said wagon turned back across the defendant's said track in such close proximity to the defendant's car that a collision could not have been avoided?" Based upon the assumption that all the preceding matters had been found in accordance with the evidence on behalf of defendant, No. 16 inquired: "State whether the motorman in charge of the defendant's car threw off his current and reversed his car and applied his brakes and tried to stop the same." Taken with the context—that is, with the series of questions and answers preceding them successively—we are of opinion that all of these questions were so framed as to admit of a plain and direct answer. While the answer to two or three of them taken alone might be immaterial, yet, if the whole series had been answered in favor of defendant, it is apparent that such answers would have been inconsistent with a general verdict in favor of the plaintiff. Considered together, they cover the entire defense of the defendant upon the issue of its own negligence. If all of these questions had been answered favorable to the defendant, and such answers were sustained by uncontradicted evidence, then the defense of "no negligence" would have been established as a matter of law. This rule is declared in substance by instruction Xa as given by the trial court.

The sum of the adjudicated cases bearing upon the relative rights of street cars and citizens traveling in vehicles drawn by horses or other animals is that both have a right to use the street, but neither has the exclusive right. The motorman of a street car is not necessarily obliged to stop his car when he sees a man driving in a vehicle along the line of a railway ahead of the car; but he may continue to run the car in a proper manner until he is conscious of the fact that the driver is unaware or heedless of his danger. When he is thus conscious, it is his duty to use all reasonable care and diligence to avoid running the car into the vehicle. Seeing a man driving along the track, the motorman may assume that he will turn aside and out of the way of the car, but he cannot rest on the assumption so long as to allow his car to reach a point where it will be impossible for him to control his car or give warning in time to prevent injury to the man or vehicle. Galveston City R. R. Co. v. Hewitt, 67 Tex. 473, 3 S. W. 705, 60 Am. Rep. 32; Birmingham v. Bowers, 110 Ala. 328, 20 South. 345; Schneider v. Mobile Light Co., 146 Ala. 344, 40 South. 761. The law seems to be well settled that, where the alleged negligence of a motorman consists of an omission of duty suddenly and unexpectedly arising, such as driving a vehicle suddenly upon the track in front of the car without warning, it is incumbent upon the plaintiff to show that the circumstances were such that the motorman had an opportunity to become conscious of the facts giving rise to the duty, and a reasonable opportunity to perform it before the railway can be held liable on the ground of negligence. Chicago, etc., v. Browdy, 206 Ill. 615, 69 N. E. 571; Hot Springs v. Hildreth, 72 Ark. 572, 82 S. W. 245, 247; Kessler v. Citizens' R. Co., 20 Ind. App. 427, 50 N. E. 891. While of the opinion that the defendant had a right to have the special interrogatories mentioned submitted to the jury, and the failure to do so was error, yet the inferences from the law and record leading to this conclusion do not necessarily sustain appellant's further contention that uncontradicted evidence establishes the defense of no negligence. To reach this conclusion it would be necessary for us to pass upon the weight of the evidence for the respective parties, and this an appellate court will not do.

The refusal of the trial court to give the other special interrogatories, which were addressed to the matter of the contributory negligence or want of care upon the part of the deceased and the driver, has not been especially urged, and so this matter is not passed upon; but, if any interrogatories of this kind are presented upon a new trial being had, it is important that they be addressed to the want of care peculiar to the facts of the case and conform to the doctrine of imputed negligence as hereinabove declared.

The giving of instruction No. 13, if given in the form in which it appears in the record, could not have prejudiced the defendant in any manner, but it is apparent from the language of the instruction itself that it was not given to the jury as printed. The absence of intelligent meaning justifies us in assuming that the learned judge who tried the cause never delivered to the jury such a medley of words, and so we accept the corrected version given by the respondents in their brief as the true instruction delivered. This was not erroneous.

Instruction 3, requested by the defendant, correctly declared the law in accordance with the authorities heretofore cited in discussing the right of the defendant to have certain special interrogatories submitted to the jury. If the jury believed the statement of the motorman, then their verdict should have been for defendant, and instruction 3 is but a request that the law to this effect be given. Instruction 8, requested by defendant, was but a repetition of 3 in a more succinct form. One only need have been given. The same legal propositions were practically covered by two instructions given by the court, but they were stated from the view point of the plaintiff and lacked the directness of statement of defendant's theory that was shown in the instructions refused. While the judgment would not be reversed for this reason alone, we are of opinion that the defendant was entitled to have had one or the other of these instructions given to the jury.

There was no error in the instructions of the trial judge in respect to contributory negligence which was to defendant's prejudice. These instructions were more favorable to the defendant than they should have been. The trial court framed its instructions in this respect upon the theory that the negligence of the driver was to be imputed to the deceased. Being a public expressman driving the deceased along an indicated route to a fixed place to which she directed him to go (the train), she did not exercise such control over him that his negligence could be imputed to her. Little v. Hackett, supra. The defendant was entitled to have the jury instructed that the deceased was required to use ordinary care for her own safety under the circumstances, but not that she must necessarily look or listen, or direct or attempt to control the driver after having selected one whom she had a right to assume to be competent, careful, and prudent, and whom she had not found to be otherwise. Bresee v. L. A. Traction Co., supra.

Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

FIRST NAT. BANK OF AUBURN v. SUPERIOR COURT OF LASSEN COUNTY et al. (Civ. 688.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 31, 1909.)

1. PARTNERSHIP (§ 210*) — RECEIVER — APPOINTMENT—GROUNDS—LEGAL RIGHTS.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 564, subd. 6, providing for the appointment of receivers in all other cases where receivers have been appointed by usages of courts of equity, a receiver may not be appointed for a partnership in an action involving merely legal, as distinguished from equitable, rights, on a showing that the defendants were largely indebted, that their property was subject to labor liens, and would be better conserved by the appointment of receivers, etc.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. § 403; Dec. Dig. § 210.*]

2. RECEIVERS (§ 2*)—AUTHORITY TO APPOINT —STATUTES.

Code Civ. Proc. § 564, affords the sole authority for the appointment of receivers.

3. RECEIVERS (§ 31*) — APPOINTMENT — AUTHORITY—STIPULATION.

Where the court has no statutory jurisdiction to appoint a receiver, authority to do so cannot be conferred by consent or a stipulation of parties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Receivers, Cent. Dig. § 44; Dec. Dig. § 31.*]

4. PROHIBITION (§ 13*)—RECEIVERS—PROCEEDINGS—VACATION—RIGHT TO WRIT.

Where receivers, though illegally appointed for a partnership, had served for nearly a year without objection, and petitioner during that time, with knowledge of all the facts, took no steps to question either the legality or expediency of their appointment, and petitioner did not question either the good faith, conduct, or business ability of the receivers, and to vacate the proceedings would result in a dissipation and waste of the assets, petitioner was not entitled to a writ of prohibition for that purpose.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Prohibition, Cent. Dig. § 62; Dec. Dig. § 13.*]

5. PROHIBITION (§ 10*) — RECEIVERS — VACATION OF PROCEEDINGS—WANT OF JURISDICTION.

Where irreparable injury is resulting from the unauthorized appointment of a receiver, and the injury is a continuing one, and there is no plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law, a writ of prohibition, when seasonably sought, may be had as a writ of right to compel the vacation of the proceedings.

6. PROHIBITION (§ 13*)—RIGHT TO WRIT—NATURE OF REMEDY.

While a writ of prohibition is a legal remedy, it is somewhat similar to the equitable remedy by injunction against proceedings at law, and, being an extraordinary remedy, will not be issued for the purpose of being made an instrument of oppression or injustice or where it will cause a reckless waste of property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Prohibition, Cent. Dig. § 62; Dec. Dig. § 13.*]

7. RECEIVERS (§ 34*) — APPLICATION — INTERVENTION.

Where a receiver is applied for, other creditors of the debtor may intervene and oppose the appointment and appeal from an order erroneously granting it, as authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 963.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Receivers, Cent. Dig. § 52; Dec. Dig. § 34.*]

8. CONTEMPT (§ 10*)—IMPROPER LANGUAGE IN BRIEFS.

A brief filed in the Supreme Court containing matter disrespectful to the trial judge is a contempt of the Supreme Court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contempt, Cent. Dig. §§ 19–22; Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

9. CONTEMPT (§ 10*)—BRIEFS—STRICTURES ON TRIAL COURT.

Petitioner applied for a writ of prohibition to vacate receivership proceedings. The receivers were appointed by the predecessor of the judge who was sitting at the time the writ of prohibition was applied for; the latter having only been called on from time to time without objection to direct the receivers in the discharge of their duties. Petitioner's counsel referred to an order of the judge directing the receivers to deposit certain moneys as conditional security for plaintiff's judgment as without precedent in judicial annals and an original creation of the Lassen county court, and opera bouffe, and also stated that the court's administration through the receivers was a "most covetous and wholly unwarranted usurpation of power." Petitioner, with full knowledge of the receivership proceedings, had undertaken to levy an execution on property in the receivers' hands without notice to or permission of the court, having declined to act on the court's order for a deposit. Held, that such statements were improper, though counsel was permitted to purge himself by a frank disavowal of any intent to be disrespectful to the court or trial judge.

Application for a writ of prohibition to compel the vacation of an order appointing receivers for a corporation and setting aside the proceedings had thereunder. Writ denied.

J. D. Meredith and J. B. Landis, for appellant. Pardee & Pardee, for respondent. Cheney, Massey & Price, amici curiæ.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Prohibition. Plaintiff seeks the writ of this court restraining defendant from obstructing or nullifying the levy of execution issued out of the superior court of Placer county in an action entitled "The First National Bank of Auburn, Plaintiff, v. A. Shadboldt and E. L. Morse, Copartners, Defendants, upon the property of said defendant last named situated in Lassen county, or from a sale thereunder, or from any proceedings under said execution; also, that the order of said court commanding the release of the levy of said execution, and forbidding the sale of any of said defendant's property, be vacated and set aside.

It is set forth in the petition that plaintiff obtained judgment against said Shadboldt & Morse, in the superior court of Placer county, for the sum of $711.50, on June 28, 1909, and on September 28, 1909, execution duly issued out of said court, directed to the sheriff of Lassen county, commanding him to satisfy said judgment out of the property of the defendants in said Lassen county; that thereafter, to wit, on October 20, 1909, the said sheriff levied said execution upon the property named therein in accordance with instructions given him and gave notice that he would sell said property on October 29, 1909. It appears further that, prior to the commencement of said action by plaintiff, to wit, on November 27, 1908, one T. P. Crowder commenced an action in the superior court of Lassen county against the said Shadboldt & Morse for merchandise sold and delivered and for money loaned, amounting in all to $672; that in the complaint in said action, as ground for the appointment of a receiver therein, it was alleged as follows:

"(3) That said defendants are also largely indebted to numerous other persons, including a large number of laborers, on account of labor done and supplies furnished. That the claims of said laborers are all now due and payable, and the claims of nearly all other creditors are also past due. That the said defendants are the owners of a large quantity of lumber; and also own certain accounts against divers and sundry persons and corporations for lumber sold and delivered. That the lumber owned by the defendants is not in condition to be marketed at present, nor is there an immediate market for the same at a fair price. That the outstanding accounts owned by defendants for lumber sold are not yet due and collectible. That said defendants are not able at this time to pay and discharge their said indebtedness, nor are they able to carry on their business and meet their said obligations within a reasonable time. That various of their creditors, particularly the laborers, are in need of the moneys due to them; and it is probable that if some provision is not made for their payment liens will be filed and suits instituted by said laborers, and other creditors will be forced to bring actions for the sums due them. That a multiplicity of suits will result, and the assets of defendants will be wasted and the proceeds dissipated in costs and expenses of litigation. That it is for the best interests of all the parties in interest and of all of the creditors of said defendants that the said business and property should be placed in the hands and under the control of some competent person or persons to act as receivers or receiver, to take charge of said business and manage the same, and to convert the assets of said defendants into money and pay and discharge the claims of all creditors ratably and in conformity with the provisions of law.

"(4) That all of the persons having claims against said defendants for labor and services performed and rendered have agreed in writing that they will waive all their rights to file liens against the lumber belonging to said defendants, and assent to the appointment of O. M. Doyle and T. P. Crowder as receivers for said 'Long Valley Sawmill Company.' That it is the expressed desire of nearly all other creditors of defendants that said persons act as receivers in said matter. That said O. M. Doyle and T. P. Crowder are experienced in the sawmill business, having heretofore been engaged successfully in said business in Long Valley as the owners of the mill and plant now owned by defendants. That the defendants have signified in writing their consent that said O. M. Doyle and T. P. Crowder be appointed as such receivers, and this plaintiff hereby consents to such appointment."

And praying that O. M. Doyle and T. P. Crowder, plaintiff in said action, be appointed receivers therein, "with all the powers given to receivers by statute and the usual course and procedure of courts in equity, and that said receivers be required to apply all the moneys which shall come to their hands as such to the payment of legal claims against said defendants, ratably, and in accordance with law, giving preference to creditors whose claims are by law preferred."

On the same day, to wit, November 27, 1908, the court made the following order:

"In the Superior Court, County of Lassen, State of California. T. P. Crowder, Plaintiff, v. Alexander Shadboldt and Edward L. Morse, Copartners Doing Business Under the Firm Name and Style of the Long Valley Sawmill Co., Defendants. In the above-entitled action the plaintiff having made application to me as judge of said superior court for the appointment of O. M. Doyle and T. P. Crowder as receivers in said action, and it appearing to me from the verified complaint herein, and by other evidence, competent and relevant, submitted in support of said application: That plaintiff is a creditor of defendants, and that said action is brought to recover judgment against said defendants for the amount of said indebtedness, and to subject the property of defendants to the payment thereof; that said property of said defendants is in danger of being dissipated and lost; that it is for the best interests of the parties to this action and of all the creditors of said defendants that a receiver or receivers should be appointed to take charge of the business and property of defendants; that said O. M. Doyle and T. P. Crowder are fit and proper persons to be appointed such receivers; and that the consent in writing of the parties to this action for the appointment of said persons as such receivers has been filed with the clerk of this court: Now therefore it is hereby ordered that O. M. Doyle and T. P. Crowder, be and they are hereby, appointed receivers in this action, to take charge of all the property of said defendants, upon their taking the proper oath and executing an undertaking according to law in the sum of $2,500 to the said defendants and the creditors of said defendants. Dated this 27th day of November, 1908. F. A. Kelley, Judge."

The receivers duly qualified on December 10, 1908, and entered upon the discharge of their duties as such, took possession of all the property of said defendants and have ever since retained and now have exclusive possession thereof. It is further alleged that said action, in which said receivers were appointed, has never been brought to trial, and that petitioner "did not at any time consent to ratifying or approving the appointment of said receivers." It is further shown that petitioner, on September 24, 1909, applied by motion in said superior court of Lassen county for an order vacating its order appointing said receivers, "upon the ground that the said court had no jurisdiction to appoint said receivers and also for an order discharging said receivers and for other relief." Said motion was noticed to be heard on all the papers and records in the said action brought in Placer county and the records in the case in which the receivers were appointed and upon the affidavit of G. W. Brundage, cashier of the Auburn bank, petitioner here. In addition to facts already set forth, affiant deposes that neither the firm of Shadboldt & Morse nor the members individually have any property except that in Lassen county now in possession of the receivers, that they are solvent, and their assets exceed their liabilities by more than $3,000, and avers that the receivers are not managing the business to the best advantage of the creditors of said Shadboldt & Morse, but not specifying wherein there has been any failure of duty. It is then set forth that the Auburn bank, on July 6, 1909, obtained a judgment of foreclosure of a chattel mortgage against Shadboldt & Morse in the Lassen county court, for the sum of $2,000, that the mortgaged property was sold under execution pursuant to said judgment for $500, and a deficiency judgment docketed for the sum of $1,903.49, and no part of said last-named sum has been paid and is unsecured.

It appears from the answer of defendant that there was another motion made by the Auburn bank and heard at the same time as the motion last above mentioned, to wit, a motion for an order directing execution to issue out of the Lassen county court and directing the sheriff to levy upon the property of Shadboldt & Morse sufficient to satisfy the said judgment obtained in Placer county and the said deficiency judgment. The hearing of both said motions was reopened, on motion of the receivers, to permit them to offer further evidence in resistance thereof. This order of the court was made October 29, 1909, and said motions of petitioner in said matter have not been set down for hearing, for the reason, as is averred by respondent, that the alternative writ in this proceeding was served upon him a few days thereafter, to wit, November 2d, and as it involves a question of jurisdiction, also involved in said motions, it was deemed best to await the decision of this court. It further appears from the petition herein that upon motion of the receivers, after notice and hearing, to wit, on October 28, 1909, the defendant, respondent herein, made an order directing the sheriff to release the property levied upon by him on said Placer county execution and restraining him from levying upon said property or to sell the same or to execute any execution thereon.

Among the facts not already appearing, the answer sets forth the following: That the Auburn bank is not and never was a party to the action in which receivers were appointed, but that it had actual notice and knowledge of the pendency of said action "shortly after the 27th day of November, 1908," the date of the order appointing the receivers. That on the day of the hearing of the citation above mentioned, to wit, on October 28, 1909, directing the sheriff to release the levy made under petitioner's said judgment, the said receivers offered to "deposit with the court a sum of money sufficient to cover the full amount due to said bank under the judgment upon which said execution was issued, said amount to be held by the court as a special fund out of which the amount of said judgment shall be paid in full in case it shall finally be determined that said bank is entitled thereto," but said offer was rejected by counsel for the Auburn bank. That the court nevertheless made such order, and on October 29, 1909, said receivers made such deposit. It further appears that the Auburn bank obtained judgment in the Lassen county superior court for the foreclosure of its mortgage on certain personal property of Shadboldt & Morse, July 6, 1909, for the sum of $2,000, and on that day took out an ordinary execution and placed the same in the hands of the sheriff, who levied said execution upon the property embraced in the mortgage and sold the same, the bank becoming the purchasers thereof, for the sum of $500, and that thereafter, to wit, October 4, 1909, the bank procured the issuance of an order of sale in said foreclosure action and placed the same in the hands of the sheriff, who, on the 3d day of November, 1909, reported the sale of the same property, the bank becoming the purchaser, for the sum of $2,496. The return of the sheriff states: "Although the said party, the First National Bank of Auburn, took possession of the said property and allowed it to be removed from the place of sale, they refuse to pay the amount bid and claim that they hold a previous sale as the legal sale." It is further shown in the answer that between the dates of the two said sales the bank sold the said property for $2,500; that the bank, on September 30, 1909, caused an execution to issue on the deficiency judgment entered after the first sale, for $1,903.49, and placed the same in the hands of the sheriff, and, since the said resale of said property, has given directions to levy the same upon the sum of $800 deposited as aforesaid with the court, and said sheriff, on November 2, 1909, attempted to make such levy. It is also set forth that since their said appointment the receivers have, "under the direction of the court, taken charge of and conducted and carried on the business of the said defendants Shadboldt & Morse; have collected many outstanding accounts; have sold and converted into money considerable quantities of lumber; by authority of said court have paid all preferred labor claims; and under like authority have manufactured a large quantity of lumber, a considerable portion of which was manufactured to fill special orders and has been sold and disposed of, but some of which remains on hand and is of good merchantable quality." Further answer is made showing faithful performance of duty by the receivers; that they have advanced money which has not been repaid; that they have received no compensation thus far; that a considerable quantity of lumber is now piled at the track of the Western Pacific Railroad Company which can soon be moved to market and sold at fair value; "that, if said receivers are permitted to continue to manage the business of said Shadboldt & Morse, they will, in a short time, be able to dispose of all the property now in their hands at a price proportionate to its actual value, and from the proceeds thereof pay ratably to the creditors of said defendants a large percentage, if not the entire amount of their several claims. But defendant believes that if the petitioner herein is permitted to satisfy its alleged claims in full out of the property of said defendants by forced sale, there will be comparatively little, perhaps nothing, left for other creditors. Wherefore, defendant says that it is neither just, fair, nor equitable that said petitioner should be permitted to levy said executions, or either of them, upon any of the property in the hands of said receivers, but that in good conscience the petitioner should be paid ratably with other creditors. And that therefore the writ of prohibition prayed for ought not to be granted. It may be stated that the judge appointing the receivers is not the present judge of the Lassen county superior court.

We have set forth the facts very fully, for the reason that it is only through their just consideration that we are able to reach what appears to us to be a satisfactory conclusion. The only ground upon which the appointment could have originally rested is that the action of Crowder v. Shadboldt & Morse was one in which "receivers have heretofore been appointed by the usages of courts of equity." Subd. 6, § 564, Code Civ. Proc. It was said in San Jose Bank of Savings v. Bank of Madera, 121 Cal. 543, 54 Pac. 83, 270: "In such a case, involving merely legal, as distinguished from equitable, rights, the law does not authorize the appointment of a receiver" —citing Bateman v. Superior Court, 54 Cal. 285; Scott v. Sierra Lumber Co., 67 Cal. 76, 7 Pac. 131. In Smith v. Superior Court, 97 Cal. 348,[1] an action was brought against a railroad company upon its unsecured promissory notes, and the court held the action to be essentially one at law, and is not changed into a suit in equity, in which a receiver may be appointed, merely because the complaint contains allegations to the effect that the company is insolvent, and that other creditors are threatening to sue it, and that it has no property out of which the plaintiff will be able to satisfy any judgment it may obtain, and that the action is brought in behalf of the plaintiff and all other creditors of the company who are willing to come in as plaintiffs. The court held that the appointment of a receiver in such a case is unauthorized and void, and will be annulled on certiorari, if the proceedings are commenced in due time.

In Bateman v. Superior Court, 54 Cal. 288, which was an action in ejectment, the court said that, "if it had been intended to confer the power to appoint an officer of that character (a receiver) in an action at law for the recovery of the possession of real property, it is not credible that the Legislature would not have said so in terms, since it is apparent that it was their purpose to specify all cases, whether at law or equity, in which receivers could be appointed." We must look alone to section 564, Code Civ. Proc., for authority to appoint a receiver. French Bank Case, 53 Cal. 495; White v. White, 130 Cal. 597, 62 Pac. 1062, 80 Am. St. Rep. 150. Where the court has no authority to appoint a receiver, such authority cannot be conferred by consent or stipulation of the parties. Baker v. Varney, 129 Cal. 564, 62 Pac. 100, 79 Am. St. Rep. 140. See, also, Scott v. Hotchkiss, 115 Cal. 89, 47 Pac. 45.

If the question had properly come to us at the inception of the proceedings, we should have felt compelled to hold the appointment unauthorized. But there is something more to the case as it now stands than the naked question of power to make the appointment originally. The question now is: Must we, under the circumstances disclosed, order a revocation of the appointment regardless of the probable disastrous consequences to all the other creditors, that petitioner may be preferred to them and be made secure against possible loss? Must we wholly ignore what has happened since the appointment to seriously affect the relation of the creditors generally to the property of Shadboldt & Morse? Plaintiff insists that the matters to which we are about to call attention are immaterial and in no wise affect the question of jurisdiction. But they obtrude themselves upon our consideration, not as affecting that question, but as to whether we should accord the relief sought—whether plaintiff is in a position to demand the writ as matter of right.

It appears that plaintiff had knowledge of the appointment of the receivers shortly after the order was made. For nearly a year it made no objection to the appointment and took no steps to call in question either its legality or expediency. With knowledge of the appointment and of the powers thereby conferred, it must be charged with knowledge of the acts and proceedings of the receivers, and, having failed to oppose or in any way obstruct their action, as such, we must presume consent to and acquiescence therein. Plaintiff, in its brief, says that it does not challenge the good faith or good conduct of the receivers, nor their management, nor business ability. "The fact," says plaintiff, "that the lumber cannot be sold now without being sold at a loss in order to satisfy petitioner's execution, does not furnish light, but only levity, upon the question and the only question in this proceeding involved, i. e., the jurisdiction of the superior court of Lassen county to appoint the receivers." Plaintiff seems to be obsessed with the thought that, where a receiver has been appointed in an action at law, no state of circumstances whatever to which it has itself contributed can ever make prohibition the remedy to nullify the appointment—other than a writ of right, granted ex debito justitiæ, leaving no discretion with the court. Under circumstances where irreparable injury is resulting from the unauthorized appointment of a receiver and the injury is a continuing one, and there is no plain, speedy, or adequate remedy at law, and the writ is sought seasonably, the court should not regard itself as clothed with discretion, but should treat prohibition as a writ of right. Such was the case of Havemeyer v. Superior Court, 84 Cal. 327, 24 Pac. 121, 10 L. R. A. 627, 18 Am. St. Rep. 192, where the appointment was stoutly resisted before it was made and its annulment was sought immediately after it issued. In the case giving rise to the writ, the receiver was not appointed so much for the purpose of management and control of the defendant's property and to preserve it for the stockholders and creditors as it was, avowedly, by way of punishment and to so scatter and dissipate the property as to make its further operation as a sugar refinery impossible. In speaking of the writ of prohibition as an appropriate remedy for the removal of a receiver appointed by a void order, when the writ is directed to the court appointing him, the court said in the Havemeyer Case: "If its action is not completed and ended, its further proceedings may be stayed, and, if necessary for the purpose of affording complete and adequate relief, what has been done will be undone." Such is not the case here, for there is no showing made that it is "necessary for the purpose of affording complete and adequate relief" that the acts done should be undone. The receivers in the case here were appointed, admittedly, for the very opposite purpose avowed in the Havemeyer Case and, concededly, have faithfully managed the debtors' property. For nearly a year, without question from plaintiff or any other creditor, they have conducted the debtors' business of manufacturing and selling lumber to the best advantage for the creditors; they have paid numerous perferred labor claims; collected outstanding accounts due the debtors; sold lumber, paid expenses, and have the business now about closed up, with lumber piled at the railroad track (the Western Pacific) ready for shipment to market as soon as traffic on that road opens, sufficient, as respondent shows, to nearly, if not quite, pay all creditors in full. Plaintiff avers that the property exceeds the debts by over $3,000. To annul and declare void the receivership, after this lapse of time of unquestioned administration, upon the theory, now urged by plaintiff, that it has no validity, and that all acts done under it are void, for the sole purpose of enabling plaintiff by its executions to take possession of and sell the remaining property at a time and under conditions which would in all probability lead to a sacrifice of much of its real value, we think would be unconscionable. Furthermore, it is not to be supposed that the other creditors would sit idly by and witness the successful conclusion of plaintiff's efforts, should the writ issue, but would at once resort to the bankrupt court, which would be followed by a receivership not more promising than the one now in operation. Inevitably, litigation would ensue growing out of alleged illegal acts of the receivers, and the wreck of the debtors' assets may well be conceived as the ultimate outcome. The writ of prohibition is classed among legal remedies, but there are points of similarity between the remedy thus afforded and the remedy of courts of equity by injunction against proceedings at law. Being an extraordinary remedy, the writ should not be made the instrument of injustice or oppression or reckless waste of property which it is its office to conserve and protect. Whether or not plaintiff's acquiescence and long delay in challenging the validity of the appointment and the proceedings under it amount to a technical estoppel of which the creditors may avail themselves, we think the facts justify us in refusing aid through the extraordinary remedy of prohibition.

There are other inequitable features of plaintiff's conduct, which, though plaintiff contends they are superfluous and immaterial, if not impertinently thrust into the case, we cannot disregard. Plaintiff took out an ordinary execution on its judgment of foreclosure, sold the mortgaged property under the writ, and bid in the property for $500, and caused a deficiency judgment to be entered for $1,903.49. It later had an order of sale issue in the foreclosure proceeding and sold the same property, itself again becoming the purchaser, for the sum of $2,496. It afterwards sold the same property for $2,500, —a fact not material except to show that plaintiff got full value for its purchase. It now seeks to have execution enforced not only for its Placer county judgment, but the deficiency judgment of $1,903.49. It cannot be pretended that this is just or fair; but it is contended that it may legally be worked out, and must be, because the writ must issue as of right invalidating the appointment of the receiver. After plaintiff had found its levy of its execution on the Placer county judgment ineffective, because the property levied upon was in the custody of the court through the receivers, it appeared in the action of Crowder v. Shadboldt & Morse by motion challenging the validity of the appointment made by the court and demanding its annulment. This motion is still pending. Non constat but it may be granted, and plaintiff thus obtain the relief by the motion prayed for. It is suggested as improbable that it will be granted, and, as there is no appeal from an order refusing to discharge a receiver, the pending motion will furnish no such speedy, plain, or adequate remedy as is contemplated by section 1103, Code Civ. Proc. Let this be granted. There was, however, a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy open to plaintiff when the receivers were applied for or when they were appointed, by intervening as a creditor and making itself a party to the action, thus placing itself in the position to appeal from the order of appointment, from which there is an appeal. Code Civ. Proc. § 963. Plaintiff makes no explanation of its failure or neglect to avail itself of this remedy. Its conduct in this particular, hereinbefore commented upon, would seem to indicate that it held aloof in the belief that the appointment of receivers would be to the advantage of all concerned, itself included, reserving to itself the right at any time to have the proceedings annulled. But, whatever its motive, it had knowledge of the appointment before the receivers had entered actively upon their duties or had taken any steps not easily retraced without causing the embarrassments and complications which must inevitably ensue should the writ now be granted.

It may not be amiss to note that the trial court has in possession a sum sufficient to discharge the Placer county judgment, and to be used for that purpose, paid in by the receivers under order of the court, subject only to the condition that it should finally be determined that "the bank is entitled thereto." The bank refused its consent to this order and subsequently attempted to levy upon this money in satisfaction of its said deficiency judgment.

The case thus stands in this situation: So far as we know, all the creditors, save plaintiff, virtually came into the proceedings, and plaintiff, by its consent and acquiescence, placed itself in like attitude which it maintained for almost a year. After much business had been transacted and the affairs of the debtors closed up to a point where little remains to be done, plaintiff comes in, ignoring its long acquiescence, and would destroy equality and accomplish partiality by the overthrow of everything done on reliance of its implied consent. It seems to us that the maxim, "He who seeks equity must do equity," finds appropriate application.

Counsel for respondent have moved the court to strike the brief of petitioner from the files for its alleged "disrespectful and contemptuous references to and insinuations against the superior court of Lassen county and the judge thereof," which, it is claimed, also constitute contempt of this court. The Supreme Court has held that a brief filed in that court containing matter manifestly disrespectful towards the trial judge is to be deemed contempt of the appellate court. Friedlander v. Sumner G. & S. M. Co., 61 Cal. 116; Sears v. Starbird, 75 Cal. 91, 16 Pac. 531, 7 Am. St. Rep. 123.

In their brief counsel for plaintiff, referring to the order of the court directing the receivers to deposit certain money as conditional security for plaintiff's Placer county judgment, spoke of the procedure as without "precedent in judicial annals; it is an original creation of the Lassen county court. It is opera bouffe." Again, a portion of respondents' answer is referred to as "a gratuitous recitation of a tale of woe that might elicit sympathy somewhere, somehow, sometime, save in a court of justice." Again, the answer is referred to as containing a "galaxy of grievances" and as "an imposition upon the patience and credulity of a court." Again, "the appointment of the receivers by that court and the tenacious retention of the custody of the defendants' property by the court and the administration of it by and through the receivers, seems, to put it mildly, a most covetous and wholly unwarranted usurpation of power." Upon his admission to the bar, every person is required by law to take an oath to "faithfully discharge the duties of an attorney and counselor." Code Civ. Proc. § 278. And, among such duties, the statute prescribes the following: "To maintain the respect due to the courts of justice and judicial officers." Code Civ. Proc. § 282. Recalling the fact that when the present judge of the Lassen county court took office in January, 1909, he found the receivership in operation, and was, with plaintiff's acquiescence, called upon from time to time, without objection from any one, to direct the receivers in the discharge of their duties for many months; and when it is recalled that plaintiff, with full knowledge of the proceedings, undertook to levy execution on property in the hands of the receivers without notice to or permission of the court—it becomes apparent that the references made by counsel to the action of the court are gratuitous and are without the slightest warrant or justification. Under the circumstances, to say that the action of the court was "a most covetous and wholly unwarranted usurpation of power," and to characterize it also as "opera bouffe," we regard as highly disrespectful to the court and the judge, and, but for the apparently frank disavowal of any intention to be disrespectful and the expressions by counsel of sincere respect for the trial judge, we should feel disinclined to treat the offense as venial. We, however, felt ourselves compelled to take notice of the matter that counsel might not assume this court to be indifferent to the observance of the amenities and courtesies which should characterize the conduct of both bench and bar toward each other.

The writ is denied.

WILSON v. CRABTREE et al. (Civ. 765.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. Jan. 3, 1910.)

PRINCIPAL AND AGENT (§ 69*) — ACTS OF AGENT—ADVERSE CLAIMS.

Decedent, who was the owner of certain corporate stock, being about to go to Europe, appointed his sister his agent, and deposited to her credit $5,000 to pay assessments on the stock, if any. While decedent was abroad the sister paid out of the money so deposited about $3,735 in assessments, collected dividends on other stock owned by decedent, but failed to pay a later assessment, and purchased the stock at a delinquent sale in her own right for $10.

Held, that she could not set up title to the stock in herself as against her brother's estate.

Appeal from Superior Court, Marin County; Thos. J. Lennon, Judge.

Action by Edgar M. Wilson against Lotta Crabtree and others and against Sophia C. Livesey, as administratrix with the will annexed of Edwin Fretwell, deceased. From a judgment finding the decedent to be the owner of the property in controversy and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, filed by defendant Livesey, she appeals. Affirmed.

E. B. Martinelli, for appellant. Powell & Dow, for respondent Wilson. John Flournoy, for respondent Crabtree. Barclay, Henley, Perry & Evans, for respondent Fretwell. Jos. K. Hawkins, for respondent Sawyer.

COOPER, P. J. This action was brought to determine the ownership of 747 shares of the capital stock of the Belvedere Land Company, a corporation. The court found the title to the said stock to be in the estate of Edwin Fretwell, deceased, and that the said estate at the times named in the complaint was and is the owner of the said stock, subject to the lien of the plaintiff Wilson thereon for the sum of $9,790, besides interest for moneys advanced by said Wilson upon said stock, the stock being pledged to him as security for said advances. Defendant Sophia C. Livesey has appealed from the judgment and from the order denying her motion for a new trial, upon the sole ground and contention that the evidence is insufficient to support the finding of the court as to the ownership of the stock. We have carefully examined the evidence, and we not only find it sufficient, but we cannot see how the court could have arrived at any different conclusion therefrom.

The appellant, at the time she claims to have purchased the stock for a delinquent assessment in her own right for herself for the sum of $10, had been the agent of her sister, Mrs. Fretwell, and of Edwin Fretwell in his lifetime, while they were abroad during the last illness of Edwin Fretwell. Prior to the departure of deceased and his wife for Europe the evidence shows that deceased was the owner of the stock and deposited over $5,000 to the credit of appellant in a bank in San Francisco, which she drew for her own purposes and for the purpose of paying assessments upon this stock. She paid assessments upon it out of the moneys so deposited amounting to $3,735. She collected the dividends on other stock owned by deceased, and paid a third assessment upon this stock. When Edwin Fretwell died abroad the appellant, at the request of her sister, was appointed administratrix with the will annexed of the estate. It is clear that she had no right under the circumstances to purchase the stock at delinquent sale and set up title in herself.

BETTENS v. HOOVER. (Civ. 678.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. Dec. 30, 1909. Rehearing Denied Jan. 27, 1910; Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 28, 1910.)

1. Landlord and Tenant (§ 291*) — Termination of Term—Holding Over—Necessity of Notice.

The three days' notice in writing, required to be given to the tenant by Code Civ. Proc. § 1161, subd. 2, when he continues in possession without the landlord's permission after default in payment of rent, is not necessary, in order to bring unlawful detainer, where the tenant holds over without the landlord's consent after termination of his term.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. § 1218; Dec. Dig. § 291.*]

2. Landlord and Tenant (§ 291*)—Unlawful Detainer — Actions — Parties Plaintiff.

In an action for unlawful detainer by the assignee of the lessor against the lessor's tenant for holding over after his term, neither the original lessor nor the assignee's subsequent lessee were necessary parties plaintiff.

3. Landlord and Tenant (§ 86*)—Renewal—Exercise of Option—Effect.

Where a lease gives the lessee the option to renew for a stated term at the same rental, timely notice of election to renew extends the term.

4. Landlord and Tenant (§ 86*)—Renewal—Waiver of Right.

While, where the lease gave the lessee the option to renew, and to pay as high a rent as was offered by other parties, the lessor should, after receiving notice of the exercise of the option, give the lessee notice of any offer from others so that he might make an equal offer, the lessee, by refusing to make an offer equal to that which he was notified was made by another, repudiated his general offer to renew under the option and terminated his rights thereunder.

5. Landlord and Tenant (§ 291*)—Unlawful Detainer—Actions—Allegations of Complaint.

The complaint, in an action of unlawful detainer, alleged defendant's holding under a lease which gave him the option to renew for a two year period if he paid as high a rent as was offered by others, and further alleged that defendant notified plaintiff of the exercise of his option, and that another offered plaintiff a higher rent, which was the reasonable rental value of the property, of which offer plaintiff notified defendant. Held, under the allegations of the complaint, that it must be assumed that the offer to plaintiff by such other was made in good faith, and not to defeat defendant's option to renew.

7. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 291*)—UNLAWFUL DETAINER—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action of unlawful detainer for holding over after the term under a lease which gave the lessee an option to renew upon paying a rent equal to that offered by others, evidence held to sustain a finding that an offer made to plaintiff by another, and accepted, was made in good faith, so as to require the lessee to make an equal offer to be entitled to renew.

8. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 291*)—UNLAWFUL DETAINER—BURDEN OF PROOF—AFFIRMATIVE MATTER.

In an action of unlawful detainer for holding over after the term, under a lease which gave defendant the option to renew at a rent equal to that offered by others, a defense that an alleged offer to the lessor by another was not made in good faith, but merely to defeat defendant's right to renew at the old rent, was affirmative matter which defendant must prove.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; John E. Richards, Judge.

Action by Albert Bettens against S. M. Hoover. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Nicholas Bowden, for appellant. C. T. Bird (Charles Clark, of counsel), for respondent.

HALL, J. This is an action in unlawful detainer. Plaintiff recovered judgment for the possession of the premises and damages, and defendant has appealed from the judgment and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

Defendant is the assignee of the original lessee; and plaintiff, by virtue of a lease (which includes the property sued for) from the owners of the property, to plaintiff, for a term of nine years, has succeeded to the rights of the original lessors. Hereafter in this opinion we shall designate the lease under which defendant claims as the "Hoover lease."

The first point relied upon by appellant is that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The complaint does not attempt to state a cause of action for unlawful detainer by a lessee after default in the payment of rent, but is framed upon the theory that defendant is holding over, without the consent of the landlord, after the termination of his term. In such a case the three days' notice, provided for in subdivision 2 of section 1161, Code Civ. Proc., is not required. Earl Orchard Co. v. Fava, 138 Cal. 76, 70 Pac. 1073. The Hoover lease is set out in the complaint. The original term thereof expired on the last day of February, 1908, but the lease contains this provision: "And it is further agreed by the parties hereto that the parties of the second part are to have the privilege of leasing the within described premises for a period of two years, from the expiration of the present lease, provided that they pay as high a rent as is offered by other parties." It is alleged in the complaint that on the 25th day of February, 1908, defendant served upon plaintiff the following written notice: "Notice is hereby given that the undersigned, S. M. Hoover, wishes and intends to exercise the option and privilege of leasing the premises, real property and improvements thereon, hereinafter particularly described for a period of two years from and after the 29th day of February, 1908, and said S. M. Hoover now elects to exercise, and hereby exercises, said option and privilege, by, under, pursuant to and in accordance with the terms and conditions of that certain lease executed," etc. Here the Hoover lease is identified and the premises described. It further appears from the complaint that on the 27th day of February, 1908, one S. P. Hatcher offered in writing to lease from the plaintiff the premises in suit, for the period of two years from and after the 29th day of February, 1908, at the monthly rental of $250, and that thereafter, on the 28th day of February, plaintiff in writing notified defendant of such offer, and that, unless he (defendant) elect to make an offer equal thereto, plaintiff would accept Hatcher's offer, and execute a lease to him at such rent for said term. Defendant made no other offer or attempt to exercise the option given in his lease. Thereafter, on March 3, 1908, plaintiff leased the premises to Hatcher for two years from the 1st day of March, 1908, at a rental of $250 per month conditioned on possession thereof. Prompt notice of this lease was given defendant, and demand made upon him for possession, which was refused. The monthly value of the rents of said premises is alleged to be $250.

Defendant demurred to the complaint upon the ground that the same does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and also upon the ground of defect of parties, in that neither the original lessors nor Hatcher were joined as parties plaintiff. Appellant gives no reason in his brief why the original lessors should have joined in the action, and we see none. Neither does any reason appear why Hatcher was a necessary party plaintiff. The lease to him is conditional upon his being given possession, and the complaint alleges that this has not been done. Appellant contends that it does not appear from the complaint that defendant's term has terminated. This contention is based upon the theory that the notice of election to exercise the option provided for in the Hoover lease had the effect to extend appellant's term for the period of two years. His contention is that the notice of the exercise of the option effected a renewal of the lease for a period of two years, which obligated the appellant to pay the amount of $250 if the offer of Hatcher was bona fide, and, if such offer was not bona fide, that it obligated him to pay the sum provided for in the original term ($80 per month), as no other offers appear to have been made to plaintiff. Where a lease gives to the lessee the option of a renewal for a given term at the same rental, undoubtedly a notice of election given in time is sufficient to extend the term. Andrews v. Marshall Creamery Co., 118 Iowa, 595, 92 N. W. 706, 60 L. R. A. 399, 96 Am. St. Rep. 412; Ewing v. Miles, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 19, 33 S. W. 238; Wiener v. Graff, 7 Cal. App. 580, 95 Pac. 167. But in the Hoover lease the rental was not fixed, but was to be determined by what others might offer. It contemplated the making of a new lease after such offer had been made and the rent agreed upon. The language is: "And it is further agreed by the parties hereto that the parties of the second part are to have the privilege of leasing the within described premises for a period of two years from the expiration of the present lease, provided that they pay as high a rent as is offered by other parties." We think a proper construction of this provision as well as fair dealing required that, after the giving of the general notice of the exercise of the option by the lessee, the landlord should give notice to the lessee of any offer that he had received for the premises, to the end that the lessee might make an equal offer, which, under the provisions of the original lease, would entitle him to a new lease for two years at the rental thus agreed upon. The plaintiff, before the expiration of appellant's original term, gave notice of the offer that he had received, and demanded of the appellant that he make an equal offer, which he refused to do. Assuming the Hatcher offer to be bona fide and made in good faith, the refusal of the appellant to make an equal offer terminated his right under the option. It was in effect a repudiation of his first offer, and terminated his rights thereunder. Main St., etc., v. L. A. Traction Co., 129 Cal. 301, 61 Pac. 937. Upon the face of the complaint we must assume the Hatcher offer to be bona fide and in good faith, especially as it is alleged, and confessed by demurrer, that the amount thus offered is the reasonable value of the rental. The Hoover lease in substance provided that the lessee should have the first refusal of a new lease for two years at such rental as might be offered by others. Notwithstanding the general notice of the exercise of the option, it is plain from the allegations of the complaint that appellant declined to take a new lease at the rental offered by Hatcher. The court did not err in overruling the demurrer.

As to the action of the court in refusing to strike out certain matter from the complaint, appellant simply states that these matters are surplusage, irrelevant, redundant, and state conclusions of law. As to most of the matters we are unable to determine what they are from the record before us. The motion referred to them by lines and pages of the filed documents. The lines and pages do not appear to be the same in the printed transcript. We are thus with few exceptions unable to identify the matter referred to in the motion. As to such as we can identify, we find no prejudicial error, if error at all, in the action of the court.

Appellant in his answer set up that the offer of Hatcher was not made or accepted in good faith, but was made for the purpose of defrauding defendant. The court, however, found that "the bid of said S. P. Hatcher was not made for the purpose of defrauding the defendant Hoover, but was made and accepted in good faith both by plaintiff and said S. P. Hatcher." This finding, as well as some others depending upon it, are attacked as not supported by the evidence. There is but little, if any, conflict in the evidence. What inferences should the court have drawn from the substantially uncontradicted evidence is really the question presented by the record. We have examined the evidence with care, and are free to say that if the court had found that the offer of Hatcher was not made and accepted in good faith, but for the purpose of defrauding defendant, we would have sustained such finding. But from this it does not follow that we are not obliged to sustain the finding made. Where fair and impartial minds may draw different conclusions from the evidence, though there be no conflict in the testimony, it is a case for the jury or trial court to decide. Kelly v. Brown, 8 Pac. 38.

Bettens and Hatcher were both witnesses, and testified to the offer made by Hatcher to Bettens of $250 per month for the premises in suit. The offer was in writing. Subsequently, after the expiration of the original term of the Hoover lease, Bettens executed to Hatcher a written lease, whereby Hatcher bound himself to pay the rent reserved for the period of two years, and gave his check for the sum of $250 for the first month's rental. No attempt was made upon cross-examination to show that Hatcher had been requested by Bettens or any one else to make the offer. It was only shown upon the cross-examination of Hatcher that before making the written offer he had conferred with Bettens. No question was asked him as to his purpose or object in renting the premises. On the other hand, the court found that the rental value of the premises was but $150 per month. It is clear that Bettens was anxious to get rid of the Hoover lease and the tenancy thereunder, and probably had a strong motive therefor. His lease compelled him to make valuable improvements within one year. He desired and intended to build upon the premises as soon as he could get Hoover out, and made statements to that effect before the expiration of the Hoover lease, and subsequently stated to several persons that he would soon have Hoover out. These facts certainly raise a strong suspicion that the offer by Hatcher was procured by Bettens, and was not made in good faith or with any intent or expectation that the lease made in pursuance thereof would be enforced or carried out. We are not prepared to say, however, that the court upon this evidence was obliged to so find. The matter pleaded was affirmative matter, to be proved by defendant.

The judgment and order must be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: COOPER, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

FISHER v. WESTERN FUSE & EXPLOSIVES CO. (Civ. 672.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 628*)—RECORD—TRANSCRIPT—TIME TO FILE.

Appeal will not be dismissed because the transcript was not filed in time, where it was filed agreeably to stipulation.

2. NEW TRIAL (§ 131*)—DESTRUCTION OF BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—STATUTES.

Act March 23, 1907 (St. 1907, c. 537) §§ 1, 2, giving the trial court power in its discretion to grant a new trial, regardless of error, when any proposed bill of exceptions or statement of the case on motion for new trial is destroyed by conflagration or public calamity, and it is deemed impossible by the court to restore the proceedings and settle a bill of exceptions or statement of the case, so the court may review the judgment, has no application where it appears that all the pleadings, papers, records, etc., in the action are in the office of the county clerk, and that the court reporter has made a copy of the transcript, and copies of all these papers and records have been made, so as to enable the party moving for a new trial to prepare a statement of the case.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 548*)—RECORD—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

An order denying a motion for new trial cannot be reviewed where there is no bill of exceptions bringing up the proceedings, on which the order was made, and, although Act March 23, 1907 (St. 1907, c. 537) § 1, provides that in certain cases no bill of exceptions is necessary in support of a motion for new trial, but the motion may be heard, upon affidavit or otherwise, in order to review on appeal the action of the court on the motion, the proceedings duly authenticated should be brought up under the same rule as in other cases, so that the evidence and proceedings upon which the trial court acted will be before the appellate court.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 553*)—REVIEW—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—SETTLEMENT OF.

An appeal from an order dismissing the proceedings for a settlement of a bill of exceptions will be dismissed where not supported by a bill of exceptions, authenticated as required by rule 29 (78 Pac. xii), but only by the transcript showing that no bill of exceptions was settled, and which does not purport to embrace all the evidence, and, so far as shown by the evidence, it cannot be said that the court abused its discretion in granting the motion to dismiss.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 634*)—RECORD—DISMISSAL OF APPEAL.

Where the record is so faulty that no review of the trial court's action is warranted, a motion to dismiss the appeal is the proper method of disposing of the matter.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; F. B. Ogden, Judge.

Action by Xavier Fisher against the Western Fuse & Explosives Company. From an order dismissing the proceedings for settlement of the bill of exceptions, defendant appeals. Dismissed.

G. R. Lukens, for appellant. Reed & Nusbaumer, M. C. Chapman, and A. A. Moore, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. There are three different motions in this case, each taking a separate number. No. 669 (107 Pac. 335) is a motion to dismiss the appeal from the judgment on the ground that no transcript has been filed in time. The transcript, however, was filed agreeably to stipulation, which is a sufficient answer to the first motion. The second motion, No. 671 (107 Pac. 335), is a motion to dismiss defendant's appeal, taken July 29, 1907, from the order of the superior court, made May 31, 1907, denying appellant's motion for a new trial made by it under the act of March 23, 1907 (St. 1907, p. 998), which second motion is, by stipulation, to be considered upon the following grounds: (1) That there exists no record upon which said appeal can be heard or considered; (2) that the papers used and evidence taken on the hearing which resulted in said order are not, and never have been, incorporated in a bill of exceptions. There is a further ground, stated in the notice of motion, to wit, that the proceedings taken by appellant for the settlement of a bill of exceptions were dismissed for want of prosecution February 19, 1909. The third motion, No. 672, is for an order dismissing appellant's appeal from the order of the superior court dismissing the motion of appellant for a new trial, on the grounds: "(1) That there exists no record upon which said appeal can be heard or considered; (2) that the papers used, and evidence taken on the hearing, and which resulted in the making of said order, are not, and never have been, incorporated in a bill of exceptions; (3) that the transcript on file herein contains no bill of exceptions to said order settled, or purporting to be settled, as required by law, or at all; and (4) that said order is a nonappealable order. Said motion will be based upon this notice, upon the transcript on file herein, upon the certificate of John P. Cook, county clerk of said county of Alameda, and upon the affidavit of Stanley Moore, annexed hereto." It was stipulated "that the evidence offered upon the hearing of said motions (the last two), to wit, the certificates of County Clerk Cook, the affidavit of Stanley Moore, and the transcripts, on file in said cause, may be considered upon said motions." There is a transcript on the appeal from the judgment, and a transcript filed in the other two appeals. We discover no difference in them.

The action was for damages to plaintiff's property, resulting from the explosion of defendant's powder magazine in July, 1898. The cause was tried before a jury, and on December 21, 1904, plaintiff had the verdict on which judgment was entered against defendant on December 22, 1904. Defendant served notice of intention to move for a new trial December 30, 1904, and on June 20, 1905, served notice of appeal from the judgment. It appears from the affidavit of defendant's attorney that the statement of the case on motion for a new trial was duly and regularly settled and ordered engrossed. Some delay occurred in the work of engrossment, and the draft statement was destroyed by fire in the office of defendant's attorney in the city of San Francisco during the conflagration of April 18, 1906. On May 22, 1907, defendant filed notice of motion for a new trial under the act of March 23, 1907 (St. 1907, p. 998). This motion purported to be "based upon the annexed affidavit of G. R. Lukens (defendant's attorney), and all the documents, papers, and records now on file in this court in the above-entitled action." On May 27, 1907, Stanley Moore, one of plaintiff's attorneys, filed a counter affidavit, to which Mr. Lukens replied May 31, 1907, and on that day, to wit, May 31, 1907, the court made an order denying "the motion for a new trial under section (chapter) 537 of the statute approved March 23, 1907," and "20 days are allowed by the court in which to prepare a bill of exceptions, and a motion for a new trial on merits is by this court ordered dropped from the calendar, to be reset on five days' notice."

At this point it becomes necessary to examine the provisions of the act of March 23, 1907, under which defendant's motion for a new trial was made. It reads as follows: "Section 1. When any proposed bill of exceptions or statement of the case on motion for a new trial, in action (s) or proceedings, is lost or destroyed by reason of conflagration or other public calamity, and no record of the proceedings upon the trial thereof can be obtained, and such action or proceeding is subject to review by motion for a new trial, pending at the time of such loss or destruction, and it is by the court in which such action or proceeding is pending deemed impossible or impracticable to restore such proceedings (and to settle a bill of exceptions or statement of the case containing such proceedings) so as to enable the court to review the judgment or order therein by motion for a new trial, the court may grant a new trial of such action or proceeding if at the time of such loss or destruction a motion for a new trial be pending therein, and such action or proceeding shall thereupon be tried anew. In order to grant such new trial, it shall be unnecessary to have any bill of exceptions or statement of the case settled, but upon the facts above recited being shown to the satisfaction of the court by affidavit or otherwise, the court shall have power in its discretion to grant such new trial.

"Sec. 2. Pending the hearing of a motion under the preceding section to grant such new trial, the time within which a bill of exceptions might be prepared, served or presented for settlement, shall be extended, and shall not commence to run until the decision upon such motion. (The motion provided for by this act must be made within thirty days after the loss or destruction of such records; provided that in any case now pending such motion may be made at any time within sixty days after the passage of this act.)"

The constitutionality of this act is challenged by respondent (citing Johnson v. Gebhauer, 159 Ind. 271, 64 N. E. 855), but we do not find it necessary to decide the point.

As we understand the act, the trial court is given the power to grant a new trial regardless of any errors which may have occurred at the trial, but this power is discretionary with the court when any proposed bill of exceptions or statement of the case on motion for a new trial is lost or destroyed, by the means mentioned, and no record of the proceedings upon the trial thereof can be obtained, and it is by the court "deemed impossible or impracticable to restore such proceedings (and to settle a bill of exceptions or statement of the case containing such proceedings) so as to enable the court to review the judgment or order therein by motion for a new trial, the court may grant a new trial * * * and such action or proceeding shall thereupon be tried anew." Without stating the facts shown in the affidavits used at the hearing of defendant's motion for a new trial, it appeared, not, however, without some conflict between the statements of counsel, that the trial was held in Alameda county, and that "all the pleadings, papers, records, and files pertaining to said action were and are in the office of the county clerk and clerk of said court in the city of Oakland." It also appeared that the official court reporter had made a copy of the transcript of the proceedings taken in the case, and copies of the above-named papers and records had been made for the purpose of enabling appellant to prepare the statement of the case on its motion. Under this state of facts the court was fully justified in denying the motion, which, had it been granted, would have had the effect to order the case tried de novo in plain violation of the statute. The court, however, allowed defendant 20 days in which to prepare a bill of exceptions, and directed the motion for a new trial to be dropped from the calendar, "to be reset on 5 days' notice." The court appears to have regarded section 2 as giving it authority to set the matter of preparing the bill of exceptions at large with the right to the defendant to proceed with its preparation. It is the motion to dismiss this order denying defendant's motion for a new trial we are first to consider.

There is no bill of exceptions bringing up the proceeding upon which this order was made, and the court dismissed all proceedings looking to that end. It appears, without contradiction, from the moving papers that such is the fact. We have referred to the affidavits and evidence submitted on the hearing of the motion for a new trial as printed in the transcript, but it may be doubted whether, on the present condition of the record, we were authorized even to do that, except for the limited purpose of showing that no bill of exceptions is before us. We are quite convinced that we cannot review the order denying the motion for a new trial except upon a record brought up agreeably to rules 5 and 6 (78 Pac. viii, ix) of the Supreme Court, and authenticated under rule 29 (Id xii), which are rules governing this court, for there is no bill of exceptions in support of the motion. Melde v. Reynolds, 120 Cal. 237, 52 Pac. 491; San Diego Savings Bank v. Goodsell, 137 Cal. 420, 70 Pac. 299; Skinner v. Horn, 144 Cal. 279, 77 Pac. 904; Muzzy v. McEwen, etc., Co., 154 Cal. 685, 98 Pac. 1062; Manuel v. Flynn, 5 Cal. App. 319, 90 Pac. 463; Higgins v. Los Angeles Ry. Co., 5 Cal. App. 748, 91 Pac. 344.

Appellant contends that under the act of March 23, 1907, no bill of exceptions is necessary. It is true that by the act no bill of exceptions is necessary in support of the motion when made to the trial court, as the act provides that the motion may be heard upon "affidavits or otherwise," but to review the action of the court on such motion we think the proceedings, duly authenticated, should be brought up under the same rule as in other cases, and it should appear, as in other cases, that all the evidence and proceedings upon which the trial court acted when making the order should be before the appellate tribunal. The parties have stipulated that, not only the certificate of the clerk and the affidavit of Stanley Moore may be considered upon the motion, but also the transcript. We take this to mean that we may consider whatever we find in the transcript which appears to have been used at the hearing of the motion. So understanding the stipulation, we fail to discover anything which would have warranted the court in granting a trial de novo, and, besides, it does not appear therefrom that all the evidence or records then before the court appear in the transcript.

What has already been said applies to considerable extent to the third motion, next to be considered, to wit, to dismiss the appeal from the order dismissing the proceedings for a settlement of a bill of exceptions. Following the order denying the motion for a new trial, there appears in the transcript what purports to be "Defendant's draft bill of exceptions upon the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial, under and by virtue of the provisions of act of the Legislature entitled 'An act' (giving its title) approved March 23, 1907." This document is a skeleton merely, with here and there spaces to be filled in by copying the documents noted. It was served on plaintiff's attorneys July 19, 1907, who, on July 24, 1907, served certain proposed amendments, subject, however, to the following: "Now comes the plaintiff, and, without waiving its rights to object to defendant's proposed bill of exceptions, or to the settling of any bill of exceptions upon the order referred to, and reserving to itself all ground of legal objection to the sufficiency of said proposed bill of exceptions, proposes the following amendments."

On December 7, 1908, Stanley Moore filed with the clerk an affidavit setting forth at much length the various steps taken in the matter. On December 10, 1908, the clerk served notice on the parties, stating "that the defendant's draft bill of exceptions on the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial, * * * and the plaintiff's proposed amendments thereto, which were heretofore delivered to the clerk of said superior court for the judge in the manner required by law, have been received from the clerk aforesaid by the judge, and upon the application of defendant, the judge this day designated Friday, the 18th day of December, 1908, * * * the time and place at which he will settle the said bill." On December 12, 1908, plaintiff served and filed his motion that on Friday, December 18, 1908, counsel "will move the above-entitled court for an order dismissing the proceedings for the settlement of a bill of exceptions upon the order heretofore made by said court denying defendant's motion for a new trial under the act of March 23, 1907, upon the ground that the defendant has failed to prosecute said proceeding for the settlement of said bill of exceptions with ordinary diligence, and has neglected and abandoned the same. Upon the hearing of this motion, plaintiff will rely upon and use the pleadings, papers, records, and files in the above-entitled action, together with the affidavit of Stanley Moore, which is served herewith and made part hereof, together with the proposed bill of exceptions and amendments thereto upon said order." Mr. Moore's affidavit is a history of the proceedings taken to have the bill of exceptions perfected, and closes with the statement that: "Since said 1st day of August, 1907, no steps whatever have been taken or attempted by the defendant in the matter of said proceeding to settle said bill of exceptions."

On December 17, 1908, Mr. Lukens made an affidavit, appearing in the transcript, marked: "Read into evidence. J. Woolsey, Deputy County Clerk"—in which he sets forth some of the vicissitudes through which the proceedings have passed, but not controverting the statement of Mr. Moore as to there having been no steps taken by defendant since August 1, 1907, to settle the bill of exceptions. On February 19, 1909, the court made the following order: "The motion to dismiss bill of exceptions, and the motion to dismiss defendant's motion for a new trial, coming on regularly this day at 2 o'clock p. m. for further hearing, come now into court [naming counsel]. * * * Certain affidavits are read into evidence by G. R. Lukens, Esq., and both motions are argued by the respective counsel, and submitted to the court for decision. And the court, having considered the argument, and being fully advised in the premises, orders that the motion to dismiss bill of exceptions be granted, to which order defendant excepts. And it is further ordered by the court that the motion to dismiss defendant's motion for a new trial be granted, to which order defendant excepts." Upon the appeal from this order no bill of exceptions, authenticated as required by rule 29, is before us, and nothing in support thereof, except as appears from the transcript, which we have assumed may, under the stipulation, be considered, but which shows conclusively that no bill of exceptions was ever settled. This transcript does not purport to embrace all the evidence before the court at the hearing of the motion, and so far as the evidence shows we cannot say that the court abused the discretion with which it was clothed in granting the motion. There is much in the record before us which shows unnecessary delay in the attempts at settling the statement or bill of exceptions on which the motion for a new trial was to be based. The motion to dismiss the appeal was a proper method by which to dispose of the matter. Spreckels v. Spreckels, 114 Cal. 60, 45 Pac. 1022; Linott v. Rowland, 119 Cal. 452, 51 Pac. 687; Miller v. Thomas, 78 Cal. 509, 21 Pac. 11.

The motion to dismiss the appeal from the order dismissing the proceedings for the settlement of bill of exceptions and dismissing defendant's motion for a new trial is granted.

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Dec. 31, 1909.)

1. STATUTES (§ 206*)—CONSTRUCTION.

The Legislature is not supposed to have used words in vain; and, if possible some effect must be given to all the words of a statute.

2. DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION (§ 1*)—NATURE OF "DESCENT"—"HEREDITARY SUCCESSION."

3. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 14*)—ESTATE BY ENTIRETY—ABOLITION.

The common-law species of joint tenancy between husband and wife, known as tenancy by entireties, was abolished by Civ. Code, §§ 682, 683, by excluding it from the enumeration of the kinds of ownership.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. § 73; Dec. Dig. § 14.*]

4. HOMESTEAD (§ 139*)—RIGHTS OF SURVIVING HUSBAND OR WIFE—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

In Civ. Code 1872, § 1265, providing that after a wife's declaration of homestead on land "the spouses held in joint tenancy and on the death of either, * * * it descends to" the survivor, the term "joint tenancy" was used merely to describe, as nearly as possible, the nature of the estate during the lifetime of both spouses, leaving its devolution on the death of either to be fixed by the succeeding clause, providing for its descent.

5. HOMESTEAD (§ 1*)—PURPOSE OF RIGHT.

The primary purpose of the homestead right is to preserve a home for the protection of the family.

6. HOMESTEAD (§ 139*)—RIGHTS OF SURVIVING SPOUSE.

The homestead statute being chiefly to provide an abiding place for the family so long as it continues as such, and not for the purpose of defining the character of estates or the general qualities of ownership, it should be construed to mean that, on the death of one spouse, the land descends to the other, and in that respect it is a statute of descent.

7. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 99*) — VESTED RIGHTS—HOMESTEAD.

The homestead statute, being a statute of descent, is subject to legislative control, and may be changed or abolished at will, as the right of descent is a mere expectancy, and not a vested right.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 205; Dec. Dig. § 99.*]

8. HOMESTEAD (§ 135*)—RIGHTS OF SURVIVORSHIP—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Under the law in force at the time a wife recorded a declaration of homestead on the land of her husband's separate property (Civ. Code 1872, § 1265; Code Civ. Proc. 1872, § 1474), the homestead, on the death of one of the spouses, vested absolutely in the survivor. Under the law in force at the time of the husband's death, the homestead in land which had been his separate property would go to his heirs, and not entirely to his surviving wife. Held, that the law in force at the death, and not that in force at the time of the declaration, controls the subject of homestead and rights of survivorship.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Curtis D. Wilbur, Judge.

Action by Mary A. Hannon and others, minors, by Catherine Hannon, guardian, against the Southern Pacific Railroad Company and the Southern Pacific Company. Plaintiffs had judgment, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

J. W. McKinley, for appellants. Works & Lee, John D. Works, and Bradner W. Lee, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. The question of law involved on this appeal was submitted to the trial court upon stipulation, and Justice Lucien Shaw, now of the Supreme Court, then on the superior bench, filed a written decision and opinion, which is quoted in the brief of respondents. It is as follows:

"This is an action to recover the possession of the undivided two-thirds of a tract of real estate. The land in question was the separate property of Patrick Hannon, the father of the plaintiffs, at the time of his marriage to Catherine Hannon, the mother of plaintiffs, on June 8, 1874. On June 19, 1874, Catherine Hannon made and recorded a declaration of homestead upon the land in accordance with the provisions of the Civil Code, as then existing; the family then residing thereon. Patrick Hannon died on October 29, 1885, leaving surviving the plaintiffs and Catherine Hannon, his wife. The defendants claim right to the possession of the land under Catherine Hannon, and the plaintiffs claim as the children and heirs at law of said Patrick Hannon. The decision of the case depends upon the decision of the question whether the law governing succession to the homestead is the law in force at the time the homestead declaration was filed, or the law in force at the time of the death of Patrick Hannon. And this question again depends on the effect of the law relating to homesteads in force at the time of the filing of the declaration of homestead. This law consisted of section 1265 of the Civil Code, and section 1474 of the Code of Civil Procedure as enacted in 1872. These two sections were amended in 1874 [St. 1873–74, c. 43], so as to leave them in their present form, substantially, but the amendments did not take effect until July 1, 1874, 12 days after the homestead was filed. The original section (1265) was as follows: 'From and after the declaration is filed for record the land therein described is a homestead; and if the declaration was made by a married person, the land is thereafter by the spouses held in joint tenancy and on the death of either of the spouses, * * * it descends to and the title at once vests in the survivor.' And section 1474, Code Civ. Proc., was as follows: 'The homestead selected by the husband and wife, or either of them, during their coverture, and recorded while both are living, on the death of the husband or wife vests absolutely in the survivor.'

"By the law in force at the time of the death of Patrick Hannon, the land, being his separate property, would go to his heirs, and not entirely to the surviving wife. If, therefore, the provisions of the Codes as they existed in June, 1874, had the effect of giving to Catherine Hannon, at once upon the filing of the homestead declaration, a vested interest in the land constituting the homestead, as a joint tenant with her husband, of such character that it became at that instant a vested right beyond subsequent legislative control, then, of course, the subsequent amendment of the Codes did not affect that right, and upon the death of Patrick in 1885, she, as survivor, became at once vested with the whole estate, or, to use the technical language of common law, the other joint tenant having ceased to exist, she was thenceforth the only person entitled to any part of the estate in the land, and the defendants as her successors are now entitled to possession. And this is the question in the case.

"The Supreme Court of this state has decided the question both ways. In Estate of Headen, 52 Cal. 295, it was held that these provisions of the Code, prior to the amendment of July 1, 1874, were not statutes of descent, but that, on the contrary, their effect was such that a joint estate in the homestead became vested in the husband and wife, which was not affected by the subsequent amendment. In Gruwell v. Seybolt, 82 Cal. 7 [22 Pac. 938], the exact contrary was decided, and it was said that 'the law in force at the time of the death, and not that which was in force at the time of the declaration, controls on the subject of homestead and the rights of survivors.' The latter case, being the latest decision, would ordinarily be considered as the proper rule of decision for the superior courts, but in disparagement of this decision it is correctly said that it does not refer at all to the former decision in Estate of Headen, and that the point was not necessary to the decision of the case. It was involved in the case, however, and it cannot in strictness be called an obiter dictum. But this condition of the decision makes it proper to consider more carefully the previous decisions and the state of the law, and also the reasoning on which the conflicting theories are founded.

"Prior to 1860 the statute did not attempt to state the effect of a homestead upon the title of the land. No declaration was required. The homestead was constituted by residence and selection merely. It was provided that no alienation could be made, or lien placed thereon, without the signature of the wife, and that on the death of the 'head of the family' the homestead should 'be set apart by the probate court for the benefit of the surviving wife and his own legitimate children,' or, failing them, to his heirs. Stats. 1851, 296. Under this law the Supreme Court, in a rather loose manner in several decisions, described the interest of the husband and wife in the homestead as a 'sort of joint tenancy.' Taylor v. Hargous, 4 Cal. 273 [60 Am. Dec. 606]; Cook v. McChristian, 4 Cal. 23; Poole v. Gerrard, 6 Cal. [71, 65 Am. Dec. 481]; Revalk v. Kraemer, 8 Cal. 66 [68 Am. Dec. 304]. In Gee v. Moore, 14 Cal. 472, decided in 1859, Field, C. J., criticises these decisions; says they have not met the approval of the profession and that: 'There is nothing in the nature of the homestead right or privilege which justified its designation as such an estate,' and that 'it is not warranted by any language of the Constitution or the statute.' At the next session of the Legislature this statute was amended, apparently with reference to this decision, for it is provided by the amendment that 'from and after the filing for record of said declaration, the husband and wife shall be deemed to hold said homestead as joint tenants,' and that 'upon the death of either husband or wife the homestead should be set apart by the probate court for the benefit of the surviving husband or wife, and his or her legitimate children.' St. 1860, p. 311. Under this statute it was held that, although section 1 standing alone might create a joint tenancy in the homestead between the husband and wife, with the right of survivorship, yet as modified by section 4 of the same amendment, the children took an interest as successors, and therefore it was a statute of descent, and did not create any joint tenancy. Rich v. Tubbs, 41 Cal. 36; Levens v. Rovegno, 71 Cal. 282 [12 Pac. 161].

"In 1862 [Laws 1862, c. 396] section 4 of the original homestead act was again amended so as to read as follows: 'The homestead property selected by the husband and wife, or either of them, * * * shall upon the death of the husband or wife, vest absolutely in the survivor and be held by the survivor as fully and amply as the same was held by them, or either of them, immediately preceding the death of the deceased.' The effect of the statute after this amendment was under consideration by the Supreme Court in Barber v. Babel, 36 Cal. 11, with reference to the power of the husband alone during the lifetime of both to affect the homestead property by his contracts or conveyances. The opinion does not hold that the statute creates a joint tenancy in the homestead, but it declares that it is not perceived why the right established does 'not approach substantially very near a joint tenancy, although not created in precisely the same way, even if not a technical joint tenancy at common law,' and that 'there is a joint interest in the homestead—a joint holding if not a technical joint tenancy.' And it was held that the interest of each in the homestead could only be divested by the concurrent act of both.

"With the law in this condition the Codes were adopted embracing the provisions first above quoted. The first case construing the Code provisions upon the point here under consideration was Estate of Headen, supra. Although that case gives a much more extended discussion of the point than the later case of Gruwell v. Seybolt, yet I find myself unable to agree with the conclusion reached, or with the reasoning on which it is founded. Speaking with reference to the clause in section 1265 of the original Civil Code that 'the land is thereafter held by the spouses in joint tenancy,' the court in that case says: 'One of the necessary incidents of a joint tenancy is the right of survivorship—the jus accrescendi—and the provision that upon the death of one of the spouses "the title at once vests in the survivor" adds nothing to the legal quality of the estate held by the spouses, but simply declares the result which must necessarily ensue upon the death of one of the joint tenants.' There is a rule of statutory construction which is here ignored, namely, that the Legislature is not to be supposed to have used words in vain, and that, if possible, some effect must be given to all the words. The fact that the words 'it descends to and at once vests in the survivor' were used indicates that some meaning was intended to be expressed by them, and that some purpose was intended to be effected thereby, and if the purpose can be ascertained and the meaning discerned, effect must be given to the statute accordingly. The writer of the paragraph quoted misconceived the precise nature of a joint tenancy at common law. By the well-established rules of the common law, upon the death of one joint tenant, the title did not 'vest in the survivor.' The notion of the nature of a joint tenancy entertained by the ancient law writers and jurists was a very peculiar one. The title did not vest or descend upon the death of one tenant. In contemplation of the law each tenant was seised of the whole estate from the first, and no change occurred in his title on the death of his co-tenant. It simply 'remained' to him. He did not derive the title or estate or any part or interest therein from his co-tenant, but wholly from the original grant. Thus in Coke on Littleton, § 286, it is said: 'He which surviveth claimeth and hath the land by the survivor, nor can he claim anything by descent from his companion.' So far Lord Littleton. And upon this Lord Coke says: 'Here again Littleton sheweth the reason; and the cause wherefore the survivor shall not hold the land charged is for that he claymeth the land from the first feoffor, and not by his companion, which is Littleton's meaning when he saith (that he claymeth by survivor) for the surviving feofee may plead a feoffment to himselfe without any mention of his joint feofee.'

"And Blackstone, speaking concerning the effect of the death of one joint tenant, says: 'As therefore the survivor's original interest in the whole still remains, and as no person can now be admitted, either jointly or severally, to any share with him therein, it follows that his own interest must now be entire and several, and that he shall alone be entitled to the whole estate (whatever it be) that was created by the original grant.' And in Washburn on Real Property (volume 1, p. 646, par. 14) it is said: 'The interest which a joint tenant has as survivor is not a new one acquired by him from his co-tenant upon the latter's death; for his own interest is not changed in amount, but only his co-tenant's is extinguished.'

"It is therefore a mistake to say of joint tenants that the title vests in the survivor upon the death of the co-tenant, or that it descends to him from his co-tenant; for it had already vested in him by, and at the time of, the original grant. And if the Legislature by these words meant to give the effect which the words import that upon the death of one spouse there should really be a vesting of the title at that instant in the other, and a descent from one to the other, then this must be held to be a different effect from that which was intended by the provision that during their lives the land was to be held in joint tenancy; for if it were so held, the title would not vest in the survivor at the death of the other, but previously at the time of the declaration of homestead was filed for record. And these words do change the quality of the estate held by the spouses, and they do not 'simply declare the result which must necessarily ensue upon the death of one of the joint tenants.' For the title of the surviving joint tenant exists from the beginning, and does not vest upon the death of his co-tenant, and if in this case it does, then the title is something different from a joint tenancy.

"And with reference to the words 'descends to,' used in section 1265 heretofore quoted, the opinion in Estate of Headen says: 'We are of the opinion that both phrases "descend to" and "vest in" merely express the operation of the rule of survivorship which is necessarily incident to a joint tenancy, and that they do not furnish any other different mode for the transmission of the same.' This is directly contrary to all the common-law authorities, both as to the time when the estate vests in the survivor, and as to the source from which he derives title to the whole estate. It is also contrary to the rule of construction prescribed by the Code itself. The word 'descend' has always had a well-known, certain, technical, legal meaning. 'Descent or hereditary succession is the title whereby a man on the death of his ancestor, acquires his (the ancestor's) estate by right of representation as his heir at law.' 2 Bl. Com. 201; Estate of Donahue, 36 Cal. 332. It is true, as stated in Estate of Headen, that the Code does not use the word 'descent' to express this idea, but substitutes the word 'succession.' But this does not change the meaning of the word 'descent,' nor deprive it of the meaning it has always possessed. It is a technical word having a peculiar and appropriate meaning in law, and by the rule laid down in section 13 of the same Code, it is to be construed accordingly. We, therefore, have this condition: That the part of the section declaring that the spouses during their lives hold in joint tenancy is inconsistent with that which provides that upon the death of one the homestead shall descend to the other, if both phrases are given their technical meaning. It is necessary either to reconcile this inconsistency, or, if that cannot be done, to determine which of the two inconsistent provisions shall prevail in construing and giving effect to the section. From a consideration of other statutes on the same subject it is evident that the provision that the spouses are to hold as joint tenants must be taken with important qualifications. By section 683 of the same Code a joint estate must be created by a single will or transfer. And this was also necessary at common law. By section 752 of the Code of Civil Procedure joint tenants may have a partition of the joint estate and a sale thereof, if necessary to effect the partition. A homestead is not created either by will or transfer, and there can be no partition of a homestead by either party. To this extent, therefore, the estate of husband and wife in a homestead is different from a joint tenancy, and the declaration that they hold as joint tenants cannot be given full effect.

"There was at common law a species of joint tenancy which could only exist between husband and wife, which was denominated a tenancy by entireties, and which could not be alienated by either party alone, nor partitioned, and which therefore bore a closer resemblance to the right of homestead under this statute; but that species of joint tenancy must be considered as abolished by the provisions of sections 682 and 683 of the Civil Code, which exclude it from the enumeration of the different kinds of ownership. Under these circumstances the reasonable construction of section 1265 of the Civil Code, as originally enacted, requires that the clause declaring that on the death of either spouse the land 'descends' to the survivor shall be construed as intended to still further qualify the character of the joint tenancy, or rather to show wherein the estate differed from a technical joint tenancy, by in effect declaring that the survivor did not take by virtue of the original grant or declaration, as would be the case if it were a joint tenancy, but by descent. The term 'joint tenancy' was evidently used merely to describe, as near as possible, the nature of the estate during the lifetime of both spouses, leaving its devolution upon the death of either to be fixed by the succeeding clause providing for its descent. This harmonizes the seeming inconsistency of the two parts of the section, and between the section and section 1474 of the Code of Civil Procedure. And it is also in harmony with the general idea upon which the homestead right is founded. The primary purpose of the homestead right is to preserve a home for the protection of the family. Waples on Homesteads, p. 3; Smyth on Homesteads, §§ 1–14. It was chiefly to provide an abiding place for the family, so long as the family, as such, continues, that the statute was enacted, and not for the purpose of defining the character of estates or the general qualities of ownership. The statute should therefore be construed to mean that on the death of one spouse the land descends to the other, and in that respect it is a statute of descent. Such laws are always subject to legislative control, and may be changed or abolished at will, because the right of descent, being a mere expectancy, is not a vested right. Civ. Code, § 700.

"In addition to all this there is the general proposition that the right of homestead, though secured by the Constitution, requires legislation to make it effectual; that it is a creature of the statute, and subject to change at any time; that it is not the primary purpose of such statutes to create vested rights in the land affected; and that the homestead right is not such a vested right that it cannot be taken away by legislation. While it is the duty of the Legislature to provide for the protection of the family by protecting the home from forced sale, yet the mode of protection, and the character and quality of the right of the respective members of the family, and their interests in the land of which the homestead is composed, may be changed from time to time during the occupancy by the family of the homestead, or during the continuance of the general homestead right, as the Legislature may see fit. The Constitution vests power over the subject in the Legislature. Art. 17, § 1. These principles are recognized in the following cases: Estate of Delaney, 37 Cal. 176; Rich v. Tubbs, 41 Cal. 34; Herrold v. Reen, 58 Cal. 446; Tyrrel v. Baldwin, 78 Cal. 473 [21 Pac. 116]; Gruwell v. Seybolt, supra. I think, therefore, that it is clear from all these considerations that the purpose of inserting the declaration that the land should descend to the survivor was to make it sure that the power to change still remained in the Legislature, and that the so-called joint estate was not to be considered a vested estate, nor a technical joint tenancy. This being the case, it follows that the statute governing the rights of plaintiffs here is the statute in force in 1885, at the time of the death of Patrick Hannon. This law gave the children, as his heirs, two-thirds of the estate."

Later cases decided by the Supreme Court since the foregoing opinion was rendered approve the rule that it is immaterial when the homestead was selected, as the statute in force at the time of the death of the spouse whose property was impressed with homestead character controls the descent and devolution of the title. Estate of Fath, 132 Cal. 612, 64 Pac. 995; Saddlemire v. Stockton Savings Soc., 144 Cal. 650, 653, 79 Pac. 381.

Accepting the foregoing opinion of Judge Shaw as the opinion of this court, for the reasons therein stated, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

SANGUINETTI v. ROSSEN et al. (Civ. 148.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 11, 1906.)

1. Ejectment (§ 69*) — Pleadings — Sufficiency.

In an action for the possession of land, described as in township 1 N., the fact that the general description in the answer mistakenly spoke of the land as in township 1 S., was not fatal to the defense where the land was otherwise clearly alleged to be that described in the complaint.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Ejectment, Dec. Dig. § 69.*]

2. Trusts (§ 95*)—"Constructive Trusts."

A "constructive trust" is a creature of equity, and takes form whenever title is obtained by fraud, actual or constructive; in such cases mere form will be disregarded, and equity will ascertain and act on the substance, regarding that as done which should have been done.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 2, pp. 1476–1479; vol. 8, p. 7614.]

3. Trusts (§ 92½*)—Constructive Trusts—Statute of Frauds.

After the foreclosure of a mortgage on an undivided interest, and pending an action to foreclose another mortgage on another undivided interest, the attorney of the undivided owners advised that they convey all their interest to a third person, who should convey to the attorney, who should procure a loan to pay the outstanding mortgages and to procure a reconveyance under the mortgage foreclosed. The attorney promised to execute a writing reciting the terms of the trust as soon as the deed to him was executed. The deeds were executed, but the attorney failed to execute a declaration of the trust, but conveyed an undivided part of the premises to a stranger. Held, that a constructive trust was created by operation of law, and the attorney took only the naked legal title in trust for the undivided owners, which trust equity would enforce notwithstanding the statute of frauds, which could not be invoked by the attorney.

4. Equity (§ 57*)—Maxims.

Under Civ. Code, §§ 2217, 2219, 2223, 2224, 2228, 2235, 3529, defining an "involuntary trust" as one created by operation of law, etc., a person occupying fiduciary relations will be held to the strictest good faith, and trusts will arise in vindication of right, not only in the absence of a valid declaration, but even against the desires and intention of the involuntary trustee.

6. Attorney and Client (§ 123*)—Relation Between Parties.

An attorney must deal with fairness and honor toward a client, and cannot profit by withholding the benefit of his special knowledge or by giving false counsel during the continuance of the relation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Attorney and Client, Cent. Dig. § 239; Dec. Dig. § 123.*]

7. Trusts (§ 348*)—Involuntary Trustee.

Under Civ. Code, § 2243, providing that every one to whom property is transferred in violation of a trust holds the same as an involuntary trustee under such trust, etc., one taking under an attorney holding the legal title to the property of his client, with notice of the relation or knowledge of the facts, has no greater right than the attorney possessed.

8. Attorney and Client (§ 64*)—Relation.

Where one assumed to act as the hired attorney of another, and the client had many consultations with the former as such attorney, the technical relation of attorney and client existed, though the former had not been admitted to practice before the relation was assumed.

9. Principal and Agent (§ 8*)—Existence of Relation.

The mere fact that one had had at various times business dealings with another, and had stated that he wanted to buy more land, did not make the latter an agent for the purchase of a particular tract.

10. Vendor and Purchaser (§ 232*)—Bona Fide Purchaser—Notice.

The doctrine that possession of the grantor is constructive notice of any right claimed in hostility to the deed cannot be extended to a case where the grantor has expressly relinquished all equitable claims in his deed.

11. Vendor and Purchaser (§ 232*)—Bona Fide Purchaser—Notice.

When possession is consistent with the record title, the possession is not constructive notice of any different title or interest to a purchaser who has relied on the record, and has had no actual notice beyond what is thereby disclosed.

12. HOMESTEAD (§ 145*)—FORFEITURE.

The rights conferred by a probate homestead, set apart for the benefit of the widow and minor children of a decedent, cannot be surrendered by one or more of the beneficiaries to the detriment of an infant child.

13. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 232*)—BONA FIDE PURCHASER—NOTICE.

Land was set apart as a probate homestead for the benefit of the widow and minor children of the deceased owner. A minor child also owned an interest in the property, and the widow continued in possession. She held possession as a licensee of adult children, but she did not claim any interest hostile to a title conveyed. Held, that her possession was not constructive notice of secret equities claimed by the grantors as beneficiaries of a constructive trust at variance with the terms of their conveyance, absolute in form, purporting to convey all equitable claims and interests.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; E. N. Rector, Judge Presiding.

Action by Angelo Sanguinetti against Hannette J. Rossen and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Nicol & Orr, for appellant. Loutitt & Middlecoff and W. P. Netherton, for respondents.

McLAUGHLIN, J. Action to recover possession of a small parcel of land in San Joaquin county, described as being in sections 4 and 5, in township 1 N., range 8 E. M. D. M. The averments of ownership and right of possession in the complaint are denied in the answer, which also contains affirmative allegations of ownership in Alta Durham and Mrs. Louise Place, who were made parties defendant by order of the court. The general averment of title in these defendants, under whom the other defendants claim the right to remain in possession of the premises, is followed by voluminous allegations detailing the facts and circumstances upon which such claim of title rests. A summary of the recitals will suffice to indicate and explain the legal propositions presented for decision. John J. Durham died intestate in 1882, and in due course of administration three-ninths of his estate was distributed to his widow, the defendant Hannette J. Rossen, two-ninths each to his daughters, the defendants Alta Durham and Mrs. Place, and the remaining two-ninths to a son, who is not a party to this action. It is specifically and repeatedly alleged that a tract of land so distributed included the lot here in dispute, but the general description of such tract locates it in township 1 S., whereas the lot described in the complaint is in township 1 N..

After distribution, the widow mortgaged her interest to George B. Sperry, the daughter Alta hers to Mary Duffy, and the remaining four-ninths owned by Louisa Place and her brother, who were minors, was mortgaged by their mother, as guardian, to T. Lesnini. The Sperry mortgage was foreclosed, and on September 25, 1900, the interest of the widow, embracing three-ninths of the property, passed to the mortgagee, who three days later conveyed the same to the Sperry Flour Company. An action was then pending to foreclose the other two mortgages, and Mrs. Rossen and her daughters were endeavoring to save the property, which was worth more than the amount due on the Sperry, Duffy, and Lesnini notes. Negotiations were pending whereby they hoped to satisfy the existing incumbrances and procure a reconveyance of the title held by the flour company. They were not familiar with the effect of conveyances and had little experience in business matters. They had implicit confidence in two friends named Wiggin and Lynch, who advised and counseled with them at this juncture. Lynch acted as their attorney, and they relied upon him, not only as a friend, but as their trusted legal adviser. Through his advice, counsel, and representations, they were led to believe that if the title to the property was vested in one person, a loan could be negotiated, and the cancellation of the mortgages and reconveyance of the outstanding title secured. Acting upon such advice, and without any consideration save the promises made to them, the widow and her daughters, by deed absolute in form, dated October 19, 1900, conveyed all their right, title, and interest in the property to Wiggin, with the distinct understanding that he would convey to Lynch. The latter promised to execute a writing reciting the terms of the agreement or trust, as soon as the deed to him was executed; such terms being that he would procure a loan of $9,000, pay off the mortgages, procure a reconveyance from the Sperry Flour Company, and, this done, reconvey an undivided seven-ninths of the property to Alta Durham and Mrs. Place. Wiggin conveyed to Lynch, on November 16, 1900, and some time thereafter the latter negotiated loans on the property aggregating the sum of $9,000, obtained title to three-ninths of the property from the flour company, and canceled the Duffy and Lesnini mortgages. It will thus be seen that Lynch's title to four-ninths of the property rested on the deed from Wiggin, and that title to three-ninths formerly owned by Mrs. Rossen came to him from her successor in interest, the Sperry Flour Company. It may be added that he succeeded Mrs. Rossen as guardian of the estate of the minor son, and that the estate of his ward was mortgaged to secure a portion of the $9,000 borrowed. Instead of fulfilling the promises made to his clients, Lynch conveyed an undivided seven-ninths of part of the property, including the lot in controversy, to Miller and Kelley and they in turn conveyed to the plaintiff. It is alleged that Miller, Kelley, and the plaintiff had notice of the facts, and that the conveyances to them were made with intent to defraud Mrs. Place and Miss Durham. The agreement between the parties was never reduced to writing in any form, and the deeds through which the title passed to Lynch contained no hint or mention of a trust. The court overruled a demurrer to the answer, based on the ground that the facts therein pleaded constituted no defense to the action, and the first point urged on this appeal is that the court should have sustained the demurrer.

In view of the distinct averment that the land in controversy was included in the tract distributed to the Durham heirs, we are of the opinion that the mistake in the general description was not fatal to the defense pleaded. The other proposition involved is more serious. Appellant argues that, as the agreement under which the deeds to Wiggin and Lynch were executed was not reduced to writing, there was and could be no valid trust defeating the express terms of a conveyance absolute in form. In this connection it is earnestly contended that the trust agreement was wholly abortive and void, because neither an agreement to convey, nor an express trust in land, is enforceable unless the same is evidenced by some note or memorandum in writing. This contention is met by the argument that the facts and circumstances set forth in the answer are sufficient to show an implied trust created by operation of law. A valid trust in relation to real property can only be created or declared by an instrument in writing, or by operation of law. Civ. Code, § 852; Code Civ. Proc. § 1971. As no instrument in writing declaring the trust was executed, no express trust was created, and it only remains to inquire whether the facts set forth in the answer are sufficient to bring the case within the rule governing implied trusts, resulting or constructive. Such trusts are creatures of equity, and take form whenever title is obtained by means of chicanery, deceit, or other variety of fraud, actual or constructive. In such cases mere forms will be disregarded, and equity, as handmaid of the law, will ascertain and act upon the substance of things, regarding that as done which should have been done. Devious and intricate methods may be employed, but the mind-searching, far-reaching vision of equity cannot be obscured by any pretense, however ingenious, subtle, or specious it may be. Equity abhors fraud in all of its guises, and renders abortive its shrewdest intrigues and machinations. Looking at the substance of this transaction, we find that Lynch was not only the trusted confidant and friend, but the legal adviser and counselor of these women. His relation to them was fiduciary, and every rule of equity and law commanded the utmost fairness and good faith in all his dealings with them. Through his advice and representations the legal title to four-ninths of this property was transferred to him, for a specific purpose, without any intention that any beneficial interest in the property would pass or vest with the legal title thus conveyed. We say transferred to him because the conveyance to Wiggin was made with the express understanding that he would convey to Lynch, and the moment this agreement was executed, the latter took the title subject to all the equities arising in favor of the clients who conveyed. Under these circumstances a constructive trust was created, by operation of law, and Lynch took the bare, naked legal title to four-ninths of the property, as conveyed by the owners, Alta Durham and Mrs. Place, in trust for their use and benefit. But this is not all, for if the averments of the answer are true, he also took title to the Sperry interest, in trust for the benefit of the same parties. But for his disregard of duty the trust would have been properly and fully created and declared, for even in the absence of an express promise to that effect, it was his duty to his clients to execute a writing reciting the terms of his trust. This being true, he could not invoke the statute of frauds, and thus make his violated duty and promise the shield under cover of which he could take advantage of his fiduciary relation and profit by his own wrong. Equity regards that as done which ought to be done, and never allows a statute designed to prevent fraud to be used as an instrument for the accomplishment of fraud. It holds persons occupying fiduciary relations to the strictest good faith, and never allows them to escape the performance of a duty through their own neglect, fraud, or wrong. Under its wholesome rules injustice resulting from fraud can always be prevented, and trusts will arise in vindication of right, not only in the absence of a valid declaration, but against the desires and intention of the involuntary trustee. Civ. Code, §§ 3529, 2217, 2219, 2223, 2224, 2228, 2235; Pomeroy, Eq. Jur. §§ 921, 960, 965, 966, 103, 155, 363–381, 858, 1044, 1053, 1055, 1056, 1297, 1409; Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 1195, 307, 308, 310, 311, 312, 330, 331; Brison v. Brison, 75 Cal. 528, 17 Pac. 689, 7 Am. St. Rep. 189; De Mallagh v. De Mallagh, 77 Cal. 128, 19 Pac. 256; Nordholt v. An attorney at law should be a paragon of candor, fairness, honor, and fidelity in all his dealings with those who place their trust in his ability and integrity, and he will at all times, and under all circumstances, be held to the full measure of what he ought to be. Equity would indeed be impotent if a trusted legal adviser could profit by withholding the benefit of his special knowledge and skill, or by giving false counsel during the continuance of a relation in the highest sense confidential and fiduciary. It was Lynch's duty to protect his clients in every possible way, and it was a gross violation of that duty for him to mislead or deceive them. Had he retained the legal title obtained in the manner described in the answer, the most adventurous sophist would hardly assert that he could be protected by his breach of duty, and allowed to retain that which was obtained through his guile. And under well-settled rules those who took title under him with notice of his relation, or knowledge of the facts, stand in his shoes, and have no greater modicum of right than he possessed. Civ. Code, § 2243; Jones v. Jones, 140 Cal. 591, 74 Pac. 143; Smith v. Goethe, 147 Cal. 733, 82 Pac. 384; Pomeroy, Eq. Jur. §§ 688, 364, 664, 692, 754, 770, 918, 1048. It results from the foregoing that the demurrer was properly overruled.

The court adopted the findings returned by the jury, and also made and signed findings of fact covering the issues in the case. These findings are in substantial accord with most of the averments of the answer. It is found, however, that Lynch was not a licensed attorney at the inception of the negotiations and transactions above narrated, but that he was at all times their trusted adviser and intimate friend. Touching plaintiff's knowledge and notice of the equitable claim of the defendants Durham and Place, the court found that he and his grantors had information and knowledge as to who was in the actual possession of the premises, and of other facts and circumstances sufficient to put a reasonably prudent man upon inquiry as to the title to the premises. In this connection the findings recite that Mrs. Hannette J. Rossen was in possession, by leave and license of her daughters, that Miller and Kelley were the agents of plaintiff in the purchase of the premises, that all three knew of such possession, and that plaintiff purchased for value, but with notice of the trusts and agreements alleged in the answer. Many findings are particularly specified as being unsupported by the evidence, but most of these assaults are groundless. The fiduciary relation existing between Wiggin and Lynch, and each of them, on the one hand, and the three ladies who accepted their assistance on the other, was fully shown. Lynch assumed to act as their hired attorney, and they had many consultations with him as such, in his law office and elsewhere. Under such circumstances the rules governing the technical relation of attorney and client apply as fully and forcibly as if he had been admitted to practice before such relation was assumed. Pomeroy Eq. Jur., § 960.

Findings 1, 13, and 14 by the court, and findings 15 and 16 by the jury, are conflicting and confusing. In two of these findings it is recited that Lynch agreed to reconvey to Alta Durham and Mrs. Place; in another that such agreement was to reconvey to Hannette J. Rossen, Alta Durham, and Mrs. Place, or either of them, and in still another that such reconveyance was to run to the children of Mrs. Rossen, "defendants herein." This latter finding would include Edna Rossen, and exclude John G. Durham, the minor son. To add to the confusion, neither of these findings is sustained by the evidence, which shows, without conflict, that Lynch agreed to reconvey the property acquired by him to Alta Durham, Mrs. Place, and John G. Durham, or the "Durham heirs" in such proportions as the mother might suggest or as might be agreed upon. This being the uncontradicted evidence touching the equitable claims of the defendants, upon no possible view of the evidence can the finding as to the quantum of interest owned by Mrs. Place and Miss Durham be sustained.

After careful examination and analysis we have reached the conclusion that the findings tending to support the theory that plaintiff took title with notice of facts sufficient to put a prudent man upon inquiry must also fall as unsustained by the evidence. We do not think the finding which recites that Miller and Kelley were the agents of plaintiff, acting under his authorization in procuring title from Lynch, finds support in the record. True, he at various times had business dealings with them, and had stated that he wanted to buy more land. But this did not constitute them his agents for the purchase of this or any specific tract of land for him. The evidence shows that they were dealing at "arm's length" in the negotiations preceding the sale of this tract to him. He was entirely free to take the land or refuse to do so, according to his pleasure, and they would have violated no duty owing to him had they sold the land to any other person. This being true, there was no such agency as would charge him with knowledge or notice of all the information they possessed or might with reasonable diligence have acquired.

The fact that Mrs. Rossen was in possession of a very small portion of the land purchased by plaintiff was not, under the conditions disclosed by this record, sufficient to put the plaintiff upon inquiry touching the equitable claims of her daughters. Two deeds conveying all her right, title, and interest in and to this property were of record. In the latest of these deeds she was joined by her daughters, who with her conveyed whatever estate or interest, "as well in law as in equity," they then had, or which they might subsequently acquire. The rule, sustained by the weight of authority in the United States, is to the effect that the possession of the grantor is not constructive notice of any right or interest claimed in hostility to the terms of his deed. Pomeroy, Eq. Jur. § 617. And even if it be conceded that the contrary doctrine announced in Pell v. McElroy, 36 Cal. 271, remains the rule in this state, still we hardly think such doctrine can be extended to a case where the grantor has expressly relinquished all equitable claims in his deed. Be that as it may, however, there is another rule which makes the possession of Mrs. Rossen impotent as far as constructive notice is concerned. It is well settled that when possession is consistent with the record title, "it shall not be constructive notice of any additional or different title or interest to a purchaser who has relied upon the record, and has had no actual notice beyond what is thereby disclosed." Pomeroy, Eq. Jur. § 616; Schumacher v. Truman, 134 Cal. 432, 66 Pac. 591; McNeil v. Polk, 57 Cal. 323; Smith v. Yule, 31 Cal. 185, 89 Am. Dec. 167; Kirby v. Tallmadge, 160 U. S. 379, 16 Sup. Ct. 349, 40 L. Ed. 463.

The record before us shows that the possession of Mrs. Rossen was perfectly consistent with the title appearing of record. On May 5, 1883, a tract of land, including the dwelling and the lot on which it was situated, was designated and set apart as a probate homestead for the benefit of the widow and minor children of John J. Durham, deceased. This controversy concerns the lot on which the home or dwelling of the Durham family stands. The rights conferred by this probate homestead could not be surrendered by one or more of the beneficiaries, to the detriment of the minor son, who had not reached his majority when the deed to the plaintiff was executed. Moore v. Hoffman, 125 Cal. 93, 57 Pac. 769, 73 Am. St. Rep. 27; Fountain v. Hoppe, 104 Cal. 94, 37 Pac. 894. Therefore the minor son had a right to remain in possession of the homestead, and certainly his mother, as the natural guardian of his person, had a right to remain there with him. Aside from the rights of the minor son under the probate homestead, it must be remembered that he also owned an interest in the property, and the occupancy of Mrs. Rossen was by no means inconsistent with her duty or rights as the natural protector and guardian of her minor son holding such interest. Mrs. Rossen is claiming no equities, and an industrious search has failed to reveal an authority carrying the doctrine of constructive notice to the extent of holding that the possession of a grantor, claiming no interest hostile to the title conveyed, could, under any state of facts, constitute constructive notice of secret equities claimed by other grantors, as beneficiaries of a constructive trust at variance with the terms of their conveyance, absolute in form, which purported to convey all equitable claims and interests. We are not unmindful of the point that Mrs. Rossen held possession as licensee of her daughters. This verbal license could hardly create a distinctive possession separate and apart from the possession which was in accord with the rights and interests of her minor son. "Where one of two innocent persons must suffer by the act of a third, he by whose negligence it happened must be the sufferer." Civ. Code, § 3543. And in order to avoid the result of their misplaced confidence in Lynch, it was necessary for Miss Durham and Mrs. Place to show a possession which would be sufficient to put the plaintiff upon inquiry touching their equitable estate or interest in the property antagonistic to their recorded conveyance. We do not think such possession was shown, and are furthermore of the opinion that the finding on this point is not sufficiently definite and certain. There should be a distinct, positive finding as to the party or parties who were in the actual possession of the premises.

As the case must go back for a new trial, it is proper to say that the letter of Lynch to Mrs. Rossen dated February 28, 1902, should have been excluded, and that the notice to vacate the premises, dated March 8, 1902, should have shared the same fate. We do not think the evidence of Mrs. Rossen, relating to conversations had with plaintiff after he had purchased the property, should have been allowed to remain in the case, when a timely motion to have the same stricken from the record was made. Oral declarations of a party should be viewed with caution, and declarations which do not clearly appear to be against the interest of the party making them should be excluded. We cannot see what bearing the deed from Gianelli to Lynch could have on the issues in the case, nor can we divine how the objection of Mrs. Rossen to a confirmation of the sale of her son's interest could be relevant to issues not involving the minor's rights.

The judgment and order are reversed.

2. FRAUD (§ 23*)—RIGHT TO RELY ON STATEMENT.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Monroe, Judge.

Action by Frank X. Neher against Homer A. Hansen. From an order denying defendant's motion for new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

Jones & Weller, for appellant. H. T. Morrow, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Action to recover damages for alleged false representations made to plaintiff by defendant. The complaint charges that in August, 1906, the defendant, who was president of a corporation known as the Humboldt Brewing Company, with intent to cheat and defraud plaintiff, represented to him that said corporation then owned a brewery at Eureka, Cal., together with an ice plant in connection therewith, said property being represented by a picture of a brewery, which defendant then exhibited to plaintiff; that said representations were false and untrue, known by defendant to be false and untrue, and were made for the purpose of deceiving plaintiff and inducing him to purchase shares of the capital stock of said corporation; that plaintiff believed the representations to be true, and, relying upon them, was thereby induced to and did purchase 330 shares of the said capital stock, for which he paid the sum of $1,650; that said corporation did not in fact then own, nor has it ever owned, a brewery or an ice plant at Eureka, Cal., or elsewhere; that at the time of the purchase of the stock by plaintiff the same was and still is, wholly worthless. The prayer of the complaint is to recover damages in the sum of $1,650, being the purchase price paid for the stock. The material allegations of the complaint were denied by the answer. The case was tried before a jury, which returned a verdict in favor of plaintiff, upon which judgment was entered. Defendant's motion for a new trial was denied, and he appeals from the order denying the same.

The court refused to give two instructions requested by defendant, and such refusal is assigned as error. The first of these instructions is as follows: "Plaintiff cannot recover in this action unless he was deceived by the alleged representations, and if the means of knowledge are at hand, equally available to both parties, and the subject of purchase is alike open to their inspection, if the purchaser does not avail himself of these means and opportunities, he will not be heard to say that he has been deceived." In support of his contention appellant cites Hanscom v. Drullard, 79 Cal. 234, 21 Pac. 736. It is true that a like instruction was requested by the defendant in that case. The court added the words "unless he was induced by the trick or misrepresentations of defendant not to make such inspection," and as thus modified gave the same. The point involved was the action of the court in thus modifying the instruction, and its ruling was sustained on appeal. In no event could the instruction as requested be deemed proper under the circumstances disclosed by the record herein. There is a want of evidence tending, in the slightest degree, to prove that the means of information or knowledge concerning the property, or title thereto, was equally available to both parties, or that the subject of the purchase was equally open to inspection. Moreover, the representations consisted of statements of fact by one presumed to possess peculiar and accurate knowledge of the same. No duty devolved upon plaintiff to make any investigation as to the truth of the statements. As said in Calmon v. Sarraille, 142 Cal. 638, 76 Pac. 486: "Even when contracting parties are adverse to each other, either has the right to rely upon an express statement made by the other of an existing fact of which the truth is known to the other and unknown to him." See, also, Willey v. Clements, 146 Cal. 91, 79 Pac. 850, and Morris v. Courtney, 120 Cal. 65, 52 Pac. 130, where it is said: "And the seller cannot escape responsibility by showing that the purchaser might have ascertained that such representations were untrue."

There was no error in the court's refusal to instruct the jury to the effect that, if plaintiff consulted with or received information from others in regard to the brewery, such fact of itself precluded plaintiff's recovery. Conceding that plaintiff may have consulted others, or received information from others, it would not follow as a matter of law that such information was of a character to influence him in the purchase. Moreover, the giving of such an instruction would take from the jury the determination of the question as to whether or not plaintiff relied upon the representations made by defendant, and was thereby induced to buy the stock.

Upon the measure of damages the court instructed the jury as follows: "If you find for the plaintiff, the measure of damages is the difference between the price paid by him for the stock purchased and what the stock was actually worth on the 15th day of January, 1908, the date this suit was brought, but not in any case exceeding $1,650, the amount claimed in the complaint." The decisions are at variance as to what constitutes the measure of damages in actions to recover for fraud and deceit. The rule contended for by appellant is that the measure of damages in such cases is the difference between the real value of the property at the time of the purchase and the price paid therefor, together with interest. This rule is supported by the highest authority. Smith v. Bolles, 132 U. S. 125, 10 Sup. Ct. 39, 33 L. Ed. 279; Sigafus v. Porter, 179 U. S. 116, 21 Sup. Ct. 34, 45 L. Ed. 113; Rockefeller v. Merritt, 76 Fed. 909, 22 C. C. A. 608, 35 L. R. A. 633; Redding v. Godwin, 44 Minn. 355, 46 N. W. 563; Hallam v. Todhunter, 24 Iowa, 166; Hiner v. Richter, 51 Ill. 299; Cawston v. Sturgis, 29 Or. 331, 43 Pac. 656. Our own Supreme Court, in the late case of Spreckels v. Gorrill, 152 Cal. 383, 92 Pac. 1011, appears to have adopted the rule laid down by Mr. Sutherland in his work on Damages (section 1171), as follows: "The measure [of damages] is the difference between the value of the stock as the condition of the company issuing it really was and what it would be if its condition had been as the purchaser was fraudulently induced to believe it to be." Says Mr. Justice Shaw in the case last cited: "One who buys property is lawfully entitled to all the benefit of the purchase—that is, to the full value of the property he buys—regardless of the price he paid." The rule announced by the trial court in the instruction given finds no support in any authority to which our attention has been directed.

An order denying a motion for a new trial will not be reversed, however, for mere error, when it clearly appears that, had the jury been correctly instructed as to the law, their verdict could not have been otherwise. Edwards v. Wagner, 121 Cal. 376, 53 Pac. 821; Hughes v. Wheeler, 76 Cal. 230, 18 Pac. 386. It appears that the stock had no market value, and we must therefore look to the pecuniary condition of the company to ascertain its real value. Warner v. Benjamin, 89 Wis. 290, 62 N. W. 179. The uncontradicted evidence shows that on August 25, 1906, when plaintiff purchased 200 shares of the stock, there were 23,000 shares of stock outstanding, and the assets of the company were of the apparent value of $14,586. These assets consisted of a small sum of cash, a claim of $3,744 against one J. C. Henderson, bills receivable of $1,400, and real estate valued at $6,000, upon which there was a mortgage securing an indebtedness of $5,000. On December 3d, when plaintiff purchased 130 shares of stock, there had been no material improvement in the company's financial condition. Upon this showing, and assuming that the bills receivable and claim against Henderson were solvent credits, still the amount thereof, to which plaintiff as a holder of 330 shares of stock would be entitled after deducting the cost of liquidation, upon an apportionment of the assets to all the stock, would be so insignificantly small that the jury must of necessity have found the stock to be worthless at the time when it was purchased. It is therefore apparent that, had the jury been instructed that the measure of damages was the difference between the price paid by plaintiff in the purchase and the true value of the stock at the time of the sale, they must, under this evidence, have found it to be the purchase price of $1,650. This was the actual sum with which plaintiff parted, without receiving anything of value in return therefor, and the amount in which the jury found him to have been damaged. In no event, the fraud being established, was he entitled to receive less. While the giving of the instruction constituted error, the rights of the defendant were not prejudiced thereby. Civ. Code, §§ 769, 1344, have no reference to remainder interests in personal property; but such property, provided by will to constitute a trust fund for the benefit of the testator's wife, and, on her death, to be divided between their children, was subject to no statutory restriction, and the trust created was lawful and valid.

2. WILLS (§ 858*)—CONSTRUCTION—INTENTION OF TESTATOR.

A will should, if possible, be construed to prevent intestacy, especially where it evinces an intention of the testator to dispose of his whole estate; and where a testator, after making specific bequests, devised the remainder of his estate, which consisted of personal property, in trust for the benefit of his wife, and directed that the residue of that fund, on the death of his wife, be divided between two grandchildren, the fact that the wife predeceased him, so that the provision as to her lapsed, did not defeat the right of the grandchildren to take the property as provided by the will.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; F. B. Ogden, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Lewis Gregory, deceased. From an order denying a petition for partial distribution of the estate and an order granting a petition for final distribution, Alice E. G. Bush appeals. Affirmed.

Milton T. U'Ren and Edmund Nelson, for appellant. Hiram A. Blanchard, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from an order denying a petition for partial distribution, and also from an order granting a petition for final distribution. The material facts have been agreed upon, and are set forth in a stipulation entered into by the parties interested. Lewis Gregory died July 2, 1907, and left surviving him as his heirs at law the appellant, Alice E. G. Bush, a daughter; Amy L. Gregory Blanchard, a granddaughter; George L. Gregory, a grandson; four children of Mary E. Hauch, a deceased granddaughter; and George P. Hauch. The estate consisted wholly of personal property. The deceased left a will, which was duly admitted to probate on July 19, 1907. After specially disposing therein of portions of his property, the will contained the following provisions in paragraphs 4 and 5 thereof:

"(4) I give and bequeath to my daughter, Alice E. Bush, and to her daughter, Alice Berry, each the sum of five dollars.

"(5) All the rest, residue and remainder of my estate I give, devise and bequeath to Oliver Blanchard, in trust, to have and to hold the same during the life of my said wife, upon the following trusts, to wit: To convert the same into money, invest and reinvest the proceeds thereof safely so that it shall be income producing, and promptly collect and pay over to my wife therefrom for her own use, benefit and disposal, the sum of thirty dollars per month in each and every month during the entire term of her natural life, together with such additional sum or sums, from time to time during her life as said trustee or his successor may from time to time determine that her circumstances require, said payments to be made from the principal of said fund, and upon the death of my wife, to immediately pay over and deliver all of said trust fund and residue of my estate then remaining to my granddaughter, Amy L. Gregory Blanchard, and my grandson, George L. Gregory, to whom, to wit, my said granddaughter and grandson, I hereby give, devise and bequeath all of said residue of said trust fund in equal share, to have and to hold the same unto them and their heirs and assigns forever. No bond shall be required of said trustee."

Prior to the death of the testator, his wife died. Thereafter, the appellant, Alice E. G. Bush, signed a written waiver of the specific bequest to her of the sum of $5, and subsequently she filed a petition for a partial distribution of the estate, on the ground that as the testator's wife had predeceased him the trust clause became inoperative, null, and void; that there was no provision in the will for the disposition of the residue of the estate except the one attempted to be set out in the aforesaid trust clause, which was for the residuum, not of the estate, but of the trust fund; that by reason thereof the deceased died intestate as to the residue of his estate. The petition of appellant for partial distribution was denied, and the petition of the executor for final distribution was granted, and by this order the residue of the estate was distributed to the two grandchildren named in the fifth paragraph of the will set out above.

The residue of the testator's estate consists entirely of personal property, and appellant contends that sections 769 and 1344 of the Civil Code deal with real or immovable property exclusively, and that therefore the grandchildren did not upon the death of the testator have a vested remainder in the residue of his estate. Yet, on the other hand, to support her position that the provisions of the trust are void, she calls our attention to a number of cases, in each of which the trust concerned real property, and was either to convey, or suspended the power of alienation for an unlawful period, and was therefore invalid. Neither the sections of the Civil Code cited nor the cases referred to are in point. The property involved here is personal property, which is subject to no statutory restriction (Est. of Wakerly, 108 Cal. 656, 41 Pac. 772, 49 Am. St. Rep. 97), and the trust created by the will was not unlawful nor invalid. It merely, by reason of the death of the beneficiary before the will took effect, became inoperative and failed. The real question in the case is: Did the testator intend to dispose of the whole of his estate, and is his will susceptible to such construction? We think so, and that it is plain from the provisions of the fifth paragraph of his will, above quoted, that the testator constituted the residue of his estate into a trust fund, and provided that upon the death of his wife whatever was left of this trust fund should go to the two grandchildren named. The fact that the wife never lived to become the beneficiary of the trust created in her favor is no reason for holding that the subsequent provision of the will directing the disposition of the fund should be defeated. "In the interpretation of wills, constructions which lead to intestacy, total or partial, are not favored; and such an interpretation should, if possible, be placed upon the provisions of the will as will prevent intestacy, especially where the will evinces an intention on the part of the testator to dispose of his whole estate." Le Breton v. Cook, 107 Cal. 410, 40 Pac. 552; Est. of Granniss, 142 Cal. 1, 75 Pac. 324; Est. of Lux, 149 Cal. 205, 85 Pac. 147.

In paragraph fifth of the will, as we have seen, the testator gave, devised, and bequeathed all the rest, residue, and remainder of his estate to the trustee in trust for the benefit of his wife, and the residue of that fund, which would be the residue of the estate, he directed to be delivered and paid over to his two grandchildren in equal shares, and in the same paragraph he directed that all the trust fund and the residue of his estate be paid over and delivered to his said grandchildren. The testator's wife having died before him, she never became entitled to the trust fund. The provision as to her lapsed; but, as there were residuary legatees designated in the will, the property out of which the trust fund was to be constituted must go to them, and not descend to the heirs.

The orders appealed from are affirmed.

STEHLIN v. SUPERIOR COURT OF SANTA CRUZ COUNTY. (Civ. 780.)

CERTIORARI (§ 36*)—APPEAL FROM JUSTICE'S COURT—REVIEW OF PROCEEDINGS—QUESTIONS NOT RAISED BELOW.

Where plaintiff, nonsuited by a justice of the peace, appealed to the superior court, and consented to a trial of the case anew, he cannot for the first time, on application for a writ of review, urge that, because he had not settled any statement on the appeal from the justice's court, the superior court had no jurisdiction to determine anything but the question of law whether the nonsuit was properly granted.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Cruz County; Lucas F. Smith, Judge.

Application for a writ of review by Jacob Stehlin against the Superior Court of Santa Cruz County. Writ denied.

Wyckoff & Gardner, for petitioner.

PER CURIAM. This is an application for a writ of review to annul a judgment of the superior court of Santa Cruz county given and made upon an appeal from the justice's court.

It appears that, upon the trial in the justice's court, the justice of the peace, upon motion of the defendant in the case, granted a nonsuit. The plaintiff appealed to the superior court on questions of both law and fact, but did not prepare or have settled any statement of the case. The claim is now made that the superior court had no jurisdiction except to try a simple question of law, as to whether or not the justice's court erred in granting the nonsuit. It may be conceded that this is true, provided the petitioner had properly raised the question and insisted upon his right in the trial court. However, instead of doing so, he appeared in said court, and consented to the case being set down for trial, and at the trial he appeared with his witnesses, and the case was tried anew in the superior court. Petitioner in no way even suggested the question he now attempts to raise to the trial court. Such court had jurisdiction of the parties and of the subject-matter. As to the questions of law that might have been raised, and the proper rulings thereon, or as to the failure of the appellant to prepare and have settled a statement, they cannot be considered in this collateral proceeding. The petitioner voluntarily appeared and submitted the whole controversy to the superior court, and after such submission, and after a decision against him, he will not now for the first time be heard to question the power of the trial court to determine the very question which he had invited the court to determine. De Jarnett v. Marquez, 132 Cal. 700, 64 Pac. 1090, and cases cited; Hart v. Carnell-Hopkins Co., 103 Cal. 133, 37 Pac. 196. To allow the writ to issue under the circumstances of this case would be to encourage an utter disregard of the due and orderly proceedings in courts of justice.

The writ is denied.

4. Husband and Wife (§ 138*)—Wife's Separate Estate—Acts of Husband.

That a husband had borrowed money from a bank upon the representation that he owned property, which in fact was the separate property of his wife, or that he had purchased materials out of which improvements upon the premises were constructed, would not affect the separate character of the estate of the wife.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Paul W. Bennett, Judge.

Action by Mattie S. Farnum against the Kern Valley Bank and others. From an order and a judgment for plaintiff, the mentioned defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Matthew S. Platz, for appellant. F. D. McClure and Fred E. Borton, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. The complaint was in the usual and ordinary form in an action for determining conflicting claims to real property. The defendants by their answers denied plaintiff's ownership and possession of the property, and alleged that she was a married woman, the wife of one N. C. Farnum, that the premises described were property of the community, and that defendants had acquired title thereto by virtue of a sheriff's deed, executed pursuant to sale upon execution based upon a judgment in favor of defendants and against the husband. The court found in favor of plaintiff upon all of the issues. The sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings is not questioned; at least there are no specifications of error in relation thereto. In any event, the findings have ample support.

Upon the trial, plaintiff introduced in evidence a deed, dated in 1902, which conveyed to her the premises described. It was admitted that she was a married woman at the time, and the wife of N. C. Farnum. The presumption that the premises so conveyed were her separate estate attached under section 164, Civ. Code. Proof of the vesting of the legal title carried with it the right of possession. There is no evidence in the record tending to overcome the presumption of the separate character of the estate.

It is claimed by appellant that the court erred in sustaining an objection to the testimony of a witness, who said he had examined the records of the defendant bank as to moneys had by N. C. Farnum from the bank, and in connection with which he was asked to state what the aggregate amount of that was. We see no error in this action of the court. It was not claimed by defendant in its pleadings that the money borrowed from the bank was used in the purchase of the property, nor was the materiality of such proffered evidence apparent upon its face. We find no statement of counsel as to what he expected to prove by the question; and, in the absence of any statement apprising the court that the same was intended as a basis of proof material to the action, the court was warranted in sustaining the objection. The mere fact that the husband had borrowed money from the bank upon the representation that he owned the property, or that he had purchased materials out of which the improvements upon the premises were constructed, in no degree tended to affect the separate character of the estate presumptively conveyed by the deed.

We are unable to appreciate the force of appellant's contention that the court erred in not first determining the right of plaintiff to sue before hearing the cause upon its merits. The only evidence offered in the case was that which tended to show the separate character of the property, and therefore the right of plaintiff to maintain the action. The answer was not in the nature of a plea in abatement, but went to the merits of plaintiff's claim, and, if true, was a bar to her action.

The specifications of error relative to the admission of the declaration of homestead declared by plaintiff after the acquirement of the property are of no consequence. The property being the separate property of the wife, defendant, having acquired no interest therein by virtue of its execution sale, could in no wise be prejudiced by any regularity or irregularity in connection with the homestead declaration.

BURKET v. BURLAND et al. (Civ. 671.)

PARTNERSHIP (§ 328*)—ACCOUNTING—ACTIONS—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action for a partnership accounting, evidence held not to sustain a finding as to respective amounts defendants and plaintiff's husband invested in the partnership business.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Dec. Dig. § 328.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Cruz County; Lucas F. Smith, Judge.

Action by Julia E. Burket against Fred Grant Burland and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a motion for new trial, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Zabala & Wyatt and Sheehy & Hudson, for appellants. Cassin & Lucas, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, and from an order denying defendants' motion for a new trial. The plaintiff in the action succeeded to the interest of her husband, J. E. Burket, and brought this action for the purpose of settling the accounts and business of a partnership concern. The partnership was composed of J. E. Burket and the two defendants, and its business was the conducting of an undertaking establishment and dealing in furniture. It is admitted by the pleadings that J. E. Burket owned a one-half interest in said partnership business, and that the two defendants owned jointly the other one-half interest therein. The question in the case is as to the amounts contributed by J. E. Burket and the defendants to the joint venture. Plaintiff claims that J. E. Burket had invested $5,549.48 in the partnership, and that the defendants had invested but $2,527.04, and she sued for the difference—$3,022. The defendants, on the other hand, insist that the amount contributed by them was $3,794.08, and that Burket's contribution was a like amount. The court found for the plaintiff. The contention of the defendants on this appeal is that the findings are not supported by the evidence, and we are constrained to agree with this view.

Edward G. Burland, a witness for the plaintiff (and being himself one of the defendants) testified: "On November 1, 1904, the time the partnership was formed, the undertaking business inventoried $5,549.08. That was the value of the stock which Mr. Burket had on hand at the time. That stock went into the partnership. When the partnership was formed, Mr. Burket was owing us for 21 months' labor at $50 a month, making $1,050; also $55 for a canopy and draperies which we had sold him. He also allowed us a bonus of $650 as an inducement for entering into partnership with him, which made a total of $1,755 owing to Burland Bros. from Mr. Burket. The undertaking business inventoried $5,549.08, and in this we purchased a one-half interest for $2,774.50, and paid for that, first, by crediting Mr. Burket with the amount due us, to wit, $1,755, and by paying him the balance of $1,019.54. We had agreed to add to the undertaking business a furniture business, and we paid Mr. Burket the $1,019.54, which was the balance due him for one-half of his undertaking business, by putting a like amount with it and investing the whole, or $2,039.08, in a stock of furniture." The testimony of this witness was corroborated by his codefendant, testifying for the defense. Prior to the trial J. E. Burket had died, and the facts just narrated were undisputed. Upon this testimony the court found that there is due from the defendants to the plaintiff the sum of $877.50, on account of their purchase of their one-half interest in the business.

It may be that the trial judge disbelieved the correctness of the position taken by the defendants. It is certain that the venture was not a profitable one for Burket. The Burlands had, prior to February 3, 1903, carried on this undertaking business under the firm name of Burland Bros., and on that date, in consideration of $5,800, they sold it to Burket, and 21 months later they purchase a half interest therein for $2,774.54; the largest item going to make up that sum being $1,050, which the defendants say was due E. G. Burland for salary, at the rate of $50 a month for the time Burket owned and ran the business, no part of which during that time had been paid, or even demanded. Another substantial item of the purchase price was the bonus of $650, which the Burlands testify was credited them for consenting to go into business with Burket. During the existence of the copartnership Burket, on account of sickness, was absent most of the time from its place of business. No books of account were kept until about nine months after the copartnership was established, and it was dissolved about one month after they were opened. Burket died without ever having seen these books. The case was tried after Burket's death, and the plaintiff, knowing nothing concerning the conduct of the business, was compelled to submit her cause on the testimony of one of the defendants.

In no view of the evidence, however, can the findings of the court be sustained. If the evidence be true, the findings of the court are against it; on the other hand, if the court disbelieved the testimony given by the defendants, the plaintiff is in no better position, for in that event there is no evidence to support the findings. The plaintiff received over $4,000 for her one-half interest in the stock, fixtures, and net credits of the co-partnership, and the testimony introduced by the plaintiff herself shows that each half interest contributed the same amount, to wit, Burket, one-half of the undertaking business, $2,774.54, and one-half of the furniture business, $1,019.54, making a total of $3,794.08, and Burland Bros., one-half of the undertaking business and one-half of the furniture business, of the same value respectively.

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Jan. 6, 1910. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court March 7, 1910.)

1. CONTRACTS (§ 138*)—PUBLIC POLICY—MONEY OBTAINED UNDER ILLEGAL AGREEMENT—DENIAL OF RELIEF.

Where a party entered into an illegal agreement with defendant and M. to swindle others, and pursuant to this agreement, and for the forwarding of its purpose, plaintiff gave his money to M., the failure of M. and defendant to keep the agreement and return the money gave him no right to recover against defendant, since, where both parties are equally in fault, the condition of the defendant is preferable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. § 688; Dec. Dig. § 138.*]

2. CONTRACTS (§ 138*)—PUBLIC POLICY—MONEY OBTAINED UNDER ILLEGAL AGREEMENT—PARI DELICTO.

Where plaintiff deliberately joined with defendant and others for the purpose of swindling third persons, and was himself swindled by his associates, he cannot obtain relief by a claim that he was not in pari delicto, where it does not appear that he was not their equal in intelligence, general knowledge, and experience, or that his participation in the scheme was in a legal sense due to imposition, duress, or undue advantage practiced upon him.

3. CONTRACTS (§ 138*)—PUBLIC POLICY—MONEY OBTAINED UNDER ILLEGAL AGREEMENT—PARI DELICTO.

Where a party entered into a contract to swindle others, and was himself swindled by his associates, the fact that he did not engage in a gambling transaction, did not lose his money on a wager, and did not engage in a conspiracy to defraud others, but only thought he was doing so, while he in fact was the victim of the scheme, did not strengthen his right to recover the money lost.

4. CONTRACTS (§ 138*)—ILLEGAL CONTRACTS—RIGHT OF PARTY TO RECOVER ON RESCISSION.

While where so long as an illegal contract remains executory relief may be accorded to one who repudiates it because of its invalidity, where a party, supposing that he was conspiring with others to swindle third persons, became himself the victim, he cannot recover on the ground that he repudiated the contract, where he did not attempt to do so until the money was declared lost.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. § 687; Dec. Dig. § 138.*]

5. CONTRACTS (§ 138*)—PUBLIC POLICY—RECOVERY OF MONEY PAID UNDER ILLEGAL CONTRACT—GROUNDS OF RELIEF.

Where a party, believing that he was conspiring with defendant and others to defraud third persons, was himself swindled out of money by his associates, in his action in assumpsit to recover the money received by defendant, the fact that defendant subsequently engaged in a similar transaction to defraud another would not justify according plaintiff relief on grounds of public policy, based upon the fact that defendant and the others were engaged in a general scheme to defraud, since the action was not one for conspiracy to defraud.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Monroe, Judge.

Action by Eugene Schmitt against W. S. Gibson. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Clement L. Shinn and Wesley H. Beach, for appellant. Earl Rogers, Paul W. Schenck, and W. H. Dehm, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Plaintiff appeals on the judgment roll from a judgment rendered in favor of defendant. The complaint states an action in assumpsit for money had and received to the use and benefit of plaintiff by defendant, Gibson, John Doe, Jane Doe, and Richard Doe. No service was had and no appearance made by the defendants sued under the fictitious names inserted in the complaint. Gibson, answering for himself alone, denied the allegations of the complaint. The findings are voluminous and consist of a narration of facts connected with a fake pugilistic encounter which one Maxwell, a cousin of Gibson, had arranged between two gentlemen, one of whom was known as Mr. Casey and the other as Mr. McCormick. Plaintiff was made the dupe of his pretended co-conspirators with whom he knowingly joined in an undertaking to swindle others, all of whom were in fact parties in a conspiracy with Gibson to separate plaintiff from $13,000 cash which he had derived from a sale of property. Plaintiff's effort to "get rich quick" failed, and with an awakening conscience which enabled him to distinguish between right and wrong, and firmly believing that he had been wronged, he brought this action to recover the money lost.

Briefly stated, the facts are that plaintiff and Gibson were partners in the hotel business in Los Angeles. The latter, learning that plaintiff was about to sell some property, informed him that his cousin, George Maxwell, had fixed a fight in Denver, and that a good deal of money, could be obtained on this fake fight; that Maxwell had trained both the fighters and was to be stakeholder and referee of the fight and would bet his own money on the result. Plaintiff and defendant went to Denver and were there informed by Maxwell that he (Maxwell) had for 10 years been in the employ of Barnes and Pomeroy, two wealthy Pittsburg men, who would bet heavily on McCormick, one of the pugilists; that he (Maxwell) had never had a chance to make any money on the side and never made anything but his salary; and it was then arranged that plaintiff would bet Maxwell's money on Casey for the reason that Maxwell, being both stakeholder and referee, could not bet. Plaintiff's money was in St. Louis, and he was informed that as a condition of his betting for them he must transfer his money to Denver in order to make an exhibition of his responsibility to Barnes and Pomeroy. Plaintiff did so, and thereupon, in a suite of rooms occupied by plaintiff and Gibson, the betting commenced. There were present plaintiff, Gibson, Maxwell, Barnes, Casey, McCormick, and one unknown person. As the money was bet, Gibson took it to Maxwell, who remained in an adjoining room. Plaintiff did not bet any of his money on the first day, but used that put up by Maxwell, a part of which was money already used and held by him as stakeholder, and which was by Gibson returned from Maxwell to plaintiff to bet against Barnes and Pomeroy. On the second day Gibson and Maxwell advised plaintiff to bet his own money, assuring him that it was fixed for Casey to win the fight. He did so, and also continued to put up money furnished by Maxwell and Gibson, most of which was that already bet and placed in the hands of Maxwell as stakeholder. Plaintiff bet his own money because Maxwell was to be the stakeholder and referee and was betting his own money on Casey, and because he had been told by Maxwell and Gibson that the fight was fixed for Casey to win; and all the time he was betting he thought he was swindling Barnes and Pomeroy, with whom he was betting, and he went into the scheme for that purpose. The truth was, however, that all of the parties, including Gibson, were in a conspiracy to swindle the plaintiff, and the money that was bet against plaintiff never actually changed hands, but was simply used for the benefit of the conspirators to induce the plaintiff to bet his own money. In all, plaintiff bet $13,000 of his own money, all of which was placed in the hands of Maxwell as stakeholder. Thereupon they all went to a vacant house provided by the conspirators, and Casey and McCormick began the fight. In the first two rounds Casey appeared to have the best of it; in the third round, however, Casey stepped into a hole in the floor, left for a heating register, and which had been covered up by a carpet, by reason of which he fell, and Maxwell counted him out. This hole was known to all the parties except plaintiff, and Casey stepped into it designedly. Thereupon plaintiff demanded the return of his money, but did not claim any fraud. Maxwell told him he could not return the money, as it had been bet on the fight. After a conference between Maxwell, Barnes, and Pomeroy, it was stated that on account of the accident to Casey the fight could be had over again, provided plaintiff would put up an additional $10,000 on Casey, which, together with what he had theretofore bet, should constitute the total stakes on the proposed fight; and they generously gave plaintiff 10 days from that date to put up $2,500, and until the 10th of June to put up the remaining $7,500. Plaintiff and Gibson returned to Los Angeles, where Gibson borrowed of plaintiff $1,900, to which he added $600 of his own money and procured a certified check which he pretended to plaintiff he had sent to Maxwell as part of the $10,000; but, in truth, however, the same was not sent at all, and it was not intended that any further fight should take place. On May 23, 1907, Maxwell telegraphed that Barnes had forced the keys of the safe-deposit box from him, and that Maxwell was on the way to Mexico. Other conspirators notified plaintiff that Maxwell was running away with the money, and, before June 10th, a letter was received from Maxwell, stating that Barnes had taken the money away from Maxwell, and that he (Maxwell) was going to Central America.

The court further finds as follows: "The truth is that the conspirators appropriated the money of plaintiff to themselves and divided it between themselves; but there is no evidence that Gibson, personally, got any of it, and the finding will be that he did not get any of plaintiff's money." There are other findings to the effect that no fight was in fact had and no money paid to Barnes and Pomeroy upon the claim that they had won the same as a result of the fight, but was appropriated by them as above stated; that all of the representations, pretenses, acts, and statements of the parties were false and untrue, and at all times known to be false and untrue; that Barnes, Pomeroy, and Maxwell did not in fact bet their money on any contest, but only pretended to bet for the purpose of inducing plaintiff to part with his money and as a part of their scheme to defraud him; that plaintiff believed in the truth of the representations, pretenses, and statements of the defendant and relied thereon, and believed that he was going to swindle those with whom he was betting and went into it wholly for that purpose; that in attempting to swindle others plaintiff was the victim of defendant and the others mentioned who swindled him. There is a further finding that the same parties, about a month later, perpetrated a similar swindle upon one Dr. Vanderbeck, by arranging a wrestling match between Casey and McCormick in the city of Omaha. As conclusions of law, the court finds that the plaintiff has no standing in a court of law, and rendered judgment accordingly.

The conclusion of the court is fully sustained by the case of Abbe v. Marr, 14 Cal. 210, wherein the facts were almost identical with those in the case at bar. In that case the means whereby the swindle was perpetrated was a horse race, the victim being assured by the conspirators that it had been fixed for his horse to win, and upon such representations, and believing them to be true, he was thereby induced to bet his property. He brought an action to recover, and in disposing of the case on appeal the court said: "No court of justice can listen to such a case. When the plaintiff asserts his own turpitude in this way, he sends his case out of court. If, in attempting * * * to swindle another, he becomes the victim of his own arts, it may become a question in morals or in honor which party is the more culpable; courts of law entertain no discussion on the subject, but terminate the controversy by shutting their doors in the face of the intruder."

Waiving the finding to the contrary, and conceding that Gibson did receive plaintiff's money, it nevertheless, devolved upon plaintiff to establish facts showing that it was obtained in a manner that imposed upon Gibson the duty of returning it. Plaintiff seeks to do this by showing that as a means of accomplishing the robbery of Barnes and Pomeroy it was placed in the hands of Maxwell under an illegal agreement made between Maxwell, Gibson, and himself, to the effect that they should and would join with him in swindling Barnes and Pomeroy. Had they kept their agreement, there would have been no cause for complaint on his part. Failing to do this, he brings an action based upon the breach of this unholy agreement, to which he deliberately and knowingly became a party. The principle applicable to relief in such cases is embodied in the two maxims, "Ex pacto illicito non oritur actio," and, "Ex dolo malo non oritur actio," in the application of which the court must, upon plaintiff's own statement, deny him its aid in the pursuit of that which he has lost. This is not out of consideration for the defendant, but due to the fact that, "where both parties are equally in fault, the condition of the defendant is preferable."

Appellant insists, however, that, while he was in delicto, he was not in pari delicto. There is nothing in the findings which indicates that in point of intelligence, general knowledge, and experience plaintiff was not the equal of Gibson. It does not appear that his participation was, in a legal sense, due to imposition, duress, or undue advantage practiced upon him by Gibson or his associates. He deliberately joined with Gibson and others with the avowed intent and purpose of robbing the others, and his only cause for complaint is that there was wanting on Gibson's part the "proverbial honesty among thieves." In some slight degree, plaintiff may be less culpable than defendant; but, in the absence of some practice which gave the latter an undue advantage, the courts, as said in the Abbe Case, will entertain no discussion as to the degree of culpability.

Appellant further insists that he did not engage in a gambling transaction, that he did not lose his money on a wager, and that he did not engage in a conspiracy to defraud others. It is true, he says, that he thought he was doing all these fraudulent and wicked things whereby he intended to and supposed he was assisting in the robbery of Barnes and Pomeroy, believing they were the wealthy dupes of himself and associates. The ground upon which courts withhold relief in such cases is the moral turpitude of the party seeking it. Can it be said that the turpitude attending the act of theft is less because the supposed jewels stolen were in fact worthless paste?

Appellant has cited a number of authorities wherein the courts, under facts somewhat similar, have sustained the right of relief to the one defrauded. An examination of these cases, however, shows that the decisions therein were all based upon facts wanting in the case at bar. It is true that the opinions contain dictum which supports the position of appellant, but it was unnecessary in disposing of the appeals.

In the case of Wright v. Stewart (C. C.) 130 Fed. 905, plaintiff's money was not placed in the hands of a stakeholder as a wager, but in connection with a matter wholly collateral thereto. Moreover, the plaintiff stated that he was not betting it on the race, and before the simulated race occurred he demanded the return of his money, which demand was refused by the conspirators. Says the learned judge in distinguishing that case from the Abbe-Marr Case: "With their own consent they put up their property as a wager, ran the race out, and after it was lost brought suit, and in the petition averred their own turpitude; whereas, here the plaintiff never consented to put up his $5,000 on the foot race, and demanded it back before the simulated race was run. * * * The law accorded to him his locus penitentiæ, and, when he demanded back his money prior to the proposed race, the law should respect his withdrawal." On appeal to the Circuit Court of Appeal, this decision was affirmed by a divided court; Judge Sanborn dissenting. 147 Fed. 321, 77 C. C. A. 499.

So in the case of Falkenberg v. Allen, 18 Okl. 210, 90 Pac. 415, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 494, the plaintiff, upon representations that the result of a foot race was prearranged, placed his money in the hands of a stakeholder, who was one of the conspirators. Before the proposed race occurred, he demanded the return of his money, which was refused. Relief was granted him because of his repentance and repudiation of the transaction before it was fully executed.

It is true that, so long as the illegal contract remains, executory relief should be accorded to one who repudiates the contract because of its illegality. Appellant seeks to bring himself within this doctrine, and argues that, "as long as the light holds out to burn, the vilest sinner may return." It appears from the findings, however, he did not attempt to retrace his steps until the light was extinguished—after the condition under which he should be declared loser or winner was fully executed. Not until Casey was counted out and McCormick declared the victor—and just how long does not appear—did he ask for the return of his money. Conceding such request, if made before the condition was executed, to constitute a sufficient repudiation, nevertheless plaintiff did not withdraw, nor attempt to withdraw, from the transaction until after his money was declared lost. Under these circumstances, the law does not accord one a locus penitentiæ.

In Hobbs v. Boatright, 195 Mo. 693, 93 S. W. 934, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 906, 113 Am. St. Rep. 709, the facts were almost identical with those in the case of Wright v. Stewart, supra. There, as here, the dupe thought he was in a conspiracy to defraud others in a fake foot race, the result of which he understood to be prearranged. He bet $2,000 of his money, while an additional $3,000 was obtained from him by the stakeholder and his confederates by other means wholly collateral to the wager. Recovery was had for the entire sum. The action there was in form for fraud and deceit; it being alleged and proven that defendants had for a number of years engaged in transactions of a like character in different parts of the country. In that case relief was granted upon the ground of public policy. In according the relief the court expressly stated that: "If the case at bar disclosed but one transaction, if we should shut our eyes to other transactions of like character that distinguished history of this Buckfoot gang, if our whole attention was confined to the scheme entered into by the plaintiff with Wasser and Fisher in Oklahoma and the denouement at Webb City, we could not say that one was less guilty than the other; it was a scheme of dishonest purpose and there is no justification or palliation of it, and if there was nothing else in the case to make the offense of one more enormous than the other we would not listen for a moment to plaintiff's prayer for relief." It thus appears that the reasons which actuated the Supreme Court of Missouri in according relief were considerations of public policy based upon the fact that the defendants who had conspired to rob the plaintiff therein had combined for the purpose of engaging in, and were engaged in, the perpetration of similar frauds throughout the country. The action here is not one for conspiracy to defraud, but in assumpsit to compel the defendant Gibson to disgorge that which plaintiff claims he has received. Under this form of action, conceding that evidence of facts connected with the particular transaction whereby the money was lost might be introduced, nevertheless the fact that the defendants engaged in a similar transaction at Omaha about a month later does not justify according relief in this case upon such ground.

In Lockman v. Cobb, 77 Ark. 279, 91 S. W. 546, relief was granted plaintiff, who had lost his money in wagering it upon a fake foot race. The transaction, however, did not involve him in a conspiracy having for its purpose the defrauding of others; on the contrary, he supposed the race was to be an honest test of speed. The ground of recovery in that and the like cases of Webb v. Fulchire, 25 N. C. 485, 40 Am. Dec. 419, and Preston v. Hutchinson, 29 Vt. 144, appears to be based upon the fact that the game was not played "according to Hoyle," but an unfair advantage taken by reason whereof plaintiffs had no chance to win. Clearly, if the gaming, whatever be its character, is conducted according to rule, the one losing money in a wager upon the result would be denied any remedy at law. It is difficult to perceive how he could be entitled to greater consideration if because of cheating the game was conducted unfairly, or the result prearranged. If such facts shall enter into the consideration of one's right to recover money lost in betting, then it inevitably follows that the courts must sit as arbiters of every game upon which money is wagered, act as judge of the race course, and umpire the prize ring. Babcock v. Thompson, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 446, 15 Am. Dec. 235.

To our mind the public welfare is best promoted by adhering to the rule established in this state a half century ago, at which time the doors of the courts were declared closed against one seeking redress under circumstances identical with those presented in the case at bar. Abbe v. Marr, supra.

Judgment affirmed.

SHANNON et al. v. CAVANAUGH et al.

(Civ. 713.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Jan. 11, 1910.)

1. Specific Performance (§ 6*)—Mutuality in Remedy.

The implied covenant arising under Civ. Code, § 1927, providing that an agreement to let for hire binds the letter to secure to the hirer the quiet possession of the thing hired during the term of the hiring against all persons lawfully claiming the same, is that the lessees shall not be evicted by title paramount to that of the lessors who alleged at the time of executing the lease and placing the lessees in possession that the lessors were the owners thereof, and is not a continuing covenant of the lessors for the quiet enjoyment of the leasehold during the whole term thereof against all persons lawfully claiming it, in the nature of a covenant to perform personal service which could not be specifically enforced; and hence, where a lease, by covenants, imposed upon the lessors no obligation other than that of placing the lessees in possession of the premises, which had been performed, and, when the lessors demanded that the lessees perform their covenant to execute a chattel mortgage to secure rent, the lessees were in quiet and peaceful possession, there was no lack of mutuality in remedy which would preclude the lessors' right to enforce specific performance of the lessees' covenant, under Civ. Code, § 3386, providing that neither party to an obligation can be compelled specifically to perform it unless the other party thereto has performed or is compellable specifically to perform everything to which the former is entitled under the same obligation.

2. Specific Performance (§ 5*)—Right to Remedy—Adequate Remedy at Law.

As the value of security by chattel mortgage for rent covenanted for in a lease necessarily depends upon contingencies which render it impracticable to fix the value thereof, and as the law furnishes no standard for the measurement of damages for the breach of an obligation, the value of which is unascertainable, the lessors would have no adequate remedy in damages upon refusal of the lessees to execute the mortgage, and would be entitled to enforce performance of the covenant even if Civ. Code, § 3384, as amended in 1874, providing that, except as otherwise provided in the article, specific performance of an obligation can be compelled, denies the right to specific performance of an obligation when the act to be done is such that pecuniary compensation for its nonperformance would afford adequate relief.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Cent. Dig. § 6; Dec. Dig. § 5.*]

3. Specific Performance (§ 5*)—Right to Relief—Adequate Remedy at Law.

That a lease containing a covenant of the lessees to give chattel mortgage security for rent provided that, if the lessees made default in any of the covenants, the lessors might terminate the lease and possess the premises, would not afford an adequate legal remedy for default in the covenant to give the mortgage.

4. Pleading (§ 214*)—Demurrer—Admissions.

Where there is a general demurrer to a complaint, the allegations of the complaint must be taken as true.

5. Landlord and Tenant (§ 251*)—Restraining Removal of Goods by Tenant—Grounds—Irreparable Injury.

If lessees, who refused to perform a covenant to give chattel mortgage security upon certain furniture for the rent, had no property in the state other than the furniture in question, and were legally obligated to mortgage it to the lessors as security for the rent, and threatened to mortgage or otherwise dispose of it, thereby, as well as by other acts, causing irreparable injury to the lessors, the lessors were entitled to a temporary injunction restraining them from disposing of, incumbering, selling, or removing the furniture.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frederick W. Houser, Judge.

Action by Nellie Shannon and another against William E. Cavanaugh and another. From a judgment for defendants and orders dissolving a temporary restraining order and denying plaintiffs' application for a temporary injunction, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

J. L. Murphey, for appellants. Goldberg & Meily, for respondents.

SHAW, J. Action to enforce the specific performance of a covenant to give a chattel mortgage to secure the rent reserved in a lease of real estate. A general demurrer interposed to the complaint by defendants was sustained. Plaintiffs failed to amend their complaint within the time allowed therefor; whereupon, judgment was rendered against them, from which they prosecute this appeal.

It appears from the complaint that plaintiffs were the owners of a building, the first floor of which consisted of storerooms, and the upper floors of which were divided into rooms and fitted up for rooming house purposes. On March 6, 1908, plaintiffs leased the upper floors of the building to defendants for a period of two years. The express consideration of the lease was the rent reserved therein, which was payable monthly, and numerous covenants and agreements, neglect and failure to perform which on the part of lessees gave the lessors the right to terminate the lease and re-enter and repossess the premises. Among other covenants contained in the lease on the part of the lessees was the following: "And said lessees further covenant and agree that they will pay the said rent in installments when the same become due, and to secure the payment of same to lessors, they hereby agree that the lessors shall have a lien for the security of the payment of said rent upon all furniture brought into the house by the said lessees, and that, after the said lessees install their furniture therein, that, upon demand of lessors, lessees will execute to the lessors a chattel mortgage, or such other instrument as they may deem necessary, upon the said furniture to secure the rent aforesaid." It is alleged: That defendants entered into possession of the premises and "purchased a certain lot of furniture and furnishings and placed the same in said building for the purpose of conducting a rooming house therein, and that the said furniture and furnishings consisted of carpets, beds, bedding, curtains, chairs, and general hall, parlor, bedroom, and kitchen furniture; the exact amount and the exact kinds thereof being unknown to plaintiffs." That thereafter plaintiffs made demand upon defendants that they execute a chattel mortgage upon said furniture to secure the payment of the rent in accordance with their covenant so to do, but that defendants refused to execute such mortgage, and declared that if they could not make the house pay they would take the furniture away and leave the house. It is further alleged that defendants have no other property in this state out of which plaintiffs could collect any judgment that they might obtain for the failure to pay the said rent when the same becomes due, and that defendants threaten to mortgage or otherwise dispose of the said furniture, or remove the same from the said premises, so as to prevent these plaintiffs from obtaining any security therefrom or thereby. The complaint further alleges irreparable injury and want of an adequate remedy at law.

We think the trial court erred in sustaining the demurrer. Respondents undertake to justify the ruling upon the ground that the complaint shows a want of mutuality in remedy. This contention is based upon the provisions of section 3386, Civ. Code, which provides that: "Neither party to an obligation can be compelled specifically to perform it, unless the other party thereto has performed, or is compellable specifically to perform, everything to which the former is entitled under the same obligation," etc. As regards the express covenants of the lease, plaintiffs have fully performed everything which defendants were entitled to have performed under the terms thereof. By the express covenants, no obligation was imposed upon plaintiffs other than that of placing the defendants in possession of the leased premises. This duty had been performed, and at the time of the demand that defendants perform their covenant to execute the chattel mortgage defendants were in the quiet and peaceable possession of the leased premises. Respondents insist, however, that the law implies a covenant on the part of the lessors for the quiet enjoyment of the leasehold during the whole term thereof against all persons lawfully claiming the same (section 1927, Civ. Code); that this implied covenant is a continuing one in the nature of a covenant to perform personal services, and hence not one which could be specifically enforced. There is no merit in this contention. The purport of the implied covenant is that the lessees shall not be evicted bv title paramount to that of the lessors, who allege that, at the time of executing the lease and the placing of lessees in possession of the property, plaintiffs were the owners thereof. Inasmuch therefore, as the lessors were the owners of the property, the use and enjoyment of which they had conveyed to defendants for a term of two years, the latter's possession and enjoyment could not be disturbed by any holder of the title lawfully claiming the same other than plaintiffs themselves. Plaintiffs could not lawfully disturb them, other than by the exercise of the rights reserved under the terms and provisions of the lease under which defendants held possession. For plaintiffs to otherwise interfere with defendants' possession and enjoyment would constitute an unlawful act, the remedy for which, if such wrong was threatened, would in its nature be preventive rather than by decree for specific performance. It appears that defendants are in the quiet and peaceable possession of the premises described in the lease; that there is no title thereto paramount to that held by the lessors; and that the complaint shows that plaintiffs have performed everything which the defendants were entitled to have performed as a condition of executing the chattel mortgage. Respondents also insist that plaintiffs are precluded from the benefit of the relief by reason of the fact that the complaint shows they have an adequate remedy at law. In Senter v. Davis, 38 Cal. 450, it is said: "The jurisdiction of a court of equity to decree specific performance does not turn at all upon the question whether the contract relates to real or personal property, but altogether upon the question whether the breach complained of can be adequately compensated in damages. If it can, the plaintiff's remedy is at law only; if not, he may go into a court of equity, which will grant full redress by compelling specific performance on the part of the defendant." When announced, this statement was in full accord with the general equitable principle declared in section 3384, Civ. Code, which, as it stood prior to the amendment of 1874, expressly denied the right to specific performance of an obligation when the act to be done was such that pecuniary compensation for its nonperformance would afford adequate relief. In 1874 this section was amended by striking out, among other clauses, the subdivision which denied the remedy in those cases wherein the law afforded adequate relief. The section as it now stands reads as follows: "Except as otherwise provided in this article, the specific performance of an obligation may be compelled." As thus amended it would seem that every obligation may be specifically enforced, unless it be an obligation as to which the remedy is denied by other provisions of the article. There appears to be no provision in the article entitled "Specific Performance of Obligations" which limits the remedy to those cases wherein an adequate remedy at law is wanting.

Conceding, however, that the amendment effected no change in the law, we are clearly of the opinion that the breach of the obligation to give the mortgage cannot be adequately compensated in damages, for the reason that from the nature of the obligation it is impracticable to ascertain the extent to which plaintiffs would be damaged by the breach. Security for the payment of the rent during the entire term of the lease must be deemed a thing of value to the parties so indemnified. Inasmuch, however, as the value of such security necessarily depends upon contingencies which render it impracticable to fix the value thereof, and as the law furnishes no standard for the measurement of damages for the breach of an obligation the value of which is unascertainable, it is clear that the parties have no adequate remedy in damages. Section 8, Pomeroy, Spec. Perf. of Contracts.

The lease provided that, in case the lessees made default in any of the covenants therein, the lessors might terminate the lease and re-enter and possess the leased premises. Says counsel for respondents: "Plaintiffs, on defendants' refusal to give the mortgage in question, might have immediately re-entered the premises, and might have had the aid of a court of law in effecting such re-entry." This, it is contended, constituted an adequate legal remedy for default in the covenant to give the mortgage. The exercise of such right on the part of the lessors would in our judgment, fall far short of an adequate remedy; indeed, we fail to perceive how such termination of the lease would constitute any remedy at all. Such act would deprive the lessors of the rental and income to which they were entitled under the terms of the lease, the receipt of which might be, and presumably was, of far more consequence to them than possession of the estate. It is no answer to say that they might make a new lease to other parties. The case of Woodruff v. Water Power Co., 10 N. J. Eq. 489, cited by respondents, bears no analogy to the facts in the case at bar. In that case there was no covenant on the part of the defendant to do the act; but the deed contained a condition, the failure to perform which gave the grantor the right to forfeit the estate. It was there held that, in the absence of any covenant on the part of defendant, there was no obligation upon which to base an action for specific performance, and plaintiff must be content with the right of forfeiture, which was the exclusive remedy provided in the contract.

Upon the filing of the complaint the court, upon plaintiffs' application, made an order directing defendants, at a time and place therein specified, to show cause why a temporary injunction should not be issued, restraining them from disposing of, incumbering, selling, or removing the furniture which they had agreed to mortgage to plaintiffs, and that upon the hearing of such application an order be made restraining defendants from so doing. At the hearing of said application, had upon the complaint and the general demurrer of defendants' interposed thereto, the court dissolved the restraining order and denied the plaintiffs' application for a temporary injunction. Plaintiffs appeal from these orders. As against the general demurrer, we must accept the allegations of the complaint as true. Thus accepted, it appears that defendants have no property in this state, other than the furniture in question; that they are legally obligated to mortgage the same to plaintiffs as security for the payment of the rent reserved in the lease; that defendants threaten to mortgage or otherwise dispose of the same, thereby, as well as by other alleged acts, causing irreparable injury to plaintiffs. It is apparent from the record that the making of the orders was due to an erroneous conception of the law upon which the court held the complaint wanting in facts sufficient to state a cause of action.

The judgment and orders are reversed.

CONLAN v. SUPERIOR COURT et al.

(Civ. 779.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. Jan. 7, 1910.)

1. ELECTIONS (§ 280*)—CONTESTS—PROCESS—SERVICE OF CITATION.

Service of citation in an election contest, made as provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 1119, by leaving a copy at the house where a party, who cannot be found, last resided, is constitutional and valid.

2. PROHIBITION (§ 28*)—SCOPE OF INQUIRY—QUESTIONS OF FACT IN LOWER COURT—ELECTION CONTEST.

A determination by the trial court that a party cannot be found so that citation may be served on him by leaving a copy at the house where he last resided, as provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 1119, is conclusive on the Supreme Court in prohibition proceedings, based on the claim that the trial court had no jurisdiction to proceed with an election contest for the reason that the citation was not served on petitioner.

3. PROHIBITION (§ 1*)—USE OF WRIT—SCOPE OF REMEDY.

The writ cannot be used as a writ of error to determine a question of fact which it was the province of the trial court to determine, but its sole province is to determine whether the superior court is proceeding in excess of its jurisdiction.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Petition by Charles T. Conlan for prohibition against the Superior Court in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and Frank J. Murasky, judge thereof. Writ denied.

Edward Lande, for petitioner.

PER CURIAM. It is sought by the petitioner herein to obtain a writ of prohibition against the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, in an election contest pending in said court, against the petitioner, who has been declared elected to the office of police judge of said city.

It is claimed that the superior court has no jurisdiction to proceed with the contest for the reason that the citation was not served upon petitioner. The Code provides (Code Civ. Proc. § 1119) that the citation may be served upon the party in person, or, if he cannot be found, by leaving a copy thereof at the house where he last resided. The service may be made by leaving a copy as provided in the section under the circumstances therein mentioned, and such service is constitutional and valid. Chatham v. Mansfield, 1 Cal. App. 298, 82 Pac. 343. The petitioner fails to state in his petition that such service was not made by leaving a copy as provided in the section. If the question was determined by the trial court that the petitioner could not be found, such determination of that question is conclusive upon us in this proceeding. We cannot try the question collaterally. We must presume in favor of the determination of the judge of original jurisdiction. The writ of prohibition cannot be used as a writ of error to determine a question of fact which it was the province of the trial court to determine. Its sole province is to determine as to whether or not the superior court is proceeding in excess of its jurisdiction.

The writ is denied.

1. Certiorari (§ 46*)—Service of Writ.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1070, providing that the writ of review may be directed to an inferior tribunal, board, or officer, or to any other person having the custody of the proceedings to be certified, etc., a writ of review or order to show cause need only be served on the officer or tribunal to whom it is directed.

2. Certiorari (§ 5*)—Existence of Remedy by Appeal or Writ of Error.

3. Certiorari (§ 28*)—Grounds—Want of Jurisdiction—Determination of Question Whether Jurisdiction Exists.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1068, providing that a writ of review may be granted when an inferior tribunal, board, or officer exercising judicial functions has exceeded the jurisdiction conferred, and there is no appeal nor any adequate remedy, a writ of review lies to determine whether an inferior tribunal, board, or officer exercising judicial functions has exceeded the jurisdiction conferred where there is no appeal nor any adequate remedy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Certiorari, Cent. Dig. §§ 33, 41; Dec. Dig. § 28.*]

4. Certiorari (§ 15*)—Grounds—Subject-Matter.

A writ of review lies to review the refusal of the superior court to dismiss an appeal from a justice's court because of the failure to give an undertaking for the payment of costs on appeal, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 978.

5. Justices of the Peace (§ 159*)—Municipal Corporations (§ 642*)—Police Court—Appeal—Undertaking—Necessity.

The undertaking for the payment of costs on appeal from a justice's or police court, required by Code Civ. 6. Certiorari (§ 68*)—Jurisdiction—Findings—Review.

A finding of the superior court on conflicting evidence, on a motion to dismiss an appeal from a justice's court on the ground that it had not been perfected by the filing of an undertaking prescribed by Code Civ. Proc. § 978, that a cash deposit made by appellant was made in lieu of the undertaking is conclusive on the court, on a writ of review to review the refusal of the superior court to dismiss the appeal for want of a sufficient undertaking; and it cannot declare that the finding is erroneous, or that the superior court is without jurisdiction to entertain the appeal.

7. Justices of the Peace (§ 159*)—Appeal—Perfecting Appeal—Cash Deposit in Lieu of Undertaking.

Where a cash deposit, made with a justice of the peace by the appellant appealing from the justice's judgment, was made for the purpose and in lieu of the undertaking on appeal required by Code Civ. Proc. § 978, the appeal was perfected, and the superior court was thereby vested with jurisdiction, though the sum deposited exceeded the amount required for that purpose.

8. Certiorari (§ 64*)—Jurisdiction—Findings—Conclusiveness.

Where the question of jurisdiction is determined by an inferior tribunal, board, or officer whose jurisdiction of a proceeding is challenged through a writ of review, on evidence aliunde the record, and on evidence justifying a conclusion for or against such jurisdiction, the court entertaining the proceedings on writ of review cannot interfere with the conclusion reached; it being the result of the exercise of a necessary discretion vested in all tribunals, boards, and officers exercising judicial functions.

Application for a writ of review by Charles W. Thomas, Jr., against N. A. Hawkins, as

Judge of the Superior Court in and for the County of Yolo, and others. Order to show cause discharged.

Charles W. Thomas, for petitioner. Elmer W. Armfield, for respondents.

HART, J. This is an application for a writ of review.

Before disposing of the proceeding upon the merits, we shall notice some preliminary points suggested by the respondents.

1. The motion to quash the order to show cause and the proceedings herein is denied. The grounds of this motion are that the order to show cause granted by this court was not served upon the real party in interest, and (rather in the nature of a demurrer) that the allegations of the petition on which said order was issued are subject to some extremely technical objections, to which it is not necessary to make special reference. The writ or order to show cause was served upon the officer and tribunal to whom it was directed, and this is all that is required by the statute. Section 1070, Code Civ. Proc.

2. But counsel for the respondents insists, with apparent earnestness, that a writ of review "is not the proper remedy in this matter, and that this court cannot determine the issue involved." In support of this position counsel declares that: "If the superior court had jurisdiction to hear the motion (motion to dismiss), then there can be no question that its ruling upon the motion was simply an exercise of that jurisdiction, and, however erroneous such ruling might be, it would only be an error of law, and in no manner be subject to review by an original proceeding in this court"—citing Buckley v. Superior Court, 96 Cal. 119, 31 Pac. 8, and Sherer v. Superior Court, 96 Cal. 654, 31 Pac. 565, as sustaining the view thus suggested. It is only elementary to declare that the writ of review cannot be made to perform the office of a writ of error for the correction of errors of law or of fact. The full scope of the remedy is as is described by section 1068 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to wit, to determine whether an inferior tribunal, board, or officer, exercising judicial functions, has exceeded the jurisdiction of such tribunal, board, or officer, where there is no appeal, nor, in the judgment of the court, any plain, speedy, and adequate remedy.

But the position here of counsel for the respondents is without the slightest foundation, either in principle or precedent, upon which it may rest. In both the cases in 96 Cal. and 31 Pac., cited by counsel, the appeals had been regularly taken to the superior court, and the "excess of jurisdiction" alleged therein consisted of rulings of the courts after the latter had acquired jurisdiction of the cases. Here the question goes to the very root of the court's power to pass upon any proposition affecting the merits of the cause, or any other matter pertinent thereto, except to pass upon the motion to dismiss the appeal for want of jurisdiction to entertain the same. No better authority than the statute itself need be sought to show the obvious and utter untenableness of counsel's position. It (section 978, Code Civ. Proc.) plainly says: "An appeal from a justice's or police court is not effectual for any purpose, unless an undertaking be filed with two or more sureties in the sum of one hundred dollars for the payment of the costs on appeal." If counsel's argument were maintainable, that section could be rendered absolutely nugatory in those appeals where, notwithstanding the fact that no appeal bond was filed, the court decided that it nevertheless had acquired jurisdiction to entertain such appeals. The undertaking for the payment of costs on appeal is obviously the essential and indispensable prerequisite to the conferring of jurisdiction of appeals from justice's or police courts on the superior court; and, where in such cases that necessary formality is not complied with, the superior court is as powerless to hear or try the cause as it would be to try and determine one within its own jurisdiction on oral pleadings, or to try and decide and conclude the rights of a party where summons had not been served and returned by any of the methods authorized by law. But we are not without direct authority in our own state upon this subject. The case of Swem v. Monroe, 148 Cal. 741, 83 Pac. 1074, was where a writ of prohibition was granted to restrain further proceedings in the superior court in a cause appealed from the justice's court to the first-mentioned court on the ground that no bond had been given for costs on appeal; the superior court having refused to grant a motion to dismiss the appeal for that reason. The appellant (in the superior court) had deposited with the justice of the peace the sum of $86.30, which was the amount of the judgment rendered and entered against her. The Supreme Court says: "In the present case the deposit of money was less than $100, which was insufficient to perfect the appeal. The superior court was without jurisdiction, and should have dismissed the appeal." The order of the court was that the writ of prohibition issue "commanding the respondent to refrain from further proceedings in the case," amounting practically and substantially to a dismissal of the appeal.

3. The petition alleges, among other things: That on the 1st day of September, 1909, E. T. Lampton, as justice of the peace of Woodland township, in the county of Yolo, in a certain action wherein petitioner was plaintiff and one Chas. J. Groh was defendant, rendered judgment against said Groh and in favor of said petitioner in the sum of $163.11, which sum includes costs taxed at $22.89; that, on the 16th day of September, 1909, "the said justice issued and delivered to the constable of said Woodland township an execution in the said action against the property of the defendant for the said sum of $163.11, and on the same day said constable levied the execution on the property of said Groh, and took the same into his possession, and retained possession thereof until the said justice, upon deposit by defendant of the sum of $163.11, as a stay of proceedings, directed him, the said constable, to stay proceedings, whereupon the said constable stayed all proceedings, and relinquished the said property to said Chas. J. Groh." It is further alleged that on said 16th day of September, 1909, a notice of appeal was filed with the justice by the attorney for said Groh, said notice stating that the appeal was from the judgment on questions of both law and fact, and thereafter said attorney deposited with said justice in cash the sum of $163.11, equal in amount to the judgment and the costs awarded to petitioner; that thereupon the justice transmitted to the clerk of the superior court of Yolo county a certified copy of his docket, the pleadings, notices, and other papers appertaining to and filed in said cause, together with the notice of appeal and the money deposit of $163.11. No bond for costs on appeal was filed, nor any deposit of cash made by the defendant in said action, after the appeal was taken, except the said sum of $163.11. On the 19th day of October, 1909, petitioner gave notice that on the 25th day of October, 1909, he would move to dismiss the appeal, on the ground that the same had not been perfected by the filing of the undertaking prescribed by section 978 of the Code of Civil Procedure. On the 8th day of November, 1909, the respondents made an order refusing to grant the motion to dismiss the appeal, "upon the ground that said deposit of $163.11 was a sufficient undertaking on appeal for the payment of costs."

The controversy here arises from the conflicting views between petitioner and the attorney for the defendant Groh with regard to the purpose for which the deposit of $163.11 in cash was made with the justice of the peace. Petitioner declares in his affidavit, upon which, with others, the motion to dismiss the appeal was pressed before the respondents, that the attorney for the defendant distinctly and unequivocally agreed to deposit with the justice a sufficient sum to cover the judgment and costs if he (petitioner) would cause the execution to be withdrawn, and no further proceedings had thereunder, and the property levied upon surrendered to said defendant; that with this understanding the justice directed the constable to release the property and to take no further steps under the execution; that the attorney for Groh deposited said sum with the justice in pursuance of his promise made to the petitioner. The statement of petitioner is corroborated in many particulars by the affidavit of the justice of the peace and that of C. W. Thomas, Sr., associated with petitioner as counsel for the latter.

The return to the order to show cause certifies to this court the record in the case of Petitioner v. Groh, together with all the proceedings had before respondents on the motion to dismiss the appeal. Said return discloses that, in rebuttal of the evidence produced by the petitioner in the form of the affidavits to which we have referred, the testimony of the attorney for the defendant Groh was received; the substance of said testimony being set out in the return and certified to by the judge of the superior court. The attorney for Groh denied that the property of his client had been seized by the constable under the execution issued on the judgment rendered and entered against Groh, but declared that the constable, on the 16th day of September, appeared at Groh's place of business and threatened to levy upon his property; that, having been informed of this act of the constable, he (attorney for Groh) arranged with petitioner to have the constable to cease further proceedings on the execution, promising to immediately file his notice of appeal and the bond or undertaking for costs on said appeal; that on said 16th day of September, he filed his notice of appeal and deposited with the justice the sum of $163.11. The attorney further testified: "No levy of the execution was ever made; the officer did not take possession of the store, nor did he close it up; the execution was not recalled by the justice of the peace at any time, or at all, but was recalled by Mr. Thomas himself, and said justice court made no order in the premises. I did not deposit said sum of $163.11, or any other sum, with said justice as a bond to stay proceedings, but did deposit the same as a bond on appeal." Thus it appears that the respondents decided the motion to dismiss the appeal adversely to the contention of the petitioner upon evidence presenting a conflict upon the vital point involved, and this court is in no position to declare that the decision is erroneous, or that the respondents are without jurisdiction to entertain the appeal.

It will not be disputed that, if the cash deposit, made with the justice of the peace by the appellant in the case involved here, was so made for the purpose and in lieu of the undertaking on appeal required by section 978 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the appellant thus perfected his appeal, and the superior court was thereby vested with jurisdiction thereof, notwithstanding the fact that the sum deposited greatly exceeds the amount required for that purpose. Mokelumne Hill Canal & M. Co. v. Woodbury, 10 Cal. 186; Ward v. Superior Court, 58 Cal. 519; Pacific Window Glass Co. v. Smith, 8 Cal. App. 767, 97 Pac. 898; Swen v. Monroe, 148 Cal. 741, 83 Pac. 1074. The attorney for Groh positively testified that his purpose in making the deposit was to render his appeal effectual under the terms of section 978 of the Code of Civil Procedure; and, while the fact that the sum deposited was the exact equivalent of the amount of the judgment and costs awarded to the petitioner, and much in excess of the amount required in lieu of the undertaking on appeal, might be regarded as a circumstance tending to show that the real and original purpose of the deposit was to stay proceedings, yet, as stated, we cannot say that the conclusion of the respondents from all the evidence is not justified. It is no doubt true that the respondents, in considering the testimony, concluded that the attorney for Groh would not engage in the perfectly futile proceeding of taking an appeal without perfecting the same in the manner imperatively required by the statute, and thus arrived at the conclusion that the statement of said attorney that the purpose of the deposit was to render the appeal effectual was true.

It must be conceded that, where the question of jurisdiction is determined by an inferior tribunal, board, or officer, whose jurisdiction of a certain matter or proceeding is challenged through the writ of review, upon evidence aliunde the record itself, and upon evidence justifying a conclusion either for or against such jurisdiction, the court entertaining the proceedings on review cannot interfere with the conclusion thus reached, for such conclusion is the result of the exercise of the necessary discretion vested in all tribunals, boards, and officers exercising judicial functions. And that evidence may be taken to determine a jurisdictional fact, and that it is not only proper, but necessary, to certify such evidence up, with the record, on certiorari is fully established by the following cases: People v. Board of Delegates, 14 Cal. 479; Lowe v. Alexander, 15 Cal. 301; Blair v. Hamilton, 32 Cal. 49; Schwarz v. Superior Court, 111 Cal. 106, 43 Pac. 580; People v. Goodwin, 5 N. Y. 568.

For the reasons ventured herein, the order herein to show cause is discharged.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

Ex parte COLE et al. (Cr. 123.)

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 24*)—COUNTY ORDINANCES—REPEAL.

Const. art. 22, § 1, provides that all laws in force at the adoption of the Constitution not inconsistent therewith shall remain in full force until altered or repealed by the Legislature, and that all rights, actions, prosecutions, claims, etc., not inconsistent therewith, shall continue to be as valid as if the Constitution had not been adopted. Held, that article 4, § 25½, adopted as an amendment in 1902, providing that the Legislature might provide for the division of the state into fish and game districts, and might enact such laws for the protection of fish and game therein as it deemed appropriate, was prospective only in operation, and, not being self-executing, did not repeal an ordinance of the supervisors of S. county prohibiting the seining of fish therein so long as the Legislature had not seen fit to adopt legislation under such authority.

Application for a writ of habeas corpus by Ray Cole and Joe Ruise. Petitioners remanded.

Ross Campbell, for petitioners. Clarence Lea, Dist. Atty., and G. W. Hoyle, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. Petitioners were charged with the violation of an ordinance entitled "An ordinance prohibiting the casting, extending or setting of any seine or net of any kind for the catching of any fish in any river, stream or slough in the county of Sonoma," and passed by the board of supervisors of said county on the 14th day of February, 1899.

The authority of the board to enact said ordinance, its validity when enacted, the sufficiency of the complaint charging the offense, and the regularity of the proceedings culminating in the arrest of petitioners are all unchallenged. Petitioners' only contention is that said ordinance has been abrogated by section 25½ of article 4 of the Constitution of the state, adopted as an amendment in 1902. Said amendment is as follows: "The Legislature may provide for the division of the state into fish and game districts, and may enact such laws for the protection of fish and game therein as it may deem appropriate for the respective districts."

It is admitted that the Legislature has taken no action in pursuance of said amendment, and, as the provision itself is not self-operative, it is impossible to hold that by the terms of said amendment the ordinance involved herein has been repealed. The most that could be urged by petitioners is that the power to regulate the pursuit of fish and game has been taken away from the board of supervisors and given exclusively to the Legislature. But, conceding without deciding this, it is manifest that the said amendment is prospective, and not retrospective, in its operation, and it does not expressly, nor can it be held by implication to, affect any prior legislation by the board of supervisors valid at the time of its enactment. Article 22 of the Constitution provides: "That no inconvenience may arise from the alterations and amendments in the Constitution of the state, and to carry the same into complete effect, it is hereby ordained and declared: Sec. 1. That all laws in force at the adoption of the Constitution, not inconsistent therewith, shall remain in full force and effect until altered or repealed by the Legislature; and all rights, actions, prosecutions, claims and contracts of the state, counties, individuals, or bodies corporate not inconsistent therewith shall continue to be as valid as if the Constitution had not been adopted." The same rule must, of course, apply to amendments to the Constitution and the principle is indorsed in many decisions, and, indeed, hardly needs authority in its support.

In Gurnee v. Superior Court, 58 Cal. 91, it is said: "It is a well-settled rule of construction, applicable alike to Constitutions and statutes, that they are to be considered prospective and not retrospective in their operation, unless a contrary intention clearly appears." In Ex parte Burke, 59 Cal. 8 (43 Am. Rep. 231), in reference to a similar condition, it is said: "At the time the law in question was passed, there was no constitutional objection to special and local legislation. This was held by the Supreme Court in the very early case of Ryan v. Johnson, 5 Cal. 87, and the same doctrine was again laid down in the case of People v. C. P. R. R. Co., 43 Cal. 398. When the act was passed, it was a valid act, even conceding for the purposes of the argument that it was a special law, as is claimed in this case. The question therefore arises: Was the act abrogated by the provisions of the new Constitution referred to above? The language of section 25, art. 4, is that 'the Legislature shall not pass local or special laws.' The constitutional inhibition manifestly applies to future, and not to past, legislation. The provision is purely and simply prospective in its operation, and the words will not justify any other construction. It did not, therefore, operate as a repeal of acts passed by the Legislature years before the Constitution went into effect, but merely put a stop to all future legislation of that objectionable character. If authority were required in support of this view, it will be found in the following cases: State v. Barbee, 3 Ind. 258; Hingle v. State, 24 Ind. 28; Cooley's Const. Lim. 76."

We see no necessity for further quotation in support of a proposition that seems so plain. None of the cases cited by petitioners afford any support to their contention.

The petitioners are remanded.

HENTIG v. JOHNSON et al. (Civ. 667.)

APPEAL AND ERROR (913*)—PRESUMPTIONS—PARTIES.

Code Civ. Proc. § 385, authorizes the action to be continued in the name of the original party in case of a transfer of any interest therein, or permits the court to allow the transferee to be substituted in the action. Upon a motion for judgment against sureties on an undertaking for appeal from a money judgment, it appeared that respondent assigned all his interest in the original judgment before the remittitur from the appellate court, affirming the original judgment, was filed, but it was not shown that in moving for judgment on the undertaking, respondent was not acting for the real party in interest. Respondent acted as his own attorney in the original action, and continued to act as attorney in making the motion. Held, that in support of the judgment on the undertaking, it would be presumed on appeal that respondent acted for the person entitled to move for judgment thereon, whether for himself or the assignee of the judgment, and a contention that payment of a judgment on respondent's motion would not bar another judgment on the assignee's motion was not available to prevent judgment on respondent's motion; the assignee not seeking judgment against the sureties for herself.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; George H. Hutton, Judge.

Action by F. G. Hentig against Frances E. Johnson, W. L. Williams, and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, upon a motion for judgment against sureties on an appeal bond, Williams appeals. Affirmed.

W. L. Williams (E. C. Bower, of counsel), for appellant. F. G. Hentig, for respondent.

TAGGART, J. Appeal from a judgment entered upon motion against sureties on an undertaking to perfect an appeal from a money judgment, and to stay execution thereon. 8 Cal. App. 221, 96 Pac. 390. The motion was regularly noticed and heard upon a showing by the respondent that more than 30 days had elapsed since the filing in the office of the clerk of the superior court of the remittitur of this court affirming the judgment of the trial court, that $50 additional costs had been incurred by respondent, and that no part of the judgment appealed from had been paid. It was also made to appear to the court that, subsequent to the date of the original judgment, and prior to the filing of the remittitur from this court as aforesaid, the respondent Hentig assigned all his right, title, and interest in and to the original judgment to one Alice P. Haney, who is still the owner of said judgment, but that respondent did not sell or assign to said assignee of the judgment any interest in either the undertaking on appeal or the undertaking for stay of execution.

Appellant here contends that the assignment of the judgment constituted an equitable assignment of the interests of Hentig in the undertaking, and that the court had no authority under the showing made to enter judgment in favor of anybody but the assignee of the judgment, Alice P. Haney. Section 385, Code Civ. Proc., authorizes the action or proceeding to be continued in the name of the original party, and it is only by permission of the court that the name of the assignee can be substituted. There is nothing in the record to show that in his motion for judgment against the sureties on the undertaking Hentig was not acting on behalf of the real party in interest. He continued to act as the attorney in the case in making the motion. This he might do whether for himself or his assignee, and in support of the judgment it will be presumed that he was acting for the one entitled to make the motion, whichever this was. It is unnecessary that we should pass upon the question whether Heisen v. Smith, 138 Cal. 216, 71 Pac. 180, 94 Am. St. Rep. 39, overrules or merely distinguishes Chilstrom v. Eppinger, 127 Cal. 326, 59 Pac. 696, 78 Am. St. Rep. 46.

We see nothing in the contention that the payment of a judgment, entered on motion of a respondent under section 942, Code Civ. Proc., would not estop the assignee of the respondent from entering up another judgment and collecting a second time from the sureties on the original undertaking. The assignee is not here either objecting to the enforcement of the judgment or attempting to have a judgment entered against the sureties on her own behalf. We cannot assume that she will be, and until she does the good faith of the respondent will be presumed.

Judgment affirmed.

In re DEVLIN & JUDAH CO. (Civ. 615.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. Jan. 6, 1910. Rehearing Denied Feb. 3, 1910. Denied by Supreme Court March 7, 1910.)

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 43*)—PERSON ENTITLED TO RAISE CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTION—RELIANCE ON STATUTE.

Applicant filed a petition under Pol. Code, § 4462, providing that when a newspaper desires to have its standing as a newspaper of general circulation, as that term is defined in section 4460, giving as one of the essentials that it be published for one year prior to the application established, it may file a verified petition setting forth the facts, and, upon a proper showing, a decree may be entered. The petition failed to show that the paper had been published for one year. Held, that the applicant cannot contend that this requirement is in violation of Const. art. 1, §§ 11, 21, providing against class legislation; since it constitutes only a part of the definition defining a paper of general circulation, and, if held invalid, no law remains under which the petition can be brought, and, if valid, the petition shows a failure to comply therewith.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Cruz County; Lucas F. Smith, Judge.

Application by the Devlin & Judah Company for a decree declaring the Santa Cruz Evening News to be a newspaper of general circulation, which was opposed by Friend W. Richardson. From an order granting the prayer of the petition, an appeal was taken. Reversed.

McGowan, Squires & Westlake and Duncan McPherson, Jr., for appellant. Hugh R. Osborn, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is a proceeding instituted under title 5, pt. 4, of the Political Code, to have the Santa Cruz Evening News declared a newspaper of general circulation and entitled to print official advertising.

The petition shows that said newspaper was established November 1, 1907; that it is printed and circulated in the city of Santa Cruz every day, Sundays and holidays excepted, and is devoted to the dissemination of local and telegraphic news and intelligence of a general character, having a bona fide subscription list of paying subscribers numbering over 1,500, and is not devoted to the interests of a particular class, profession, trade, calling, race, or denomination. The petition was filed July 20, 1908, at which time said paper had not been published and established for a period of one year. Section 4462 of said Code authorizes any one to appear and contest such a petition, and Friend W. Richardson, on behalf of the California Press Association, appeared and filed what was denominated a "demurrer and contest." The demurrer was upon the ground that the petition does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and that it does not set forth facts sufficient to authorize the court to grant the relief prayed for, in this: That it has not been published for one year preceding the filing of said petition. The demurrer was overruled, and upon final hearing the prayer of the petition was granted.

We think the demurrer should have been sustained, and the respondent's application denied. Section 4460 defines what is a newspaper of general circulation, to wit, one "published for the dissemination of local and telegraphic news and intelligence of a general character, having a bona fide subscription list of paying subscribers, and which shall have been established, printed and published at regular intervals, in the state, county, city, city and county, or town where such publication, notice of publication, or official advertising is given or made, for at least one year preceding the date of such publication, notice or advertisement." It thus appears that the petition fails to show that the Santa Cruz Evening News was a newspaper of general circulation as defined by said section, in that it had not been established for the period of a year. If section 4460 is a valid exercise of legislative power, it cannot be doubted that the petition fails to state a cause of action. Respondent, however, contends that the section is unconstitutional as class and discriminating legislation, because the section requires that such newspaper shall have been established, printed, and published for one year. Its argument is based on article 1, §§ 11, 21, Const., which read that "all laws of a general nature shall have uniform operation, * * * nor shall any citizen or class of citizens be granted privileges or immunities which upon the same terms shall not be granted to all citizens." The provision of the section assailed is an essential and inseparable part of the definition. It is contained in the same sentence, and grammatically and logically it is a modification of every other part of the definition. The section requires the newspaper to be of a certain character as to contents, and published at regular intervals for a period of one year. We cannot assume that the Legislature would have enacted any portion of this section defining a newspaper of general circulation without the qualifying clause requiring it to be published at regular intervals for a period of one year. If the requirement for the publication during one year is invalid and of no effect, then section 4460 fails to define such a newspaper.

Section 4462 provides that when a newspaper desires to have its standing as a newspaper of general circulation, as that term is defined in section 4460, ascertained and established, it may at its option file a verified petition, setting forth the facts which justify such action, and upon a proper showing such a decree may be made. No right can exist to have established by decree of court that a newspaper is one of general circulation, as that term is defined by section 4460, if that part of the section defining such a paper is invalid.

The result is that whether the section is valid or not the petition fails to state a cause of action. If the section is valid, the petitioner has failed to state facts sufficient to bring its newspaper within the definition. If it is invalid, the section as a matter of law contains no definition of a newspaper of general circulation, and there is no foundation for the petition.

The judgment is reversed.

HALL, J. I concur.

COOPER, P. J. I concur in the judgment of reversal. The sole and only authority for a proceeding of this kind is the Political Code, §§ 4460, 4461, 4462. Section 4462 provides that when a newspaper shall desire to have its standing as a newspaper of general circulation, as that term is defined in section 4460, ascertained and established, it may file a verified petition, and obtain a judgment of the court, by doing the things therein enumerated, to the effect that it is such paper. The petition does not show that the Santa Cruz Evening News is a newspaper of general circulation as that term is defined by section 4460, in this: That it does not allege nor show that said paper had been printed and published for one year prior to the time of filing the petition, but, on the contrary, it shows that the said newspaper had been established and published less than nine months at said time.

To entitle the petitioner to this special kind of judgment provided for by the sections of the Code enumerated, it must comply with the express conditions on which the judgment is authorized. It is elementary that statutory remedies must be strictly pursued, and cannot be extended to cases not named nor included within the classes enumerated. It is not necessary to discuss or determine the constitutionality of the provisions of the Code relied upon by the petitioner.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Action by Margaret Mahoney against the Board of Education and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Hiram W. Johnson, Austin Lewis, and R. M. Royce, for appellant. Percy V. Long, for respondents.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an action brought to restrain the board of education of the city and county of San Francisco from leasing certain premises dedicated to public school purposes. The property involved is on the southeasterly corner of Fifth and Market streets in San Francisco, and is known as the Lincoln school lot. After some formal allegations the complaint alleges that said property was in the year 1858 vested in the commissioners of the funded debt of said city and county; that in said year an act of the Legislature was passed and approved, authorizing and empowering that commission to convey said property to the board of education of said city and county, in trust to and for the use of public schools in said city and county; that thereafter, the said commissioners did make, execute, and deliver to said board of education, as trustee and in trust to and for the use of such public schools, a conveyance and transfer of said property; that thereafter, by an ordinance of said city and county, known as the Van Ness ordinance, approved by a act of the Legislature duly passed, the title to said property was confirmed in said board of education for the purpose of sites for schoolhouses, and thereafter the title of said board for said purposes was, by an act of Congress of the United States, again confirmed. That said board of education, as such trustee, has ever since held and does now hold the title to said real property for public school purposes, and as a site for schoolhouses, and for no other use or purpose whatsoever. The complaint further alleges that the board of education, unless restrained, will lease that property for a term of 35 years to one Maurice Rosenthal, to be devoted to purposes foreign to those contemplated by the dedication; that the board of education is without power to devote said lands to any other use than that to which they were dedicated. Then follows the prayer of the complaint. Defendants demurred to the complaint, the demurrer was sustained without leave to amend, and judgment was rendered against plaintiff, from which judgment this appeal is prosecuted.

Plaintiff contends that to permit the defendants to lease this property as contemplated will be, as alleged in the complaint, to allow the property to be diverted from the purposes to which it was dedicated, and that this the board of education has no power to do. When land has been dedicated to a definite and specific purpose by grant or devise, it is well settled that the property cannot, without the consent of the grantor or devisor, or his successor in interest, be used for any other purpose. 2 Dillon on Municipal Corporations, § 650; Harter v. San Jose, 141 Cal. 659, 75 Pac. 344. It is also true that when dedicated land is situated within a municipality, but is set aside and reserved by the state for certain purposes, the muncipality has no authority to divert the property from such purposes. But the right of the state to do so, on the other hand, is unlimited, unless there are contract restrictions or private rights of an abutting owner or other person involved.

This proposition is abundantly supported by the authorities. In the case of Hart v. Burnett, 15 Cal. 530, at page 581, the court found that the city and county of San Francisco held the title to the land which constituted the old pueblo of Yerba Buena as the successor of the Mexican pueblo, and in trust to and for the purposes for which it was dedicated by the Mexican law. The court, at page 581, said: "We do not dispute the proposition that the Legislature, perhaps without the consent of the city and county of San Francisco—certainly with it—could, by virtue of its paramount political sovereignty, change the trusts upon which those lands were held. It might undoubtedly authorize another and different mode of disposing of them, and by other and different agents." In Polack v. S. F. Orphan Asylum, 48 Cal. 492, it was held that land dedicated for street purposes could be revoked by an act of the Legislature. It was there said: "That the Legislature possesses competent power to dedicate a street in a city; that the Legislature may delegate or give such power to the municipal authorities in such city; that its exercise by the municipal authorities is dependent upon the will and subject to the control of the Legislature; and that after such power has been thus given to municipal authorities, the Legislature may revoke it in part, as well as in whole, or without an express revocation may itself exercise it in any particular instance—are propositions about which there can be no controversy in this state." In City of Monterey v. Jacks, 139 Cal. 542, 73 Pac. 436; Id., 203 U. S. 360, 27 Sup. Ct. 67, 51 L. Ed. 220, the court held that the lands dedicated to the pueblo of Monterey for certain public uses were held by the city of Monterey as successor of the pueblo, subject to the same purposes. There certain lands dedicated for named public purposes were sold to an individual, which sale was approved, ratified, and confirmed by an act of the Legislature, and the court held the sale valid, and said that where land was not acquired by a municipality in its proprietary right the Legislature had absolute power to alienate it, or when it had been sold to ratify such sale. In Payne v. Treadwell, 16 Cal. 233, the Supreme Court of this state said: "The agents of the corporation can sell and dispose of the property of the corporation only in the way and according to the order of the Legislature, and therefore the Legislature may, by law operating immediately upon the subject, dispose of this property, or give effect to any previous disposition, or attempted disposition, of it. The property itself is a trust, and the Legislature is the prime and original controlling power, managing and directing the use, disposition, and direction of it." See, also, Brook v. Horton, 68 Cal. 555, 10 Pac. 204; San Francisco v. Burr, 108 Cal. 460, 41 Pac. 482; Meriwether v. Garrett, 102 U. S. 472, 26 L. Ed. 197; 2 Dillon on Municipal Corporations, §§ 651, 652. These authorities undoubtedly are to the effect that, where lands are held by a city, board, commission, or other entity, in trust for the state, the Legislature may revoke the dedication.

According to the allegations of the complaint the land in question, by an act of the Legislature, was held by the board of education in trust, to and for the use of public schools in San Francisco, and was subject, therefore, as we have just seen, to be diverted by the Legislature from such purpose, and the leasing of the property by the board of education as proposed, it is conceded, would be a diversion of it from the use to which it was dedicated; but, as it would be under a provision of the charter approved by the Legislature, it would in effect be by the direction and under the authority of the Legislature, and hence valid. The board of education in this case was proceeding to act in accordance with subdivision 11, § 1, c. 3, of article 7, of the charter of San Francisco, which reads: "* * * The board of education shall have power: 11. To lease to the highest responsible bidder, for the benefit of the common school fund, for a term not exceeding thirty-five years, any real property of the school department not required for school purposes. * * *" This subdivision of the chapter was approved by the Legislature (St. 1907 [Sp. Sess.] p. 55). The board of education, therefore, was acting for the municipality and under the authority of the Legislature. Ex parte Sparks, 120 Cal. 395, 399, 52 Pac. 715. The lease made under this permission of the charter is as effective as if the Legislature on its own initiative had directed and authorized the board of education to execute the document.

But plaintiff claims that subdivision 11, § 1, c. 3, art. 7, of the charter above quoted, giving the board of education power to lease school property under certain conditions, is in conflict with chapter 3 of the Political Code, and hence unconstitutional. The management and control of public schools is, under article 9 of the Constitution, a state and not a municipal affair (Kennedy v. Miller, 97 Cal. 429, 32 Pac. 558); and under section 1616 of the Political Code the powers and duties of boards of education of cities are such as are prescribed by the law governing such cities, except as otherwise provided in chapter 3 of said Code. The above-quoted subdivision of the charter of the city and county of San Francisco is the provision which authorizes and empowers the board of education to lease real property belonging to the school department under the circumstances therein stated. Is this subdivision in conflict with subdivision 20, § 1617, c. 3, of the Political Code? That section provides that the "board of trustees may, upon a petition signed by the majority of the heads of families resident in the district * * * call a meeting of the qualified electors of the district" for certain purposes; that a meeting so called shall be competent to instruct the board of trustees in three specified matters, none of which has anything to do with the leasing of school property. They are: (1) In regard to location of schoolhouses or the use of the same for other than school uses; (2) in regard to the sale or purchase of a school site; (3) in regard to litigation. Moreover, section 1617, contrary to plaintiff's contention, seems to be in harmony with the subdivision of the charter in question, for subdivision 4 thereof empowers the board "to rent * * * school property." This does not mean to rent property for use of schools, because such property would not be school property.

Ex parte PIERCE. (Cr. 120.)

1. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 221*) — COUNTY ORDINANCE — CONSTRUCTION — COMPLAINT FOR VIOLATION.

A county ordinance forbade the issuance of a license for the sale of spirituous or fermented liquors or wines till the applicant had procured an order therefor from the board of supervisors of the county, and the penal clause provided that every person who commenced and carried on any business or calling for which a license was required without procuring a license, as prescribed therein, should be guilty of a misdemeanor, etc. Held, that the ordinance did not denounce as a misdemeanor failure by a person commencing and carrying on the retail sale of liquors to procure an order from the board for a license, but only the doing business without it, and hence a complaint thereunder, charging one with commencing and carrying on the business of selling spirituous liquors, without having procured an order from the board of supervisors "for" a license from the license tax collector of the county, as required by the provisions of such ordinance, etc., stated no offense, but that by substituting the word "or" in place of the word "for" it clearly did so.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. §§ 240–248; Dec. Dig. § 221.*]

2. HABEAS CORPUS (§ 85*)—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY OF COMPLAINT.

Evidence on habeas corpus held to show that a portion of the charging part of a complaint under which petitioner was convicted contained, as originally prepared and filed, the word "or," instead of the word "for"; thus showing that it stated an offense under a county ordinance relating to sale of intoxicating liquors.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Habeas Corpus, Cent. Dig. § 77; Dec. Dig. § 85.*]

3. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 16*)—LICENSE TO SELL—ORDINANCES—VALIDITY.

A county ordinance was designed to regulate all classes of business carried on in the limits of a county. The first article provided: "That, in the exercise of the police powers and for the purpose of regulation, a license tax be and the same is hereby imposed upon persons, occupations and businesses in the county of G.," etc. It then enumerated the various kinds of business and the license tax provided as to each, and, reading together all the provisions relating to the sale of spirituous liquors, the obvious intent of the board of supervisors was to regulate the business of selling the same, and, to that end, to impose a license tax. The penal clause provided that every person who commenced and carried on any business or calling for which a license was required without procuring a license should be guilty of a misdemeanor. Held, that the ordinance imposed a license tax on the business of selling liquors, and not on individual sales, and was valid.

Application of Samuel Pierce for a writ of habeas corpus. Writ discharged, and petitioner remanded.

Frank Freeman, C. L. Donohue, W. T. Belieu, and G. R. Freeman, for appellant. Claud Purkitt, for the People.

HART, J. The petitioner was convicted in the justice's court of the Fourth judicial district of Glenn county of a misdemeanor, under a complaint charging him with "commencing and conducting the business of retailing and selling spirituous liquors" within said county of Glenn, without first obtaining a license for that purpose, in violation of certain provisions of Ordinance No. 62 of said county. The petitioner, upon his conviction, was sentenced by the court to a term of 90 days' imprisonment in the county jail of Glenn county, and, in addition thereto, to pay a fine of $200.

The only point originally made by the petitioner was that the complaint upon which he was prosecuted and convicted does not state facts constituting an offense under the ordinance whose provisions the complaint purports to accuse him of violating; but in their brief, filed subsequently to the hearing before this court, counsel for the petitioner claim that those provisions of said ordinance relating to the business of retailing spirituous liquors are void for the alleged reason that they seek "to impose a license tax upon individual sales, and not upon the business of selling." Merced Co. v. Helm, 102 Cal. 159, 36 Pac. 399.

The first point relied upon by the petitioner for his release rests upon the determination of the question of fact whether the charging part of the complaint, as filed, reads as indicated by the copy thereof annexed to the petition herein or reads as the district attorney contends that he originally prepared and filed said complaint. The contention of the district attorney is that the complaint was altered in a material particular—that is, by substituting the word "for" for "or" in the charging part of the document, so that it would fail to charge the accused with an offense under the terms of the ordinance—after he had filed the pleading with the justice of the peace. The petitioner claims that the complaint, as indicated by a copy thereof attached to and made a part of the petition herein, is an exact copy of the complaint as it was filed, although it is conceded by counsel for petitioner that a change was made in the instrument, but the intimation is that such change was attempted for the purpose of obliterating the letter "f" so that what appears to be the word "for" would read "or." To determine this controverted question of fact, this court received evidence offered by both the people and the petitioner, and, as we have stated, the proposition whether the complaint states an offense under Ordinance No. 62 must depend upon what, from the evidence, we find the ultimate fact to be. A copy of the complaint in the language in which the petitioner claims the pleading was prepared and filed is, as stated, made a part of the petition, and so much of the charging part thereof as is of interest to this inquiry reads as follows: "* * * That prior to said time said Samuel Pierce had not procured an order from the board of supervisors of the county of Glenn for a license from the license tax collector of said county to so commence, conduct or carry on said business, as required by the provisions of said Ordinance No. 62," etc.

The district attorney insists that that portion of the complaint which we have quoted as personally prepared and filed by him read as follows: "* * * That prior to said time said Samuel Pierce had not procured an order from the board of supervisors of the county of Glenn, or a license from the license tax collector of said county to so commence, conduct or carry on said business, as required by the provisions of said Ordinance No. 62," etc. Section 1 of article 10 of said ordinance provides: "No license shall be issued for the sale of spirtuous or fermented liquors or wines until after the applicant shall have procured an order of the board of supervisors of the county of Glenn for the issuance of the same." The penal clause of the ordinance provides that "every person who commences and carries on any business or calling, for the transaction or carrying on of which a license is required by this ordinance, without procuring a license as prescribed herein, is guilty of a misdemeanor," prescribing and authorizing to be imposed upon conviction a penalty by way of a fine of not less than $5 nor more than $300, or by imprisonment in the county jail for a period not exceeding 90 days, or by both such fine and imprisonment. Readily it will be observed that the only act under the provisions of the penal clause or section of the ordinance which can become a misdemeanor is the commencement and carrying on of the business of selling the liquors mentioned in said ordinance without first procuring a license therefor. In other words, the ordinance does not denounce as a misdemeanor a failure on the part of a person commencing and carrying on the retail sale of liquors to procure an order from the board of supervisors for a license. The misdemeanor consists of the act of carrying on such business without having first obtained a license for that purpose. Therefore, if the complaint was prepared and filed by the district attorney in the language in which the petitioner claims that the quoted portion of the charging part thereof was expressed, it is very clear that no offense whatsoever was stated therein, and that the judgment of conviction against petitioner is absolutely void.

Now, as to the facts as they were adduced before us: An inspection of the original complaint itself will show, and does show, that it is as plainly manifest as physical facts can make any proposition that some change or alteration was made or attempted to be made in either the word "or," as the district attorney contends was the word as the complaint was originally written, or the word "for," as petitioner contends was the word used originally. We have seen that counsel for petitioner concede that the complaint had been tampered with in the respect referred to, claiming, however, as before stated, that it involved an attempt upon the part of some one to make the word "for" read "or." The district attorney testified that he personally drafted the complaint, and in the most positive manner declared that the word "or" was written therein, and that the alteration or attempted alteration had been made after the trial and the conviction of the petitioner. He stated that during the argument of the case to the jury he held the complaint in his hand and commented upon its averments and the proof necessary thereunder to justify a conviction, and that at that time the complaint was in the condition in which he prepared it.

Miss Crane, stenographer in the district attorney's office, testified that, after the case had been appealed to the superior court and all the papers transferred to the clerk of said court, she procured at the office of the last-named official the original complaint, from which she made a number of typewritten copies, and then compared the copies with the original; that the original was then in the condition in which the district attorney claims to have written it; that, in other words, the letter "f" had not at that time been inserted before the word "or" so as to make it read "for." Theodore Kytka, a handwriting expert, testified that the letter "f" had been written by some other hand than that which penned the body of the complaint; that he had made a microscopical examination of the instrument, and that he was of the opinion, from such examination, that the ink used in writing the letter "f" was a different kind from that used in writing the body of the complaint. Mr. Belieu, one of the attorneys for the petitioner, and who conducted the trial of the case before the justice's court on behalf of petitioner, testified that he observed, before and at the trial, that the word "for" was written in the complaint, but that subsequently he noticed that a pencil mark had been drawn over the letter "f" in said word; the inference from said testimony being that some one had thus attempted to erase or obliterate the letter "f" and thus make the word "or" in the place of "for." Mr. Frank Freeman was not called into the case until after it had been tried in the justice's court, and could only say that, when he first saw the complaint, the word "for" was written therein, with a pencil mark drawn over and across the letter "f" in said word. There was some other testimony received in behalf of the petitioner, but, as it reflected little light on the controverted point, we shall not specifically advert to it.

We think the evidence establishes beyond any reasonable doubt, and we accordingly so find, that the contention of the district attorney as to the original phraseology of the complaint in the particular to which the controversy is addressed is correct. The positive assertions of the district attorney and his stenographer that the complaint contained the word "or" instead of the word "for" in the quoted portion of the charging part of the complaint at the times said complaint was filed and the defendant tried and convicted and after the complaint, with other papers in the case, had been transferred to the custody of the county clerk, were uncontradicted, except by the testimony of Mr. Belieu. As to the latter's testimony, we are justified in saying that it proceeded from an erroneous recollection of the time at which he first observed the "f" inserted immediately before the word "or." This declaration is based upon the assumption, founded in experience, that, where an attorney has observed before the trial of a cause that a complaint against his client does not state a cause of action in a civil case or an offense known to the law in a criminal case, he would, by an appropriate proceeding, object to a trial being had under such a pleading, if, indeed, such a document could properly be called a pleading; for certainly no substantial or effective purpose could in any possible view be accomplished by the trial of a person upon a statement of facts not constituting or even squinting at an offense known to the law. There was no suggestion by Mr. Belieu at the trial, either in the examination of the jurors upon their voir dire or in the examination of the witnesses or by objection to testimony, that he regarded the complaint insufficient for any reason. Our opinion is that Mr. Belieu in his zealous solicitude for the interests of his client became somewhat confused as to the actual occasion on which he first observed the word "for" in the place of the word "or" in the complaint, and that as a matter of fact he did not notice the fact until after the cause had been transferred to the superior court by appeal.

In justice to counsel in this case, we deem it proper to say that there is nothing in the testimony received before this court from which even a suspicion of wrongdoing on the part of any of the attorneys for petitioner in connection with the changing of the phraseology of the complaint could be inferred. How the complaint came to be altered no one knows, so far as we are advised, but we hold the attorneys for petitioner above such a practice. The complaint, as it read (according to our finding from the testimony) when the district attorney drew and filed it and when the petitioner was tried and convicted under its allegations, clearly stated an offense under Ordinance No. 62.

The second point suggested by the petitioner is without merit. The ordinance, under the provisions of which the petitioner was convicted, is an omnibus local measure, designed to regulate all classes of business carried on within the limits of the county of Glenn. The first article reads: "That, in the exercise of the police powers and for the purpose of regulation, a license tax be and the same is hereby imposed upon persons, occupations and businesses in the county of Glenn, outside of incorporated cities and towns therein, as follows." Then follows an enumeration of the various kinds of businesses and the license tax provided as to each. In the case of Merced Co. v. Helm, supra, cited by petitioner, an ordinance of the county of Merced was so far as it affected the business of retail liquor dealers declared to be void "because it attempted to impose a license tax upon each single sale and not upon the business of selling." But the rule laid down in that case is criticised and relaxed, if not overruled, in the case of Ex parte Seube, 115 Cal. 630, 47 Pac. 597, where Chief Justice Beatty says: "I have always considered that the rule of construction applied in that case went to the extreme verge of strictness, and the court has been disposed to limit rather than extend its application, as appears from the manner in which the case of Ex parte Mansfield was distinguished in 106 Cal. 400 [39 Pac. 775]."

In the Helm Case, as seen, the ordinance required a license for each single sale of the proscribed liquors, and not for carrying on the business of selling such liquors. Here, reading together all the provisions relating to the sale of spirituous liquors, we find that the obvious intent of the board of supervisors was to regulate the business of selling such liquors, and to that end to impose a license tax. For instance, section 3 of article 10 of the ordinance provides that the bond required to be executed by a party to whom a license is issued for carrying on the business of selling liquors shall contain a condition "that said applicant shall conduct the business for which said license is issued in a quiet, orderly and peaceful manner," etc. Besides, it is held in the Helm Case that the ordinance therein involved "does not purport to have been enacted" in the exercise of the police power, but that "by its very terms is a revenue measure." In the case at bar the ordinance not only expressly declares that its purpose is to regulate all the businesses mentioned therein under the power of police conferred by the Constitution upon cities, towns, and townships within the state (section 11, art. 11, Const.), but, by its very terms, it is apparent that its purpose is the regulation of the several kinds of business which are specifically designated therein. As is said in Ex parte Seube, supra, so it is true here, for the ordinance there is strikingly similar to the one here: "If the letter of the ordinance embraces all who sell, it certainly embraces all who make a business of selling; and petitioner cannot claim that the acts charged in the complaint upon which he was convicted do not come within the letter of the ordinance. The only point he can urge is that the whole ordinance is void because it imposes, or attempts to impose, a license tax upon every single sale." But, as is further said in that case: "It is perfectly clear from all the provisions of the ordinance that the intention of its framers was to impose the tax only upon the business of selling. It is only those who carry on the business who incur the penalty, and it was for carrying on the business that the petitioner was arrested and prosecuted." The language just quoted exactly fits this case, for, as before declared, the evident intention of the framers of the ordinance was to impose a tax upon the business of selling, and it is clear, from the allegations of the complaint, that the petitioner was arrested and prosecuted for and convicted of carrying on the business of selling liquors without the required license.

The ordinance appears to be valid in all respects and to represent a legitimate crystallization of the power of police expressly vested by the Constitution in all the cities, towns, and townships of the state.

For the reasons herein given, the writ is discharged, and the petitioner is remanded.

PACIFIC PAVING CO. v. VERSO et al.

(Civ. 242.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. Jan. 3, 1910.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 293*)—STREET IMPROVEMENTS — RESOLUTION — JURISDICTION.

Under St. 1885, c. 153, § 3, providing that, before ordering any work done or improvement made which is authorized by section 2, the city council shall pass a resolution of intention so to do, describing the work, the resolution of intention in due form and properly adopted is the basis of all further proceedings.

2. EVIDENCE (§ 10*) — JUDICIAL NOTICE — STREETS.

A court may take judicial notice of the streets of a city, of their boundaries, and their relation to each other.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 11, 12; Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 340*)—STREET IMPROVEMENTS—RESOLUTION OF INTENTION —DESCRIPTION OF WORK—"INTERSECTION."

Under St. 1885, c. 153, § 3, providing that, before any work shall be done or improvement made, the city council shall pass a resolution of intention so to do, and describing the work, the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco passed a resolution of intention to order the following street work in the city, to wit: "That granite curbs be laid where not already laid on the intersection of San Jose avenue, Twenty-Eighth and Guerrero streets, and that the roadway of said intersection be paved with bituminous rock except that portion required by law to be kept in order by the railroad company having tracks thereon." Such resolution was followed by a resolution ordering the work, and directing "that granite curbs be laid where not already laid on the intersection of San Jose avenue, Twenty-Eighth and Guerrero streets, and that the roadway of said intersection be paved with bituminous rock except that portion required by law to be kept in order by the railroad company having tracks thereon." Held, that the word "intersection" interpreted in its broadest sense meant the place where the three streets crossed each other, and that the letting of a contract for the improvement of a space outside such intersection was unauthorized, and an assessment levied thereon was void on its face, the act requiring that the notice of intention shall describe the work, and the limits of the district with common certainty, so that a person of ordinary understanding would know what it was proposed to do.

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 562*)—STREET IMPROVEMENTS — INVALID ASSESSMENT — FAILURE TO APPEAL—COLLATERAL ATTACK.

Where certain lots were assessed for street improvements contrary to the provisions of the San Francisco city charter (St. 1899, p. 297, c. 2, art. 6, subch. 2, § 8), defining property subject to assessment for such improvements, and also for work done outside the resolution of intention, so that the assessment was void on its face, the property owners were not required to appeal from the assessment, but were entitled to rely on its invalidity as a defense to a suit to enforce it.

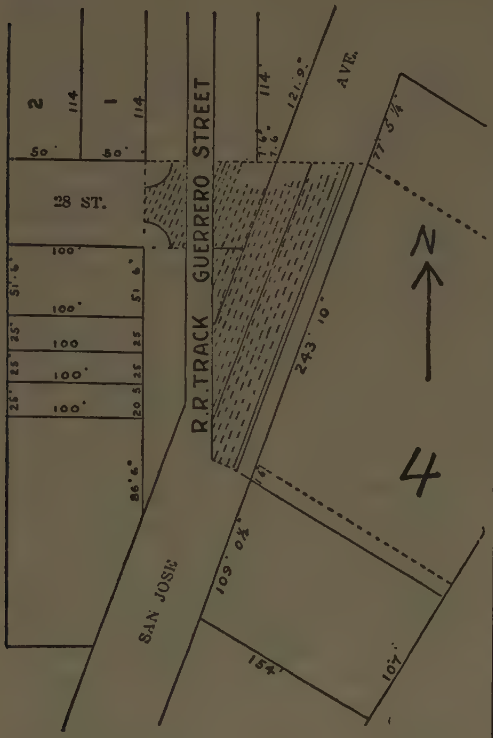
Action by the Pacific Paving Company against Peter Verso and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 105 Pac. 136.

W. J. Bartnett and R. K. Barrows, for appellant. Alexander D. Keyes, for respondents.

COOPER, P. J. This action was brought to recover separate assessments against the several defendants, 15 in number, on a street assessment for paving and curbing "the intersection of San Jose avenue, Twenty-Eighth and Guerrero streets," in the city and county of San Francisco. The court made findings, upon which judgment was ordered, and entered in favor of each of the defendants. The plaintiff made a motion for a new trial, which was denied, and this appeal is from the judgment and order.

The contract was entered into and all the preliminary proceedings taken under the act of 1885 (St. 1885, p. 147), commonly called the "Vrooman act," but the work was not completed, nor was the assessment issued, until the charter of San Francisco became effective. The act provides (section 3) that "before ordering any work done or improvement made which is authorized by section 2 of this act, the city council shall pass a resolution of intention so to do and describing the work. * * *" The resolution of intention in due form and properly adopted is the foundation and basis upon which all further proceedings must stand. It is the essential thing which clothes the city authorities with jurisdiction to proceed with the proposed improvements. The very meaning of the word "jurisdiction" is power to hear and determine; and, if no resolution of intention was passed substantially as required by the statute, there was no power in the municipal authorities to let the contract, issue the assessment, or to take any other of the various steps by which a valid lien could be created upon the adjoining lots. In order that what is said here may be understood the following diagram is inserted, which shows the location of the land assessed and the place where the work was done:



The court found that the board of supervisors passed a resolution as follows: "Resolved, that it is the intention of the board to order the following street work in the city and county of San Francisco: that granite curbs be laid where not already laid on the intersection of San Jose avenue, Twenty-Eighth and Guerrero streets, and that the roadway of said intersection be paved with bituminous rock except that portion required by law to be kept in order by the railroad company having tracks thereon"—and, further, that this resolution was followed by a resolution ordering the work to be done, as follows: "That granite curbs be laid where not already laid on the intersection of San Jose avenue, Twenty-Eighth and Guerrero streets, and that the roadway of said intersection be paved with bituminous rock except that portion required by law to be kept in order by the railroad company having tracks thereon." The court further found that "at all of the times in the complaint mentioned the roadway of San Jose avenue, Twenty-Eighth street and Guerrero street, and of the whole thereof, were, and each and every part of it was, an open public street, and duly dedicated to public use, and the width and grade thereof officially established as by law in such cases made and provided; that San Jose avenue, Twenty-Eighth street, and Guerrero street do not intersect; that there is no such place as the intersection of San Jose avenue, Twenty-Eighth street, and Guerrero street in the city and county of San Francisco."

It is claimed that the latter finding is not supported by the evidence. The diagram and plat which were annexed to the assessment, and which appear to have been used on the trial, show the relative position of the improvement and the streets; and not only this, but the court had a right to take judicial notice of the streets, of their boundaries, and of their relation to each other. Brady v. Page, 59 Cal. 52; Williams v. Sav. & Loan Soc., 97 Cal. 122, 31 Pac. 908; Labs v. Cooper, 107 Cal. 657, 40 Pac. 1042. The act requires that the notice of intention shall describe the work, and the courts so hold. Richardson v. Heydenfeldt, 46 Cal. 68; Fay v. Reed, 128 Cal. 357, 60 Pac. 927; Bay Rock v. Bell, 133 Cal. 150, 65 Pac. 299; Piedmont Paving Co. v. Allman, 136 Cal. 88, 68 Pac. 493; Treanor v. Houghton, 103 Cal. 53, 36 Pac. 1081. In the latter case it is said: "The range of the district to be included within a single improvement, and the character of the work to be performed therein within the specifications of the statute is left to the judgment of the board. The resolution of intention must, however, define alike the limits of the district and the nature of the work to be done." Here the limits of the district were not defined or described. The only reference was to the intersection of the three streets. If we employ the word "intersection" in its broadest sense and meaning, as being the place where the three streets cross each other, or that part of the street that is common to and a part of each of the three streets, there appears from the diagram to be only a small triangle included within the three streets, that is a small triangle north of the southerly line of Twenty-Eighth street extended, west of the easterly line of Guerrero street extended, and east of the westerly line of San Jose avenue, and that is a part of each of the three streets. In one sense this small triangle is where the three streets intersect or cross each other, but the area is apparently only a few square feet and a very small part of the surface of the street upon which the work was done. If the resolution of intention described this small triangle, it certainly could not be held to include a description of all that part of the street included within the exterior limits of the crossing of Guerrero and Twenty-Eighth streets, and of all that part of the street within the exterior limits of the crossing of Twenty-Eighth street and San Jose avenue, nor of that part of the street included within the exterior lines of the crossing of Guerrero street and San Jose avenue, nor of all that territory which is clearly only a part of San Jose avenue and no part of either Guerrero or Twenty-Eighth street. A part of the street upon which the paving was done was San Jose avenue and not common to either of the other streets. Now, if upon the most liberal rule we called the portion of the street which is a part of each of the three streets named the intersection of those streets, we have no resolution of intention to pave any other part of the street which was paved. If we can hold that such description includes all the parts of the streets which were paved and curbed by the plaintiff, upon the same principle we could hold that the resolution of intention described all the work if it had extended for blocks along San Jose avenue, and for blocks along Twenty-Eighth street and for blocks along Guerrero street. We think the limits of the district must be defined at least to a common certainty so that a person of ordinary understanding would know what it is proposed to do. The plaintiff in putting in its bid does not appear to have had clearly in mind the amount of work called for by the resolution of intention, and to have understood that it included a much less area than that upon which the work was done, as it computed the total cost of the work by the lineal foot for curbing, and by the square foot for paving, at $650, and so stated in its bid. After it put in its bid and gave its bond for $650, it completed the work, and the city engineer computed the amount at $3,164.08, nearly five times the amount which the plaintiff evidently had in mind when it stated or computed that the total cost would be $650. The finding is therefore supported by the evidence as applied to all the work except a small fraction which is insignificant as compared with the total area. It is plain beyond controversy that the resolution of intention did not describe any place where the work was to be done other than the small triangle or intersection of the three streets.

In Partridge v. Lucas, 99 Cal. 519, 33 Pac. 1082, it was held that the board did not have jurisdiction to make other improvements than those described in the resolution of intention. The court said: "It is plain that the work described in the resolution of intention did not include the construction of rock gutterways in the street to be macadamized. Therefore the board of trustees did not under the rule above stated acquire jurisdiction to contract for such gutterways, and the contract as to these is void." In San Jose I. Co. v. Auzerais, 106 Cal. 498, 39 Pac. 859, it was held that, where the resolution of intention described the proposed improvements as "granite or artificial stone curbing," it gave the board no jurisdiction for the reason that the work was not described. The court there said, in speaking of the resolution of intention: "By this statute the Legislature has required the city council to determine the character and extent of any improvement that is to be made upon the public streets; but in the present case that body, instead of itself determining this matter, has not even designated the officer or person by whom the character of the improvement shall be determined." It appears to be equally important that the place or places upon which the work is to be done should be described. In fact, the language of section 2 of the Vrooman act that the city council may "order the whole or any portion either in length or in width of the streets * * *" to be graded or paved, contemplates that the resolution of intention and the order shall designate the portion or portions of the streets to be improved.

The engineer's certificate divided the locality where the paving was done into three separate parts or descriptions as follows: (1) 255 square feet on the north half of Twenty-Eighth street between San Jose avenue and Guerrero street; (2) 4,156 square feet on the south half of San Jose avenue; (3) 9,037 square feet on the remainder of the crossing. The court found that all the paving had taken place at the following places: (1) On San Jose avenue south of the northerly line of Twenty-Eighth street extended easterly; (2) on Twenty-Eighth street between Guerrero street and San Jose avenue; (3) on Guerrero street south of the southerly line of Twenty-Eighth street and northwest of San Jose avenue; (4) on the crossing or intersection of Twenty-Eighth and Guerrero streets.

In the assessment the work done on the third area last above mentioned is described as follows: All work except that done on the east side of San Jose avenue and on Twenty-Eighth street between Guerrero street and San Jose avenue, and was assessed entirely upon the land fronting on Twenty-Eighth and Guerrero streets. Under the plain provisions of the charter (chapter 2, § 8, St. 1899, p. 297) the assessment should have been upon lots 1 to 18, being all the lots fronting on the quarter blocks and irregular blocks cornering on the intersection. For the work done on the small triangle common to Twenty-Eighth street, Guerrero street, and San Jose avenue, as described in the resolution of intention, it is difficult to say as to how the assessment should have been made, as this particular triangle is bounded entirely by San Jose avenue, Guerrero, and Twenty-Eighth streets, and there does not appear to be any blocks adjoining or quartering upon it, unless we speak of the blocks on the opposite sides of the streets as adjoining or quartering upon it. It is the settled rule that in such case the assessment is void on its face, and the owners of the assessed lots do not have to appeal to the city council for the correction of the assessment. Ryan v. Altschul, 103 Cal. 174, 37 Pac. 339; Kenny v. Kelly, 113 Cal. 364, 45 Pac. 699; Diggins v. Brown, 76 Cal. 318, 18 Pac. 373; San Diego Investment Co. v. Shaw, 129 Cal. 273, 61 Pac. 1082. In the latter case it is said: "Defendant was the owner of one of the lots on the east side, and the assessment against his lot was $51.22, being the amount with which it is sought to charge the lot in this action. Whether or not the judgment is correct depends upon the validity of the assessment so made. The city authorities have no power to assess the entire cost of grading the street on the lots on one side thereof. * * *"

The authority to levy the assessment in this case in the manner in which it was levied is not found in the statute. Subdivision 1 of section 7 of the act expressly declares that the expenses incurred for any work authorized by the act shall be assessed upon the lots and lands fronting thereon, except as otherwise specifically provided. The cases cited by appellant are cases in which the assessment was not correctly apportioned and distributed, or where certain lands were improperly left out. In such case the owners of the lots that are properly assessed for at least a part of the work must appeal to the board of supervisors and have the assessment corrected, or they will not be heard to complain; but such is not this case. Here many of the lots were assessed for improvements for which the board had no power to assess them under any circumstances. As before stated, it has been many times held that, if an assessment is void, the owner need not appeal to the board, but may rely upon such fact when it is attempted to enforce the assessment.

It is not necessary to decide the other questions discussed by counsel, as the points which we have decided dispose of the case.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frederick W. Houser, Judge.

Action by W. F. Botsford against Ben Heney. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Marshall Stinson, for appellant. Max Loewenthal and Denis & Loewenthal, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. Appeal by defendant from a judgment and an order denying a new trial. The action was one to recover the purchase price of certain shares of mining stock alleged to have been sold by one Mellus to defendant for an agreed price, and the assignment of the claim for such unpaid purchase money by Mellus to plaintiff. The court found that on June 17, 1907, Mellus sold and delivered to defendant the shares of stock; that defendant agreed to pay therefor the sum of $14,500 on or before September 10, 1907; that before suit the demand was by Mellus assigned to plaintiff, and by reason of nonpayment judgment went for plaintiff in the sum demanded.

It is contended by appellant that the evidence is insufficient to support the findings with reference to the sale, or the agreement to pay the stipulated price, or the assignment of the claim. The contract was evidenced by correspondence in which defendant offered to pay Mellus in cash on or before August 10, 1907, dollar for dollar on account of his original investment in the Hardshell-Flux mining properties, and $10,000 in addition. Mellus on the 11th day of June, by letter, accepted the proposition, and notified defendant that he had placed the 9,000 shares of stock in the American National Bank subject to his order, when $14,500 was paid to the bank, and that the bank would forward a note to be signed evidencing the debt, payable August 10th, without interest. Defendant on June 14th wrote to Mellus objecting to the form of the note sent by the bank and inclosing a note in such form as he would sign, but asked to modify his proposal to pay August 10th and make the note payable September 10, 1907, and in the letter stated that the modification of his original offer was, total cash sum to be paid thirty days later than the date first mentioned, and required Mellus to make a written assignment of his interest in said mining properties, which, with the shares of stock assigned, were to be placed in escrow, deliverable upon payment of the note. Mellus accepted the modification and by written assignment transferred to defendant all his interest in the mining properties, and delivered the shares of stock, duly indorsed, to the American National Bank to be delivered upon payment of the note, and defendant was notified by Mellus of this fact. It was not necessary in order to complete the contract that the bank give a notice to the same purport. Mellus's notice was sufficient to apprise defendant of the full compliance with his demands in reference to the escrow. It is conceded that the original investment of Mellus in the mining properties and this stock was $4,500. We do not think that appellant's contention that no contract was to be completed until the note was signed and forwarded can be sustained. The terms of the agreement were all complete, the price at which the stock was purchased was stipulated, and even the time of payment was stated. The deposit in the hands of the bank for delivery upon payment of the note, as requested by defendant, was equivalent to a deposit for delivery upon the payment of a stipulated price. The delivery to the bank by Mellus was to an agent of the purchaser designated by him, and, when so delivered, it was too late for either party to retract, and the sale was complete. The due and proper indorsement of the stock is made to appear from the evidence. Section 1059, Civ. Code, provides that: "Though a grant be not actually delivered into the possession of the grantee, it is yet to be deemed constructively delivered in the following cases: * * * (2) Where it is delivered to a stranger for the benefit of the grantee, and his assent is shown, or may be presumed." Referring to this section of the Code, our Supreme Court in Carr v. Howell, 154 Cal. 380, 97 Pac. 889, says: "While this section relates by its terms to a grant, we think the principles therein laid down are equally applicable to any contract." There is no room for controversy as to the absolute and unqualified character of Mellus's acceptance of the offer. The delivery being made, although constructively but pursuant to defendant's request and demand, the title passed to Heney and plaintiff possessed elective remedies upon default, of which suing for the purchase price is one. Lassing v. James, 107 Cal. 358, 40 Pac. 534. We see nothing in Van Allen v. Francis, 123 Cal. 474, 56 Pac. 339, establishing a contrary doctrine. The assignment appearing in the record seems to us to be complete and a full performance of the conditions imposed by defendant in his letter of June 14th.

FINCH v. FINCH (WESTERN NAT. BANK OF SAN FRANCISCO, Garnishee).

(Civ. 690.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 21, 1909. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 17, 1910.)

1. GARNISHMENT (§ 112*)—PAYMENT BY GARNISHEE AFTER SERVICE OF WRIT—LIABILITY TO JUDGMENT CREDITOR.

In determining the liability of garnishee bank to pay to the judgment creditor a sum which it admitted in its answer in the garnishment proceedings that it held for the debtor, but which is afterwards paid to satisfy an execution upon a judgment against the same debtor after the garnishment writ issued, a decree in an accounting proceeding by the judgment creditor against the debtor and others, brought before the garnishment proceedings, restraining the bank from paying out any money belonging to the debtor, was immaterial upon the bank's liability under the garnishment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Garnishment, Cent. Dig. § 235; Dec. Dig. § 112.*]

2. GARNISHMENT (§ 148*)—PROCEEDINGS—DENIAL OF INDEBTEDNESS—EFFECT.

Code Civ. Proc. § 719, permits the judge to order any unexempt property of a judgment debtor, or due him, to be applied to the satisfaction of a judgment, but prohibits such order as to money in the hands of another or claimed to be due the judgment debtor from him if such person denies the debt, and section 720 permits an action by the judgment creditor against a third party to recover the property or debt where the debt is denied. Held, that the garnishee's denial of indebtedness would not prevent the making of an order under section 719 if the other averments and admissions showed the existence of the indebtedness.

3. GARNISHMENT (§ 112*)—DISCHARGE—PAYMENT BY GARNISHEE—PAYMENT TO DIFFERENT CREDITOR—UNAUTHORIZED PAYMENT.

Code Civ. Proc. § 544, provides that all persons owing debts to defendant at the time of service of a copy of the writ of attachment and notice upon them, unless such debts are paid to the sheriff, shall be liable to plaintiff for the amount thereof until the attachment is discharged or the judgment is satisfied. Appellant was garnished on December 3, 1907, but did not furnish the sheriff any information as to any money held by it and due the debtor until cited on December 17th for examination, when it admitted holding $2,000 for the debtor when the writ was served, and on December 26th appellant paid that sum to the sheriff upon service upon it of a writ of execution issued upon a judgment rendered against the debtor on December 24th in favor of another creditor, without mentioning the garnishment proceedings. Held, that the garnishment substituted plaintiff therein for the debtor as to the indebtedness due from the garnishee, and the payment to the sheriff required by the statute to relieve the garnishee from liability was payment to him as agent for plaintiff, and appellant's payment to the sheriff upon service of the execution writ was, under the circumstances, a fraud upon plaintiff and did not discharge appellant from liability.

4. GARNISHMENT (§ 176*)—FORM OF PROCEEDINGS BETWEEN PLAINTIFF AND GARNISHEE.

Under the circumstances, the garnishee's liability to the garnishment plaintiff was properly enforced by an order, issued upon hearing of an order to show cause why it should not pay to plaintiff the sum held by it when served.

5. GARNISHMENT (§ 176*)—AFFIDAVITS—CONCLUSIONS.

Where the undisputed facts showed that money belonging to the debtor was delivered to the sheriff by the garnishee under a writ of execution served upon it, the garnishee's affidavit, on a hearing of an order to show cause why it should not pay the money garnished, that it was delivered to the sheriff in compliance with the attachment writ, should be disregarded as a mere opinion.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Troutt, Judge.

Action by Helen M. Finch against Paul V. Finch, in which the Western National Bank of San Francisco was made garnishee. From an order directing garnishee to pay plaintiff a certain sum to be applied on her judgment, the garnishee appealed. Affirmed.

For decision on rehearing in Supreme Court affirming this decision, see 107 Pac. 598.

Gavin McNab, for appellant. J. L. Smith, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The record discloses evidence of three separate actions, all of which, respondent claims, are material to the controversy. The first, numbered 12,695, was brought October 29, 1907, by the plaintiff here against the defendant Finch and others for an accounting. A restraining order was issued and served upon this appellant, on said October 29th, enjoining it from paying out or transferring any money it had on said date to the credit of the defendant, Paul V. Finch, until the further order of the court. On November 14, 1907, the same plaintiff filed a complaint in case No. 12,845 against the same defendant to secure a judgment for the sum of $5,500 upon a different transaction and liability. On December 3, 1907, a writ of attachment was issued in this case, and appellant was regularly garnished. Appellant failed to furnish the sheriff with a statement of the amount of money due defendant or any information concerning the same, and appellant was cited on the 17th day of December, 1907, to appear for examination, whereupon appellant "made answer to said plaintiff that said Western National Bank had in its possession and under its control the sum of $2,000 in cash, as a commercial account, owned by or due to the defendant, Paul V. Finch, at the time of the service upon the said bank of the said writ and order for examination as aforesaid." Judgment in said cause No. 12,845 was awarded to plaintiff and respondent herein on April 29, 1908. A writ of execution was thereupon issued, but it was returned by the sheriff unsatisfied; appellant answering that the money had been paid to the sheriff on December 26, 1907. On June 9, 1908, respondent procured an order citing the garnishee to appear and be examined concerning the $2,000 which it had admitted, on December 17th preceding, to be due defendant, or any other money in its possession belonging to defendant at the time of said garnishment, and to show cause why it should not be required to pay to respondent the said sum of money. Upon the hearing the following additional facts appeared: On the 24th day of December, 1907, one E. G. Moyes secured judgment against the same defendant, Finch, for the sum of $2,270.98. Execution issued immediately, and on December 26th appellant was served with the writ and paid $2,000 to the sheriff, who returned that he "duly levied on the 26th day of December, 1907, upon the Western National Bank of San Francisco, all moneys, goods, credits, effects, debts due or owing, or any other personal property in possession or under control of the Western National Bank of San Francisco belonging to the judgment debtor, and on the 26th day of December, 1907, I received from said judgment debtor, through W. C. Murdoch, Jr., assistant cashier of said bank, the sum of $2,000," and this was applied in part satisfaction of said judgment. The writ of attachment in the present suit and the writ of execution in the Moyes case were served by different deputies connected with the sheriff's office, and when the money was paid over as aforesaid appellant did not inform the deputy sheriff of the prior service. The appeal is from an order of the court directing appellant to pay to respondent the sum of $2,000 to be applied toward the satisfaction of the judgment in favor of plaintiff.

Respondent summarizes the matter as follows: "Appellant on October 29, 1907, was served with a restraining order, whereby it was enjoined from paying the money to any one at all, in one suit; again on December 3, 1907, appellant was served with a notice of garnishment, and ordered to hold the money in another suit, and on December 26, 1907, appellant is served with a writ of execution in a third and separate suit and appellant, without question pays the money to the sheriff on this writ in the third suit though the injunction and attachment are still in full force and effect, and now appellant asks the court to sanction gross negligence or willful disregard of the law and relieve appellant of the direct liability created by statute, in which event either the sheriff or the plaintiff, who are innocent parties, must suffer."

Consideration of the injunction, we think, should be eliminated from this proceeding, as is was issued in an entirely different action, and it has no relevant connection with the order in controversy here.

Appellant contends: "(1) That the trial court had no jurisdiction to make the order appealed from; and (2) that conceding the question of jurisdiction for the purpose of the argument, and not otherwise, the payment to the sheriff was a complete discharge of all liability on the part of the appellant." The avowal of the want of jurisdiction is based upon the ground of the denial of the indebtedness at the time of the service of plaintiff's execution supported by the evidence that the money was paid to the sheriff on said 26th day of December, 1907. In this behalf it is contended by the learned counsel for appellant that this remedy by proceedings supplementary to execution "to disclose and subject to the satisfaction of the judgment a fund in the hands of the garnishee or any indebtedness owing by the garnishee to the judgment debtor" is limited to cases where "the garnishee in such supplementary proceedings admits the possession of such fund or the indebtedness claimed to be due from him to such judgment debtor, and that this does not contemplate the litigation of any rights or claims of such garnishee or a personal money judgment against him."

The provisions of the statute directly involved in the solution of the question are sections 719 and 720 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In the former it is provided that "the judge or referee may order any property of the judgment debtor, not exempt from execution in the hands of such debtor, or any other person, or due to the judgment debtor, to be applied toward the satisfaction of the judgment; but no such order can be made as to money or property in the hands of any other person or claimed to be due from him to the judgment debtor if such person claims an interest in the property adverse to the judgment debtor or denies the debt." And section 720 provides that where such claim is made, or the debt denied, an action may be maintained by the judgment creditor against said third party to recover the property in dispute.

It will not be controverted, we think, that the court below was not bound by appellant's denial of the debt if the undisputed facts showed that the debt really existed at the time of the service of the said writ of execution. The mere denial by the garnishee of the indebtedness which the other averments and admissions of the parties show to be an erroneous conclusion from the whole transaction certainly should not be deemed sufficient to divest the court of jurisdiction to make the order provided for in said section 719.

The question then arises whether the payment of the $2,000 to the sheriff on December 26th discharged the indebtedness and relieved appellant of liability to respondent. In view of the facts, we think it should be held that appellant is in the same position, as far as respondent is concerned, as though it had retained in its possession the said money and had not made any payment to the sheriff.

At the time of the service of the writ of attachment it is admitted that the money was on deposit, and that therefore appellant owed defendant Finch the sum of $2,000. What was the effect of the garnishment as to the indebtedness? It was manifestly to make appellant liable to plaintiff for the amount of said debt; in other words, practically to substitute plaintiff for the creditor. Thereby, appellant having become liable to plaintiff in the amount of $2,000, this relation must have continued unless it was terminated by said payment to the sheriff. Section 544 of the Code of Civil Procedure makes this clear. It provides that "all persons * * * owing any debts to the defendant at the time of service upon them of a copy of the writ and notice as provided in the last two sections shall be * * * unless such debts be paid to the sheriff, liable to the plaintiff for the amount of such debts, until the attachment be discharged or any judgment recovered by him be satisfied." It would hardly seem to require argument that the payment to the sheriff which is to relieve the garnishee of liability to the plaintiff is payment in pursuance of said service; in other words, payment to the sheriff as the agent of the plaintiff. It would probably be immaterial whether the payment was made on the day of the service, as long as it is made for plaintiff. But surely there is no warrant for the interpretation that the garnishee is relieved of his liability when, in violation of his plain duty, he refuses to disclose his indebtedness to the defendant, holds the money in his possession until served with a writ of execution in another case, and then pays the money to the sheriff without any suggestion as to the former service or the appropriation of said payment. Does the law permit one in this manner to deceive and mislead another and then take refuge under the plea that the other should not have been misled? We cannot so understand it. It does not seem just or reasonable, in view of appellant's palpable remissness, that the sheriff should be held liable because, perchance, he innocently paid the money to the wrong party by reason of his confidence in appellant. It is hardly necessary to say that an entirely different case would be presented if appellant had made proper answer to the service of the garnishment or had paid the money to the sheriff before the levy of the execution in the Moyes case, or even then had revealed the true situation. Here, as we view it, appellant cannot be relieved of liability without lending encouragement to fraud. It is not designed by this to assert that the officers of the bank actually intended to deceive or defraud any one; it is more just to infer that their conduct was the result of misinformation, but it operated as a fraud upon plaintiff.

It is true that on said 19th day of June, 1908, at the hearing of said order to show cause, the affidavit of William C. Murdoch, Jr., the cashier of said bank, was received in evidence, in which he declared: "That heretofore, and on or about the 20th day of December, 1907, and in compliance with a writ of attachment theretofore served by the sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco, upon said bank, at the instance of the plaintiff herein he delivered up to said sheriff the sum of $2,000, being the amount in the possession of said bank on deposit to the credit of the defendant herein at the time of the service of said writ of attachment." But in view of the undisputed facts, we think the recital that the money was delivered in compliance with said writ of attachment could properly be treated as the mere opinion of affiant and as such disregarded.

Certain authorities are cited bearing more or less upon the propositions to which we have alluded, among which we note the following: Drake on Attachment, § 453, uses this language: "Garnishment is an effectual attachment of the effects of the defendant in the garnishee's hands, differing in no essential respect from attachment by levy, except, as is said, that the plaintiff does not acquire a clear and full lien upon the specific property in the garnishee's possession, but only such a lien as gives him the right to hold the garnishee personally liable for it or its value."

In 20 Cyc. p. 1091, it is said: "Where the garnishee after proper service of the writ fails to file an answer within the time prescribed by the statute, or where he fails to make a full disclosure or files a false or evasive answer, judgment may be rendered against him for the amount claimed in the writ of garnishment."

In Twelves & Co. v. Lodano, 15 Ala. 732, the case is stated in the syllabus as follows: "An attachment was sued out by T. against F., and L. was garnished as a debtor of F. After service of the garnishment, F. obtains judgment against L. for the amount of the debt due from him, in the same court in which the attachment is pending, and, execution issuing thereon, L. paid the amount to the sheriff, by whom it was paid to the attorney of F., who pursuant to instructions personally given him by F. paid the money to a third person. Held that, upon this state of facts, the garnishee was liable to the plaintiff in attachment."

In Kimball v. Macomber, 50 Mich. 362, 15 N. W. 511, in the discussion, by the Supreme Court of Michigan, of a somewhat similar situation as to the garnishee, it is said: "The pivot on which the case was made to turn was that the defendant, prior to the time for showing cause, was put upon his guard; that it was only necessary for him to make a true statement of what he knew to the justice, to protect himself from loss; and that his neglect could not serve as a reason for visiting the consequences upon an innocent third party."

Russell v. Lawton, 14 Wis. 219, 80 Am. Dec. 769, is an interesting case as to the liability of the sheriff for the acts of his deputies and might be relied upon with a good deal of confidence by the defendant in case an action were brought here against the sheriff for the misapplication of the said $2,000.

We cannot see that the cases cited by appellant, in view of their peculiar facts, are opposed to the views herein expressed. There certainly could be no difference of opinion as to the soundness of the principles announced in the case of Roberts & Co. v. Landecker, 9 Cal. 262, that "the proceedings by attachment are statutory and special and must be strictly pursued, * * * and the plaintiff may or may not, at his election, require the garnishee to appear and answer on oath, and his liability will not be affected by the failure of the plaintiff to take such a step." In that case the plaintiffs did not seek to enforce any lien upon the property, nor did they seek a discovery of it and the subjection of it to their debt; but, the property having been fraudulently disposed of by defendants, the plaintiffs brought the action upon a statutory liability for the value of the goods. This was clearly their right. As stated by the court: "If it be true, as alleged, that defendant fraudulently disposed of the goods, the plaintiffs could have no object in his examination on oath. They did not want his testimony, and could not expect to obtain any admission against him. The liability of defendant being direct to plaintiffs for the value of the goods, the defendant had no right to give his testimony, unless required by the plaintiffs. The law did not require the plaintiffs to do an idle thing."

Robinson v. Tevis, 38 Cal. 611, involves the consideration of the attachment of partnership property for the debt of one of the partners, and Roberts v. Landecker, supra, was affirmed to the effect that the examination of the garnishee is not compulsory upon the plaintiff in the attachment, and, if the garnishee has not voluntarily paid or delivered the property to the sheriff, the plaintiff, after recovering judgment, may sue him and recover the property or its value, to the extent of his judgment, if the garnishee in the meantime has converted it.

Hartman v. Olvera, 51 Cal. 501, is more directly in point; but in that case there was a positive denial of the indebtedness, and, in the course of the opinion, Parker v. Page, 38 Cal. 522, is reviewed, and it is declared: "But we held, on the peculiar facts of that case, that the answer of the garnishee could not be deemed a denial of her indebtedness to the judgment debtor, and, while in some sense a denial in form, was not so in substance, and in fact, * * * when the garnishees explicitly denied on their examination their indebtedness to the judgment debtor, neither the referee nor the court had the power to compel them to pay over to the sheriff the amount of the alleged indebtedness."

Under the admitted facts of this case, however, the denial of the indebtedness, we think, should be treated as a legal conclusion and was properly disregarded by the judge below.

In Deering v. Richardson-Kimball Co., 109 Cal. 73, 41 Pac. 801, it was held that "when a garnishee is subjected to numerous attachments he is not obliged to pay the money to the defendant until the attachments are discharged, nor to pay it to either of the plaintiffs in the attachment, or to the sheriff for them, until the settlement of their adverse claims by a judicial tribunal." In that case there were other persons claiming liens upon the money in the possession of the garnishee, and the question was raised as to the validity of a prior attachment, and the court held that these matters could only be properly determined in a suit where all necessary parties might be brought in and all adverse claims adjudged and conclusively settled and the garnishee thereby protected. Here, as we have seen, there is no adverse claimant, the only possible controversy is as to whether appellant or the sheriff should pay the money, it presents simply a question of law, and, if the ordinary principles of fair dealing are to be observed, the decision of the point would seem to involve no difficulty.

Carter v. Los Angeles Nat. Bank, 116 Cal. 370, 48 Pac. 332, is in line with the foregoing cases in holding that where notice was served upon the garnishee under an attachment, and an execution against the judgment debtor is returned unsatisfied, an action may be maintained by the judgment creditor against said garnishee without requiring him to appear and answer or without obtaining an order authorizing said action to be brought, as the suit is upon a direct liability of the garnishee provided for by section 544 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

In fact, it seems very clear, as pointed out by appellant, that the law provides three remedies for judgment creditors who seek to recover as against third persons: (1) By the supplementary proceedings provided for in section 719, Code Civ. Proc., and adopted herein; (2) by a separate action to establish the indebtedness if it be denied, and to recover the debt as authorized by section 720, Code Civ. Proc.; and (3) by an action to enforce the statutory liability imposed upon the garnishee by said section 544, Code Civ. Proc., in case of the conversion by him of the thing attached. But we see no reason why, under the facts here disclosed, the simple and efficacious course pursued by plaintiff and ratified by the judge of the lower court should not be upheld.

After all, the vital question is whether appellant, by said payment under the circumstances detailed, discharged its liability, and as all the evidence showing the foregoing facts was admitted without objection, and the presence of no other party seems necessary for a complete determination of the matter, we see no useful purpose to be subserved by subjecting the parties to the delay and expense of another proceeding to reach the same just conclusion.

We think the order should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

FINCH v. FINCH (WESTERN NAT. BANK OF SAN FRANCISCO, Garnishee).

(S. F. 5,228.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 23, 1910.)

In Bank. On motion for rehearing. Motion denied.

For opinion of the District Court of Appeal, see 107 Pac. 594.

Gavin McNab (Bronte M. Aikins, of counsel), for appellant. J. L. Smith, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Rehearing denied.

BEATTY, C. J. I dissent from the order denying a rehearing. In response to the rule to show cause, the bank by its cashier made return that in compliance with the writ of attachment in plaintiff's action it had paid to the sheriff of San Francisco, December 26, 1907, the whole of the $2,000 belonging to the defendant Paul at the time the garnishment was served. If this was true, it completely exonerated the bank; and whether it was true or not was a question for a jury in an action to be brought by the plaintiff, and it could not be determined by the court in this summary proceeding.

In re SNOWBALL'S ESTATE. (Sac. 1,729.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 10, 1910. Rehearing Denied March 12, 1910.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§§ 1002, 1011*)—REVIEW OF EVIDENCE — CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

The rule that a verdict or finding will not be disturbed on appeal, where there is a real and substantial conflict of evidence on the issue of fact involved, is as applicable to will contests as to other proceedings.

2. WILLS (§ 324*)—CONTEST—FRAUD—UNDUE INFLUENCE.

The fact that the jury in a will contest did not find against proponents on the issue whether the will was procured by fraud did not preclude it from considering evidence of fraud as bearing on the issue of undue influence.

3. Wills (§§ 153, 155*)—Contest—"Fraud" and "Undue Influence" Distinguished.

"Undue influence" in the execution of a will is not the same thing as fraud. One may exist without the other, though undue influence may be exerted by means of fraud; "fraud" being a distinct head of objection from importunity and undue influence. That is undue influence which amounts to constraint which substitutes the will of another for that of the testator, whether through a threat or fraud, but, however exercised, it must, in order to avoid the will, destroy testator's free agency at the time the instrument is made.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 3, pp. 2943–2954; vol. 8, p. 7666; vol. 8, pp. 7166–7172; vol. 8, pp. 7823, 7824.]

4. Wills (§ 159*)—Execution—Undue Influence.

While undue influence is not sufficient to avoid a will, unless it bears directly on the testamentary act, proof of undue influence is sufficient if of such a nature as to warrant the inference that the will was the direct result of the influence exerted to procure it, and was not the natural result of the uncontrolled will of the testatrix.

5. Wills (§ 166*)—Undue Influence—Evidence.

Evidence held to sustain a verdict finding that testatrix's will was procured by undue influence.

6. Wills (§§ 54, 165, 487*)—Contest—Undue Influence—Declarations of Testatrix.

Declarations of testatrix, not a part of the res gestæ, are inadmissible to show her testamentary intention or undue influence, whether made before or after the will, but are competent as bearing on her condition or her state of mind, if that is material.

7. Wills (§ 165*)—Contest—Undue Influence—Declarations of Testatrix.

In a will contest, evidence of a conversation between testatrix and one of the contestants some 10 months prior to the execution of the will, in which testatrix stated she wished to make a will, and that she would leave the other contestant $3,000 or $4,000, the children $1,000 apiece, and the ranch to "you boys," and that L., her daughter, already had enough, was admissible as bearing on testatrix's state of mind with reference to her various children, and particularly toward the contestants; the will being materially different from the disposition mentioned.

8. Wills (§ 164*)—Contest—Undue Influence—Personal Differences.

In a will contest for undue influence, evidence of personal differences existing between proponents and contestants, or either of them, and testatrix was admissible in so far as it tended to show testatrix's state of mind with relation to her children at times not too remote from the date of the execution of the will.

9. Witnesses (§ 268*)—Cross-Examination—Scope.

Where a witness in a will contest on direct examination testified that he had never heard testatrix's daughter, who was charged with undue influence, say anything to indicate that she wished to poison testatrix's mind against her brother H., he was properly asked on cross-examination as to a statement made by the daughter regarding her brother in testatrix's absence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 931–948; Dec. Dig. § 268.*]

10. Evidence (§ 220*)—Contest—Admissions—Imputations—Failure to Deny.

In a will contest for alleged undue influence exerted by L., contestant testified that on one occasion he went into testatrix's room, and found L. on the lounge crying, and testatrix said to him: "See what you have done; you brought a dishpan, and Leutie pulled me over and broke my arm"—that on another occasion he went into the kitchen and found testatrix and L.; that testatrix was crying, and stated that L. hit her with the frying pan and blacked her eye; and that on neither of such occasions did L. deny the truth of testatrix's statements. Held, that the charges were of such a character as to call for a denial, and hence L.'s failure to deny the same rendered them admissible as admissions, as provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 3.

11. Wills (§ 164*)—Contest—Undue Influence.

In a will contest for alleged undue influence, evidence that on one occasion contestant attempted to borrow a cultivator of testatrix temporarily, and that she forbade him taking it, and on his asking her why she treated him so, replied, in the presence of contestant's sister, who was charged with the undue influence, that the sister made her do it, was admissible.

12. Witnesses (§ 248*)—Reception of Evidence—Responsive Answer.

An answer to a question as to what witness meant by saying that testatrix was weak mentally that witness meant she was "easily influenced" was not objectionable as not responsive.

13. Evidence (§ 478*)—Opinions.

Questions addressed to witnesses in a will contest for undue influence as to whether testatrix was a person "easily influenced" were objectionable as calling for conclusions, and inadmissible, except in the case of a witness who is an intimate acquaintance, and is authorized to give an opinion by Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 10.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 2242–2244; Dec. Dig. § 478;* Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 113–115.]

14. Appeal and Error (§ 1056*)—Rulings on Evidence—Prejudice.

Where, in a will contest, a witness testified that he had never seen anything to indicate mental weakness on testatrix's part, but that she was an exceptionally strong-minded woman, proponents were not prejudiced by the court's refusal to permit the witness to answer whether testatrix was a person easily influenced.

15. Wills (§ 164*)—Admissions.

In a will contest for undue influence, alleged admissions by the beneficiary charged with such impropriety, consisting of her failure to deny charges made against her by the testatrix indicating an actual attempt to influence testatrix against contestants, were not inadmissible under the rule excluding mere admissions of one beneficiary as to the mental capacity of testatrix or as to undue influence exerted over her, as against the other beneficiaries.

16. Wills (§ 164*) — Undue Influence — False Representations.

Evidence of false representations, made by a beneficiary charged with undue influence, to testatrix as to the amount of property received by contestant from his father, to influence testatrix to practically exclude contestant from her will, was admissible.

17. Wills (§§ 163, 164*)—Undue Influence—Nature of Provisions.

While an unjust will does not of itself raise a presumption of undue influence, the nature of the will may be considered on the issue of undue influence as a circumstance, together with the value of testatrix's estate.

18. Appeal and Error (§ 1064*)—Instructions—Prejudice.

Where the jury were emphatically instructed that the will in controversy could not be set aside because it was not in accordance with the law of succession, or was unjust or capricious, proponents were not prejudiced by an instruction that, if deceased had died without a will, her estate would descend to her children equally.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 1064.*]

19. Wills (§ 332*)—Contest—Instructions—Undue Influence.

An instruction that an unjust will does not of itself raise a presumption of undue influence, but that its nature may be considered as a circumstance in determining whether fraud or undue influence was exercised, was proper.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 785; Dec. Dig. § 332.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Yolo County; E. E. Gaddis, Judge.

Proceeding for the probate of the will of Lucy A. Snowball, deceased. From an order denying probate, and overruling petitioners' motion for a new trial, they appeal. Affirmed.

R. H. Countryman and Hudson Grant, for appellants. Arthur C. Huston and Grover C. Julian, for respondents.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal from an order denying a new trial of the issues made by the petition for the probate of the alleged will of the deceased, and the opposition thereto filed by Henry H. and Norman P. Snowball, two of her five surviving children. There were several grounds of opposition to the probate of the alleged will, but only two were relied on at the trial, viz.: That the will was the result of undue influence exerted over the deceased by A. L. Snowball and Leutie C. Snowball, two of her children, and that the execution thereof was procured by fraud of the same parties. Upon the issue of fraud the jury did not return a verdict. On the issue of undue influence the finding of the jury was in favor of the contestants. On this verdict an order was made denying admission of the alleged will to probate.

1. It is contended that the evidence is insufficient to support the finding of undue influence. An examination of the record shows that there was clear and positive evidence of such a nature as to warrant the finding if the evidence was believed by the jury to be true. It should be needless to state that it can make no difference in an appellate court that such evidence was given by interested and hostile witnesses, or that the appellate court may be of the opinion that the preponderance of evidence was against the finding of the jury. All questions of the credibility of witnesses and of the weight to be given to their testimony were exclusively for the jury and the trial judge. The rule is the same in will contests as in other proceedings, and a verdict or finding in such a case will not be disturbed "where there is a real and substantial conflict of evidence on the issue of fact involved." Estate of Doolittle, 153 Cal. 30, 94 Pac. 240.

It will not be necessary to indulge in any extended statement of the evidence given on behalf of the contestants, but a few words may properly be said as to the general nature thereof.

Preliminarily it should be said that the fact that the jury did not find against proponents upon the issue whether the will was procured by fraud did not preclude it from considering evidence of fraud as bearing upon the issue of undue influence. This matter was recently discussed by Mr. Justice Sloss in the Estate of Ricks, 108 Pac. —[1], and while a rehearing was granted in that case upon another point, what was said by him on this point was clearly correct. There, as here, the jury found against proponents on the issue of undue influence, and failed to return a verdict on the issue of fraud. It was said: "Undue influence is not the same thing as fraud. One may exist without the other. Undue influence may, however, be exerted by means of fraud. 29 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) 107; Davis v. Calvert, 5 Gill & J. [Md.] 269; 25 Am. Dec. 282; Powell v. Plant [Miss.] 23 South. 399; Eckert v. Flowry, 43 Pa. 46; Robinson v. Robinson, 203 Pa. 400 [53 Atl. 253]. 'Fraud,' says the court in Davis v. Calvert, supra, 'is a distinct head of objection from importunity and undue influence. Importunity and undue influence may be fraudulently exerted, but they are not inseparably connected with fraud.' To the same effect is the following language taken from the opinion of Strong, J., in Eckert v. Flowry, supra: 'Now, that is undue influence which amounts to constraint which substitutes the will of another for that of the testator. It may be either through threats or fraud, but, however exercised, it must, in order to avoid a will, destroy the free agency of the testator at the time the instrument is made.' And this view is entirely consistent with our Code definition of undue influence above quoted. Confidence or influence may be used to obtain an unfair advantage over another in a variety of ways, and no less by means of fraudulent misrepresentations than by means of duress or other pressure. The fact that the jury returned no answer to the interrogatory based on the issue of fraud did not preclude them from considering evidence of fraud as bearing upon the issue of undue influence."

[1] For opinion on rehearing, see 117 Pac. 539.

H. H. Snowball was practically disinherited by the will, being given thereby only the sum of $1,000; the estate being valued at something like $35,000, and the other four children being given the remainder in practically equal shares, except for legacies amounting to $2,250, and except that contestant Norman was given only a life interest in the Snowball home place, and that Leutie C. Snowball, the only daughter, was given all the personal property on such place. The will stated that the reason testatrix made no further provision for H. H. Snowball was that her husband made provision for him and his children, and that he had been already provided for, the truth of which statement as to him was positively denied by the evidence of contestants. The will was executed April 8, 1907, less than three months before the death of deceased. At the time of its execution the testatrix was about 70 years of age. From the time of the death of her husband, February 5, 1906, the testatrix lived with her daughter, Leutie, on the home place. The evidence indicated that up to the time of the death of her husband, and for some time thereafter, the testatrix and her son, H. H. Snowball, were on the most affectionate terms. The testimony of the contestants tended to show that from the time of her husband's death testatrix became gradually weaker physically, and more dependent on and more subject to the influence of her daughter; that the daughter systematically and constantly exerted this influence for the purpose of producing a change in the feelings of testatrix towards said son by making unwarranted accusations against him; that testatrix yielded more and more to the importunities of the daughter; that by many acts she showed herself to be completely under the influence of her daughter, and ready to yield to all her desires in regard to said son; that the daughter importuned testatrix to make a will by the terms of which said son should not receive as much as the other children; and that finally, in response to such importunities, the testatrix, shortly before a contemplated medical operation, went with her daughter to the office of a lawyer, and there, while the daughter remained in another room, made the will in question. According to the evidence of contestants, the reason stated in the will for the small provision made for said son was absolutely without basis in fact. The sum and substance of contestants' evidence was that the testatrix was unable to resist the importunities of her daughter, and made the will under the influence thereof, so that, so far as provision for H. H. Snowball was concerned, the will was in reality the will of the daughter, and not that of the testatrix. There is nothing in the claim that the undue influence was not exercised directly upon the testamentary act. There was sufficient in the evidence of contestants to support a conclusion that it was used purely for the purpose of procuring the will, and that the will was the direct result thereof. While it is true that there must be proof that the influence was used directly to procure the will, general influence not brought to bear upon the testamentary act not being undue influence (In re McDevitt, 95 Cal. 33, 30 Pac. 101), such proof exists where the evidence is of such a nature as to warrant the inference that the will was the direct result of the influence exerted for the purpose of procuring it, and was not the natural result of the uncontrolled will of the testatrix. See Estate of Arnold, 147 Cal. 589, 82 Pac. 252; Estate of Welch, 6 Cal. App. 50, 91 Pac. 336.

It is suggested by appellants that on the motion for a new trial the court erroneously adopted the view that the verdict of the jury was conclusive, and that it could not draw any inferences from the evidence contrary to the inferences drawn by the jury. There is absolutely nothing in the record warranting any such claim on the part of appellants.

2. It is urged that evidence was received in violation of the rule contended for by appellants that, "where the issue before the court is that of undue influence, the declarations of the decedent are inadmissible to show her testamentary intention, or undue influence, and this is true whether the declarations be made before or after the making of the will." The rule in this state in regard to the admissibility of such declarations, when not so made as to constitute a part of the res gestæ, is clearly established by the decisions. They are not admissible in proof or disproof of any statement of fact contained in them, or for the purpose of showing the exercise of undue influence. But wherever the condition or state of mind of the declarant is a material matter, declarations of the testator, legitimately tending to shed light on that question, are admissible solely for that purpose—that is, for the purpose of showing his then condition or state of mind—the effect being, as was said in Estate of Arnold, 147 Cal. 594, 82 Pac. 256, "carefully limited to the question of his condition of mind." The most common case in which such declarations are admissible is, of course, the case where the question is as to the mental capacity of the testator to make a will. But the authorities recognize that, as is obvious, the condition or state of mind of the testator at times preceding the execution of the will is a material matter where the issue is undue influence, not for the purpose of showing the exercise of undue influence by another, which cannot be so shown, but for the purpose of showing the effect of undue influence proved by other evidence. As is said in the case last cited, there is a distinction between the effect of such declarations to prove the undue influence and fraud and their effect to prove the state of mind of the testator. What was said in Estate of Arnold, supra, was said with reference to the issue of undue influence, and in the later case of Estate of Thomas, 101 Pac. 798, it was said that in cases involving the question of the testator's sanity or the issue of undue influence, the underlying principle was the same with respect to such declarations, the declarations being admitted not in proof or disproof of any statement of fact contained in them, but as tending to show the condition or state of mind of the declarant; this condition or state of mind having a direct and important bearing upon the disputed question of his mental capacity or the execution of the will under undue influence. The principal evidence objected to by appellant in this connection was that given by Norman P. Snowball as to a conversation between himself and deceased some 10 months prior to the execution of the will with relation to her then testamentary intention. In this conversation she stated to him that she wished to make her will, that she thought she would leave Havey (Henry H.) $3,000 or $4,000, the children about $1,000 apiece, and the ranch to "you boys," and that "Leutie" already had enough. The court admitted this evidence solely for the purpose of showing the state of mind; the condition of mind; the friendly or unfriendly relations; the affection or nonaffection. In its instructions to the jury the court, at the request of appellants, again limited the effect of this testimony by declaring to them substantially that evidence of declarations made by Lucy A. Snowball was admitted for the sole purpose of showing the friendliness or unfriendliness existing between the said Lucy A. Snowball and the different children, and for the purpose of showing the state of mind of the said Lucy A. Snowball and the mental attitude of the said Lucy A. Snowball towards the various objects of her bounty, and could be considered by them only for that purpose. We are of the opinion that the evidence of these declarations as to the then intentions of the testatrix was admissible as bearing upon the material question of her then state of mind with relation to her various children, and particularly towards contestant Henry H. Snowball, and that its effect was limited by the instructions to the purposes for which it could legitimately be considered.

Other evidence complained of by appellants in this connection was that of Norman P. Snowball relative to a conversation between testatrix, Leutie, Leon, and the witness, a few months before the execution of the will, but this evidence was clearly admissible as tending to show a then effort on the part of Leutie and Leon to procure the execution of the will by the testatrix, and to prejudice her against H. H. Snowball to an extent sufficient to obtain his practical exclusion therefrom as a beneficiary.

3. Under the general statement that evidence tending to show personal differences existing between proponents and contestants, or either of them, and their mother, was inadmissible, appellants note certain exceptions to rulings admitting evidence. So far as any such evidence tended simply to show the state of mind of the testatrix with relation to her children at times not too remote from the date of the execution of the will, it was, as we have seen, admissible, as would be any evidence legitimately bearing on that question. The first four exceptions referred to in this connection relate to evidence that was clearly admissible for the purpose of showing the manner in which the undue influence was exercised; the extent to which it was exercised, and the effect thereof, being evidence as to declarations and conduct of Leutie to and in the presence of her mother, regarding and derogatory to H. H. Snowball, and indicating most plainly her desire and determination that H. H. Snowball should receive nothing from testatrix, and also tending to show that the testatrix was not able to resist the importunities of Leutie. The matter covered by exception 55, being evidence adduced on the cross-examination of proponents' witness Dickson as to a statement made by Leutie regarding H. H. Snowball in the absence of testatrix, was legitimate cross-examination, in view of the evidence of the witness on direct examination to the effect that he had never heard Leutie say anything to indicate that she wished to poison her mother's mind against H. H. Snowball. Exception 41½ amounts to nothing, as the question objected to was not answered. The same is true of exception 31. The evidence given under the ruling referred to by exception 37 is unimportant.

4. It is earnestly contended that testimony given by H. H. Snowball as to certain statements made by testatrix to him in the presence of Leutie was inadmissible for any purpose. He testified that immediately after his mother's arm had been fractured he went into the room where his mother was, and Leutie was on the lounge crying, and his mother said to him: "Havey, see what you have done; you brought a dishpan, and Leutie pulled me over and broke my arm"—and that Leutie did not deny the truth of the statement. He testified further that shortly before this occurrence he went into the kitchen, and there found his mother and Leutie; that his mother was crying; that he asked her what was the matter; that she said that Leutie hit her with the frying pan and blacked her eye; and that his sister never said a word. Both of the instances referred to were prior to the death of the husband of the testatrix.

It was a theory of contestants that prior to the death of her father, Leutie was uniformly cruel and unkind to her mother, and that subsequent to his death her entire attitude to her mother changed, for the purpose of obtaining an influence over her in order that she might use the same to her advantage. There was considerable evidence received to show this change in her attitude, and we do not understand it to be seriously questioned that such evidence was admissible as tending to show an effort, on the part of Leutie, to obtain an influence over her mother and the manner in which that influence was acquired. Proof of the two incidents referred to by the testimony above stated was in line with this theory. Of course, the declarations of the mother testified to were not competent evidence to prove the incidents; were not evidence of the facts stated therein. They constituted simply narratives of past occurrences, and were in no sense a part of the res gestæ, but declarations which were made in the presence and hearing of Leutie. It is provided by our law that evidence may be given upon a trial of "an act or declaration of another, in the presence and within the observation of a party, and his conduct in relation thereto" (Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 3), for the purpose of showing such conduct on the part of the party as will constitute acquiescence in and admission of the truth of the statement. The theory is that a statement so made may be of such a nature, and made in such a way, as to naturally call for a denial if not true, and that a failure to deny may reasonably be taken as admission of its truth. In Tibbet v. Sue, 125 Cal. 546, 58 Pac. 160, this court said, quoting approvingly from Rice on Evidence: "Declarations or statements made in the presence of a party are received in evidence, not as evidence in themselves, but to understand what reply the party to be affected by the statement should make to the same. If he is silent when he ought to have spoken, the presumption of acquiescence arises. In this sense, admissions may be implied from conduct." The evidence here received was admissible as tending to show admissions by Leutie of the truth of the charges made against her by her mother. Whether it did show such admissions was for the jury to determine in view of all the circumstances, but it sufficiently bore on that question to be admissible. In justice to Leutie it may be stated that on the trial she emphatically and positively denied the truth of both of said charges.

Another alleged declaration of the testatrix testified to by H. H. Snowball was one made when she refused to allow him to take a cultivator from the premises for temporary use. According to his evidence he had put it on his wagon, when his mother came out and forbade him taking it. He took it off the wagon, and then said to her: "My God, mother, why do you treat me this way?" His mother commenced to cry, and said: "Havey, I can't help it. Leutie makes me do it." It is this declaration of the mother that is principally objected to, and its importance as tending to show the subordination of the will of the mother to that of Leutie is, of course, apparent. We are of the opinion that there is enough in the record to indicate that this declaration was made in the presence and hearing of Leutie without a denial on her part to warrant it going to the jury as evidence tending to show the then exercise of undue influence over her mother to prevent any favorable consideration by the mother of her son, H. H. Snowball.

5. Complaint is made that the court erred in permitting certain witnesses to state their opinions upon certain matters where opinion evidence was not admissible. Several exceptions are noted by number under this head, but only one is argued. On cross-examination by appellants of N. P. Snowball, who had testified that his mother was to a certain extent weak mentally, he was asked to what extent she was weak mentally, in other words, what he meant by saying that she was weak mentally to a certain extent, and answered that she was "easily influenced." A motion to strike this answer out as "not responsive" and as the "volunteered opinion of the witness" was denied. We are satisfied that it must be held that the answer was responsive to appellants' own question, and that they had no right to have it stricken out. We quite agreed with appellants' counsel that questions addressed to witnesses as to whether a person was one "easily influenced" call for mere opinions and conclusions from facts, as was held in Compher v. Browning, 219 Ill. 429, 76 N. E. 684, 109 Am. St. Rep. 346. Assuming for the purposes of argument that such evidence may be given by an "intimate acquaintance" under subdivision 10, § 1870, Code Civ. Proc., the sustaining of the objection to the question asked appellants' witness Dickson, "Could Lucy A. Snowball be easily influenced?" was not prejudicial, in view of his other testimony to the effect that he never saw anything to indicate a mental weakness on her part, but rather the reverse, and that she was an exceptionally clear-headed and strong-minded woman.

6. It is claimed that declarations and admissions of Leutie in the absence of others beneficially interested in the will were allowed to be shown, contrary to the doctrine declared in Estate of Dolbeer, 149 Cal. 245, 86 Pac. 695, to the effect that declarations constituting simply admissions of one beneficiary as to the mental capacity of the testatrix are not admissible against the other beneficiaries, and consequently are not admissible at all. It is said that this doctrine is equally applicable where the issue is undue influence. For the purposes of this appeal, this may be conceded. But we cannot see that this rule is important here. Several of the exceptions noted under this contention relate to evidence of declarations and conduct of Leutie in the presence of her mother designed to influence her against H. H. Snowball; in other words, evidence of the actual attempt of Leutie to influence her mother against him. Necessarily such evidence was admissible. The only other exception noted under this head requiring notice relates to the evidence of H. H. Snowball as to the cultivator incident, held admissible as tending to show acquiescence on the part of Leutie in the statement of her mother to the effect that it was because of Leutie's insistence that she refused to treat H. H. Snowball more kindly. This incident occurred some time prior to the execution of the will. Such an admission or acquiescence is not at all within the meaning of the doctrine relied on. It stood upon the same plane as evidence to the effect that Leutie had then said to her mother that she insisted that she should not grant any favors to her son would have rested on; in other words, constituted evidence of the then actual attempt of Leutie, prior to the execution of any will, to influence her mother against the son. If any evidence of an actual attempt to exert undue influence is admissible, it would seem that such evidence must necessarily be competent. So, also, the evidence as to the broken arm and frying pan incidents, heretofore referred to, not noted by appellants under this contention, constituted evidence of the then course of treatment by Leutie of her mother.

7. Evidence tending to show false representations made by Leutie to her mother as to the amount of property received by H. H. Snowball from his father, for the purpose of influencing her to practically exclude him from her will, was clearly within the issues, and, so far as we can see, this is the nature of all the evidence specified in the exceptions noted under the contention that evidence of the financial standing of any of the beneficiaries was inadmissible, except the evidence as to the value of the estate of testatrix. While an unjust will does not of itself raise the presumption of undue influence, the nature of the will may be considered by the jury upon the issue of undue influence as a circumstance, and the value of the estate left by the testatrix is necessarily a factor in determining its nature. See Page on Wills, §§ 426, 427. The trial court nowhere refused to allow appellants to show that the representations as to what H. H. Snowball received from his father were true, and it was expressly stated by counsel for respondents that they would not object to evidence as to the property left by his father to the children of H. H. Snowball if the same was offered for the purpose of showing that this was the reason testatrix did not give him more by her will.

8. While we agree with counsel for appellants that "evidence which was immaterial, irrelevant, or incompetent for any purpose should not have been admitted," we do not find in any of the instances specified under this head any violation of this rule.

9. The refusal to allow proponents' witness Mrs. Carl to testify as to statements made to her by Norman P. Snowball concerning declarations by his mother inconsistent with his testimony as to the nature of such declarations was proper, in view of the objection that no foundation had been laid for any such evidence. As heretofore stated, the questions asked proponents' witness Dickson on cross-examination, as to statements of Leutie regarding H. H. Snowball was proper cross-examination. We are of the opinion that the same is true as to the questions asked Leutie on cross-examination as to what property she received from her father's estate.

10. We find no prejudicial error in the matter of instructions to the jury.

The matter stricken out of appellants' requested instruction 10 was covered, as far as was necessary and proper, by appellants' requested instruction 9, which was given.

Appellants' requested instruction 17 was properly refused. In its statement of alleged false representations upon which contestants relied as showing that the execution of the will was obtained by fraud and undue influence it would have been misleading and confusing, in that it was not a fair and complete statement of the false representations asserted by contestants and upon which they relied.

We cannot assume that proponents were prejudiced by the instruction that, if deceased had died without a will, her estate would descend to her children, share and share alike. The jury were clearly and emphatically instructed, over and over again, to the effect that the will could not be set aside on the ground that it was not in accord with the law of succession, or unjust or capricious.

Contestants' instruction 3, to the effect that while an unjust will does not of itself raise a presumption of undue influence, still the nature of the will may be considered by the jury as a circumstance in determining whether fraud or undue influence was exercised, was correct. In re Langford, 108 Cal. 624, 41 Pac. 701, cited by appellants, so intimates.

The point as to contestants' instructions 4, 11, 15, and 23 appears to be, not that they do not correctly state the law, but that they were not applicable under the facts of this case. We see no force in this contention. Contestants' requested instruction 6 was perhaps not pertinent under the facts, but clearly it was not prejudicial.

Contestants' instructions 7 and 8 were absolutely correct statements of law. They did not mean, and could not reasonably be taken as meaning, that certain evidence, received for a limited purpose and confined to that purpose by other instructions, could be considered by the jury for another purpose.

While it is said in appellants' brief that contestants' instruction 14 had no application to the facts, it is not claimed that it was in any way prejudicial, and we cannot see that it may have been so.

We see no prejudicial error in the giving of contestants' instructions 17, 19, 20, 21, and [illegible].

The modification of proponents' requested instruction 18 was proper, for the reason that the portion stricken out, a recital that certain specified evidence had been offered for a certain purpose, was not true. No such evidence had been offered for any such purpose. The instruction as modified fully covered the law applicable to the point that appellant desired to present.

There is no other point presented by the briefs that we consider it necessary to discuss. We deem it proper to say that we would have felt warranted in disregarding numerous exceptions, presented in the briefs solely by number of exception and folio of the record, without any statement as to the specific nature of the ruling complained of, and without any argument whatever in support of the exception. We have, however, carefully read the whole record in this case, with the result that we have found no substantial error in the rulings of the trial court.

The order denying a new trial is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.

GRIEB v. ZEMANSKY et al. (S. F. 5,438.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 17, 1910. Rehearing Denied March 18, 1910.)

1. ELECTIONS (§ 95*)—PRIMARY ELECTIONS—REGISTRATION.

Pol. Code, § 1366, declares that the qualifications and registration of voters at primary elections shall be governed by the same rules established by the Constitution and Political Code for general elections, and that the same officers who furnished the original affidavits of registration, and indexes and supplements thereto, for general elections shall furnish them for primary elections, provided that where a new registration is not completed soon enough to permit its use at the next ensuing primary election, the original affidavits of registration and indexes used at the last general election may be used at the primary election, together with affidavits showing additional registration, changes, and corrections. Held, that the proviso applies only to cities where city elections are to be held prior to August in the even-numbered years, upon January 1st of which a current registration begins under Pol. Code, § 1094, and does not apply to the general August primary election to nominate candidates to be voted for at the November general election, and hence at such primary election in August, 1910, the current registration begun in the previous January alone determines the qualifications of voters.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Cent. Dig. §§ 95, 96; Dec. Dig. § 95.*]

2. ELECTIONS (§ 143*)—PRIMARY ELECTION—NOMINATION PAPERS—QUALIFIED SIGNERS.

The primary law declaring that signers of the petition of a candidate for nomination shall be "qualified electors," and that a candidate seeking the nomination of a political party must accompany his petition by a percentage of the qualified electors "of that party," contemplates that such signers shall be qualified voters at the election in contemplation of which they sign the petition, and hence only those may sign such petition for nomination at the primary election of August, 1910, who upon the register of 1910 have declared their affiliation with such party.

3. STATUTES (§ 190*)—CONSTRUCTION—ARGUMENT—AB INCONVENIENTE.

The argument ab inconveniente available in the construction of statutes, of doubtful meaning cannot be applied to Pol. Code, § 1366; its meaning being clear.

Shaw, J., dissenting in part.

In Bank. Mandamus by Henry T. Grieb against J. H. Zemansky and others, as members of the Board of Election Commissioners of San Francisco. Writ denied.

Lester G. Burnett (U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., amicus curiæ), for plaintiff. Thos. V. Cator and Hugh J. McIsaac, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. The plaintiff, for himself and all others similarly situated, applies for a writ of mandate from this court against the defendants, Zemansky, as the registrar of voters, and the other defendants as members of the board of election commissioners of the city and county of San Francisco, to compel them, when they come to examine the sufficiency of "nomination papers" filed in behalf of candidates proposed for nomination at the primary election in August, 1910, and in directing the manner of conducting said primary election, to recognize and use the great register of voters registered in the years 1908 and 1909, and, as supplementary thereto, the new great register which began to be made on January 1, 1910. In the return the defendants assert that the new registration beginning January 1, 1910, is the only one that can lawfully be used for the above-mentioned purposes. The questions to be determined therefore are: (1) What register shall be used at the primary election in August, 1910; (2) who constitute the qualified electors authorized by law to sign a candidate's nomination papers?

1. We are of the opinion that the provisions of the law plainly indicate that the new registration of 1910 shall alone be used at the August primary election. The provisions of the law in this respect are as follows: "The qualifications and registration of voters and the privileges of electors to attend the polls at primary elections shall be subject to the same tests and governed by the same rules and regulations as are in the Constitution and Political Code of this state established and prescribed for general elections; and the same officers who furnish the original affidavits of registration, indexes and supplements thereto, for general elections, as provided for in this Code, shall furnish them for use at primary elections. It shall be the duty of the proper officers to furnish the original affidavits of registration, indexes and supplements thereto, for use at primary elections, which shall show the names of all the voters entitled to vote at such elections; provided that where a new registration pursuant to law is not completed in point of time sufficient to permit of its use at the next ensuing primary election, then the original affidavits of registration and indexes used at the last general election in any county, or city and county, in this state, may be used at any primary election, together with the original affidavits of registration since the last election and supplemental indexes, showing all the additional registrations, changes and corrections, made since the last general registration, completed to and including the twentieth day prior to the primary, which shall be the last day on which any person may register or transfer his registration, so as to entitle him to vote at such primary." Pol. Code, § 1366.

Section 1094 of the Political Code provides that the new registration, beginning on January 1st of the even-numbered years "shall be in progress at all times except during the forty days immediately preceding any election, when it shall cease as to the electors residing within the territory in which such election is to be held." It is contended that the new registration of 1910 "will not be completed in point of time sufficient to permit of its use" at the time of the primary election on August 16th, and, therefore, that under the proviso to section 1366 the old registration of 1908 and 1909 may be used. We think the proviso in section 1366 was not intended to refer to the general August primary election to nominate candidates to be voted for at the November general election.

The proviso originated in the primary election law of 1899 in which it was numbered as section 1375 of the Political Code (St. 1899, p. 54). This act provided for a primary election for delegates to conventions in cities to nominate city officers, in addition to the primaries for state and county conventions. St. 1899, p. 51. In 1901 a new primary law was enacted in which the proviso appeared as part of section 1366 (St. 1901, p. 614). That act was not made operative, except in certain cities. Section 1372, St. 1901, p. 616. The present law (St. 1909, c. 405) provides for direct primaries, and applies to all cities, except those having a freeholders' charter covering the subject (sections 1, 2, 3). In 1899, and ever since, the laws and charters governing city elections in many cities of the state provided for city elections to be held during the early months of the even-numbered years, at times when it was not to be expected that many persons would be registered upon the new registration begun in January. City elections are to be held in cities of the second class on the second Monday of March (Mun. Cor. Act [St. 1883, p. 185] § 301), in cities of the third class on the second Tuesday of March (section 502), and in cities of the sixth class on the second Monday of April (section 852). In San Jose under the city charter such elections are held on the third Monday of May (St. 1897, p. 596), in Santa Rosa, on the first Tuesday of April (St. 1905, p. 870), and in Vallejo on the first Monday of March (St. 1899, p. 394). All of these are in the even-numbered years. None of these charters makes any provision for primary elections, nor does the general municipal corporation act. Hence, in each of these cities, under section 5 of the present primary election law, for party nominations primary elections must be held on the "Tuesday three weeks next preceding the city election." The general municipal corporation law was enacted in 1883 (St. 1883, p. 93). As will be seen, therefore, similar conditions existed in 1899 when this proviso was first enacted as a part of the primary law of that year. It was necessary to make some provision in that act permitting voters not newly registered to participate in such primaries, for it is apparent that if this were not done, there would be few of the voters of such cities qualified to act in the choosing of candidates so soon after the current registration had begun. The proviso finds its full justification in these conditions, and to these only was it intended to apply. If it were intended to apply to the regular and general state and county primary election to be held in the August preceding the general election, the effect would be that the old registration would be used at all primaries, except in a few cities where elections occur in the odd-numbered years, or immediately after the November election. The main object of the act was to provide for the nomination of candidates for offices to be filled at the general state and county elections in November. The holding of such primaries for city officers, in the few cities where elections were held so early in the even-numbered years, was incidental and of comparatively small importance. If it had been intended that the old register should be used at the general primary election, the one for which the law was really enacted, it is scarcely conceivable that the Legislature would not have so declared in plain terms in the main body of the section, leaving to the proviso the office of stating the converse proposition that in the city elections occurring after the November election and in the odd-numbered years the old register should not be used. The natural conclusion from the language of the proviso to section 1366, and from the whole act and the conditions to which it was addressed, is that the regular August primary election for candidates for state and county offices was not considered an exceptional case to be met by a proviso, that the registration which at that time has been in progress for nearly seven months was considered as sufficiently complete for use, and that the proviso was intended to apply only in the cities having local elections earlier than the general August primary election.

This conclusion is strengthened by the fact that it gives ample time for any voter to register and qualify himself to vote at the August primary. Its necessity is also shown by the provisions of section 1366a of the Political Code, referred to in sections 16 and 17 of the act. Section 1366a requires every voter when he registers to declare in his affidavit the name of the political party with which he desires to affiliate at ensuing primary elections, and provides that no person shall be entitled to vote at a primary election unless he has so declared. This section was enacted in 1907, and, until the enactment of the present law, it was in force only in certain cities mentioned in section 1372, added to the Political Code in 1901. Hence persons residing outside of those cities, who registered in 1908 and 1909, were not usually required to declare their party affiliation. Section 16 of this act provides that the right of a voter at a primary election to vote the party ticket of the party with which he has declared his affiliation, as provided in section 1366a, shall not be challenged or subjected to any test, if he is otherwise qualified as a voter. Section 17 provides that an elector who has, 20 days before a primary election, "qualified by registration and by declaration of the political party with which he intends to affiliate, as provided in section 1366a of the Political Code, shall be entitled to vote at such primary election, such right to vote being subject to challenge only as hereinbefore provided; and shall, on writing his name or having it written for him on the roster, * * * receive the official primary election ballot of the political party designated in his affidavit of registration, and no other." If the old registration should be allowed in use at the regular August election of the present year, these provisions could not be followed in any part of the state, except in the cities aforesaid, for the registration affidavits outside of those cities would not show any declaration of party affiliation, and the voter would not by the letter of the law be entitled to receive any ballot. The law would not operate uniformly this year. By limiting the application of the proviso in section 1366 to the cities where elections are to be held prior to August in the even-numbered years all difficulty is removed, the legislative purpose will be carried out and the law made harmonious. The defendants are correct in their assertion that the registration of 1910 is constituted the test by which to determine the right to vote at the next August primary election, and that no other registration is to be used on the polls at that day.

2. From the conclusion above reached and expressed there follows necessarily the determination that only those electors whose names appear upon the register of 1910 can join in the nomination paper of a candidate who is to be voted for at the August primary. The reasons compelling this conclusion are two. First, the law contemplates and declares that the signers shall be "qualified electors." They must make affidavit to such effect. This cannot mean that they were qualified electors in the past—one year, two years, or five years ago. It must and can mean only that they are electors qualified to participate in the election in contemplation of which they are signing a candidate's nomination paper. But, as admittedly, only those electors who have registered in 1910 can vote at this primary, it must follow that only such are qualified to sign a candidate's paper. The second reason is this. Throughout the primary law it is repeatedly declared that a candidate seeking the nomination of a political party must accompany his petition by a percentage of the qualified electors of that party. If, then, a candidate seeks the Republican or Democratic nomination in August, 1910, his candidacy must receive the indorsement of a sufficient number of the electors of that party. Who at the primary election of 1910 are the qualified electors of the Republican, the Democratic, or any other political party? The answer is evident. Only those who upon the register of 1910 (and not upon the register of any preceding year) have declared their affiliation with such party. The law extends the fullest permission to an elector in registering to change his political party. If the register of preceding years may be used in behalf of a candidate in the August primary of 1910, it will follow that men who appear upon the registration of 1909 as Republicans, and who have registered in 1910 as Democrats, will have aided in putting before the people the candidate of a party to which they do not belong. Indeed, it is conceivable that under such circumstances, by changes in registration, if the use of old registers is permitted, a candidate might go before the electors seeking the suffrages of a political party without having the indorsement of anywhere near the number of names of qualified electors of his party as required by law. The language of the statute presents no difficulties of interpretation. Only those who by registration have declared their membership in a party may vote at the primary election, and only those can and should be allowed to join in the selection of the candidates of that party.

The argument ab inconveniente may be employed in the construction of a doubtful statute, but it has no force in the interpretation of a statute like this, whose terms are not doubtful. But even if they were—in the present instance the argument in favor of the use of old registers is entitled to little weight. On the part of the candidates it may be said that it is not in contemplation that they will be able to perform personally the labor of obtaining signatures to their nomination papers throughout the various counties of the state. In view of this the law itself permits the candidate to appoint "verification deputies" to obtain signatures to their nomination papers. It is not easy to see that any greater labor or any greater expense is cast upon the candidate in that he is required to direct deputies to obtain signatures from the registration of 1910 rather than from the registration of some preceding year or years. But considering the public officers, the weight of the argument ab inconveniente is quite on their side. The time allowed them for the inspection of candidates' papers is extremely short, only 10 days. It will greatly increase the burden cast upon them if in verifying the competency of the electors' names, they shall have to resort to the old registration instead of the new. Indeed, as advised in the argument of this case, of the 90,000 electors upon the great register of San Francisco for the year 1909, only 35,000 are qualified at the present time to vote at the place of registration. Moreover, no reasonable fear may be entertained that the time allowed for the new registration may prove insufficient for obtaining the signatures of an adequate number of a party's following. Under the earlier law 75 days was considered sufficient time to complete a new registration. St. 1895, p. 228; section 1094, Pol. Code. Now the registration begins upon the 1st day of January in each even-numbered year, "and is in progress at all times except during the 40 days immediately preceding any election." There are thus about six months allowed for this registration before the date of the primary. It will freely be conceded by the court that this primary law is both complex and onerous, but we are advised that it was adopted in response to a very general popular demand. This being so, it is but fair to assume that the vast majority of the electors who find in this law a panacea for all political ills will flock to the registration booths and qualify themselves to take part in the important primary elections which follow.

For the foregoing reasons the application for mandate is denied.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; LORIGAN, J.

ANGELLOTTI, J. I concur in all that is said in subdivision 1 of the foregoing opinion. It appears to me to necessarily follow therefrom that the conclusion reached upon the second proposition discussed in the opinion is correct. It may be conceded that the requirement of the primary law as to the number of signatures to nomination papers is unnecessarily onerous, but that is, of course, a matter wholly within the control of the Legislature. To my mind the law enacted by the Legislature clearly contemplates that only those qualified to participate at the primary election may participate in the nomination of candidates to be voted for thereat. I, therefore, concur in the judgment.

SHAW, J. I concur in all that is said in subdivision numbered 1 of the opinion of Justice HENSHAW. I dissent from that part of the opinion embraced in subdivision 2 thereof.

Justices SLOSS and MELVIN do not participate in the determination of this matter.

JOHNSON v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO. et al.

(S. F. 5,328.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 24, 1910.)

1. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION (§ 20*) — "PROBABLE CAUSE"—BELIEF IN GUILT OF ACCUSED.

"Probable cause" is a suspicion founded upon circumstances warranting a reasonable man in the belief that the charge is true; and, in an action for malicious prosecution under Penal Code, § 481, making it a crime to alter a railroad ticket with intent to defraud, evidence that a ticket had been altered, with intent to use it a second time beween the same points, that it was purchased from plaintiff, and, on a comparison of plaintiff's handwriting with the writing on the ticket which constituted the claimed alteration, both the railroad employés and a reputable expert, acting in good faith, were convinced that the writing on the ticket was plaintiff's, was sufficient to show probable cause for the prosecution, though plaintiff denied ever having seen the ticket.

2. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION (§ 71*) — QUESTIONS FOR JURY—PROBABLE CAUSE.

In an action for malicious prosecution, where the testimony is not in conflict, the question whether or not the evidence shows want of probable cause is for the court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Malicious Prosecution, Cent. Dig. §§ 161, 162; Dec. Dig. § 71.*]

3. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION (§ 20*)—CRIMINAL PROSECUTION—PROBABLE CAUSE.

A person instituting a prosecution need not investigate the crime itself, or seek to ascertain whether there are any other facts relating to the offense, or whether the accused had any defense to the charge, or exhaust all sources of information bearing upon the facts which have come to his knowledge, but it is sufficient, to justify him in seeking to have the act punished, if the facts within his knowledge, although not in law constituting a crime, are such as to induce in the mind of a reasonable man the honest belief that a crime has been committed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Malicious Prosecution, Cent. Dig. §§ 26–28; Dec. Dig. § 20.*]

4. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION (§§ 21, 22*)—CRIMINAL PROSECUTION—PROBABLE CAUSE—ADVICE OF COUNSEL.

The fact that defendant in an action for malicious prosecution consulted a lawyer in good standing and the district attorney of the county, stating to them all the facts, and being advised by them that a prosecution would lie, and on this advice proceeded in good faith to institute it, was sufficient to show probable cause.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Malicious Prosecution, Cent. Dig. §§ 40–48; Dec. Dig. §§ 21, 22.*]

5. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION (§ 24*)—CRIMINAL PROSECUTION — PROBABLE CAUSE — RESULT OF PROSECUTION.

The fact that after the taking of evidence upon the preliminary examination of one accused of crime the committing magistrate adjudged that he was guilty of the offense, and made an order committing him to answer thereto in the superior court, is prima facie evidence of probable cause in an action for malicious prosecution.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Cruz County; Lucas F. Smith, Judge.

Action by C. W. Johnson against the Southern Pacific Company and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Reversed.

William T. Jeter and Joseph H. Skirm, for appellants. George P. Burke and Carl E. Lindsay, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an action to recover damages alleged to have been caused by a prosecution initiated by the defendants against the plaintiff, which plaintiff avers was done maliciously and without probable cause. The answer denied the material allegations of the complaint, including the allegation of want of probable cause. There was a verdict for the plaintiff, and judgment was entered accordingly. The defendants' motion for a new trial was denied. Appeals are taken both from the judgment and from the order denying a new trial.

The only question which it is necessary to notice is the contention of the defendants that the verdict is not sustained by the evidence. The particular point upon which they claim that the evidence is insufficient is the issue relating to the existence of probable cause for the prosecution. The plaintiff was prosecuted for an alleged violation of section 481 of the Penal Code. This section, among other things, declares that: "Every person who * * * alters any ticket * * * issued by any railroad company * * * designed to entitle the holder to ride in the cars of such company * * * with intent to defraud any such railroad company is punishable by imprisonment," etc. It was charged that the plaintiff on December 26, 1903, altered a railroad ticket, theretofore issued by the defendant company for passage from San Francisco to Santa Cruz, by indorsing on the back thereof the words "San Jose," on a blank line stamped thereon under the words "Stopover granted at," with intent than and there to defraud the said company, and that having so altered the said ticket plaintiff uttered and put the same in circulation as genuine and true to one Sam Hawkins, with intent to defraud the said Hawkins and the said company.

The evidence shows that, at the time of instituting and while carrying on the said prosecution against the said plaintiff, the defendant McMonigal and the agents of the defendant company in charge of the prosecution either had personal knowledge or credible information of the following facts: The Southern Pacific Company was operating a line of railroad from San Francisco through Pajaro to San Luis Obispo and beyond, and also a branch line from Pajora to Santa Cruz. They were also operating a shorter direct line to Santa Cruz, by way of Los Gatos. The shorter line controlled the price of through tickets, the result being that tickets from San Francisco to Santa Cruz were sold for about the same price as tickets to Watsonville, a place on the branch line near Pajaro. Owing to this condition, it was customary for persons going to Watsonville or Pajaro to buy a ticket to Santa Cruz, and after arriving at the end of their proposed journey, to sell the remainder of the ticket entitling the holder to proceed from there to Santa Cruz. These tickets were transferable, good for six months, and included stop-over privileges. On the back thereof was printed the words "Stopover granted at," with a blank line beneath the same, upon which it was intended that the conductor from whom the stop-over privilege was asked should insert a statement showing the point at which the stop-over was granted. Tickets of this character which had been used as far as Pajaro had been sometimes altered by writing on the blank line aforesaid words indicating that a stop-over had been given at San Jose, and such altered tickets had been used by persons traveling from San Jose to Pajaro, thus obtaining two rides upon one ticket over the same portion of the road. On November 18, 1903, the defendant company issued a ticket to some person unknown for passage from San Francisco to Santa Cruz. This ticket was soon afterwards presented to the defendant McMonigal, who was the conductor in charge of the train, for passage from San Francisco to Pajaro, and was punched by him to indicate that it was so used, and was thereupon by him given back to the passenger. This was done because McMonigal's train ran to San Luis Obispo, and it was necessary for the passenger to Santa Cruz to have his ticket to present to the conductor of the train which carried him from Pajaro to Santa Cruz. On the 26th of December, 1903, this ticket was again presented to the defendant McMonigal by Sam Hawkins for passage from San Jose to Pajaro. At that time it had written, on the blank line, the words, "San Jose." Hawkins had boarded the train at San Jose with intent to travel from there to Pajaro upon the said ticket. He then stated to McMonigal, and afterwards to the agents of the defendant company, that he had purchased the ticket, thus altered, at Watsonville, from the plaintiff Johnson, to be used from San Jose to Pajaro, and that he was to pay Johnson therefor, after having used it for such passage. When the ticket was presented, McMonigal told Hawkins that the ticket had already been used as far as Pajaro, took up the ticket, and compelled Hawkins to pay fare. Samples of Johnson's handwriting were procured and compared with the handwriting of the words "San Jose" on the back of the ticket. The handwritings resembled so much that the agents of the defendant company, who were men of experience in comparing handwritings, believed that Johnson had written those words on the ticket, and so advised McMonigal. These exemplars, together with the ticket, were submitted to a reputable expert in handwriting, who gave a written opinion to the defendants to the effect that Johnson had written the words "San Jose" on the back of the ticket. Johnson, himself, upon being questioned by the district attorney and the persons acting for the defendant company and McMonigal, denied that he had ever seen the ticket, or that he had sold it or given it to Hawkins, and upon their request he wrote in their presence the names of several stations on the road, including San Jose. Johnson was a hotel keeper at Watsonville.

There was no attempt to contradict the evidence showing these facts, nor was there any evidence tending to prove that the defendant, McMonigal, and the agents of the railroad company were not acting in entire good faith, and in the full belief that the facts aforesaid were true, or that they had knowledge or information of other facts tending to exculpate plaintiff.

These facts were all related to an attorney at law at San Jose, employed by the defendant company for that purpose, and his advice was asked concerning the same. Thereupon he stated that the plaintiff was guilty of a violation of the aforesaid section of the Penal Code, and advised that he be prosecuted therefor. He and McMonigal as agents for the railroad company then went to Santa Cruz, and laid the facts before the district attorney of Santa Cruz county, who, after questioning Johnson as above stated, also stated that the facts sufficed to show that the plaintiff had violated the aforesaid section, and advised the prosecution. Thereupon the complaint charging a violation of the said offense was sworn to by the defendant McMonigal, and filed with a justice of the peace in Santa Cruz. The plaintiff was arrested upon said charge, and a preliminary examination was had. After hearing the evidence, the plaintiff was committed to the superior court to answer the said charge.

We think the facts above related were sufficient to constitute probable cause. "Probable cause is a suspicion founded upon circumstances sufficiently strong to warrant a reasonable man in the belief that the charge is true. Where there is no conflicting testimony the question whether or not the evidence introduced by the plaintiff shows want of probable cause is always for the court to decide, and it is error in such case, where there is a proof of probable cause, to submit any question to the jury." Davis v. Pacific, etc., Co., 127 Cal. 319, 57 Pac. 765. As to the duty of the person instituting such prosecution it is said: "It is not necessary that he shall institute an investigation of the crime itself, or seek to ascertain whether there are any other facts relating to the offense, or try to find out whether the accused has any defense to the charge. He is not required to exhaust all sources of information bearing upon the facts which have come to his knowledge." Dunlap v. New Zealand, etc., Co., 109 Cal. 369, 371, 42 Pac. 30. In the same case the court also says: "The facts within his knowledge may not in point of law constitute a crime; but, if they are of such character as to induce in the mind of a reasonable man the honest belief that a crime has been committed, he is justified in seeking to have the crime punished."

The defendant McMonigal testified that it was his practice, when indorsing stop-overs on the back of such railroad tickets, to insert, not the name of the station, but the station number as established by the railroad company, and that it was for this reason, among others, that he knew that the ticket had been altered. It is claimed that this practice of McMonigal was not disclosed to the attorneys who gave the advice to begin the prosecution. This claim, however, is not borne out by the evidence. It satisfactorily appears that this and all the others facts bearing upon the case were fully stated to the attorneys and to the district attorney at the time their advice was asked. Moreover, that fact alone would not make the plaintiff guiltless of the offense.

In addition to the proposition that the evidence was of itself sufficient to constitute probable cause for the prosecution, the defendants were also entitled to the benefit of the rule that where one, before instituting such a prosecution, has in good faith consulted an attorney at law of good standing, has stated to him all of the facts of the case, and has been thereupon advised by such attorney that a prosecution would lie, and such person has acted honestly upon that advice, this, of itself, constitutes probable cause. The question is fully discussed and settled in Dunlap v. New Zealand, etc., Co., supra. In addition to this it was shown that, after the taking of the evidence upon the preliminary examination, the committing magistrate adjudged that the plaintiff was probably guilty of the offense and made the order committing him to answer thereto in the superior court. It is settled law that this is prima facie evidence of the existence of probable cause for the prosecution. Ganea v. S. P. R. R. Co., 51 Cal. 140; Hahn v. Schmidt, 64 Cal. 286, 30 Pac. 818; Diemer v. Herber, 75 Cal. 390, 17 Pac. 205; Holliday v. Holliday, 123 Cal. 32, 55 Pac. 703. There was no evidence in contradiction of the prima facie case made by this commitment, but on the contrary the evidence tended to confirm it. The uncontradicted evidence in the case therefore shows the existence of probable cause in three separate ways: First, because the facts of themselves are such as to justify a reasonable man in believing that the plaintiff was guilty of the offense; second, because upon a full statement of the case the attorney of the defendant company and the district attorney of the county were consulted by defendants, and, they having advised to the same effect, the prosecution was made in good faith, relying thereon; and, third, because upon the hearing the plaintiff was held to answer by the magistrate.

Upon the evidence as presented the court should have given the instruction asked by the defendants, directing the jury to return a verdict in their favor, and should have granted the motion for a new trial afterwards presented by the defendants.

The judgment and order are reversed.

HAMBERGER v. POLICE COURT OF CITY OF FRESNO et al. S. F. 5,464 (Civ. 625).

(Supreme Court of California. March 3, 1910.)

In Bank. Dissenting opinion.

For majority opinion, see 106 Pac. 894.

BEATTY, C. J. I dissented from the order denying a rehearing of this cause at the time it was made, and desire now to state the reasons for my dissent. It seems plain to me that the decision of the District Court of Appeal—which is now finally approved by the court of last resort—will, unless reversed, deprive the citizens of California of a right secured to them by the Constitution—the right, that is to say, to invoke the judgment, not only of the District Court of Appeal, but of this court, in a large and important class of cases in which they may deem themselves aggrieved by usurpation or excess of judicial authority. The effect of the decision here is to establish the doctrine that, when a justice of the peace, police magistrate, or other inferior officer or tribunal is assuming jurisdiction of a civil action in which a final appeal lies to the superior court, it matters not how plain or how doubtful the question as to his jurisdiction of the subject-matter or of the person of the defendant may be, such defendant can never have a hearing upon that point in either the District Court of Appeal or in this court, and this because his right to appeal to the superior court from the "judgment sought" is a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy, sufficient to cut him off from any recourse to the writ of prohibition—the remedy under our statute, as it was at common law, especially adapted, especially efficacious and solely adequate in many cases, to redress the grievance of persons threatened by a usurped authority. It is, as defined by the statute, the counterpart of the writ of mandate. It arrests the proceedings of any tribunal or person exercising, or assuming to exercise, judicial functions, when such proceedings are without or in excess of the jurisdiction of such person or tribunal. Code Civ. Proc. § 1102. It was the same at common law and was a remedy very freely administered by the court of King's Bench in England not only in behalf of the particular person aggrieved by the threatened usurpation, but, in the discretion of the court, equally at the suit of any of the king's subjects; and this upon the obvious ground that usurpation of judicial power is not only a private injury, but is more especially a public mischief, not beneath the dignity of the highest court in the kingdom to restrain as often as attempted. Upon this point I deem it sufficient to refer to a somewhat extended discussion of the subject in Havemeyer v. Superior Court, 84 Cal. 401 et seq., 24 Pac. 121, 10 L. R. A. 627, 18 Am. St. Rep. 192, where the leading English cases are cited. Another and quite modern case decided in the Queen's Bench Division in 1894 shows how rigidly that high tribunal still upholds and how freely they continue to administer this remedy by prohibition, and the grounds of public policy which in their judgment demand its prompt and firm application.

That the framers of our several state Constitutions have at all times held the same high estimate of the importance of this remedy that has for centuries prevailed in England is abundantly proved by the fact that from the organization of the Supreme Court in 1849 to the present day there has never been an hour when a person invoking the remedy had not the right by the plain terms of the Constitution, under all its changes, to bring his cause to this court for a final adjudication in one form or another. By the Constitution of 1849 (article 6, § 4) the Supreme Court was invested with original and sole jurisdiction to issue the writ of prohibition, and thus was imposed upon it a corresponding obligation to allow the writ, in a proper case, certainly to any person beneficially interested, if not, as in England, to any citizen of the state suing for the benefit of the public. By the Constitution of 1879 (article 6, § 5) the superior court was invested with original jurisdiction concurrent with that of the Supreme Court in prohibition, and although the Supreme Court was not then given in express terms any appellate jurisdiction where the original proceeding was commenced in the superior court, there seems never to have been any question of its right to review the decision of the superior court when the appeal was taken. McDonald v. Agnew, 122 Cal. 448, 55 Pac. 125; Powelson v. Lockwood, 82 Cal. 613, 23 Pac. 143.

But, if there ever had been any question of the final appellate or original jurisdiction of this court in cases of prohibition under the Constitution of 1879, the question has been set at rest, and all uncertainty ended by the recent amendments creating the District

Courts of Appeal and defining their jurisdiction. Under those amendments, the Supreme Court and the superior court retain their concurrent jurisdiction of the original proceeding, and the District Courts of Appeal are invested with both original and appellate jurisdiction, which can only mean that an appeal lies to those courts in original proceedings commenced in the superior courts, and that this court may, and in a proper case must, review and reverse the decision of the District Court of Appeal if erroneous.

Now in this case the appellant, having been made defendant in a civil action for the recovery of $121, filed a petition in the superior court for a writ prohibiting the police court of the city of Fresno, in which the action was pending, from proceeding to try it, basing his petition upon the ground that the police court had no jurisdiction. A demurrer to his petition was sustained by the superior court and the proceeding dismissed. It cannot be learned from the opinion of the District Court of Appeal affirming the judgment of the superior court what the alleged want of jurisdiction consisted in—whether it was of the person or of the subject-matter, whether it presented a plain question or a doubtful question—all that, as above stated, was treated as a matter of perfect indifference, and the decision went upon the ground that, however plain or doubtful the question of jurisdiction might be, there was no room for prohibition for the reason that an appeal to the superior court from the "judgment sought" was a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy to the appellant, even if he was compelled to plead in a court having no jurisdiction. But was it an adequate remedy? We may suppose that the allegations of the appellant's petition were true, and that in fact and in law the police court had no jurisdiction, but that the superior court on appeal has erroneously sustained the jurisdiction. The appellant has no further appeal in that action. He must rest content with the erroneous decision of the superior court in a case which the Constitution says he may appeal to the District Court of Appeal, whose decision may be, and in a proper case must be, reviewed by this court. In a proceeding which by the plain letter of the Constitution may be carried for final judgment to the highest courts of the state, can it be said that another remedy which deprives the petitioner of that constitutional right is adequate? Is the right of appeal to the higher courts of no value? Such is certainly not the theory of the Constitution, which in creating the appellate and Supreme Courts necessarily assumes that errors may be committed by the superior courts which they are competent to correct. And what is proclaimed by the Constitution as a theory it scarcely becomes us to controvert as a fact. When a citizen brings his appeal to this court, or to the District Court of Appeal, in a case which by express provision of the Constitution is within our appellate jurisdiction, we cannot turn him out of court upon the ground that another appeal, in another case, which cannot be carried beyond the superior court, is a full and adequate remedy for his grievance, without implying that the right to appeal to the higher courts is of no value.

This is a proposition to which I cannot assent, and least of all in its application to a class of cases which so largely partake of a public character. It is stated by counsel for appellant in his petition for a rehearing that the question as to the civil jurisdiction of the police court of the city of Fresno has long been the subject of vexatious controversy among the members of the local bar. If this is so, it is especially important, as it is in all doubtful cases of this sort, that the question should be authoritatively settled by a decision of this court; for the more doubtful such a question is the more it becomes a public question and the more necessary that it should be set at rest, not only for the benefit of all who are liable to be harassed by the exercise of the asserted jurisdiction if unlawful, but equally for the benefit of those who may have occasion to invoke it, if lawful.

Without dwelling further on the general considerations which sustain the policy of the framers of the Constitution in securing the right of all persons menaced by a threatened usurpation of judicial authority to invoke the protection of this court directly or by appeal, I wish to notice briefly the cases cited as authority for the decision of the District Court of Appeal. Most of them are not in point, for they were decisions in original proceedings commenced in this court to prohibit the superior court or judges of those courts from exercising jurisdiction in matters which could be brought here for review on appeal. Of course, in such cases the appeal would secure to the petitioner as full a review in this court of the question of jurisdiction as he could have in prohibition, and was therefore in most cases an adequate remedy. This circumstance marks the wide distinction between all that class of cases and this case in which the petitioner is remitted to an appeal which ends in the superior court, a court with final appellate jurisdiction to decide whether a defendant in an action properly brought before it owes $121—but not the court of last resort upon a question of jurisdiction. It must be admitted, however, that among the decisions of this court cited in the opinion of the District Court of Appeal there are two or three which sustain and would have compelled its conclusion, as well as that of the superior court, that an appeal from "the judgment sought" was as complete a remedy as the appellant had any right to claim.

The earliest of these was Powelson v. Lockwood, 82 Cal. 613, 23 Pac. 143. That case, however, does not decide the point stated in the first syllabus. What it decides, and all that it decides, is that prohibition does not lie to correct errors of procedure in actions of which an inferior court has jurisdiction. The case, which was an appeal from a judgment of a superior court denying the writ of prohibition, was decided upon its merits, upon the ground—that is to say, that the justice of the peace, although he may have erred in denying the petitioner a jury trial, had not exceeded his jurisdiction—a proposition sustained by numerous decisions of this court rendered before and since that decision. The next case in order of time was Strause v. Police Court, 85 Cal. 49, 24 Pac. 747. That was an original proceeding in this court, and absolutely the correct proceeding, to test the validity of a municipal ordinance, for the alleged violation of which the petitioner was being prosecuted. The decision, after quoting section 1103 of the Code of Civil Procedure, is condensed into five lines of the report and consists entirely of a citation of Levy v. Wilson, 69 Cal. 105, 10 Pac. 272, which was a proceeding against the superior court in a matter reviewable on appeal to this court. The fact that Strause's appeal would end in the superior court, and Levy's appeal would come to this court, seems not to have been suggested or considered in that case as affecting the question of remedy. The case of Valentine v. Police Court, 141 Cal. 616, 75 Pac. 336, was a case on the facts for certiorari and not prohibition, though the petitioner did pray for both writs. It was decided on the merits as a proceeding in certiorari, and it was also shown that aside from the question of other adequate remedy it was not a case for prohibition. In passing it was said incidentally: "It is also settled that prohibition cannot be resorted to where, as here, there is a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy by appeal" (to the superior court)—citing White v. Superior Court, 110 Cal. 54, 42 Pac. 471. The White Case was a proceeding in certiorari, had nothing to do with prohibition, and least of all with the application of the doctrine of other adequate remedy. It is no authority for the proposition to which it is cited, which in fact was no part of the matter decided in the Valentine Case. It will be seen from this review of the cases in which there was no appeal to the Supreme Court upon which the question of jurisdiction could be there reviewed, but one of them (the Strause Case) really decides that an appeal ending in the superior court is an adequate remedy to the petitioner in prohibition, ignoring the fact that he is given by the Constitution an ampler remedy in the form of an original proceeding in this court or of an appeal from the superior court.

It seems to me that the decision in the Strause Case was so plain a renunciation of the original jurisdiction of this court that it cannot be regarded as authority, and the other cases are scarcely in point. Certain it is that no consideration has been given in any of the cases cited to the point I am insisting upon here—that when the Constitution gives the district courts and this court appellate jurisdiction in a certain case, as in prohibition—we cannot, upon any excuse, remit a suitor in that case to the final judgment of a subordinate tribunal.

DAHLBERG v. GIRSCH. (S. F. 5,035.)

1. Trial (§ 400*) — Judgment — Vacation — Finding—Amendment.

Code Civ. Proc. § 663, provides that a judgment based on findings of fact may be set aside on motion of the party aggrieved and a different judgment entered because of incorrect or erroneous conclusions of law not consistent with or supported by the findings of fact, or because the judgment is not consistent with or supported by a special verdict. Held that, on such a motion, the court has no jurisdiction to change any finding of fact; the exclusive remedy of the party aggrieved by a finding of fact being a motion for a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 949, 950; Dec. Dig. § 400.*]

2. Contracts (§ 321*)—Building Contracts—Breach—Election by Owner to Complete—Effect.

Where, on the alleged breach of a building contract by the contractor, the owner elected to complete the same pursuant to a contract provision authorizing him to do so after notice, and in that event to take a reasonable expense of completion from the contract price, the owner could not thereafter deny the contractor's right to recover such difference because the contractor's failure to perform was found by the court to be willful.

3. Contracts (§ 321*)—Breach—Completion by Owner—Damages.

Where an owner terminates a building contract because of the contractor's failure to comply with the specifications, and finishes the building under a provision authorizing him to do so and deduct reasonable cost from the contract price, the owner's act in so proceeding does not preclude him from claiming damages against a contractor for defective performance, or for failure to complete the building within the time specified.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Geo. A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Action by Andrew Dahlberg against Paul Girsch. From a judgment for plaintiff for less than the relief demanded, and from an order granting defendant's motion to correct a judgment, plaintiff appealed to the Court of Appeals, where the judgment was reversed, and defendant applied to the Supreme Court for a rehearing, which was granted.

The following is the opinion of the District Court of Appeal, per Hart, J., concurred in by Chipman, P. J., and Burnett, J.:

"This is an appeal from the judgment on the judgment roll alone and from an order granting defendant's motion to correct the judgment upon the ground that the conclusions of law were incorrect and erroneous because inconsistent with, and not supported by, the findings of fact.

"The order appealed from was made upon the authority of section 663 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that a judgment or decree of a superior court, when based upon findings of fact made by the court, may, upon motion of the party aggrieved, be set aside and vacated by the same court, and another and different judgment entered, for the 'following cause, materially affecting the substantial rights of such party and entitling him to a different judgment: Incorrect or erroneous conclusions of law not consistent with or not supported by the findings of fact, and in such case when the judgment is set aside the conclusions of law shall be amended and corrected.' The action grows out of a contract entered into between the plaintiff and the defendant on the 25th day of May, 1905, by the terms of which the first named agreed to construct for the defendant, and furnish the requisite materials therefor, a three-story building on a certain lot situated in the city of San Francisco for the sum of $17,363, the same to be paid in installments as the work progressed. The structure was to be constructed according to the plans and specifications prepared by one A. T. Ehrenpfort, the architect of the defendant. On the 5th day of June, 1905, the plaintiff proceeded to perform the terms of said contract by the commencement of the erection of said building, and continued to so perform the terms of his agreement until the 22d day of July, 1905, when he was notified by the said architect of defendant that he was not putting in the foundation in conformity with the plans and specifications, and was notified and commanded by said architect to do his work in accordance therewith. The plaintiff, however, continued in the erection of the building without heeding the notice given him by the architect until the 16th day of August, 1905. At this time the work of erecting the building had so far progressed as that the plaintiff, had he performed his work in accordance with the plans and specifications, would have been entitled to the first payment under the stipulations of the contract. The plaintiff made a demand upon the defendant for such payment, but it was refused for the reason that the defendant claimed that the work of construction had not up to this time been performed as required by the contract and the plans and specifications. Thereafter an agreement was entered into between the parties to arbitrate the differences between them with reference to the foundation, and to that end each named an arbitrator, and the two arbitrators thus appointed were authorized to and did select a third.

"The arbitrators, with a view of performing the duties thus cast upon them, went upon the premises for the purpose of inspecting and examining the foundation, and, although requested to do so by said arbitrators, as well as so asked in writing by the defendant, the plaintiff refused to expose and thus subject to the examination of the said arbitrators said foundation nor would he permit them to remove the sand from said foundation for the purpose of examining the same. Thereupon the arbitrators notified the defendant that they could not make a proper or satisfactory examination of the foundation or its exact condition unless the same were exposed in such manner and to such an extent as to enable them to give it a thorough and an accurate inspection. Nothing further was done in the matter of the proposed arbitration. After the failure to arbitrate and thus to adjust the differences between the parties, the plaintiff ceased work upon the building, and the defendant, after notifying the plaintiff, as required by the contract, to continue in the construction of the building and to furnish the necessary material therefor, proceeded, as he was authorized by the contract to do in case the plaintiff refused to do so, to finish and complete the erection of the structure, the plaintiff having disregarded the notice and declined to go on with the work.

"The contract provided for the payments to be made as follows: $3,500 when the frame should be put up; $4,863 when the brown coat of mortar should be on; $4,500 when the building should be completed and accepted; $4,500 on the thirty-sixth day after completion and acceptance. The contract further provided that the foregoing payments should be made upon certificates in writing from the architect, stating that the installments were due or work completed. It was further provided that, in the event the work was not done properly or according to the plans and specifications, the architect should issue and deliver to the plaintiff, in lieu of the certificates mentioned, a writing setting forth 'a just and true reason for not issuing said certificate, including a statement of the defects, if any, to be remedied to entitle the contractor to the certificate or certificates, and that in the event of the failure of said architect to furnish and deliver said certificates or any of them, or, in lieu thereof the writing referred to, within three days after the time aforesaid, and after demand therefor made in writing by the contractor, the amount which might be claimed to be due by the contractor and stated in said demand made by him for the certificate, shall, at the expiration of three days, become due and payable, and the defendant herein shall be liable and bound to pay the same on demand.'

"The plaintiff brought this action to recover the sum of $11,000 alleged to be due him from the defendant for services performed and materials furnished in the construction of the said building. For the sum of $7,500 of said amount he counts on a quantum meruit for services performed and a quantum valebat for materials furnished. The remainder of the sum for which he asks judgment —$3,500—he alleges is due under the terms of the contract, and avers: 'That on the 16th day of August, 1905, the plaintiff, in the performance of his said contract, had so far proceeded in the construction of said building and had completed it to the extent that the frame thereof was up and properly constructed. That on or about the 16th day of August, 1905, the plaintiff demanded of the defendant the said sum of $3,500, as in said contract provided, but to pay the same or any part thereof the defendant refused and still refuses without right or cause. That prior to the making of such demand upon the defendant made by the plaintiff, as hereinabove stated, the plaintiff demanded of A. T. Ehrenpfort at the time the said $3,500 became due a certificate in writing stating that the payment or installment was then due and the amount then due. That the said A. T. Ehrenpfort, who was the architect employed by the defendant in the construction of the said building and supervision thereof, refused and declined to give to the plaintiff the said certificate so demanded, and failed and refused in lieu of said certificate to deliver to the plaintiff in writing under his hand a just or true reason for not issuing the said certificate or any writing containing a statement of any defects or thing to be remedied. That the said A. T. Ehrenpfort, architect as aforesaid, failed to furnish or deliver the said certificate or in lieu thereof the writing aforesaid within three days after the said payment of $3,500 became due, or within three days after demand therefor had been made by the plaintiff.'

"The court found the facts as we have in substance stated them, and gave the plaintiff judgment originally for the sum of $3,492.81. Thereafter, as seen, the court changed the judgment on the application of the defendant by reducing the amount awarded thereby to the sum of $1,089.78, 'less the sum of $150 heretofore paid to one Frank Simonart by consent, leaving a balance amounting to $939.78', etc. The reformed judgment awards to the plaintiff the exact sum which the defendant admits in his answer is due the plaintiff under the contract, and which was tendered and deposited in court to be so applied. The specific contention upon the part of the respondent is, and such was the view adopted by the court below in making the order to which objection is here made, that the conclusion of law is inconsistent with the finding 'that the plaintiff's failure to construct the foundation as required by the contract between plaintiff and defendant and plaintiff's failure to remedy the defects therein and referred to in said finding when pointed out by defendant's architect was willful, because under said findings plaintiff is not entitled to recover anything from defendant in said action. We are not under our view of this record required to notice the several points which are presented and argued in this controversy, but we deem it proper to state briefly the contention of counsel for the respondent upon what we conceive to be the most important question discussed in the briefs.

"The court found that the plaintiff after having his attention called by the architect to the fact that he was not constructing the wall and foundation in conformity with the plans and specifications, and that, to the contrary, he was causing material deviations from said plans, etc., to be made therein, and after having been duly notified by said architect to remedy or correct the defects in said wall and foundation 'wholly disregarded said notification and failed to remedy the defects in said wall and foundations, or to construct the same as required by said contract'; that plaintiff would not 'permit the defendant's architect to examine said foundations or to look at the footings thereof or make any investigations whatever with reference to the construction thereof during the time that the same were being put in and after the completion thereof.' The court further found 'that said plaintiff's failure to construct said foundation as required by said contract and his failure to remedy the defects therein hereinbefore referred to when pointed out by said architect as is hereinbefore specified was willful.'

"Upon the question of the sum to which the plaintiff proved that he was entitled the court found 'that the plaintiff has not by any action of defendant or his employés or the said A. T. Ehrenpfort, architect, as aforesaid, suffered damage in the sum of $11,000 or any greater sum than $3,642.81, which said sum is the reasonable value of work, labor, and materials performed and furnished in and upon the said building by plaintiff prior to September 13, 1905; that plaintiff is not entitled to any profits on his performance of the said contract.' As a conclusion of law, the court decided that the sum to which plaintiff was entitled is that set forth in the foregoing finding, less $150 which the parties agreed should be paid to one Frank Simonart for work performed on the building at the request of the plaintiff.

"The contention of respondent is that the plaintiff can recover neither upon his contract nor upon a quantum meruit or quantum valebat because he deliberately and willfully refused to do the work in accordance with the terms of the contract, after performing in a defective manner only a small portion of the work, and leaving the defective work uncorrected and the materials upon the ground, thus compelling the defendant 'to elect whether he would go to the expense and trouble of removing the materials and labor so left upon his lot or patching up the defective work.'

There are authorities from other jurisdictions which lend force to that contention, and under that theory the findings upon which the original judgment was planked are inconsistent. But the difficulty in the way of upholding the order and judgment appealed from is that the conclusion of law as to the sum to which plaintiff is entitled, as originally reached by the court, is supported by finding No. 13, heretofore referred to, and that the correction of the judgment necessarily involves, therefore, the correction of or the making of a new finding. This obviously cannot be done in the proceeding authorized by section 663 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

"It is true, as seen, that the corrected judgment is for the amount which the defendant admitted to be due the plaintiff and which the defendant tendered to and deposited in court to be paid to the plaintiff, and it is also true that it is not necessary, under our practice and procedure, to make a finding of an admitted fact. But the court's finding that the plaintiff is entitled to the sum of $3,642.81 is tantamount to a finding that the claim of the defendant that he is indebted to the plaintiff in no further sum than $939.78 is untrue, and, of course, the specific finding that the larger sum is due must be assumed, in the absence of a statement of the case or a bill of exceptions bringing up the evidence, to be sufficiently supported. And it is no answer in this proceeding to say that the court made findings by which the theory, contended for by the respondent, that the plaintiff was not entitled to judgment in any event, appears to be sustained. If the court misconceived the law applicable to the proven facts in the case, and was thus led into making findings not sustained by the evidence under respondent's theory of the law, assuming it to be correct, or made inconsistent findings of fact, the remedy for the correction of such errors is in a motion for a new trial, and not in a proceeding where the power of the court is expressly limited to the correction of the decree or judgment because the conclusion of law is inconsistent with and not supported by the findings. It is not necessary to add that, if the defendant's theory of the law of this case be correct, the plaintiff would be entitled to recover nothing.

"We have not considered it necessary to cite authorities in support of the conclusion reached.

"For the reasons stated in the foregoing, the judgment and order are reversed."

Wal. J. Tuska, for appellant. Jordan, Rowe & Brann, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. Plaintiff originally had judgment against defendant for $3,492.81. Upon motion duly made under the provisions of section 663, Code Civ. Proc., that the judgment be vacated and a different judgment entered because of an incorrect or erroneous conclusion of law not supported by the findings of fact, an order was made vacating the judgment and amending the conclusion of law upon which the same was based by finding that plaintiff was entitled to recover from defendant only $939.78, instead of $3,492.81. Judgment was thereupon given for plaintiff for $939.78 only. This is an appeal by plaintiff from such order and from the judgment based thereon. The only questions presented thereby relate to the action of the court in vacating the first judgment and entering a different judgment on the findings.

In the determination of this appeal we are restricted, of course, to the case made by the findings of fact in the trial court, taken in the light of the pleadings and the issues made thereby. If the first judgment was the correct legal conclusion upon the facts so found, the trial court had no right to vacate it and substitute a different judgment therefor. Section 663, Code Civ. Proc., authorizes simply the substitution of the judgment that should have been given as a matter of law upon the findings of fact in a case where the judgment already given is an incorrect conclusion from such findings. The court cannot on such a motion in any way change any finding of fact. The sole remedy in the trial court of a party who is aggrieved by any finding of fact is a motion for a new trial. The action was brought by plaintiff to recover money alleged to be due him from defendant for services performed and materials furnished in the construction of a building for defendant. A portion of the money sought, $3,500, he claimed to be due under the terms of the building contract between the parties, and some $6,000, as we understand his complaint, to be due as the reasonable value of services and material furnished by him in the matter of said building.

The findings show the following facts: Everything done by plaintiff in connection with the building was done under a written contract between himself and defendant, dated May 23, 1905, whereby plaintiff agreed to construct the building according to certain plans and specifications for the aggregate sum of $17,363, payable upon certificates of the architect in installments at certain stages of the work and after the completion and acceptance of the building. It was provided in this contract "that should the contractor at any time during the progress of the work refuse or neglect, without the fault of the owner, his architect, or superintendent, to supply a sufficiency of materials or workmen to complete said contract within the time limited therein, due allowance being made for the contingencies provided for therein, for a period of more than three (3) days after having been notified by the owner in writing to furnish the same, the said owner should have power to furnish and provide said materials or workmen to finish the work and that the reasonable expense thereof should be deducted from the amount of the contract price." Plaintiff proceeded with the work until some time in July, 1905, when it was claimed by defendant's architect that the foundation of the building had not been constructed in all respects as required by the plans and specifications, and plaintiff was notified to make such foundation comply with the plans and specifications. The alleged defects in the foundation, which the court found to have existed, were that the north and east walls were a few inches lower than they should have been, while the south wall was not put down deep enough by a few inches, and also that in some places there were no "footings" where required by the specifications. Plaintiff failed to remedy these defects, although notified thereof. He continued his work on the building to August 16, 1905, when the frame of the building was up, and, if the work had been properly performed up to that point, he would have been entitled to his first payment, amounting to $3,500. This he then demanded, but the architect refused to give him a certificate, upon the ground that he had never remedied the defects in the foundation of which he had been theretofore notified. An arbitration of their difficulties was attempted by the parties, but was ineffectual. The court found by finding 5 "that said plaintiff's failure to construct said foundation as required by said contract and his failure to remedy the defects therein hereinbefore referred to when pointed out by said architect * * * was willful." After the failure of the arbitration, plaintiff ceased work and ceased to supply materials, and defendant on September 5, 1905, duly notified him in accordance with the provision of the contract hereinbefore quoted that, if he did not within three days supply a sufficiency of materials and workmen to complete the building, he, defendant, would furnish the same, "and would finish said building and that the reasonable expense thereof would be deducted from the amount of the contract price." Plaintiff not heeding said notice, defendant on September 13, 1905, took possession of the building and premises and work done by plaintiff thereon, and fully completed the building, using the foundations built by plaintiff after portions thereof had been underpinned with brick, and also using the frame constructed by plaintiff. It was alleged by defendant in his answer that the building was fully completed "according to the terms of said contract and specifications, and not otherwise." The court found in finding 9 that "the reasonable cost of the labor and materials furnished for and used in the completion of said building by defendant, according to the plans and specifications and contract, was and is the sum of" $12,721.19. Plaintiff has never received anything for services or materials furnished in or about the building. No claim exists against defendant in behalf of any other person for work or materials furnished in the matter of said building except one in favor of Frank Simonart, which, by consent of the parties, was paid to said Simonart. By finding 13 the court found that plaintiff had not by any action of defendant suffered damages in "any greater sum than," $3,642.81, "which said sum is the reasonable value of work, labor, and materials performed and furnished in and upon said building by plaintiff prior to September 13, 1905," and that "plaintiff is not entitled to any profits on his performance of the said contract." As a conclusion of law, the court found that plaintiff is entitled to recover from defendant the said sum of $3,642.81 less the $150 paid by defendant to Simonart, namely, $3,492.81, and the original judgment was so made.

The answer of the defendant clearly proceded upon the assumption that defendant was liable for any portion of the contract price remaining unexpended by defendant after the payment of the reasonable cost of completing the building according to the plans and specifications. He himself set up the contract, and the provision thereof authorizing him to complete the work and deduct the reasonable expense of such completion from the contract price, the notice to plaintiff that he would do so, the completion by him under said notice, and that the reasonable cost of such completion was $16,273.22, leaving a balance due under the contract of only $1,089.78. The trial court, as we have seen, found against him on this issue of the reasonable cost of such completion.

We fail to see wherein the original judgment was not as favorable to defendant as the facts found warranted, or why the theory of defendant's answer as set forth above was not correct. The whole basis of the claim of learned counsel for defendant that the trial court did not err in its modification of the conclusion of law is the finding of fact numbered 5 hereinbefore set forth, by which it is found that plaintiff's failure to comply with the contract so far as the foundations were concerned was "willful." It is learnedly argued that, in view of this finding, he was not entitled to recover anything. It is said that a building contractor cannot recover upon his express contract without showing such performance thereof as entitles him to payment according to its terms, or that such performance has been in some way waived or excused, and that he cannot recover upon an implied contract for the reasonable value of his labor and materials, furnished under such express contract, and of which the other party has the benefit, where he has willfully failed to perform his contract; and many authorities are cited in support of this claim. This may here be conceded to be the general rule, and it is entirely unnecessary to consider what limitations and modifications thereof have been made by the courts, for it clearly appears to us that there are in this case other facts that make the finding as to willful failure one of no importance whatever in determining what judgment should have been given.

We have already quoted in this opinion the provision of the contract authorizing the defendant in certain contingencies to take charge of and complete the contract himself, deducting the reasonable expense thereof from the amount of the contract price. This provision was, of course, one in favor of the defendant, which he might resort to or not at his option. He undoubtedly had the right to require performance of the contract by plaintiff as a condition precedent to payment for the work and materials furnished thereunder. But with full knowledge of the facts, including the fact of willful failure to construct the foundations in the precise manner specified in the plans and specifications, he deliberately elected to proceed under this provision of the contract, giving to the plaintiff formal notice that he would do so, and deduct the reasonable expense thereof from the amount of the contract price. He proceeded in accord with his election, and the building was completed by him in full accord with the plans and specifications. The reasonable cost of the labor and materials furnished and used by him in such completion was as found by the court only $12,721.19, which deducted from the contract price would leave $4,641.81 due on the contract under the terms of this provision.

It appears clear to us on principle that the owner, having so elected, cannot now successfully urge that the contractor cannot recover. A similar question was presented to the Court of Appeals of New York in Murphy v. Buckman, 66 N. Y. 297. There was in that case a very similar provision in the contract, and, the contractor having defaulted, the owner gave the notice and completed the building, expending therein a sum which added to what he had theretofore paid the contractor was $778.90 less than the sum the contractor was to receive under the contract. This amount of $778.90 was awarded to a lien claimant who could recover it only in the event that the money was actually due to the contractor. The court said: "The defendant, by electing to go on under this clause of the contract, waived the right to insist upon a forfeiture for the failure of the contractor to perform the contract. The owner was not precluded thereafter from claiming damages against the contractor for defective performance, or for failure on his part to complete the building at the time specified; and these damages he could recoup, against any sum due the contractor, for work done under the contract. But he could not avail himself of the right, given him by the contract, to complete the work, thereby substituting himself in place of the contractor, and at the same time claim that the contract was at an end, and refuse to account to the contractor for work done under it, on the ground that the contract was forfeited. The election to do the work at the contractor's expense, under the clause referred to, assumed that the contract was then in force. The case of Gillen v. Hubbard, 2 Hilt. 304, a case arising under a similar contract, contains a very satisfactory exposition of the meaning of this clause." The case of Gillen v. Hubbard, 2 Hilt. (N. Y.) 303, referred to in the foregoing quotation, involved a similar provision. After stating that the owner had acted under this provision, the court said: "The penalty for a failure or refusal to supply materials and workmen appears to have been determined by the contract and to have been understood and acted upon by the defendant. If the contract had been silent upon the subject, there would be no difficulty in relieving the defendant from any of his alleged grievances, because, the contractors having failed to perform their contract, the plaintiff, as a lienor, could not recover. Neville v. Frost, 2 E. D. Smith, 62; Cunningham v. Jones, 3 E. D. Smith, 650; Smith v. Brady, 17 N. Y. 173 [72 Am. Dec. 442]." In Taylor v. Mayor, etc., 83 N. Y. 625, the action was by the contractor to recover the balance due after completion by the owner under such a provision. The court said: "The plaintiff refused to do work that he was by his contract bound to do. Had the defendants taken the position then, they might now claim that he thereby worked a forfeiture of his contract. His failure to completely perform his contract would then have been a perfect bar to a recovery under it. The defendants did not then take that position. They rested upon a clause in the contract that enabled them to go on and complete the work, and to charge the expense of completion to the plaintiff. That action forbids them to now insist that the contract was forfeited. Murphy v. Buckman, 66 N. Y. 297." In Larkin v. McMullin et al., 120 N. Y. 210, 24 N. E. 447, it is said that in such a case "the work of completion by the owner is performed pursuant to the contract"—citing Murphy v. Buckman, supra. The italics are ours. We can see no possible answer to the views enunciated in these decisions. The decision in Taylor v. Mayor, supra, recognizes that the rule applied does not preclude the owner from a counterclaim to the contractor's demand "of so much as was the cost of completing the work according to the plaintiff's contract," and, as seen from the quotation in Murphy v. Buckman, supra, the owner is not precluded thereby from claiming damages against the contractor for defective performance or for failure on his part to complete the building at the time specified. As we have seen, there is no question of any counterclaim or any claim for damages in this case.

It follows from what we have said that, notwithstanding the finding as to willful failure on the part of the contractor relative to the foundations, the defendant was in no position to urge that the original conclusion of law was inconsistent with and unsupported by the findings of fact. If there was any error at all in such conclusion, it was error favorable to him, for the trial court did not award plaintiff the full difference between the contract price and the reasonable cost of completing the building less the $150 paid to Simonart, but deducted $999 from such difference. So far as the original conclusion of law and judgment went against defendant, they were in accord with and compelled by the findings of fact.

As an order reversing the order and judgment appealed from, without other direction, will leave the original conclusion of law and judgment in force, it is not necessary to make any order directing a new conclusion of law or the entry of another judgment.

The order vacating the original judgment and amending the conclusion of law upon which the same was based is reversed, as is the judgment entered in pursuance of said order.

SHEPHERD-TEAGUE CO. v. HERMANN.
(Civ. 609.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. Jan. 6, 1910.)

1. Brokers (§ 40*)—Contracts—Validity.

Parties to a broker's contract to sell land may make the payment of commissions dependent on any lawful condition.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Dec. Dig. § 40.*]

2. Brokers (§ 48*)—Contracts—Validity.

Within a broker's contract to sell real estate for commissions a sale or exchange is made when the broker has procured from a responsible purchaser, or one acceptable to the seller, a valid contract for a sale or exchange on the terms proposed by the seller, or has brought the seller and buyer together, who have in consequence thereof entered into such a contract, or the buyer, able, ready, and willing to buy on the terms of the seller offers so to do.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. § 65; Dec. Dig. § 48.*]

3. Brokers (§ 52*) — Commission — When Earned.

A broker's contract to exchange real estate stipulated for a commission in case the change was made. While a trade was under consideration, but before it had been agreed on, the contract was modified by extending the time for the broker to procure the exchange and by fixing the commission. The purpose of employing the broker was to effect a trade, and to secure from a third person a binding acceptance of the offer of the owner, who had learned that the broker was also acting for the third person, and was to receive a commission from him. Held, that the broker was entitled to commissions from the owner on his securing from the third person a binding acceptance of the owner's offer, and he was not required to wait until the consummation of the trade by exchange of deeds.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. § 73; Dec. Dig. § 52.*]

4. Brokers (§ 63*) — Commissions — When Earned.

A broker employed to sell land on commission, to recover the commission when a sale was not made, must prove that he found a purchaser ready, willing, and able to buy on the terms fixed, and that he procured from such purchaser a valid contract binding him to purchase on such terms, or that he brought the vendor and the proposed purchaser together, so that the vendor might have secured such contract had he desired.

5. Brokers (§ 58*) — Commissions — When Earned.

A broker employed by an owner to procure an exchange of properties procured a contract from a third person signed by the manager of the third person's property. The third person had not authorized any one to make such a contract. The owner signed the agreement and took steps thereafter to carry it out, but the trade was not consummated because the owner's title to a part of his property was defective. Held, that the broker was not entitled to commissions, not having secured a binding contract, and it was immaterial that the owner proceeded in the effort to consummate the trade in the expectation that it would be completed by an exchange of deeds, in which case only could the broker recover commissions.

6. Principal and Agent (§ 173*)—Contracts by Agent—Ratification.

An agent without authority contracted for the exchange of his principal's property, and sent a copy of the contract to the principal. The agent received a deed in reply and also a letter. Neither the deed nor the letter were produced, and there was nothing to show that either had been delivered or shown to the other party to the contract. Held not to show a ratification by the principal so as to enable the adverse party to the contract to specifically enforce it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Agent, Cent. Dig. §§ 659–661; Dec. Dig. § 173.*]

7. Brokers (§ 60*) — Commissions — When Earned.

Where no sale has been actually consummated, and the broker employed to sell has not brought the purchaser and vendor together, the broker must to recover commissions procure a valid contract to purchase which can be enforced by the vendor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. § 91; Dec. Dig. § 60.*]

8. Pleading (§ 93*) — Inconsistent Pleadings.

Denials in one defense are not affected or qualified by inconsistent affirmative matter in another and separate defense.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. § 189; Dec. Dig. § 93.*]

9. Brokers (§ 67*)—Right to Act for Both Parties.

Where a principal knew that his agent was also employed by the adverse party in the transaction, and was to receive a commission from him, and the principal thereafter modified his agreement with the agent by reducing his compensation, the principal was liable to the agent as against the objection that he was also employed by the adverse party.

Everts & Ewing, for appellant. F. H. Short and F. E. Cook, for respondent.

HALL, J. Plaintiff recovered a judgment against defendant for the sum of $1,500, commission claimed to have been earned under a written contract of employment to find a purchaser for and negotiate a sale and transfer of certain real property for defendant. This is an appeal from the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial. Defendant in his answer admitted that he executed a written agreement in favor of the plaintiff, by which the defendant agreed to pay to the plaintiff a commission of $1,500, "provided that the said plaintiff should consummate a sale of certain property therein named and set forth," upon the terms in said writing set forth, but denied performance of the contract upon the part of plaintiff, and any indebtedness from defendant to plaintiff under said contract. Defendant attacks the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings in favor of plaintiff.

The first contention of appellant involves the construction of the contract under which plaintiff claims that it has earned the commission sued for. The contract relied on is in two instruments executed by defendant to plaintiff. By the first, which by its terms was to expire in 10 days from June 13, 1905, defendant promised to exchange certain property of his, subject to a mortgage for $40,000, for a piece of property known as the "Home Place" of A. B. Butler, and contained the provision that: "In the event this exchange is made, I agree to pay to Shepherd-Teague Company a commission of two and one-half per cent upon the value of my property." The second instrument, dated June 24, 1905, was an extension and modification of the first as to the terms upon which defendant would exchange properties, and also contained this provision: "That said agreement is also modified by this extension to the effect that, in the event the trade is consummated, the commission that I was to pay therefor to the said Shepherd-Teague Company shall be $1,500, instead of the commission therein set forth." No exchange of properties between defendant and Butler has ever taken place. The trade was never consummated by any exchange of deeds, and defendant for this reason contends that under the contract plaintiff is not entitled to his commission. Of course, parties to a broker's contract for the sale of real estate may make the payment of commissions dependent upon any lawful condition, and such contract might be so worded as to make it clear that the parties intended that no commissions were to be paid except upon a completed sale resulting in the execution and acceptance of deeds of transfer. Such a contract, however, is not the usual one between the seller and his agent or broker. We do not think it is the meaning of the one now under consideration. In the first writing the commission was to be paid "in the event this exchange is made." Within the meaning of a broker's contract to sell real estate, a sale or an exchange is made when the broker has procured from a responsible purchaser, or one acceptable to the seller, a binding and valid contract for a sale or exchange on the terms proposed by the seller, or has brought the seller and buyer together and they have in consequence entered into such a contract, or such buyer, being able, ready, and willing to buy on the seller's terms, offers so to do. Phelps v. Prusch, 83 Cal. 627, 23 Pac. 1111.

The language of the second writing that, "in the event the trade is consummated, the commission that I was to pay therefor to the said Shepherd-Teague Company shall be $1500 instead of the commission therein set forth," lends somewhat stronger support to appellant's contention. But this language must be interpreted in the light of the purposes and objects of the contract. The record shows that, before the date of the second writing, defendant had learned that plaintiff was acting for Butler also, and was to receive a commission from him. This circumstance as well as the verbiage of the commission clause in the second writing shows that the primary purpose and object sought thereby was to change the amount of the commission to be paid, rather than the event upon which it was to be paid. Defendant at this time was anxious, or at least willing, to exchange certain property of his for certain property belonging to Mr. Butler. The Butler property was for sale, and certain negotiations had been carried on through plaintiff between defendant and Butler prior to the execution of the second writing, but which had not resulted in any meeting of the minds of the principals. A trade was under consideration, but had not been agreed upon. The purpose of employing plaintiff was to effect a trade to secure from Butler a valid and binding acceptance of the offer of defendant. When this should be accomplished by plaintiff, it would have consummated the trade, we think, within the meaning of the contract sued upon. It was the only consummation of the trade within the power of the broker. The consummation by exchange of deeds required the further act of defendant, over which plaintiff had no control.

The second and most important contention of appellant is that, conceding the interpretation of the contract to be as contended for by respondent, the evidence fails to show that plaintiff has performed the same.

In this case the exchange was never actually consummated between defendant and Butler. Under these circumstances, it is incumbent on the broker "to prove that he found a purchaser ready, willing, and able to buy the property on the terms fixed, and either that he procured from that person a valid contract binding him to purchase the property upon those terms, or that he brought the vendor and the proposed purchaser together so that the vendor might have secured such contract if he desired. On no other terms can he recover." Mattingly v. Pennie, 105 Cal. 514, 39 Pac. 200, 45 Am. St. Rep. 87; Gunn v. Bank of California, 99 Cal. 349, 33 Pac. 1105. Plaintiff never brought Butler to defendant. Butler was not within the state of California. Plaintiff relied upon a contract that it procured. This contract was not signed by Butler personally, but was signed thus, "A. B. Butler by J. J. Miley." It was also signed by defendant, and efforts were made to carry out the contract, but defendant's title to a portion of his property was defective, and the trade fell through. It is urged that the contract for the exchange of the properties is not shown to have been a valid contract binding upon Butler, and therefore its procurement was not a sufficient performance by plaintiff to entitle it to recover. Miley was the manager of the Butler property, a vineyard, but had no power of attorney to sell real estate. The agreement signed by defendant and Miley is dated June 30, 1905. It was admitted in evidence, over the objection of defendant, that it was not shown to have been executed by Butler. The only evidence of any authority for Miley to execute any contract for the sale or exchange of the Butler property is that contained in certain telegrams from Butler. For the better understanding of these, it is necessary to state that the first writing executed by defendant to plaintiff, under date June 13, 1905, contained an offer to exchange defendant's equity over a $40,000 mortgage in property known as the "Fresno Loan & Savings Bank Building" for the home place of A. B. Butler, consisting of 120 acres of land and improvements. No other property is referred to in the first writing. The first telegram from Butler is addressed to Wendell Easton, who was co-operating with plaintiff, and is dated June 17, 1905, and is as follows: "Replying yours 16, I will exchange 120 a. for bank building and $10,000, payable in three years secured by mortgage at 5 per cent clear. A. B. Butler." This was simply a counteroffer at most, and was not accepted by defendant. The next telegram is dated June 21, 1905, and is: "If Hermann will pay $8,000.00 in five years, 5 per cent close. No other proposition to make. A. B. Butler." This was not accepted by defendant. June 22, 1905, Eastman wired Butler: "Hermann offers instead of $8,000.00 five years 8 lots and improvements in Fresno, monthly rental $200.00. Advise you telegraph. Miley appraise it for you." To this letter Butler replied to Easton: "I prefer paper to property. Wire some definite proposition through Miley." On this day, June 24, 1905, the extension and modification of defendant's offer to plaintiff was executed. In this writing defendant offered to exchange the bank property, subject to the $40,000, and 8 lots in the city of Fresno for the Butler 120 acres, "together with all the personal property, including trays, sweatboxes, farming utensils, horses or mules with their harness, which has heretofore been used upon" the Butler home place. On June 29th Miley wired to Butler: "Have closed deal subject your confirmation allowing Hermann eight thousand trays now you to get rents from July first which more than offsets trays. Easton-Teague will take half interest of Chinatown property for four thousand at your option. A good trade. Answer immediately." On June 30, 1905, Butler wired to Miley: "Commission on $50,000 was for $10,000 mortgage. Close if you cannot do better." Upon the receipt of this telegram Miley signed the contract for Butler. The most that can be claimed for these telegrams is that they authorized Miley to agree for Butler to an exchange of Butler's 120-acre home place and 8,000 trays for Hermann's bank building property and the 8 lots.

The authorization from defendant to plaintiff required the transfer to him of all the personal property used upon the Butler place, and the contract signed by Miley and defendant likewise required the transfer to defendant of such property, consisting of four mules, harness, a wagon, and various farming implements and vehicles, all of which are enumerated therein. We look in vain through the telegrams and the record for any authorization from Butler to Miley or any one else to bind him to make such transfer. Up to the time he sent the last wire ending "Close if you can do no better," he had been informed of a proposition from defendant to exchange the bank building property and 8 lots in Fresno for the 120-acre Butler home place and 8,000 trays and nothing else. This is the most that it can be claimed that Butler had agreed to give for the property offered by defendant. The contract signed by Miley agreed for much more, and does not appear by this record to have been authorized by Butler. Neither can it be said that because defendant, after his attorney had examined the telegrams, upon his advice, signed the agreement with Miley for the exchange, and took steps thereafter to carry out this agreement, defendant accepted such contract as a full performance by plaintiff of its contract to consummate the trade. Defendant had the right to proceed in the effort to consummate the trade in the expectation that it could and would be completed by an exchange of deeds, in which case plaintiff would have earned its commissions. In this respect the case at bar is analogous to the case of Gunn v. Bank of California, 99 Cal. 349, 33 Pac. 1105, where the broker took a deposit of $500 from the buyer upon an oral agreement to purchase. The broker reported the sale, and the seller approved the same in writing, but its title proved defective, and the purchaser refused to complete the purchase for this reason only. It was held the broker could not recover his commissions.

Apparently for the purpose of showing a ratification by Butler of the agreement signed by Miley, of date June 30, 1905, Miley testified that he sent a copy of the agreement to Butler, and further testified: "I received a deed in reply. I must have received a letter, but I don't know where it is. The deed was to property described in the agreement. I have got the deed in my pocket." This letter does not appear to have ever been delivered or shown to defendant. The deed was not introduced, though in the pocket of the witness, and what it contained is only shown to the extent that it was "to property described in the agreement." The witness did not even say that it was to the property described in the agreement. It may well have been to property described in the agreement, and yet not to all the property therein described. This evidence does not disclose such a state of facts as would have enabled defendant to enforce specific performance of the contract of June 30, 1905. Where no sale has been actually consummated, and the broker has not brought the buyer and seller together, it is his duty "to procure a valid contract to purchase, which can be enforced by the vendor if his title is perfect." Gunn v. Bank of California, supra. Plaintiff in the case at bar accomplished neither of these things, and for that reason the findings on which the judgment is predicated are not supported by the evidence. Respondent is not helped by the fact that in a separate and further defense defendant set up an affirmative defense predicated upon his construction of the terms of his contract with plaintiff, inconsistent with his denials in his first defense. Denials in one defense are not affected or qualified by inconsistent affirmative matter in another and separate defense. Banta v. Siller, 121 Cal. 414, 53 Pac. 935; Buhne v. Corbett, 43 Cal. 264; Miles v. Woodward, 115 Cal. 308, 46 Pac. 1076; Code Civ. Proc. § 441.

For the purposes of a retrial, it is proper to say that we do not think the defense founded upon the fact that plaintiff was also employed by Butler, and was to receive a commission from him, can be maintained upon the record before us. It clearly appears that when defendant executed the agreement with plaintiff dated June 24, 1905, he knew these facts. The commission was reduced to $1,500 for this reason. The cases relied upon by appellant upon this point are both cases where the seller was ignorant of the fact that the broker acted for and received pay from the buyer.

The order is reversed.

I concur: KERRIGAN, J.

COOPER, P. J. I concur in the judgment, but in my opinion the exchange of the property and the consummation of such exchange was a condition precedent, upon which the right to the commission depended. It was not proven that there was any exchange of the properties, nor was the exchange consummated. The contract signed by Miley was not binding upon Butler.

As to what is said in the last paragraph of the opinion, I think a broker who is acting as agent for one of the parties and receiving a commission from such party, should not be allowed to collect a commission from the other party for the same services unless it clearly appears that the broker fully and fairly stated all the facts to such other party. The law does not countenance double dealing; and there is a strong presumption in such case that one cannot at the same time serve two masters; but, of course, if the two masters both know all the facts, and knowing such facts each agrees to pay a certain sum, there is nothing unfair about such contract. In this case the defendant must have been fully informed as to all the facts, and as to the amount of commission that the plaintiff was to be paid by Butler before plaintiff can recover against him.

GUARANTY REALTY CO. v. RECREATION GUN CLUB (GALUSHA, Intervener).

(Civ. 728.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Jan. 5, 1910.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 231*) — RESTRICTIVE COVENANTS—NOTICE—RECORDING.

Under Civ. Code, § 1213, providing that the recordation of a grant is notice to subsequent purchasers of its contents, a recital in a deed that "one of the conditions of this conveyance is that the use of firearms on said premises is and shall be forever prohibited, and that the said grantees agree, for and on behalf of themselves, their heirs and assigns, and all persons claiming through or under them, to observe and enforce this provision," was sufficiently clear to put a purchaser from the grantee on his guard as to the extent to which it affected the remaining lands of the original vendor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 513–539; Dec. Dig. § 231.*]

2. INJUNCTION (§ 62*)—PERSONAL COVENANTS—ENFORCEMENT.

A purely personal covenant, made between the vendor and vendee, a violation of which is shown to be injurious to the remaining property of the vendor, is enforceable by injunctional remedy against one having notice thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Cent. Dig. §§ 124–129; Dec. Dig. § 62.*]

3. INJUNCTION (§ 62*)—PERSONAL COVENANT—ENFORCEMENT.

Equity will, in a proper case, enforce a personal covenant or agreement relative to land as effectually as would a court of law had the covenant been clearly one running with the land.

4. GAME (§ 3*)—PRIVATE RIGHTS OF TAKING GAME—PROTECTION.

The law recognizes as property and entitled to protection an exclusive right to hunt on game preserves, and that the destruction or impairment of such privilege by the driving away of the birds and deterring their return constitutes an injury which cannot be estimated in money damages, and on account of which an injunction will lie.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Game, Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

5. COVENANTS (§ 49*)—USE OF PROPERTY—RIGHTS OF GRANTEE.

In an action to determine conflicting claims, where the only issue was as to defendant's right as grantor to enforce a restrictive covenant in a deed prohibiting the use of firearms on the premises, which covenant was solely for the benefit of defendant's remaining lands, one who in reliance on the covenant purchased a lot in the granted tract was not entitled to intervene, having no such interest in the covenant that he would either gain or lose by the judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Covenants, Dec. Dig. § 49.*]

6. COVENANTS (§ 1*)—VALIDITY—RESTRICTIVE COVENANTS.

A restrictive covenant in a deed, providing that the use of firearms on the premises shall be forever prohibited, is not void either as being unreasonable or in violation of the inherent right of the citizen to bear arms.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Covenants, Dec. Dig. § 1.*]

7. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 704*)—QUESTIONS PRESENTED—FINDINGS OF FACT.

Findings of fact supporting a judgment will be considered on appeal, even though one or more of them are found among the conclusions of law.

8. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 854*)—REVIEW—JUDGMENT.

A judgment, properly given, will not be reversed, though the reasons assigned therefor are not well founded.

Action by the Guaranty Realty Company (a corporation) against the Recreation Gun Club (a corporation), wherein Elon G. Galusha intervened. From the judgment, and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed, except as to intervener's costs.

Tanner, Taft & Odell and Anderson & Anderson, for appellant. Leon F. Moss, for respondent. W. A. Alderson and Elon G. Galusha, for respondent intervener.

ALLEN, P. J. Appeal by plaintiff from a judgment in favor of defendant and intervener, and from an order denying a new trial. Plaintiff's action was one to determine conflicting claims to a certain described 120 acres of land situate in Los Angeles county, Cal.; the complaint being in the usual form. Defendant, in addition to a specific denial of the allegations of the complaint, alleged that it is a corporation which was organized in 1884 under the laws of this state, the object thereof, as expressed in its articles of incorporation, being "for mutual recreation and pleasure by means of the rod and gun, and to hold real estate, and to preserve the game and fish of the state, and to that end enforce the fish and game laws of the state"; that shortly after the defendant's organization it acquired title to 340 acres of land in Los Angeles county, which tract comprised the land in controversy; that defendant ever since its acquisition has been in possession thereof, and in the use thereof consistent with the purposes of the corporate organization, except that in May, 1904, defendant sold and granted to A. R. Fraser and others a portion of said tract, comprising about 120 acres, and being the land described in the complaint; that at the time of said sale defendant had, at great expense, fitted up a clubhouse and made lasting and valuable improvements on said land owned by it, for the purpose of making it available and useful as a hunting and fishing preserve; that Fraser and others purchased the said portion described in the complaint for subdivision purposes, and it was agreed and understood at the time of said purchase that the purchaser should at once subdivide and sell the same in lots for building sites; that in the conveyance to said Fraser and others of the land so sold the following provision was inserted: "To have and to hold: All and singular the said premises, together with the appurtenances, unto the parties of the second part, and to their heirs and assigns forever; provided, that one of the conditions of this conveyance is that the use of firearms upon said premises is and shall be forever prohibited, and that the said grantees agree, for and on behalf of themselves, their heirs and assigns, and all persons claiming through or under them, to observe and enforce this provision." It is alleged that this provision was inserted to and intended to be a restriction upon the use of said lands granted for the benefit of the remaining lands owned and retained by defendant, and as an assurance that nothing should be permitted thereon which would interfere with the use and purpose of said remaining lands so retained and used for hunting and fishing purposes. That defendant had established ponds upon its said lands, and placed thereon and around large quantities of grain for feeding game birds and to fatten them and render them palatable, and that fowls resorted to said ponds and grounds for the purpose of feeding; that the habit of the game was, when disturbed upon said hunting preserve, to take flight across the lands proposed to be conveyed to Fraser and others towards the ocean; that to prevent the destruction of said game by poachers and others shooting and destroying said game in its flight from the preserve to the ocean and return, thereby interfering with the recreation, pleasure, and sport of the owners of the remaining lands and interfering with the object and purposes of the organization of the club and acquirement of said lands, was this provision and restriction inserted in the conveyance. Defendant disclaims any interest in the premises described in the complaint, other than the right of enforcing the restriction in said deed contained.

One Galusha, by a complaint in intervention filed by permission of the court, set up the ownership by him of one of the lots of the subdivision of the lands granted, and alleged that he made the purchase of said lot with the full knowledge of the restriction in the deed; that the same made his premises more valuable and desirable as a home, and was an inducement leading to its purchase, and that its enforcement was necessary to insure personal safety and full enjoyment of said premises. Issue was tendered by plaintiff to the complaint in intervention, and in the answer thereto it was alleged that plaintiff corporation acquired the lands described in the complaint of Fraser for subdivision purposes, as alleged, but without knowledge of the existence of said provision in the conveyance, except such notice as is implied from the recorded instrument.

The court upon the hearing of the cause found the allegations of the answer of the Recreation Gun Club to be true, and that the deed to Fraser and others was recorded in the public records of Los Angeles county on May 13, 1904; that said restriction in said deed was intended as a protection to lot owners in the tract of land, as well as a restriction upon the use of the premises sold, for the benefit of the remaining lands in the ownership of the defendant Recreation Gun Club, and for a protection of said defendant in the use and enjoyment of its remaining lands. The court also found the allegations of the complaint in intervention to be true, and by its judgment it was determined that the lands described in plaintiff's complaint are held by plaintiff subject and subordinate to the restrictive covenant contained in said deed, and that the intervener was entitled to an injunction restraining plaintiff from bringing any subsequent action to avoid said contract and covenant.

Counsel for all parties upon this appeal present the cause upon the theory that the character of the covenant contained in the conveyance to Fraser and others is determinative of the rights of the parties thereto. The trial court held the covenant to be one running with the land, and error on account of this is specified by appellant. Whether the covenant be one running with the land or one in gross appears to us of little materiality in determining the matters involved upon this appeal. Notice of the existence of the covenant was derived by the plaintiff from the recorded deed to Fraser and others. Section 1213, Civ. Code, prescribes that the recordation of a grant is notice to subsequent purchasers of its contents. The recital in the deed was sufficiently clear to convey the requisite information, and to put the plaintiff upon his guard to the extent to which it affected the remaining lands. Watson v. Sutro, 86 Cal. 522, 24 Pac. 172, 25 Pac. 64. Treating the covenant as one in gross, it is proper to apply the rule which binds the conscience of the vendee with notice of a purely personal covenant entered into between his vendor and the one from whom he obtains title, the effect of which, if disregarded, would be to materially injure the remaining property of the original vendor. Parker et al. v. Nightingale et al., 6 Allen (Mass.) 341, 83 Am. Dec. 632; De Gray v. Monmouth Beach, etc., Co., 50 N. J. Eq. 329, 24 Atl. 388. In the case last cited it is said that the question is not whether the covenant runs with the land, but whether a party shall be permitted to use the land in a manner inconsistent with the contract entered into by his vendor. This, of course, presupposes that such inconsistent use is made to appear as injurious to the party complaining. As said by our Supreme Court in Los Angeles Terminal Co. v. Muir, 136 Cal. 36, 68 Pac. 308: "As there is no personal contract relation between the parties to this action, the plaintiff is not entitled to relief against the defendant, unless the evidence shows with reasonable certainty that the use of the lot for ferry purposes would materially injure the remaining property of plaintiff." This language was used where a personal covenant was found to exist which did not purport upon its face to bind the successors and assigns of the vendee, as does the instrument under consideration here. The doctrine of the case, however, may be said to be that a purely personal covenant made between the vendor and vendee, a violation of which when shown to be injurious to the remaining property of the vendor, is enforceable by injunctional remedy; and this is reaffirmed in Hunt v. Jones, 149 Cal. 297, 86 Pac. 686, where it is said that the authorities sustain the proposition that, where a proper case is presented, equity will enforce a personal covenant or agreement relative to land as effectually as would a court of law had the covenant been clearly one running with the land. The court finds that a disregard of the covenant of the deed here being considered would greatly injure defendant in the use and enjoyment of its remaining lands, and the evidence in the record amply supports such finding. The law recognizes as property and entitled to protection an exclusive right to hunt upon game preserves (Ex parte Elam, 6 Cal. App. 238, 91

Pac. 811); also, that the destruction or impairment of such a hunting privilege, by the driving away of the birds and deterring their return, constitutes an injury which cannot be estimated in money damages, and on account of which an injunction will lie. Kellogg v. King, 114 Cal. 386, 46 Pac. 166, 55 Am. St. Rep. 74; Garcia v. Gunn, 119 Cal. 320, 51 Pac. 684. It follows, therefore, that as to such rights, and the use of property connected therewith, the same rules are applicable as to any other species of property used or intended for any other legitimate use. The conflicting claims to real property which were the subject of the action relate solely to the right of defendant to assert, if occasion requires, its rights under the clause in the Fraser deed. That covenant was not for the benefit of the lands granted, or for the protection of subsequent owners thereof, and the intervener has no such interest in it that he will either gain or lose by the direct and legal effect of the judgment. Horn v. Volcano Water Co., 13 Cal. 62, 73 Am. Dec. 569.

We are then presented with a case where a purchaser with notice of the covenant not only disregards the same by attempting to convey without reference thereto in subsequent deeds, but comes before a court of equity to obtain a decree the effect of which could only be, not only to sanction a violation of the contract, but to relieve the party from obligations imposed upon him and his property, without showing, or attempting to show, any reason therefor other than that a disregard of such covenant would be a benefit to complainant. We think there is no merit in the contention that the restriction and covenant is void as being either unreasonable or as in violation of the inherent right of the citizen to bear arms. As we have before said, the equitable right by this covenant granted applies only to instances or emergencies where the disregard of the covenant will work an injury to the remaining lands of defendant. Then, and then only, can such right be asserted, but that it could in such instances be invoked determines that a court of equity will not by its decree absolve the parties generally from the obligations imposed by the covenant. We do not consider that plaintiff has made out a case agreeable to equity.

The findings of fact support the judgment in defendant's favor, and such findings are to be considered, even though one or more of them are found among the conclusions of law; and the conclusions of law as to the character of the covenant in no wise affect the validity of the judgment, even though it be said the court erred in determining the covenant as one running with the land, for a judgment will not be reversed, if properly given, even though the reasons assigned therefor may not be well founded.

Notwithstanding the insufficiency of intervener's complaint and the evidence in support thereof to sustain a judgment in his favor, yet the record discloses that the judgment rendered included only such matters as were proper in determining and awarding to defendant its rights, other than the judgment for costs awarded intervener.

The judgment and order are therefore affirmed in all respects except as to the intervener's costs, and to that extent the same are reversed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; TAGGART, J.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Monroe, Judge.

Action by the McCarthy Company against Frank Moir and wife. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Clifton Axtell and Edw. L. Payne, for appellant. Edgar E. Lefebvre, for respondents.

SHAW, J. Action to quiet title. On January 9, 1904, one Harvey Rice, as owner, made a contract to sell to defendant Frank Moir certain real estate situate in Los Angeles county, Cal., the description of which and consideration therefor, as inserted in the contract, being as follows: "Lots No. 19 & 20 of the proposed map of the Rice Tract. Located on the S. W. corner of South Main and Rice Av's, being 328.61 feet west of Main St. Located on the S. West corner of Rice and Burnett Av's, being 100 ft. front on Burnett Ave. running back 128.61 ft. west. Said tract of land above described having been sold to said Frank Moir this day for the sum of forty-five hundred dollars, ——— of the United States of America, the balance to be paid as follows: Two hundred ($200) dollars every 6 months on or before, with interest at 9 per cent. per annum, payable at office of Grider & Hamilton, city of Los Angeles." Moir assigned the contract to his wife, Lizzie Moir. Rice did not subdivide the property, but thereafter conveyed the entire tract, including the parcels of land sold to Moir, to the plaintiff, subject, however, to the rights and interest of Moir under said contract. Upon acquiring the property, plaintiff proceeded to subdivide and plat the same, locating upon the ground the lots designated as "No. 19 & 20 of the proposed map of the Rice tract," as called for in said contract, save and except that no street was laid out or platted to represent Burnett avenue as called for in the contract. According to the map of the subdivision, the land which defendants claim should have constituted the street known as Burnett avenue was delineated thereon as lot 22 and 10 feet off the west side of lot 23.

The controversy involves the right of defendants to an easement over the land designated as lot 22 and 10 feet off the west side of lot 23. The court found that at the time of plaintiff's purchase the contract was on record, and that plaintiff took the property subject to the contract and with notice of the existence of said street; that at the time of the execution of the contract to Moir there were improvements upon the property consisting of a dwelling house constructed to front on the street called Burnett avenue; and that a street had been laid out in front of said property 50 feet wide, occupying what is now shown on said map of record as lot 22 and the west 10 feet of lot 23 of said tract. As a conclusion of law the court found plaintiff to be the owner of lots 19 and 20, in block A, of the subdivision so laid out by plaintiff, subject, however, to the terms and conditions of the contract made between Rice and defendant Frank Moir, and that plaintiff was the owner of lots 22 and 23, in said block A, subject to the right of defendants to an easement or right of way for street purposes over and across the same, and gave judgment accordingly. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment and an order denying its motion for a new trial.

It is insisted that the finding to the effect that at the time of the execution of the contract a street 50 feet in width had been laid out in front of the property to represent Burnett avenue is unsupported by the evidence. While the evidence is not as full as it might be, nevertheless it tends to support the finding, and, being uncontradicted, it must be deemed sufficient. Moir testifies that at the time he took possession a street was laid out on the side of the property, which he used and in which a water pipe was laid leading to the house which fronted upon this street. Another witness testified that he made two surveys of the property, the first being made about six months after the contract of purchase was made, at which time he found a street laid out to the east of the property and marked by stakes. It also appears that this street as marked upon the ground was 50 feet in width. There is no reason for assuming that Moir in his testimony referred, as contended by appellant, to Rice street, as to which there was no controversy.

Appellant also attacks the finding to the effect that plaintiff purchased with notice of the existence of the street. This contention is fully answered by the fact that the contract described the lots as "fronting one hundred feet on Burnett avenue," and that a street 50 feet in width had actually been laid out and marked upon the ground by stakes and corresponded with the street upon which the contract described the lots as fronting 100 feet. The contract afforded notice to appellant that the sale was made to Moir upon the representation of the seller that the lots were bounded on the east by a street the exact location and width of which was marked upon the ground. See Breed et al. v. Cunningham, 2 Cal. 361, where it is said: "Where lots are sold as fronting on, or bounded by, a certain space, designated in the conveyance as a street, the use of such space as a street passes, as appurtenant to the grant," etc. See, also, Stone v. Brooks, 35 Cal. 489; Archer v. Salinas City, 93 Cal. 43, 28 Pac. 839, 16 L. R. A. 145. The lots were sold according to the proposed map of the subdivision to be made of the tract, which in the minds of the parties contemplated the location of streets on both the east and north boundary lines of the lots, of which fact the court, upon sufficient evidence, found that plaintiff had notice. The rights of defendant Lizzie Moir do not rest in parol, nor did they have their origin in mere parol, as suggested by appellant. The easement is appurtenant to lots 19 and 20 and described in the contract as having a frontage of 100 feet on Burnett avenue. Wagner v. Hanna, 38 Cal. 111, 99 Am. Dec. 354.

There was no error in the court's ruling under which evidence was admitted as to the acts of Rice, the original owner, in locating the buildings and improvements upon the lots with reference to the proposed street called Burnett avenue. Myers v. Kenyon, 7 Cal. App. 112, 93 Pac. 888. It was a circumstance not only tending in some degree to corroborate the location of a street upon which the house and other improvements fronted, but also a circumstance which, taken in connection with the contract, was calculated to give notice to defendant of the existence of such street. Conceding that questions as to the interior arrangement of the house were incompetent by reason of the same being immaterial, it is apparent that the rights of plaintiff were not prejudiced by the evidence thus elicited.

We find no prejudicial error, and the judgment and order are affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Monroe, Judge.

Action by Mary Jane Bell, administratrix, with the will annexed of the estate of Solomon Bell, deceased, against Caroline Germain and others. From a judgment for defendants and from an order denying motion for new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Will D. Gould, for appellant. Denis & Loewenthal, Ward Chapman, and Borden & Carhart, for respondents.

TAGGART, J. Action to quiet title. Decree quieting title of defendants and awarding them costs. Plaintiff appeals from judgment and order denying her motion for new trial.

Plaintiff claims to own a lot 14 feet wide abutting on Los Angeles street in the city of Los Angeles the adjoining property on the north side belonging to the defendants Henderson and that on the south side to the defendants representing the estate of Eugene Germain, deceased. Eugene Germain, who has died since the appeal was taken, at the time of the commencement of the action, in addition to being in possession of the property, the title to which was vested in him, was also in possession of the 14-foot lot under a lease made to him by plaintiff's testator, which lease by its terms would not expire until more than a year after the date of the judgment entered in the case. The common source of title of all the parties is the decree of distribution entered in the estate of Jacob Bell, deceased, December 16, 1875. By partition and mesne conveyances the defendants Henderson and Germain acquired the respective properties owned by them in the years 1882 and 1883, while plaintiff's testator acquired the 14 feet claimed by the original decree of partition, he being one of the distributees in the estate named.

In the year 1884 the defendant Henderson caused to be erected on her property a 2-story brick building, the south wall of which was placed along the division line between her property and the 14 feet claimed by plaintiff, as to which the trial court found: That the said "south wall, as near as can now be determined * * * did not, and does not, encroach upon the said property so allotted to said Solomon Bell, if at all, to exceed seven one-hundredths (7-100) of a foot along the Los Angeles street front, and not to exceed twelve one-hundredths (12-100) of a foot along its easterly line." As to the Germain property the court found: "In the year 1889, the said Eugene Germain caused a large three-story and basement brick building to be erected upon his property, and caused the north wall of his said brick building to be built and placed along the division line between his said property and the said property allotted to said Solomon Bell as near as can now be determined, but at all events the said north wall did not, and does not, encroach upon the property so allotted to Solomon Bell, if at all, to exceed a distance of fifty one-hundredths (50-100) of a foot, on Los Angeles street front, and not to exceed sixty-two one-hundredth (62-100) of a foot at the rear of said wall." It is also found that the walls of these buildings remained, as so erected, up to the time of the death of Solomon Bell in 1902, and that he knew of their being so located. It is also specifically found that both the defendants for a period of 15 years prior to the death of Solomon Bell paid all the taxes on their respective properties as so occupied, and that such occupation was open, notorious, exclusive, and under a claim of right; also, that the cause of action against each of said defendants is barred by the statute of limitations; also, that the northerly line of the Germain building and the southerly line of the Henderson building have been for more than fifteen years last past continuously, and now are, the division lines established between the properties of said defendants respectively and the property claimed by plaintiff.

The judgment is in accordance with these findings, which are fully supported by the evidence, except it be that the payments of taxes were not continuously made for fifteen years, as may be implied in the finding of adverse possession, when taken in connection with the finding that the taxes were all paid. There is, however, evidence sufficient to sustain a finding that the defendants, and each of them, paid the taxes for a period in excess of five years continuously while occupying their respective properties to the extreme lines of their respective buildings. The payment of the taxes on the same property by plaintiff, who was out of possession, would not defeat the rights of the defendants under the circumstances of this case. Owsley v. Matson, 104 Pac. 985. This finding alone is sufficient to support the judgment, rendering it unnecessary to consider any other insufficiency of the testimony. The contention that defendant Germain's right was defeated by the application of the rule that, being the tenant of plaintiff's testator, he was estopped to deny his landlord's title, has no application to the facts of this case.

Finding 19, complained of as awarding to defendant Germain that which is not claimed by his answer, is not open to that criticism. This finding relates to the issue of possession under the lease from Solomon Bell to Eugene Germain which plaintiff, in effect, prays to have forfeited by a decree quieting her title. The finding recognizes the right of Germain to hold possession of the 14-foot strip under the lease until the expiration of the term thereof, subject to termination under the terms of the lease.

It is apparent that counsel for appellant has been somewhat misled in the preparation of his brief by the repeated requests of the Supreme Court and this court for brevity and succinctness in the presentation of cases. While "simplicity of statement" in the brief of counsel has met, and always will meet, with the approval of these courts, the effort in this direction should not go so far as to eliminate or exclude all specification or mention of the errors upon which an appellant relies for a reversal. The simplicity of presentation desired is that which avoids prolixity, verbosity and repetition; which omits theoretical disquisitions on abstract principles of law, needless presentation of questions of fact as to which the action of the trial court is final, the citation of innumerable authorities indicative of an examination of the subject which has never passed the digest stage, etc. A brief is supposed to be the vehicle of counsel to convey to the court the essential facts of his client's case, a statement of the questions of law involved, the law he would have applied, and the application he desires made of it by the court. When the brief is presented to an appellate court it should point out to that court which of the many objections and exceptions usually found in the transcript it is the wish of appellant to have the court review. It must be assumed for this purpose that the knowledge of the court does not include the facts of the particular case, or the special errors of the trial court which appellant relies upon to overturn the judgment or order. These should be pointed out clearly, even at the hazard of encroaching upon the ideal simplicity of statement which the appellate courts have approved. Voluminous and unnecessarily padded briefs are discouraged by the courts in order that they may dispatch business. When briefs fail altogether to present the matters mentioned, the court must elect between acting as counsel for the appellant, or passing upon only such questions as are sufficiently presented for consideration by the brief, and in accomplishing the purpose mentioned, to wit, the dispatch of business, the latter course has generally been adopted.

Judgment and order affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frederick W. Houser, Judge.

Action by Matthew Baines against E. S. Shank. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Hugh J. Crawford, for appellant. John W. Shenk and E. R. Young, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. Appellant by his complaint, which contained three counts, alleged in the first the purchase by him of a certain 100-acre tract of land from defendant, upon the purchase of which he had paid $2,500; that the contract of purchase was evidenced by a receipt which upon its face stated that the money was received as "part and first payment on 100 acres of land at Delhi, Merced Co., Cal., being lots 19, 20, 22," etc., "of Sec. 8, Twp. 6 S., R. 11 E., M. D. B. & M., price $5,000; balance to be secured by two notes and mortgage, payable in equal installments and due on or before two and three years, at 7% interest; interest payable semiannually." That the lots designated were subdivisions delineated upon a map made under defendant's supervision, and with reference to which map the purchase was made; that such map was not recorded at the date of such alleged purchase and payment of money; that plaintiff ascertained after such contract was made the nonrecordation of said map. In his second cause of action, after alleging the contract and purchase, plaintiff alleges that the sum of $2,500 was deposited with defendant to be returned if a good and sufficient deed were not delivered within a few days; that plaintiff has always been ready and willing to perform his part of the agreement; that he has demanded performance upon the part of defendant, and defendant has made default in the delivery of such deed. By the third cause of action, after setting forth the contract and purchase, plaintiff alleges that the same was procured by fraud in that defendant represented the land had sufficient water for irrigation, when in truth and in fact it had none; and he seeks by this action to recover the $2,500 paid, with interest thereon from the time of payment. The answer of defendant denied all of the allegations of the complaint material in stating the cause of action, and upon the trial the court found in favor of defendant upon all of the issues, and rendered judgment accordingly, from which plaintiff appeals.

It is appellant's contention upon this appeal that the evidence is insufficient to support the findings. The transcript, prepared and filed under what is known as the alternative method of appeal, does not disclose any specifications of error, or specifications wherein any particular finding is unsupported; but, without reference to this defect, an examination of the transcript of the stenographic notes of the testimony develops that there is testimony in the record tending to support each and every finding of the court.

The first cause of action is based upon the theory that a sale of any lot of a subdivision made in violation of the act of March 15, 1907 (Laws 1907, p. 290), renders the sale void. This law has never received a construction by the Supreme Court of this state upon the point here involved, but a similar statute in various other states has received a construction by the Supreme Courts of those states, in which it has been uniformly held that the omission to record the map of a subdivision does not render the sale void as between the parties. It is unnecessary for us, as it was unnecessary for the Supreme Court of this state in Bentley v. Hurlburt, 153 Cal. 796, 96 Pac. 890, to determine this precise question. The court finds here that it was not true, at the time said contract was entered into, nor at any other time, that defendant represented or pretended to plaintiff that said map had been recorded; that defendant did not at any time represent or pretend to plaintiff that said map was a full, true, and complete map of the lands described in said complaint as required by law; that plaintiff knew at the time of the purchase that the map had not been recorded. The effect of this finding can only be that the court found that the sale was not made with reference to the map. There is no specific reference to the map in the written contract, and there is evidence to show that this map played no part in the transaction, and was not relied upon by either party, but, on the contrary, that the purchase was made after a visit to the land and an inspection and examination as to its exterior boundaries and the location stakes marking the same. The statute upon which plaintiff relies prohibits the sale or offering by reference to maps, which can only be construed as intending to include sales wherein the property was designated as being delineated upon a certain map to which reference was made in the contract. There is ample evidence in the record to sustain the finding of the court that plaintiff had full knowledge of the fact that a certain blue print, upon which was delineated the numbered lots mentioned in the contract, and which was shown him before the purchase, was not and did not purport to be a copy of any recorded map, nor of any map actually prepared or intended for use, but was in fact a preliminary survey, and that the recordation of a map of said subdivision was not intended to be made until after certain rights of way for road purposes had been adjusted between defendant and adjoining proprietors.

It is in evidence, and the court finds, that the reason why the execution of the deed to plaintiff was deferred was by reason of an agreement that the same should be deferred until such time as the rights of way should be secured, to the end that a map might be recorded which would correctly delineate the lots of the tract. It is in evidence that defendant offered to convey by metes and by bounds, so as to include the actual premises sold.

There is no evidence in the record tending to support the second and third causes of action, and the court properly found against plaintiff upon all of these matters.

The judgment has support from the findings, and the evidence is sufficient as a basis for each finding. We find no prejudicial error in the record, and the judgment is therefore affirmed.

HOLINESS CHURCH OF SAN JOSE v. METROPOLITAN CHURCH ASS'N et al.

(Civ. 694.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. Jan. 17, 1910.)

1. JUDGMENT (§ 142*)—DEFAULT JUDGMENT—RIGHT TO SET ASIDE.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, providing that, when the summons has not been personally served on defendant, the court may allow him at any time within a year after judgment to answer to the merits, a defendant not personally served with summons is entitled as a matter of right to have the default judgment against him set aside when he applies therefor within the statutory time.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 253; Dec. Dig. § 142.*]

2. CORPORATIONS (§ 668*)—CIVIL ACTIONS—SERVICE OF PROCESS—CONSENT TO SERVICE ON SECRETARY OF STATE.

Under Civ. Code, § 405, requiring every foreign corporation to designate a resident on whom process may be served, and providing where no such person is designated a service on the Secretary of State is sufficient, a foreign corporation doing business in the state without designating a resident on whom process may be served consents to service on it by service on the Secretary of State, and such service gives the court jurisdiction to render judgment against it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 2619; Dec. Dig. § 668.*]

3. PROCESS (§ 48*)—"PERSONAL SERVICE."

The expression "personal service" of process, generally speaking, means the actual delivery of the process to defendant in person.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Process, Cent. Dig. § 46; Dec. Dig. § 48.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 6, p. 5363.]

4. CORPORATIONS (§ 668*)—SERVICE OF PROCESS—DISTINCTION BETWEEN PERSONAL AND CONSTRUCTIVE SERVICE.

Personal service is made on a foreign or domestic corporation by delivery, as authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 411, of a copy of the summons, together with a copy of the complaint, on designated officers, and personal service is made on a foreign corporation by service on the resident designated, as required by Civ. Code, § 405, on whom process may be served; but other modes of service on corporations in the state, including service on the Secretary of State in an action against a foreign corporation which has not designated a resident on whom process may be served, are constructive.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 2624; Dec. Dig. § 668.*]

5. CORPORATIONS (§ 668*)—SERVICE OF PROCESS—NOTICE OF SERVICE ON SECRETARY OF STATE.

Civ. Code, § 405, requiring every foreign corporation to designate a resident on whom process may be served and in default of such designation a service on the Secretary of State is sufficient, does not require the Secretary of State on whom process is served to notify the foreign corporation failing to designate a resident on whom process may be served of the pendency of the action, or that through him the corporation has been regularly served with process.

6. JUDGMENT (§ 142*)—DEFAULT JUDGMENT—CONSTRUCTIVE SERVICE OF PROCESS.

Where process, in an action against a foreign corporation which had not designated a resident on whom process might be served as required by Civ. Code, § 405, was served on the Secretary of State, the service was constructive within Code Civ. Proc. § 473, providing that when summons has not been personally served the court may allow defendant at any time within a year after the judgment to answer to the merits.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; M. H. Hyland, Judge.

Action by the Holiness Church of San Jose against the Metropolitan Church Association and others. From an order refusing to set aside a default judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed.

E. M. Rosenthal and O. D. Richardson, for appellants. Charles W. Slack and Henry French, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from an order refusing to set aside a default judgment.

On June 14, 1906, respondent commenced an action against the Metropolitan Church Association, a foreign corporation, and others, for the purpose of obtaining a judgment decreeing that respondent is the owner of certain described real property in Santa Clara county, and that the appellant Metropolitan Church Association is the holder of the title thereto in trust for the respondent. The summons, which was duly issued on the day the suit was commenced, was, according to the return thereon, served on March 16, 1908, by the sheriff of Sacramento county on said appellant, by delivering a copy thereof, attached to a copy of the complaint, to the Secretary of State. On June 24th following (the appellant in the meantime not having appeared or answered) a judgment of default was entered against it in favor of the respondent. The next day the appellant duly made a motion to open the default against it, and to be permitted to answer to the merits of the action. The affidavit filed by the appellant in support of this motion, which is undisputed, states that said corporation was never aware or had any knowledge of any attempted substituted service upon it through the Secretary of State of California until the day following the entry of the judgment, and said appellant did thereupon immediately, and has continued since, to take all available, prompt, and necessary steps to have this default and judgment against it set aside.

The ground of the motion is that the summons was not personally served upon the appellant, and it is based on that part of section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure which reads as follows: "When from any cause the summons in an action has not been personally served on the defendant, the court may allow, on such terms as may be just, such defendant or his legal representative, at any time within one year after the rendition of any judgment in such action, to answer to the merits of the original action." The motion here was made immediately after the entry of judgment, and if the service of the summons in the case may be regarded as constructive and not personal, then the appellant, without any showing of mistake, surprise, inadvertence, or excusable neglect, was entitled as a matter of absolute right to have the judgment vacated and set aside, and the court was without any discretion in the premises. Gray v. Lawlor, 151 Cal. 352, 90 Pac. 691; Zobel v. Zobel, 151 Cal. 98, 90 Pac. 191; Hoffman v. Superior Court, 151 Cal. 386, 90 Pac. 939.

But respondent contends that appellant was personally served. It argues that foreign corporations doing business in this state are subject to every constitutional condition imposed upon them by the state, and that when the appellant corporation had been engaged in business here for a period of 40 days without having designated a person residing within the state, on whom process might be served, under section 405 of the Civil Code, as the section then read, it must be deemed to have assented to such service being made upon the Secretary of State as freely as though it had specially authorized it, and that therefore (if we follow the argument) the service of summons here was personal. Under the circumstances just related, the appellant must be deemed to have consented to the service upon it through the Secretary of State, and to the jurisdiction of the court to render judgment against it thereon; but it does not follow that the service was personal. The expression "personal service," generally speaking, means the actual delivery of the process to the defendant in person (First Nat. Bank of Casselton v. Holmes, 12 N. D. 38, 94 N. W. 764; Moyer v. Cook, 12 Wis. 335; McKenna v. State Ins. Co., 35 N. W. 519, 73 Iowa, 453); and such service, under section 411, subds. 1 and 2, Code Civ. Proc., is made upon a corporation, domestic or foreign, by delivering a copy of the summons, together with a copy of the complaint, on certain designated officers thereof, or, if upon a foreign corporation under section 405 of the Civil Code, by delivering copies of the complaint and summons to a person resident within the state designated for that purpose by such corporation. Other modes of service on corporations in this state, including the one in question, must, we believe, be regarded as constructive. Under section 405 of the Civil Code the Secretary of State is not obliged, nor is it his duty, to notify the corporation of the pendency of the action, nor that through him it has been regularly served with process; and, in the absence of a clear intention by the Legislature to that effect, such service cannot be deemed personal or the equivalent of personal service.

Here, according to the affidavit and the proposed verified answer, the appellant knew nothing of the pendency of the action until after the entry of judgment, divesting it of the legal and equitable title to the land which stood of record in its name. The portion of section 473 relied upon by appellant was intended to cover just such cases as this one. If the Legislature had intended that the delivery of process to the Secretary of State should be regarded as tantamount to personal service upon the corporation as distinguished from constructive service, doubtless it would have expressly so declared, as is done, we believe, in some states, and as is the case in this state in reference to foreign fire insurance companies doing business here. Section 616, Pol. Code.

The appellant was not personally served with summons, and, having made its motion within due time, was entitled, as contemplated by the third clause of said section 473, to be relieved from the judgment, and, compliance being made with the terms of said section 405, Civ. Code—which seems to be made necessary by the section following it—to file its answer, and to have a trial of the cause upon the merits.

The order appealed from is reversed.

MORGAN v. J. W. ROBINSON CO.

(L. A. 2,415.)

1. Appeal and Error (§ 933*)—Order Granting New Trial—Review.

An order granting a new trial generally will be affirmed on appeal, if it could properly be granted on any of the grounds assigned.

2. Appeal and Error (§ 856*)—Order Granting New Trial—Review—Grounds.

Though an order granting a new trial declared that the motion was granted for one or more reasons only, the appellate court may consider any other assignment on which the motion should have been granted, to sustain the order, subject to the limitation that the court may limit its order granting the motion so as to exclude as a ground for its action the insufficiency of the evidence, provided the court so declares in the order itself.

3. Appeal and Error (§ 717*)—Order Granting New Trial — Review — Opinion of Trial Court.

On review of an order granting a new trial, the appellate court could not notice the opinion of the trial court, whether authenticated as a part of the bill of exceptions or not, but must look to the bill of exceptions and to the order granting the motion, and, if it might properly have been granted on the ground that the evidence on any material issue was not sufficient to sustain the verdict, the order must be affirmed.

4. New Trial (§ 72*)—Weight of Evidence—Conflicting Evidence.

A trial court, if satisfied that the verdict is against the weight of the evidence, should grant a new trial, though on the same conflict the appellate court would be bound by the verdict.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 146–148; Dec. Dig. § 72.*]

5. Appeal and Error (§ 933*)—Order Granting New Trial—Review—Presumptions.

On appeal from an order granting a new trial after verdict based on conflicting evidence, the appellate court must presume, in support of the order, that the trial judge believed the verdict contrary to the weight of the evidence, and based the order on such belief.

6. Master and Servant (§ 226*)—Injuries to Servant—Assumed Risk—Negligence.

Plaintiff, a carpenter, employed to do certain work in an elevator shaft, was injured by the sudden operation of the elevator by another of defendant's servants without warning. Plaintiff and the elevator man had agreed that, before the elevator was moved, the operator would call out to plaintiff, and should not move the elevator until answered, "All right." He did move it without calling out and plaintiff was injured. Held that, though plaintiff assumed the risk of injury involved in working in the shaft, he did not assume the risk of the negligent use of the elevator by defendant, under the rule that an employé by voluntarily putting himself in a place of danger does not thereby necessarily assume the risk of injury from his employer's want of care.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 659–667; Dec. Dig. § 226.*]

7. Master and Servant (§ 183*)—Injuries to Servant—"Fellow Servants."

A carpenter engaged in the construction of a building and a man operating a freight elevator in a retail store are engaged in different departments of labor, and are not "fellow servants," under Civ. Code, § 1970, as amended by St. 1907, c. 97, limiting the fellow-servant rule to cases of servants of the same master engaged in the same department of labor.

8. Master and Servant (§ 137*)—Injuries to Servants—Negligence.

Where plaintiff, before entering an elevator shaft in defendant's building to do certain carpenter work, agreed with the elevator operator that he should not move the elevator without warning, nor until he had received plaintiff's reply "All right," the operator's movement of the elevator without such warning, resulting in plaintiff's injury, constituted actionable negligence.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Monroe, Judge.

Action by Robert F. Morgan against the J. W. Robinson Company. From an order granting defendant a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Charles Lantz, Ernest E. Wood, and Walton J. Wood, for appellant. Hunsaker & Britt and Hamilton A. Bauer, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. This is an action to recover damages for personal injuries. The J. W. Robinson Company was conducting a department store in a building situate on Broadway street in the city of Los Angeles. During the year 1906 it commenced the construction of a second building to adjoin the rear of the one already occupied by it, with the purpose of connecting the two. The work was done under a contract with one Low, who agreed, for a commission on the cost of labor and materials, to supervise the construction and attend to the buying of materials and the hiring of labor necessary in the construction of said new building by the Robinson Company. Morgan, the plaintiff herein, was employed by Low as a carpenter, and was engaged in work under Low's direction for a number of months. At the rear of the old building there was a freight elevator inclosed in a brick shaft. In the course of the construction of the new building it became necessary to enter said shaft for the purpose of doing certain carpenter work in connection with the bridging between the floors of the two buildings. Morgan and another carpenter named Patchen were directed by the foreman to drive a hole into the elevator shaft and do this work. They had been engaged in work inside the shaft for two or three days when Morgan received the injury upon which this action is based. Connected with the elevator were heavy metal counterweights which moved up or down in the direction opposite to that taken by the elevator. Morgan and Patchen were at work preparing wooden forms or moulds to hold the concrete which was to be put around a steel beam which went through the shaft. Morgan was seated upon this beam, which was in close proximity to the line of movement of the counterweights. The elevator had been at a standstill at the next floor above the carpenters. The operator started the elevator upward, whereupon the weights descended and struck Morgan, inflicting upon him the injuries complained of. The trial resulted in a verdict in his favor for $5,000. A motion for new trial was interposed by the defendant, and this motion was granted by the court. This appeal is by the plaintiff from the order granting the defendant's motion for a new trial.

The theory of the plaintiff was that when he and Patchen commenced to work in the shaft, they had made an agreement or come to an understanding with Pfaeffle, the elevator operator, to the effect that Pfaeffle should give warning by shouting to them before starting his elevator, and that he had followed this course during the two or three days preceding the accident. On the occasion of plaintiff's injury, however, no such warning had been given, and, in consequence, Morgan had failed to put himself in a position of safety and had been struck by the descending weights. The defendant, on the other hand, contended that explicit instructions had been given to the elevator operator to the effect that the elevator was not to be operated while the carpenters were at work in the shaft, and that Morgan and Patchen had directed Pfaeffle to run his elevator in disregard of these instructions, which had been brought to their notice, stating that there was no danger, and that they would not interfere with the elevator. The motion for new trial was based on various grounds, including the insufficiency of the evidence. The order granting the new trial was general in its terms. It stated merely that defendant's motion for new trial "is ordered to be and the same is hereby granted."

There can be no question, under the settled rule of this court, that where an order granting a new trial is thus general in its terms, it will be affirmed if it could properly have been granted on any of the grounds assigned. White v. Merrill, 82 Cal. 14, 22 Pac. 1129; Kauffman v. Maier, 94 Cal. 269, 29 Pac. 481, 18 L. R. A. 124; Newman v. Overland Pac. Ry. Co., 132 Cal. 73, 64 Pac. 110; Ben Lomond Wine Co. v. Sladky, 141 Cal. 619, 75 Pac. 332; Thompson v. Cal. Cons. Co., 148 Cal. 35, 82 Pac. 367; Wendling Lumber Co. v. Glenwood Lumber Co., 153 Cal. 411, 95 Pac. 1029. Even though the order declare in terms that the motion is granted for one or more reasons only, the appellate court is not precluded from considering any other assignment upon which the motion should have been granted. Kauffman v. Maier, supra. This rule is subject to the one limitation that the trial court may limit its order granting the motion so as to exclude, as a ground for its action, the insufficiency of the evidence (Weisser v. S. P. Ry. Co., 148 Cal. 426, 83 Pac. 439), but such exclusion, to be effectual, must be declared in the order itself. Weisser v. S. P. Co., supra; Ben Lomond Wine Co. v. Sladky, supra; Newman v. Overland Pac. Ry. Co., supra.

In the case at bar the transcript contains what purports to be a copy of the opinion of the court in granting the motion, and this opinion places the order solely upon a supposed error of the trial court in instructing the jury. It expressly declares the concurrence of the learned judge in the findings of the jury on disputed issues of fact. This opinion is not included in the bill of exceptions and is no part of the record, but even though it had been duly authenticated, it could not, under the authorities already cited, be considered for any purpose on this appeal. There is, therefore, no merit in the appellant's contention that we are here to treat that opinion as declaring the views of the trial judge on the question of the sufficiency of the evidence. We must look solely to the bill of exceptions and to the order granting a new trial, and if that order might properly have been granted upon the ground that the evidence on any material issue was not sufficient to sustain the verdict, the order must be affirmed.

On the question whether or not Morgan was informed when he went to work that the elevator operator had been directed not to run the elevator during the time the work was in progress, and had in the face of that information directed the operator to go ahead and run the elevator nevertheless, there is a clear conflict of evidence. The operator himself testified that the facts were as contended by defendant, whereas Morgan and Patchen testified to the contrary. While an appellate court will not review a finding or a verdict where the evidence shows a substantial conflict, the trial court is guided by very different considerations. Notwithstanding such conflict, the court below, if satisfied that the verdict is against the weight of the evidence, may, indeed should, grant a new trial, although upon the same conflict the appellate court would be bound by the verdict. Estate of Martin, 113 Cal. 479, 45 Pac. 813; Drathman v. Cohen, 139 Cal. 310, 73 Pac. 181. We must, therefore, in support of the order, assume that the judge below believed the verdict of the jury to be contrary to the weight of the evidence on this issue, and based the order on this belief. We cannot say, on the record before us, that this conclusion involved an abuse of discretion. The appellant does not question the correctness of the instruction which told the jury that if the facts were as testified to by Pfaeffle, plaintiff's conduct amounted to an assumption of the risk of injury resulting from the running of the elevator, and we have no doubt that it was correct as matter of law.

Inasmuch, however, as the case must be tried anew, it will be well to consider whether the court was in fact in error in giving the instruction which was treated by it in its opinion as furnishing a ground for granting the motion. That instruction reads as follows: "The plaintiff when he was injured was engaged in a dangerous undertaking, and he knew it was dangerous when he undertook it. The elevator man knew that the plaintiff was at dangerous work in the elevator shaft. Now, if nothing else was said and no other instructions were given by their superiors, and the plaintiff and the elevator man agreed that before the elevator was moved the elevator man would call out to the plaintiff and his associate and that he would not move it until they answered, 'All right,' and he did move it without calling out, and the plaintiff was injured by reason of such failure, then the plaintiff is entitled to recover."

If we could look to the opinion of the learned judge below, it would appear that he came to the conclusion that, under the facts supposed, the plaintiff assumed the risk of just such an occurrence as the one that caused his injury. It is now urged by respondent that the order appealed from should be affirmed for this reason. We think, however, that such a holding would involve an unwarrantable extension of the doctrine of assumption of risk. If all the circumstances—including the location of the plaintiff, the condition and method of operation of the elevator, and the previous relations between the plaintiff and Pfaeffle—were such as to impose upon Pfaeffle, as an "ordinarily prudent man," the duty of giving warning before starting the elevator, then his failure to give warning was negligence. That the plaintiff, by going into the shaft to work, assumed all risks naturally and obviously incident to the physical situation is clear. It is apparent that there must be a certain degree of danger involved in working in a shaft within which an elevator is being operated. That danger plaintiff was aware of, and it was assumed by him. But he was not bound to assume the risk which would result from the negligent use by defendant of the instrumentalities used in the place of work, and his testimony that he "took the chance" is not to be interpreted to mean that he assumed the risk of such negligence. The authorities seem clear to the effect that an employé voluntarily putting himself in a place of danger does not thereby necessarily assume the risk of injury from the want of care of his employer. Texas, etc., R. R. Co. v. Kelly, 98 Tex. 123, 80 S. W. 79; Schulz v. Chicago, etc., Ry. Co., 57 Minn. 271, 59 N. W. 192; Malcolm v. Fuller, 152 Mass. 160, 25 N. E. 83; Texas Mex. Ry. Co. v. Higgins, 44 Tex. Civ. App. 523, 99 S. W. 200; Vindicator Cons. G. M. Co. v. Firstbrook, 36 Colo. 498, 83 Pac. 313; Ill. Steel Co. v. Ziemkowski, 220 Ill. 324, 77 N. E. 190, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1161; Moran v. Harris, 63 Iowa, 390, 19 N. W. 278. In Texas Mex. Ry. Co. v. Higgins, supra, the rule is thus stated: "The risk assumed by a servant as incident to his employment precludes negligence of the master which adds to or augments the risk, unless such negligence and the superadded danger incident thereto were known to the employé, or he had such facts in mind as charged him with such knowledge. He has the right to presume and act upon the presumption that the master will exercise ordinary care in the conduct of his business to prevent anything being done which will increase the danger incident to his employment." Applying the doctrine to the facts of this case, the plaintiff did not assume the risk that he would be injured by Pfaeffle's negligent management of the elevator, unless he had reason to anticipate such negligence. Whether Pfaeffle was negligent, whether his negligence caused plaintiff's injury, and whether plaintiff was bound to foresee the likelihood that such negligence would occur, were all questions of fact, which might, on this record, have been found in favor of plaintiff. If so found, the defense of assumption of risk would have been negatived.

It is urged, however, that if the liability of defendant is to be rested on the negligence of Pfaeffle, the plaintiff is precluded from recovery by the fact that he and Pfaeffle were fellow servants. Such was the holding in Mann v. O'Sullivan, 126 Cal. 61, 58 Pac. 375, 77 Am. St. Rep. 149, a case somewhat similar to the one at bar. But since the decision in the case just cited section 1970 of the Civil Code has been amended. St. 1907, p. 119. The accident to Morgan occurred after the amending statute had taken effect. As the law now reads, the exemption of an employer from liability for injuries sustained by a servant through the negligence of a fellow servant is limited by the proviso that liability shall exist when the injury results "from the wrongful act, neglect or default of a co-employé engaged in another department of labor from that of the employé injured." We need not here undertake to define with precision the term "department of labor." Whatever may be the exact meaning of the phrase, it can require no argument to show that a carpenter occupied in the construction of a building and a man operating a freight elevator used in a retail store are engaged in different "departments of labor." From these views it follows that the mere fact that Morgan went to work in the elevator shaft, knowing that there was an element of danger in so working, did not necessitate the conclusion that he thereby assumed the risk of any injury that might be sustained by him.

While the standard of care required under given circumstances is ordinarily a question of fact, and one for the determination of the jury, we should not, if this were the only question in the case, be inclined to hold that the court erred in declaring in the instruction quoted, that on the facts supposed, plaintiff was entitled to recover. Where the facts are such that the only reasonable inference is that of want of care, the court may properly charge that negligence is shown as matter of law. We think that the record before us leaves no room for doubt that Pfaeffle showed a lack of due care if, after having agreed with plaintiff to give warning before starting his elevator, he did start it without giving such warning. Nor, on the facts supposed and found by the jury, can it be said that Morgan had any reason to anticipate such negligence. But, inasmuch as the evidence may be different on another trial, we think it would be safer to submit to the jury the questions whether, in violating the alleged agreement, Pfaeffle was negligent, and whether plaintiff should have foreseen the likelihood of such violation.

There are other grounds on which, as respondent claims, the order might be supported. It will hardly be necessary to refer to these in detail. The alleged errors in admitting evidence, if they were errors, were too trivial to be regarded as prejudicial. The instruction that plaintiff and the operator were fellow servants was properly refused, for reasons above stated. The question of assumption of risk—concerning which an instruction requested by defendant was refused—was sufficiently covered by instructions given. The requested instruction defining contributory negligence might well have been given, although the failure to give it was perhaps, under the peculiar facts of the case, not harmful to defendant.

The order is affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SHAW, J.

1. Appeal and Error (§ 1097*) — Law of Case—Doctrine.

Where upon appeal the Supreme Court states in its opinion a principle or rule necessary to the decision, that principle or rule becomes the law of the case, and must be adhered to throughout its subsequent progress, both in the lower court and upon subsequent appeal, and this, although in its subsequent consideration the Supreme Court may be clearly of the opinion that the former decision was erroneous.

2. Appeal and Error (§ 1099*)—Former Appeal—Complaint—Amended Complaint.

Where the complaint upon which an action was tried prior to a former appeal failed to state a cause of action for damages, and a third amended complaint, in a subsequent trial, had not been changed as far as any possible claim for damages was concerned, but was directed to another matter, the amended complaint occupies no stronger position on a subsequent appeal than the original.

3. Appeal and Error (§ 1097*)—Decision on Former Appeal—Law of Case.

The decision of the Supreme Court upon a former appeal, upon a matter properly presented, and one whose decision was proper as a guide to the court below on a new trial, is to be deemed the law of the case upon a subsequent appeal, though it may not have been absolutely necessary to the determination of the question whether the judgment appealed from should be reversed.

4. Fraud (§ 47*) — Pleading — Complaint—Compromise—Damages.

If the measure of damages for fraudulently inducing the compromise of a disputed claim be not the face of the claim, a complaint to recover such damages must contain some allegations by which the amount of the plaintiff's damage may be determined.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraud, Cent. Dig. § 42; Dec. Dig. § 47.*]

5. Insurance (§ 639*) — Pleading — Complaint—Value of Claim.

In an action on a life insurance policy, an averment in the complaint that, "except for the fraud and deception practiced upon them by defendant, plaintiffs would not have surrendered said policy for any sum less than the sum of $10,000" was not an allegation of the value of the claim upon the policy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Dec. Dig. § 639.*]

6. Compromise and Settlement (§ 18*)—Rescission — Restoration of Consideration—Pleading.

Where plaintiffs had received a sum of money upon a compromise of a disputed claim, and the court on a former appeal held that an attempted rescission of the compromise could not be effectual without an offer to restore the amount so received, an amended complaint, which failed to allege that any such offer was made, but which affirmatively showed that it was not, was insufficient to show an offer of restoration.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank H. Kerrigan, Judge.

Action by Pauline Westerfeld and another, as executors of William Westerfeld, against the New York Life Insurance Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

See, also, 129 Cal. 68, 61 Pac. 667.

Van Ness & Redman and T. C. Van Ness, for appellants. Page, McCutchen, Harding & Knight and Page, McCutchen & Knight, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. This case comes before the court for the second time. The first appeals were by defendant from a judgment in favor of plaintiffs, and from an order denying a motion for new trial. Both judgment and order were reversed by this court. Westerfeld v. N. Y. Life Ins. Co., 129 Cal. 68, 58 Pac. 92, 61 Pac. 667. The appeals were first considered in department, and again, after a rehearing, in bank. The two opinions filed show most of the facts of the case sufficiently for the purposes of this appeal. Such additional facts as require consideration will be stated in the course of this opinion. After the cause had been remanded to the superior court the plaintiffs filed an amended complaint (designated as the third amended complaint). To this pleading the defendant interposed a demurrer, which was sustained. The plaintiffs not asking leave to amend, judgment was entered in favor of defendant. Plaintiffs appeal from the judgment.

The purpose of the action was to recover the amount of a policy of life insurance, claimed to have been issued by the defendant on the life of William Westerfeld. After the death of the insured, the defendant denied liability on the policy, and a compromise was effected between the said defendant and the plaintiffs, executors of the will of the insured, whereby the policy was surrendered to the defendant, and the sum of $2,666.66 was paid to plaintiffs in consideration of such surrender and of the release of all claims under said policy and one of earlier date. The right to recover, notwithstanding this release, was based on the contention of plaintiffs that they had been induced by fraudulent misrepresentations on the part of defendant to enter into the compromise agreement. Whether this action was founded on an attempted rescission of said compromise, or could be treated as an action for damages for the deceit practiced, was a question much discussed by counsel on the argument of the former appeal, and by the court in disposing of the appeal. The same question is again raised, the contention of appellants being that the third amended complaint is good in either aspect. Under the doctrine of the "law of the case" we think the decision in 129 Cal. 68, 58 Pac. 92, 61 Pac. 667, is conclusive against them on both branches of their argument. That doctrine has been recognized in this court from an early date. Dewey v. Gray, 2 Cal. 374. It has been recently defined in these terms: "The doctrine of the law of the case is this: That where upon an appeal the Supreme Court, in deciding the appeal, states in its opinion a principle or rule necessary to the decision, that principle or rule becomes the law of the case, and must be adhered to throughout its subsequent progress, both in the lower court and upon subsequent appeal, * * * and this, although in its subsequent consideration this court may be clearly of the opinion that the former decision is erroneous in that particular." Tally v. Ganahl, 151 Cal. 418, 421, 90 Pac. 1049, 1050.

An examination of the opinions filed in disposing of the prior appeals in this case shows that the court decided: First, that the judgment recovered could not be sustained as one for damages for deceit, for the reason, inter alia, that the complaint did not allege such cause of action; and, second, that the plaintiffs could have no right of recovery based on a rescission of the contract of compromise, for the reason that they had not offered to return to defendant the $2,666.66 received by them under that contract.

Treating the subject of damages for deceit, the opinion of Commissioner Britt, which was adopted as the opinion of department 2, contains this language: "It is said in the first place that the action is to be treated, not as founded on the policy, but as in tort for deceit and to recover damages for the fraud practiced by defendant. The complaint, however, was not drawn upon that theory. It is, of course, true that a party who has been led by fraud into a settlement whereby he accepted less than is justly due him in extinguishment of legal claims may, on discovering the fraud, sue for the damage he has sustained without taking any steps to rescind the settlement; the law allows such action, * * * but it proceeds on the assumption that the plaintiff affirms the contract of compromise—abandons the cause of action which it superseded—and claims damage for the fraud which induced the new contract. In the present instance the plaintiffs distinctly aver in their complaint that they 'repudiated said settlement upon the ground that it was procured by fraud upon the part of defendant,' and demanded payment of the difference between the sum they had received and the 'amount due them under the terms of said policy issued February 19, 1894.' The frame of the complaint shows that the action is bottomed on the policy itself as a subsisting contract, and that in consequence of the fraud charged the release is treated as simply void."

After a rehearing and consideration of the case in bank, there was filed an opinion, prepared by Temple, J., which begins: "This case was decided in department, the opinion being written by Mr. Commissioner Britt. A rehearing was granted solely because it was thought by some members of the court that the complaint stated a cause of action for damages for deceit; it having been held in the department opinion that it did not. Upon mature consideration we think the decision rendered in department is right, and the opinion is adopted as the opinion of the court in bank, except as it may be deemed to have been qualified by this opinion." We find nothing in the bank opinion which we regard as qualifying the views expressed on the question under discussion. Indeed there are further expressions emphasizing the idea that the action is not one for damages for deceit. If the complaint on which the action was tried prior to the former appeal failed to state a cause of action for damages, the (third) amended complaint here in question occupies no stronger position. So far as any possible claim for damages is concerned, the pleading has not been changed. The amendments are directed entirely to the matter of rescission; the attempt being to show grounds for a failure to offer restoration of the money received by plaintiffs.

A reading of the above-quoted extracts from the opinions of Justice Temple and Commissioner Britt would seem to indicate clearly that the author of each opinion intended to decide that the complaint did not allege a cause of action for damages for deceit. The appellants, however, find in some language in Montgomery v. McLaury, 143 Cal. 89, 76 Pac. 964, warrant for the contention that the reversal on the former appeal was based, not on the insufficiency of the pleading, but upon an error in instructing the jury on the measure of damages. But if we were to grant the validity of this contention, the appellants would not be helped. The discussion of Mr. Commissioner Britt on the insufficiency of the complaint viewed as one for damages is based on the position that the action for damages and one based on rescission are necessarily inconsistent; that an action for damages for the deceit practiced in inducing the plaintiffs to enter into the compromise agreement could be sustained only on the theory that they affirmed that compromise agreement, whereas the entire framework of their complaint shows that they disclaimed and repudiated it. If this was not the real ground of the decision, such ground must be found, as is stated in Montgomery v. McLaury, supra, in the declaration that the trial court erred in instructing the jury on the measure of damages in an action to recover damages for deceit. The claim upon the policy surrendered by plaintiffs being disputed, the court, both in department and in bank, plainly and distinctly held that the measure of damages for the fraud inducing a surrender of the policy was not the face of the policy, but something less. It was the value of the disputed policy under all the circumstances. Quoting from the opinion of the Court of Appeals of New York in Gould v. Cayuga, etc., Bank, 99 N. Y. 333, 2 N. E. 16, Britt, C., thus defines the measure of damages for deceit in inducing a compromise of a contested claim: "What the plaintiff sold and what the defendant bought was not a conceded, but a disputed, claim, worth, therefore, ordinarily something less than its face for purposes of sale, transfer, or cancellation; how much less depending upon the continued solvency of the debtor, and the probability of its successful enforcement, and that upon the underlying facts of the case, and depending also upon the probable extent and expense of the anticipated litigation." This view was approved by the court in bank, and its soundness is not questioned in Montgomery v. McLaury. In any event, whether sound or not, the rule must be taken as binding on this appeal as the law of the case. It was a matter properly presented to the court for decision and one whose decision was proper as a guide to the court below on a new trial. Under these circumstances the decision of the point is to be deemed to be the law of the case on this appeal, even though it may not have been absolutely necessary to the determination of the question whether or not the judgment and order appealed from should be reversed. Table, etc., Co. v. Stranahan, 21 Cal. 549; Gwinn v. Hamilton, 75 Cal. 265, 17 Pac. 212; Porter v. Muller, 112 Cal. 355, 356, 44 Pac. 729.

If the measure of damages for fraudulently inducing the compromise of a disputed claim be not the face of the claim, it is obvious that a complaint to recover such damages must contain some allegations by which the amount of plaintiffs' damage may be determined. A complaint should either allege that the disputed policy which the plaintiffs surrendered was worth a certain amount, or, at least in general terms, that by reason of the deceit and the consequent surrender plaintiffs have been damaged in a certain sum. There is, however, no such allegation in the complaint under consideration. The only averment which could be regarded as having any bearing upon the question of the amount of damages is one that "except for the fraud and deception practiced upon them by defendant, plaintiffs would not have surrendered said policy for any sum less than the sum of $10,000." This, of course, is no allegation of the value of the claim upon the policy. Whether or not the court on the former appeal held in terms that the complaint was insufficient as one seeking damages, we think that conclusion necessarily follows from the principles of law declared on that appeal, and now and here binding upon this court.

Viewed as an action based upon a rescission of the compromise contract, the plaintiffs are confronted by a similar difficulty. On the former appeal it was distinctly and unequivocally held that inasmuch as the plaintiffs had received the sum of $2,666.66 upon a compromise of the disputed claim, an attempted rescission of that compromise could not be effectual without an offer to restore the amount so received. It was further held that such offer was an essential part of the cause of action, and must have been made before the institution of the action. The third amended complaint now before us not only fails to allege that any such offer was made, but affirmatively shows that it was not. There are certain allegations which were evidently inserted for the purpose of showing a waiver of such offer or an excuse for the failure to make it, but we think they are not sufficient to accomplish this end. The allegations are that defendant waived an offer to restore the money by reason of these facts: That prior to the commencement of the action plaintiffs notified the defendant that unless the sum of $7,333.33 (the difference between the face of the policy and the amount paid in compromise) was paid to them a suit would be instituted against defendant to recover the sum, and thereupon defendant informed the plaintiffs that it was not then prepared to take any action with regard to plaintiffs' said claim against it, but that if plaintiffs would omit from the complaint in the action which they were about to commence all reference to fraud, and file a simple suit to recover the sum of $10,000 upon the policy, defendant would investigate the merits of the claim, and if it appeared to the defendant that plaintiffs had been defrauded, a settlement would be made, and that within 60 days from the commencement of said action defendant would notify plaintiffs whether said claim would be recognized, and defendant further proposed to plaintiffs that if they would proceed as suggested by defendant, it would stipulate that they might, in case defendant refused to pay said claim, file an amended complaint in said action, changing the cause of action alleged in said original complaint in any manner they might desire, and the action which should be set forth in the said amended complaint should be deemed to have been commenced at the date of the filing of said original complaint; that plaintiffs accepted said offer and filed on March 26, 1897, a complaint to recover $10,000 upon the policy, and defendant gave to plaintiffs a written stipulation in relation to the amending of said complaint as aforesaid. Thereafter defendant notified plaintiffs that it had investigated the merits of their claim, and that the facts were not as asserted by plaintiffs, and that the plaintiffs might proceed with their action against defendant. Thereupon plaintiffs filed their first amended complaint upon which this action was heretofore tried. We are unable to see that these facts in any way excused plaintiffs from offering to restore the amount received by them under the disputed claim. The stipulation proposed by defendant did no more than to delay the institution of an action based upon the alleged fraud. It preserved every right of the plaintiffs by the provision that an amended complaint might be filed which should have the same effect as if filed at the date of the commencement of the action. Upon the refusal of defendant to concede the justice of plaintiffs' claim the situation of the parties was exactly as if no action had ever been brought. The defendant had evidenced its intention of standing upon the compromise as a binding agreement. If plaintiffs desired to rescind that agreement, they were bound to perform the necessary preliminary step of offering to restore what they had received under it. They were in no wise hampered in doing this by the stipulation which they had made. Under the terms of that stipulation any new cause of action set up by them was to have been treated as though commenced at the time of filing the original complaint. The purpose of this stipulation evidently was to permit them to introduce a new cause of action without commencing a new proceeding. They could and should then have notified defendant of their rescission, made their tender, and upon its refusal filed their amended complaint, which would have been as effective as if filed in the first instance. What is herein said, together with the declarations of the court on the former appeals, furnishes a sufficient answer to the point that an offer of restoration contained in the third amended complaint itself is sufficient.

For these reasons we think the demurrer was rightly sustained. The judgment is affirmed.

VINE v. VINE. (Civ. 605.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 21, 1910.)

1. Divorce (§§ 203, 291*)—Complaint—Causes of Action—Construction.

A complaint for divorce was in two counts. The first stated a sufficient cause for divorce for cruelty, but contained no reference to any community property, and made no mention of any minor child or children. The second followed the phrase, "For further and separate cause of action," and attempted to state a cause for divorce for willful neglect and alleged the existence of the community property and children, but failed to state sufficient facts to authorize a divorce decree for willful neglect. Held that, there being sufficient evidence to support a decree for plaintiff for cruelty, the clause quoted and the allegations with reference to willful neglect could be treated as surplusage, rendering the complaint sufficient to sustain a decree of divorce, and disposing of the property and children.

Deficiencies in a complaint may be cured by defendant's answer and cross-complaint.

3. Appeal and Error (§ 907*)—Findings—Presumption.

It will be presumed on appeal, in the absence of anything shown to the contrary, that evidence in support of all the material findings was received without objection.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; W. B. Wallace, Judge.

Action by Carrie Vine against O. J. Vine. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Edwards & Smith, for appellant. W. W. Huston and N. C. Caldwell, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The appeal is from the judgment on the judgment roll alone. It is claimed that the court erred in overruling the demurrer to the second amended complaint. The latter contains what purport to be two causes of action. The demurrer was to each separate count and to the complaint as a whole. The so-called second count manifestly fails to state a cause of action. The first count clearly states sufficient facts to justify a divorce on the ground of cruelty, but there is no reference therein to any community property and no mention of any minor child or children of the parties. The decree granted plaintiff a divorce on the ground of cruelty and also of willful neglect, and disposed of certain community property and also awarded to plaintiff the custody of a minor child.

The contention of appellant is stated by him as follows: "The fact that all the allegations relative to the property and custody of the minor child are set forth in the second count and are not referred to in the first count, a judgment relative to the same could not stand if the second alleged cause of action did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action although the first count might state sufficient facts. In other words, in this case, if the trial judge had sustained the demurrer to the second alleged cause of action, and plaintiff did not amend, his complaint would have ended with paragraph 5 of the first cause of action, and there would be no allegation relative to any property, nor as to the custody of the minor child, both of which the court disposed of in its judgment."

But passing by the claim of respondent that these latter considerations are incidental to an action for divorce and under a general prayer for relief may be determined without an allegation in reference to them, where the evidence justifies it, we are convinced that without prejudice to any substantial right of appellant the phrase "for a further and separate cause of action" may be disregarded and the complaint considered as the statement of a single cause of action. Thus the pleading answers every requirement and supports the judgment in every particular except the recital and finding as to willful neglect. This latter, however, may be rejected as entirely immaterial, since the judgment is just as effectual without it. The following statement of the Supreme Court in Murray v. Murray, 115 Cal. 277, 47 Pac. 40 (37 L. R. A. 626, 56 Am. St. Rep. 97), is in point here: "It is contended that a portion of the complaint introduced with the words 'for a second and separate cause of action, plaintiff avers,' etc., and which contains virtually all the allegations of the pleading relating to the fraudulent transfers from Owen to James Murray, is insufficient as a statement of a cause of action, in that it fails to allege the husband's failure to provide for the wife's support. The complaint is loosely drawn; but we think it apparent that it contains but one cause of action, and that the portion thereof to which appellants point this objection is not a real attempt to state a second transaction intended as an independent ground for plaintiff's suit but is only a detail of matters tending to show the extent, form, and nature of the relief to which she is entitled upon her single cause of action, viz., her husband's desertion and his failure to maintain her, and that the words designating it 'a separate cause of action' should be disregarded as an error which does not affect the substantial rights of the parties. Code Civ. Proc. § 475."

But aside from the foregoing, the answer and cross-complaint of defendant and the plaintiff's answer thereto supply the deficiency in the complaint when the so-called second count is excluded, and as we must assume, in the absence of anything shown to the contrary, that evidence of all the material findings was received without objection, it must be held that upon appellant's theory of the original pleading the error of the court in overruling the demurrer to the second count was rendered entirely harmless.

The judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Cruz County; Lucas F. Smith, Judge.

Certiorari by Horace R. Robinson and others against James A. Linscott and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Wyckoff & Gardner and Benj. K. Knight, for appellants. Cassin & Lucas, for respondents.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal by the defendants, the board of supervisors of Santa Cruz county, from a judgment in a proceeding in certiorari, annulling certain proceedings of said board in reference to the acquisition of a public road.

The proceedings annulled were instituted by certain freeholders and residents of two certain road districts in Santa Cruz county for the purpose of laying out and opening a new public road in said districts of the length of about 10 miles to constitute a direct route from Pajaro valley through the mountains in a northerly direction to connect near Wright's with the road from San Jose to Santa Cruz. Pursuant to the requirements of section 2643 of the Political Code, under the provisions of which section these proceedings were conducted, three viewers were appointed. They filed their report, in which they recommended the opening of the road, and estimated the damages to the different property owners over whose land the road would pass. After a full hearing of the matter the board passed a resolution, and determined by a unanimous vote, all the members being present, to acquire said road, and that as the proposed road was to be more than three miles long, and the cost thereof would be in excess of $5,000, and too great to be borne by any of the road funds of the county, the cost of its construction should be paid out of the general county fund, and they so directed. Thereupon plaintiffs commenced these proceedings. They are residents and taxpayers of said county, and the properties on which they pay taxes are situated within the limits of two named municipal corporations in that county.

Under the provisions of what is commonly called the "Vrooman Act," these municipalities, like all others in the state, must construct and maintain their own streets and alleys, and, according to section 2 of the highway act of February, 1883 (St. 1883, p. 20), they cannot be included within any road district of the county, and are exempt from paying for work and improvements on roads situated without their corporate confines. This section 2 reads as follows: "Sec. 2. * * * Provided, further, that nothing herein contained shall be deemed to authorize the levy or collection of a road poll tax, or property road tax, within municipalities existing under the laws of this state, wherein work and improvements upon the streets is done by virtue of any law relating to street work and improvements within such municipality. Nor shall any such incorporated city or town be by the supervisors of the county included or embraced within any road district by them established under this act." The money in the general fund consists in part of taxes collected on property within the corporate limits of said municipalities; and plaintiffs contend that the contemplated expenditure would be not only in conflict with the section just quoted, but also would be double taxation, and that, therefore, section 2643 of the Political Code, authorizing such expenditure, is unconstitutional. Subdivision 10 of that section reads as follows: "* * * Whenever it is determined by a two-thirds vote of the board of supervisors of any county that the public convenience and necessity, demands the acquisition or construction of a road in excess of three miles in length the cost of which will be too great to pay out of any of the road funds of the county, the board of supervisors may by a resolution passed by a two-thirds vote of the board of supervisors determine to acquire or construct such road and thereafter may proceed to acquire or construct such road, and if the cost of such road when constructed shall exceed five thousand dollars, such cost may be charged to the general county fund, the general road fund or the district fund of the district or districts benefited."

No constitutional question is involved. The matter is wholly one of statutory regulation. Nor is there, in our opinion, any conflict between subdivision 10 of section 2643 and section 2 of the act of 1883, or section 2653 of the Political Code (providing for the levy of a road tax), but, if there be a conflict, subdivision 10 must prevail, because that subdivision was added to section 2643 on March 23, 1903 (St. 1903, p. 70), 20 years after the passage of either of the other sections.

Nor do the sections referred to by plaintiffs present a case of double taxation. When all the provisions relied upon by plaintiffs are carefully read, it is plain that the Legislature intended that the work and improvements on streets and roads lying within municipalities and road districts should be paid for by them respectively, but that where a road will be more than three miles long and will cost in excess of $5,000, and in the opinion of two-thirds of the members of the board of supervisors is a public necessity or will be of general public benefit, then the cost of its acquisition or construction should and may be paid from the general county fund; and in such a case there is no double taxation, although the amount paid by a given individual for road and street purposes may be thereby increased. This view is fully sustained by the case of Johnson v. Williams, 153 Cal. 368, 95 Pac. 655, decided since the commencement of this action. There it was claimed that because the city of Sacramento, a municipal corporation, was compelled to construct and maintain its own streets and bridges, that under section 2 of the act of 1883 it was exempt from taxes to pay for roads and bridges situated outside its corporate limits, and that section 4088 of the Political Code could not be construed as authorizing the issuance of bonds chargeable against the whole county. That section provides that any "county may incur * * * bonded indebtedness * * * for the purpose of building or constructing roads, bridges or highways." There the roads and bridges to be constructed and repaired were all outside the boundaries of the city of Sacramento. In all essential respects that case and this one are alike, and the Supreme Court, in banc, held that the Legislature could authorize the costs of public roads to be paid out of the county general fund, saying: "It is undoubtedly within the power of the legislative department to authorize recourse by a county to its general fund, consisting almost entirely of taxes collected from all parts of the county, for work on its public roads and highways lying outside of the limits of municipalities within the county, and our statutes show several instances of the exercise of this power, the validity of which has never been challenged. Section 2712 of the Political Code authorizes a portion of the cost of constructing or maintaining, or repairing any bridge, or the cost of purchasing a toll road, to be paid under certain circumstances by the supervisors from the county general fund. Subdivision 10 of section 2643 authorizes the cost of waterworks, oil tanks, etc., for the sprinkling of roads and the cost of sprinkling to be charged to such fund. The same subdivision authorizes the expense of a road three miles in length, the cost of which is too great to be paid out of the road fund, to be paid from the general county fund. Section 2647 of the Political Code contains a similar provision as to one-half the cost of fences constructed on certain public highways. There is no double taxation caused by such an expenditure to the owners of property within a municipality. What they are thereby caused to pay for the expense of public highways lying outside of the municipality is nothing more than their proportion of such expense as the legislative power deems should be borne by the whole county. The whole matter is purely one of statutory legislation." On the power of the Legislature in matters of taxation, see, also, In re Madera Irrigation Dist., 92 Cal. 296, 28 Pac. 272, 675, 14 L. R. About six miles of the proposed highway is located along a private road which had already been constructed, and the owners thereof consented to give to the public the land over which it ran, but demanded the cost of the construction of the road as damages, part of which was allowed by the viewers. In reference to this matter plaintiffs contend that the board of supervisors had no authority to purchase or acquire a road already constructed. The answer to this contention is found in the plain language of the section, which in terms authorizes the board to "acquire or construct such road." It would be remarkable legislation if the county was compelled to parallel an already existing private road and could not purchase it. In the present case serious loss would be entailed upon the county, for the viewers and the board—on the theory that the road would be of benefit to the land through which it passed—placed the damages at several thousand dollars less than the cost of construction.

No other point need be discussed.

The judgment is reversed.

ROBINSON v. WILLIAMS. (Civ. 601.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 27, 1910.)

VENUE (§ 5*)—WHERE ACTION MUST BE BROUGHT.

Code Civ. Proc. § 392, provides that an action for the recovery of real property or of an estate or interest therein or for the determination in any form of such right or interest must be tried in the county in which the property is situated. Section 395 provides that in other cases the action must be tried in the county in which defendant resides. Plaintiff's assignor agreed to sell certain land to defendant, the purchase price to be payable in installments, and it was provided that in the event of the vendee's failure to comply with its terms the agreement should become void, and the vendor entitled to any payments made. The complaint alleged that the vendee had failed and refused to pay, and that the vendor had conveyed to plaintiff all his right, title, and interest in and to the land, and plaintiff prayed for a decree foreclosing defendant's interest and decreeing plaintiff to be the owner of the lands, and that the moneys, previously paid by the vendee should be adjudged to belong to plaintiff. Held, that the action was properly brought in the county where the land was situated, and not in that of defendant's residence.

Frank G. Finlayson, for appellant. E. O. Edgerton and H. P. Brown, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The appeal is from an order denying defendant's motion for a change of venue to the county of Los Angeles. The action was begun in Kings county wherein is located the real property in controversy. Defendant, at the time of the commencement of the action, resided and ever since has resided in the said county of Los Angeles, and his contention is that the case is one where the defendant is entitled to have the cause tried in the county of his residence. The decision depends upon the proper application of sections 392 and 395 of the Code of Civil Procedure to the scheme of the complaint. The former provides that, "Actions for the following causes must be tried in the county in which the subject of the action or some part thereof is situated, subject to the power of the court to change the place of trial as provided in this Code: 1. For the recovery of real property or of an estate or interest therein, or for the determination in any form, of such right or interest, and for injuries to real property," etc., and, according to section 395, "In all other cases, the action must be tried in the county in which the defendants, or some of them, reside at the commencement of the action." It follows, therefore, and it is conceded, that if the gist of the action involves the determination in any form of a right or interest in or to the said real property the order of the court below denying the motion must be affirmed.

The complaint sets forth a written agreement, of date June 1, 1906, executed by the defendant and plaintiff's assignor, one F. E. Robinson. Therein said Robinson agreed to sell to defendant the said real property for the sum of $10,000, payable as follows: $1,010 upon the execution and delivery of the agreement (receipt of which by the vendor was acknowledged in said agreement) and the balance in six annual installments. Of these installments $1,398 was payable on or before September 1, 1907. It was also provided in said agreement that in the event of the vendee's failure to comply with its terms the said agreement, at the option of the vendor or his assigns, should become void, and the vendor should be thereupon released from any obligation to convey said property "or to refund any of the payments theretofore made under this agreement, but second party shall thereby forfeit all right to said conveyance and to said payments." It is further alleged: "That there became due by the terms of said contract from said defendant, Charles M. Williams, to said F. E. Robinson, on the 1st day of September, 1907, the sum of $1,398, together with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from the 1st day of June, 1906, to the 1st day of September, 1907. That said F. E. Robinson demanded of Charles M. Williams the payment of said $1,398, together with interest as aforesaid, from the said 1st day of September, 1907; but notwithstanding said demand, said defendant, Charles M. Williams, failed and refused, and ever since has failed and refused to pay said money." That on the 20th day of December, 1907, said F. E. Robinson, for a valuable consideration, granted, sold, and conveyed to plaintiff herein all his right, title, and interest in and to the lands described in the above-mentioned contract. "Wherefore, plaintiff prays judgment against said defendant that a decree be entered declaring that said defendant, Charles M. Williams, has no right, title, or interest in or to any of the lands or premises described in said contract, and that all moneys theretofore paid by said defendant Charles M. Williams under the terms of said contract be adjudged to belong to plaintiff; and that it be further decreed that plaintiff is the owner and is entitled to the possession of all of the lands described in said contract."

The claim of appellant is that "this action is not such an action as is governed by any of the provisions of section 392, because the cause of action set forth, or attempted to be set forth, in the complaint filed herein is twofold; i. e., a real or local and a personal or transitory action were joined in the same complaint." In this we think appellant is clearly in error. The real purpose of the complaint is to have it declared that the said agreement is no longer operative, and that defendant has no further claim to a conveyance. In effect the action is one to have it adjudged that a written instrument, in respect to which there is a reasonable apprehension that if left outstanding it may constitute a cloud upon said property and thereby injure the plaintiff, be canceled and all rights thereunder foreclosed. The determination of the right to retain the said payment is a mere incident to a judgment declaring that said agreement has been annulled by defendant's failure to comply with its terms.

Furthermore, the nature of an action is to be determined by the kind of relief that can be granted under the complaint. Whether plaintiff's assignor could maintain an action to have it determined that he is entitled to keep the money already in his possession need not be passed upon, but it is clear that in the complaint before us we find no warrant for a judgment decreeing that plaintiff is entitled to said money. He brings the action as assignee, and the only interest assigned is "all his right, title, and interest in and to the lands described in the above-mentioned contract." The conveyance of the lands, manifestly, would not transfer any right to the money which had theretofore been paid to the grantor. The reference to the money in the prayer of the complaint is therefore entirely beside the question, and must be disregarded. The foregoing views find support in the decisions of the Supreme Court.

In Fritts v. Camp, 94 Cal. 393, 29 Pac. 867, it is held, as stated in the syllabus, that: "An action to enjoin the defendants from dumping mining débris into a creek above the plaintiff's land, to his injury, under an adverse claim of an easement to flow and deposit the débris upon the plaintiff's premises, which the complaint alleges to be without right, and which the answer seeks to justify, is in effect an action to quiet the plaintiff's title as against the defendants' claim of the easement, within the meaning of section 5 of article 6 of the Constitution, requiring actions to quiet title to real estate to be commenced in the county in which the real estate, or any part thereof affected by the action, is situated."

In McFarland v. Martin, 144 Cal. 774, 78 Pac. 240, it is said: "The contention of the respondent that if at the trial the plaintiff should fail to establish his right to a conveyance he might, under his prayer for general relief, show himself entitled to an accounting of the affairs of the partnership and that they, therefore, are entitled to a change of the place of trial upon the ground that the complaint will thus authorize a judgment in a personal action is unavailing upon this appeal. The nature of the action is to be determined from the character of the complaint and from the character of the judgment which might be rendered upon a default thereto. * * * The present case is substantially the same in its facts as was the case of Booker v. Aitken, 140 Cal. 471, 74 Pac. 11. In that case the defendant held the title to certain real property which the plaintiff alleged had been acquired under such circumstances (setting forth the same in his complaint), that he held it in trust for the estate of the plaintiff's testator, and prayed that it be so adjudged, and that the defendant execute a conveyance of the same. The action was brought in the county in which the property was situated, and it was held that the fact that the defendant was a resident of another county did not give him a right to have the place of trial changed to such county."

In Grocers, etc., Union v. Kern, etc., Co., 150 Cal. 466, 89 Pac. 120, it is similarly held that "an action by a purchaser for a specific performance of a contract for the sale of land and to compel a conveyance under an allegation that the purchase price has been paid pursuant to agreement from the proceeds of sales of fruits and lands made by defendant for which proceeds an accounting is sought, with judgment for a surplus alleged is in its nature an action to determine a right or interest in real property under subdivision 1 of section 392 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which, wherever commenced, must be tried upon demand by the defendant in the county where the land is situated. The accounting of profits to determine payment of the purchase money and to obtain judgment for any surplus is merely incidental to the real cause of action and relief sought, and does not change the nature of the action." Therein is reviewed the principal case (Smith v. Smith, 88 Cal. 572, 26 Pac. 356) upon which appellant herein relies, and it is pointed out that in said case personal property consisting of 26,000 sheep, with horses, wagons, harness, and camp equipage, together with real estate in Tuolumne and Merced counties, was by conveyance absolutely transferred to the defendant. In that action plaintiff "sought to have the transfer declared to be a mortgage, and alleged that the property so mortgaged had earned and paid funds more than enough to extinguish the mortgage indebtedness, and thus sought an accounting, a personal judgment for the excess and a reconveyance of the property transferred." Hence it was properly declared that the cause of action was twofold, owing to the very nature of the original transaction.

The cases cited by appellant are all easily distinguishable from the one before us, and to hold with his contention would be in opposition to the plain provisions of the statute. The order is affirmed.

HILL v. MARYLAND CASUALTY CO.

(Civ. 729.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Jan. 22, 1910.)

1. INSURANCE (§ 670*)—EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY INSURANCE—FINDINGS.

A firm dissolved, adjusting all the firm assets and liabilities, except an indemnity policy, which it was agreed should be deposited with a third person to be held for the firm's protection until the termination of a servant's action against the firm. The deposit was not made, but the policy was retained by S., one of the partners, who thereafter, and while the action was pending on appeal, without the consent or knowledge of plaintiff, the other partner, delivered the policy to defendant, the insurer, together with a full release signed with the firm name. Thereafter S. died, and plaintiff sued to recover the amount of the judgment in the servant's action, which he had paid. Held, that a finding that, while defendant had notice of the dissolution, it had none of the agreement for the deposit of the policy, could not be construed as a finding on the question as to whether or not defendant had notice of the agreement that the policy should be held to protect the partners against any judgment which might be rendered against them in the servant's action, which notice was the material issue in the case, and failure to find thereon was error of law, requiring a reversal of an order denying plaintiff's motion for new trial.

2. INSURANCE (§ 665*)—EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY INSURANCE—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action on an employers' liability insurance policy issued to a firm, a finding that defendant insurer had no notice of an agreement between plaintiff and his copartner on dissolution of the firm that the policy should be held by a third person to protect the firm against any judgment that might be recovered in a servant's personal injury action then pending against them held not supported by the evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Curtis D. Wilbur, Judge.

Action by J. A. Hill against the Maryland Casualty Company, a corporation. Judgment for defendant, and, from an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Haas, Garrett & Dunnigan, for appellant. Percy R. Wilson (Constan Jensen, of counsel), for respondent.

SHAW, J. Action to recover from defendant upon a policy of employers' liability insurance. Plaintiff and one Anton Swensen were partners engaged in the construction of what was known as the Third street tunnel in the city of Los Angeles. While so engaged defendant issued to the copartnership a policy of employers' liability insurance, whereby it agreed to indemnify the copartnership against liability for damages sustained by its employés on account of injury received by such employés while engaged in the prosecution of the work, the same to be paid when claim for damages so received was reduced to judgment and the judgment satisfied. On January 21, 1900, while the policy was in full force and effect, one Powley, an employé of the copartnership, was killed. His heirs instituted suit for damages, obtained judgment in the trial court, which on appeal was affirmed and thereafter duly satisfied by plaintiff.

On March 1, 1901, prior to the rendition of the judgment in the trial court, Hill and Swensen dissolved partnership, adjusting all of their partnership liabilities and assets, save and except as to the claim for damages in the Powley suit and the policy of insurance held by them as indemnity for such liability. At the same time they agreed that the policy of insurance should be held for their protection against any judgment which might be rendered in the Powley suit, and to that end it should be deposited in the hands of a third person to hold pending the final termination of such action. Such agreed deposit, however, was not made, but the policy was retained in the possession of Swensen, who on March 31, 1902, in consideration of $3,300 then paid to him by defendant, and while the Powley suit was pending on appeal, and without the consent or knowledge of Hill, delivered the policy to defendant, together with a full release thereof to which he had affixed the partnership name of Hill & Swensen. Swensen immediately left for Mexico, where he died on June 16, 1903. Plaintiff did not learn of the transaction between defendant and Swensen until after the latter's death, and did not receive any part of the proceeds of the settlement. The action was to recover the amount of the judgment rendered against Hill & Swensen in favor of the heirs of Powley. The court gave judgment for defendant. Plaintiff moved for a new trial, which was denied, and the appeal is from the order denying the same.

The grounds urged in support of a reversal of the order are errors of law in that the court failed to find on material issues, insufficiency of the evidence to support the findings, and newly discovered evidence.

It appears from the findings that on March 1, 1901, the tunnel having been completed, Hill and Swensen dissolved partnership, at which time the partnership assets, other than the policy of insurance, were divided between them, and as to all liabilities other than the claim of Powley's heirs they agreed in writing that each would pay one-half thereof; that at the time of the dissolution it was agreed between Hill and Swensen that the policy of insurance should be placed in the keeping of one Warren Gillelen to be held by him for the protection of the partners against any judgment which might be rendered against said copartnership in the suit then pending against them by the heirs of Powley, deceased, and that no other agreement was made between Hill and Swensen concerning the deposit or disposition of the policy of insurance; that the policy was in fact not so deposited, but possession thereof was, with the knowledge of plaintiff, retained by his copartner, Anton Swensen.

It is alleged in the complaint that at the time of the dissolution it was agreed "that said policy of insurance should be retained as the joint property of said copartners solely and for the purpose of liquidating any judgments that might be obtained in any of said suits brought to recover damages for accidents, as hereinbefore set out, and both of said partners agreed that said policy should be deposited with a third person and held solely for said purpose, and that neither said Swensen nor said Hill should have any right or power to use or dispose of said policy for any other purpose," and that defendant had notice of this agreement and notice that said policy was segregated by said partners for the purpose of liquidating any judgments that might result from said suits.

As to the disposition of the policy made by Hill and Swensen at the time of the dissolution of the copartnership, the court found that no other agreement as to the policy was made between the said copartners, other than that the same "should be deposited with one Warren Gillelen, to be held by him for the protection of the partners against any judgment which might be rendered against said copartners in said suit then pending against them by the children of said W. F. Powley, deceased." Fairly interpreted, we construe this finding to mean that it was agreed between Hill and Swensen: First, that the policy of insurance, whereby defendant had for a consideration covenanted to protect them from liability for damages resulting from the death of Powley, should not be sold or otherwise disposed of, but should be held for their joint and several protection against any judgment which might be obtained in the pending action against them on the part of the heirs of Powley; second, that, as a means of accomplishing the purpose agreed upon, it should be placed in the hands of Warren Gillelen. As this was the only agreement made, the chief point in the controversy, then is whether or not defendant had notice thereof. Upon this point the court found that, while defendant had notice of the dissolution of the copartnership shortly after it was made and prior to the settlement with Swensen, it "did not at any time have notice of the agreement or arrangement made between said partners, Swensen & Hill, for the deposit of said policy of insurance with said Warren Gillelen, and the defendant did not at any time have any knowledge of any agreement made between the said partners concerning the deposit of said policy of insurance." This finding is directed solely to the alleged fact that the policy was to be deposited with Gillelen, as to which fact only the court finds defendant did not have notice. It cannot be construed as a finding upon the question as to whether or not defendant had notice of the agreement that the policy should be held to protect Hill & Swensen against "any judgment which might be rendered against said copartners in said suit then pending against them by the children of said W. F. Powley, deceased." It by no means follows that, because defendant was without notice of the incidental agreement for depositing the policy with Gillelen, it was likewise without notice of that which constituted the material part of the agreement, namely, that the policy should be held for the purpose as found by the court. Notice of this agreement was the material issue in the case and the one upon which it is conceded plaintiff's right to recover depended. He was entitled to a direct finding covering the same. Failure to find thereon constituted an error of law for which the order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial must be reversed.

Even though it should be held that this finding as to notice was responsive to the issue raised, we are of the further opinion that thus construed it is unsupported by the evidence. The evidence of plaintiff tended to prove that, on numerous occasions while the Powley suit was pending on appeal, Marshall A. Frank and C. O. Hawley, both of whom were agents of defendant, endeavored to purchase the policy of insurance and obtain from both Hill and Swensen a release of any obligations thereunder, that Swensen was willing to sell the same and sign a release as to such obligations, but that plaintiff refused so to do. Plaintiff testifies that, on one of these occasions, "I told Mr. Frank that me and Mr. Swensen had dissolved partnership, and that we had agreed to leave that policy for the protection of the two of us, to protect that judgment. I says: 'If the Supreme Court decides in your favor, well and good. It won't cost you a five-cent piece. If it don't,' I says, 'all I want is the protection that policy affords to me.'" This was denied by Frank, and, if this was all the evidence, the finding should be sustained upon the ground of a substantial conflict of evidence bearing upon the issue; but Hill also says that he had the same conversation practically, with Mr. Hawley, who, as stated above, was likewise a recognized agent of defendant. We have looked in vain for any testimony on the part of Hawley which can be regarded as a denial of this conversation claimed to have been had with him by plaintiff. There was other testimony on the part of plaintiff as to a conversation had with Swensen, Hawley being present, when both Swensen and Hawley were urging him to assent to a release of defendant from its obligations under said policy of insurance, and wherein Hawley, in response to plaintiff's refusal to execute such release, stated that the company would fight any suit instituted to recover upon the policy and take the same to the Supreme Court. It is apparent that Hawley, when questioned as to these conversations, endeavored to and did evade giving direct answers. He does admit that he had such a conversation with plaintiff, but says: "I don't think I ever talked with the two of them (i. e., Hill and Swensen) at one time regarding this." Hawley also says that Hill told him several times that he did not want to sell the policy. It is apparent from Hawley's testimony that he well understood Hill's opposition to any disposal of the policy.

While the testimony of Hill, if contradicted, might be entitled to but little weight, it is nevertheless, in the absence of contradiction, when considered with facts found, sufficient to constitute prima facie evidence that defendant had notice of an agreement between Hill & Swensen under the terms of which the latter was deprived of the power and authority to act for the copartnership in releasing defendant from its obligation.

The order is reversed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Modoc County; Chas. M. Head, Judge.

Charles Romero was convicted of grand larceny, and he appeals. Affirmed.

James H. Stewart and James Wylie, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., for the People.

CHIPMAN, P. J. The defendant was convicted of the crime of grand larceny. He appeals from the judgment on the verdict and from the order denying his motion for a new trial. He claims that the evidence was insufficient to establish his guilt; his contention being based principally upon the fact that the evidence was circumstantial. The larceny charged was the felonious taking of a sucking calf about eight months old. The criticism of the evidence is addressed to two facts: First, that proof of the ownership of the mother of the calf depended upon the marks and brands upon the cow which had not been recorded as required by the statute; and, second, the circumstance that, while the defendant was killing and dressing the calf, the cow stood in the road bellowing and apparently showing much distress at the loss of her young, and, when driven away, broke from the pasture where she had been placed and returned the next morning and resumed her demonstrations of grief.

It seems to have been the theory of defendant's counsel that the marks and brands found on the cow were no evidence of ownership because they had not been recorded. In People v. Bolanger, 71 Cal. 17, 11 Pac. 799, it was held that an unrecorded mark is some evidence of ownership. But they were referred to by the witnesses as one of the means of identifying the animal as well as tending to show ownership. The marks and brands were shown to belong to the prosecuting witness who claimed the ownership of the cow, and there was evidence tending to prove ownership other than by these marks and brands as means of identification.

Ownership of the calf did not wholly depend upon the evidence given by the mother, to which no objection was offered, although the witnesses seem to have attached some importance to her demonstrations in confirming them in their belief, otherwise formed, that the calf killed by defendant belonged to his neighbor. Van Loan. We think there was sufficient evidence to support the verdict.

The defendant was a witness in his own behalf. After the defendant had rested, the court permitted him to be recalled for further cross-examination by the district attorney. The following proceedings occurred:

"By Mr. Jamison: Q. Did you have any conversation with Wade Williams, here in Alturas, Modoc county, Cal., on Main street of said town, or near the bridge over Pit river, at which conversation only yourself and Wade Williams was present and within hearing of it, in the latter part of October, 1906, just after you had been arrested for grand larceny on the charge of stealing a calf belonging to E. Van Loan, in which conversation, after asking Wade Williams to go your bond, you said to him: 'Tell old Charlie'—meaning the older brother of Wade Williams—'not to be too hard on me,' or words in substance and to that effect? Mr. Wylie: We object to that question on the ground that it is irrelevant, incompetent, and immaterial. This is his own witness, and he cannot impeach his own witness. The Court: I understood that he was recalled on cross-examination for further cross-examination. Mr. Wylie: We were through with him. He was examined in chief by us, then cross-examined, and we had closed our case and rested. He is not our witness now. We were through with him when we closed our case. (Argument by respective counsel.) The Court: The rule is very strict against compelling a defendant to be a witness against himself, and it is about adjourning time. I will think this matter over until to-morrow morning. (Court gives usual admonition to jury.) Court now takes a recess until to-morrow morning at half past nine o'clock.

"Court is called to order Thursday, April 15, 1909, Judge Head presiding. Present the defendant and his counsel; also the district attorney, jury, and officers of court. Charles Romero, the defendant, is on the witness stand for further cross-examination. Mr. Jamison: I will say this: Since last evening I have examined into the question that the gentlemen raised on the other side, that in any circumstances we would not have the right to ask the defendant the question propounded; and I am not satisfied that I am right in insisting that I ask the question. I will withdraw the question. The Court: Very well. Mr. Romero, you are excused from the witness stand. Mr. Jamison: That is all. The people rest."

The Supreme Court held in People v. Arrighini, 122 Cal. 121, 128, 54 Pac. 591, 593, that a defendant in a criminal case "cannot be cross-examined as to other matters (i. e., matters as to which he had not testified in chief) for the purpose of discrediting him by an attack upon his character." Nor could the defendant in this manner be compelled to testify against himself. It appears from the record, however, that the defendant had testified in chief that the calf belonged to him and in effect that he had not stolen it, for he testified that he "had stolen nothing." Having so testified, we think the question was a proper one. In any case, we think it quite clear that the jury were not influenced to defendant's prejudice by what took place.

Misconduct of a juryman is urged as ground for a new trial; the claim being that he indulged too freely in intoxicating drinks during the trial. There were some depositions submitted in support of this ground urged for a new trial, that, when not on duty as a juryman, Hayes did drink to excess, but several jurymen deposed that at no time during the proceedings while evidence was being taken or when the jury retired to consider their verdict was Hayes intoxicated, but, on the contrary, he was "sober during the trial and in all ways perfectly able to consider the evidence introduced at the trial of said cause and to intelligently exercise his judgment thereon." The trial judge occupies such relation to the trial before him as to be best able to judge of the actual condition of the juryman where the evidence is conflicting upon that point. People v. Sullivan, 129 Cal. 557, 62 Pac. 101. The fact that a juror drank intoxicating liquor during recess of the court will not vitiate the verdict if it appears from the affidavits of his fellow jurymen, as here, "that the juror while sitting or deliberating as a juror was sober, intelligent, and in a fit condition to understand and deliberate upon the evidence and determine the verdict." People v. Deegan, 88 Cal. 602, 26 Pac. 500.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

2. ATTACHMENT (§ 88*)—SUFFICIENCY OF AFFIDAVIT.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 538, providing that the clerk shall issue a writ of attachment upon receiving an affidavit by or on behalf of plaintiff, an affidavit in an attachment suit by a corporation showing that the affiant was president of the corporation, and personally made the affidavit, "in its behalf," and subscribed and swore to it, is sufficient, though the corporate name was attached to it, and it was subscribed with the corporate name before affiants.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Attachment, Cent. Dig. §§ 221–223; Dec. Dig. § 88.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Solano County; A. J. Buckles, Judge.

Action by A. P. Hotaling & Co. against J. T. Brogan. From an order discharging a writ of attachment, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

P. B. Lynch and Theodore A. Bell, for appellant. Joseph M. Raines, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. A writ of attachment issued in this case, which, upon motion of defendant, was discharged on the ground that the affidavit required by section 538, Code Civ. Proc., "is not properly or at all subscribed or sworn to on behalf of the said plaintiff." Plaintiff appeals from the order.

The affidavit reads, giving the title of court and cause: "State of California, City and County of San Francisco—ss.: R. M. Hotaling of the plaintiff corporation in the action above named, being duly sworn, deposes and says." (Then follows statement of the indebtedness to plaintiff and other facts required by the statute.) "And this deponent further says" (then follow still further facts required to be stated) "that affiant is the duly elected, qualified and acting president of the plaintiff corporation, and makes the affidavit in its behalf. A. P. Hotaling & Co., by R. M. Hotaling, President. Subscribed and sworn to before me this 29th day of March, 1909. Thomas S. Burns, Notary Public in and for the City and County of San Francisco, State of California." Section 538, Code Civ. Proc., provides that the clerk shall issue the writ of attachment "upon receiving an affidavit by or on behalf of plaintiff." All of the facts necessary to a sufficient affidavit appear in the body of the document here, leaving the sole question whether it sufficiently appears that the affidavit was made "by or on behalf of plaintiff."

In judging of its sufficiency in the particular called in question, we must refer to the entire affidavit. It plainly appears that R. M. Hotaling was, when he made the affidavit, the president of the corporation, and that he made it "in its behalf." That he was the person sworn and the person who made the affidavit and deposed to the facts embodied in it clearly appears from the body of the document which the notary certifies was subscribed and sworn to. It was not necessary that the affidavit be signed. Ede v. Johnson,

15 Cal. 53; Pope v. Kirchner, 77 Cal. 152, 19 Pac. 264; State v. Washoe Co., 5 Nev. 320. The corporation could not make the affidavit, and the fact that its name is attached to it is of no importance, and involves no ambiguity upon the question as to who in fact made it. That the affiant affixed the corporate name, followed as it is, "By R. M. Hotaling, President," does not change the fact, clearly appearing, that he, Hotaling, personally made the affidavit and was the one who subscribed and swore to it. Taking the document as a whole there can be no doubt as to the essential statutory requirement appearing that a sufficient affidavit must be made "by or on behalf of the plaintiff." Nor do we doubt that the test suggested by respondent is here met, namely, that the affidavit must "be so clear and certain that an indictment for perjury may be sustained upon it if false."

Blyth & Fargo Co. v. Swensen et al., 7 Wyo. 303, 51 Pac. 873, is cited by both parties. In that case the affidavit read: "Plaintiff in the action above named, being duly sworn, deposes and says," etc., and is signed: "The Blyth & Fargo Co., by Sherman Fargo, Managing Agent. Subscribed and sworn to before me * * * John W. Sammon, Clerk." The court said: "It is not the affidavit of the plaintiff, for, being a company, it cannot take an oath. It is not the affidavit of the agent, for nowhere in the paper is it purported that the agent makes any statement whatever. The language is that 'the plaintiff deposes and says.'" In the case here, however, it appears clear enough that the plaintiff did not make the affidavit, but Hotaling made it; that he was a proper person to make it; and that he made it, as the statute authorized him to do, on behalf of the plaintiff.

We are well satisfied that the affidavit was sufficient, and the order is therefore reversed.

We concur: BURNETT, J.; HART, J.

PEOPLE v. SACRAMENTO BUTCHERS' PROTECTIVE ASS'N et al. (Cr. 96.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 22, 1910. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court March 23, 1910.)

1. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 137*)—VACATION—GROUNDS.

The trial court has no jurisdiction to entertain or grant a motion to set aside an information on any ground not specified in Pen. Code, § 995.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. § 480; Dec. Dig. § 137.*]

2. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 137*)—VACATION — GROUNDS — INSUFFICIENCY OF PRELIMINARY TESTIMONY.

That the evidence presented before a magistrate was insufficient to establish probable cause for believing that the offense for which defendant was examined and held had been committed, and that he committed it, could not be properly urged or determined on a motion to vacate the information under Pen. Code, § 995, authorizing the court to grant such a motion only on the ground that accused had not been legally committed by the magistrate, or that the information had not been subscribed by the district attorney.

3. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 140*)—VACATION—EVIDENCE SUSTAINING COMMITMENT—PRESUMPTION.

On the filing of an information corresponding with the terms of the commitment as to the nature of the offense indicated therein, it will be presumed that the evidence was sufficient to justify the magistrate in making the order.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. §§ 474, 475; Dec. Dig. § 140.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 209*) — PRELIMINARY PROCEEDINGS—"COMPLAINT."

Under Pen. Code, §§ 811, 812, providing for the verification of facts by complainant prior to the issuance of a warrant of arrest by a magistrate, the instrument on which the warrant is authorized is not a "complaint" in the sense of a pleading, but is more like a deposition only, stating the facts verified by the informant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 415; Dec. Dig. § 209.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 2, pp. 1363–1366.]

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 241*)—COMMITMENT—COMPLAINT.

A commitment of accused to answer an information is not alone based on the so-called "complaint," but on all the depositions taken before the magistrate; the information in turn being founded on the order of commitment, which order was not fatally defective because it did not describe the offense, but declared only that the offense "in the within depositions mentioned" has been committed.

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 241*) — PRELIMINARY PROCEEDINGS — COMMITMENT — DESIGNATION OF OFFENSE.

Where commitment does not designate some offense of which the superior court has jurisdiction as having been committed by accused by a specific description referring therein to the alleged crime for which accused is ordered held under its generic description, the depositions on which the commitment is issued must show the commission of the offense to which the commitment refers, or disclose probable reason for defendant's connection with its commission.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 502; Dec. Dig. § 241.*]

7. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 241*)—COMMITMENT—DESIGNATION OF OFFENSE.

Where a commitment undertakes to describe the offense for which accused is held for trial on a felony charge, such offense need not therein be stated with the technical nicety and precision required in an indictment or information.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 502; Dec. Dig. § 241.*]

8. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 41*)—AUTHORITY TO FILE—COMPLAINT—INDORSEMENT.

The district attorney has authority to file an information, though the commitment order was not indorsed on the complaint or on any of the other depositions taken by the magistrate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. § 152; Dec. Dig. § 41.*]

9. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 241*) — PRELIMINARY PROCEEDINGS—COMMITMENT—"MADE."

Under Pen. Code, § 1428, requiring a justice of the peace to keep a docket in which must be entered each action and all proceedings therein, an order holding accused to answer is in fact and law "made" when it is entered on the justice's docket, so that a failure to indorse the same on the complaint or depositions does not deprive the order of its validity nor affect defendant's substantial rights.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 501; Dec. Dig. § 241.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, pp. 4269, 4270.]

10. MONOPOLIES (§ 31*)—RESTRAINT OF TRADE — REGULATION OF PRICES — INDICTMENT — "TRUST."

St. 1907, c. 530, was entitled an act to define a trust and to provide criminal penalties and punishment of corporations, persons, firms, and associations, or persons connected with them, and to promote full competition in commerce and all classes of business in the state. Section 1 defines a "trust" (1) as a combination of capital, skill, or acts of two or more persons, etc., to create or carry on restrictions in trade or commerce, and (3) to prevent competition. An information charged accused as the managing agent of a meat company, pursuant to a combination and conspiracy into which they had previously entered with a butchers' association and the individual members thereof to execute and carry out certain agreements, the effect of which would be to destroy free competition in the retail meat business in Sacramento, and in furtherance of this design compelled R., who was engaged in such business there, to pay accused and the meat company higher prices for meats than accused and the company required the members of the association, each of whom were likewise engaged in such business, to pay for the same character of meats. Held to state all the elements of an offense within the first and third subdivisions of the law, and not defective for failure to allege that the meat company, accused, or the association were able to control the meat market; the gravamen of the offense being the combination to prevent competition in prices.

11. MONOPOLIES (§ 31*)—RESTRAINT OF TRADE —INFORMATION.

The information was not defective for failure to disclose the identity of the persons referred to therein as "certain and divers persons, firms, partnerships, corporations and associations of persons constituting and composing" the association, "the names of whom are unknown except as herein stated," etc.; such persons being sufficiently identified by the allegation that they were members of the association to apprise defendant of the particular persons with whom he was charged with having been in league in maintaining an unlawful conspiracy.

12. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 124*)—JOINDER OF PARTIES—CONSPIRATORS.

Where a conspiracy is charged, it is not necessary to make all the alleged conspirators defendants in order to maintain a prosecution against one.

13. MONOPOLIES (§ 31*)—INFORMATION—ACTS OF AGENT.

Where an information for conspiracy in restraint of trade in violation of the anti-trust act (St. 1907, c. 530) charged that accused, as managing agent of a meat company, and the company itself entered into an alleged combination and conspiracy with a butchers' association and the members thereof to restrict competition in the fresh meat business, the information sufficiently charged that accused acted in the transactions in question in his representative capacity as agent of the meat company and not independently thereof.

14. MONOPOLIES (§ 29*)—ACTS OF AGENT—DEFENSES.

Where accused, as agent of a meat company, joined a conspiracy in restraint of trade, his act was that of his principal, so that, if he acted in excess of authority or without his principal's knowledge or sanction, such act was matter of defense.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Monopolies, Cent. Dig. § 19; Dec. Dig. § 29.*]

15. MONOPOLIES (§ 31*)—RESTRAINT OF TRADE —INFORMATION.

An information for conspiracy in restraint of trade need not allege the dates on which the acts of the alleged conspirators were committed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Monopolies, Cent. Dig. § 20; Dec. Dig. § 31.*]

16. MONOPOLIES (§ 31*)—RESTRAINT OF TRADE —INFORMATION.

An information for conspiracy in restraint of trade need not allege the acts constituting the actual accomplishment of the object or purpose of the combination or conspiracy; such acts being mere probative facts and not the gist of the crime.

17. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 86*)—OFFENSE—JURISDICTION.

Const. art. 6, § 5, after specifically providing the jurisdiction of the superior courts as to numerous subjects, declares, generally, that such courts shall have jurisdiction of "all cases of misdemeanors not otherwise provided for." Pen. Code, § 1425, confers on justices of the peace jurisdiction of all misdemeanors punishable by fine not exceeding $500 or imprisonment not exceeding six months, or both; and Sacramento City Charter (St. 1893, c. 7) art. 4, subd. 3, providing for the city justice court of such city, substantially follows section 1425 as to the justice's jurisdiction. Held, that since neither a justice court, generally, nor the justice court in Sacramento, has jurisdiction of the offense of violating the anti-trust act (St. 1907, c. 530), punishable by a fine of not less than $50 nor more than $5,000 or for imprisonment not less than six months or more than a year, or both, such offense committed in Sacramento was within the exclusive original jurisdiction of the superior court of Sacramento county, and this though the statute did not designate the jail or prison in which a sentence of imprisonment should be executed.

18. Criminal Law (§ 90*)—Courts—Police Courts—Jurisdiction—Misdemeanors.

Pol. Code, § 4426, regulating the jurisdiction of police courts in cities, does not confer on such courts any further jurisdiction as to misdemeanors than is conferred on justices of the peace generally by Pen. Code, § 1425.

19. Criminal Law (§ 90*)—Punishment—Misdemeanors.

The Legislature may confer on justices and police courts jurisdiction of all misdemeanors, regardless of the extent of punishment authorized; such courts being limited in the execution of their judgments of imprisonment to imprisonment in a local or county jail.

20. Criminal Law (§ 27*)—Offenses—Felony or Misdemeanor.

Whether an offense is a felony or a misdemeanor is not determined by its characterization, but by the extent and mode of punishment prescribed or inflicted, where the superior court is clothed with a discretion in determining whether the sentence shall be executed by imprisonment either in the state's prison or a county jail, as provided by Pen. Code, § 17.

21. Criminal Law (§ 1159*)—Appeal—Verdict—Review of Evidence.

Where there is a substantial conflict in the evidence, a conviction will not be set aside on appeal because the verdict is not justified by the evidence.

22. Monopolies (§ 31*)—Criminal Combination—Conviction—Evidence.

In a prosecution for entering a combination in restraint of trade, in violation of the anti-trust act (St. 1907, c. 530), evidence held to sustain a conviction.

23. Monopolies (§ 31*)—Restraint of Trade—Evidence.

Where defendants were indicted for a conspiracy in restraint of trade, the charge being that defendant meat company discriminated against R. in the sale of fresh meat in favor of the members of a butchers' association, evidence that R. was also discriminated against in the meat company's sale to him of smoked and cured meats, which discrimination was not disputed, was admissible as corroborative of the conspiracy.

24. Monopolies (§ 31*)—Combinations—Restraint of Trade—Evidence.

In a prosecution of a butchers' association and a meat company for conspiracy in restraint of trade, the association's by-laws were admissible to show the identity of the members of the association, its nature and purposes, and the object of its connection, if any, with the meat company, and, if possible, to prove the conspiracy.

25. Witnesses (§ 372*)—Cross-Examination—Interest.

In a prosecution for conspiracy in restraint of trade, the state was properly permitted on cross-examination of defendant's witnesses to ask whether they had contributed money toward the employment of counsel for the defense or had otherwise aided therein to show their interest in the proceeding.

26. Conspiracy (§ 47*)—Proof—Circumstantial Evidence.

A criminal conspiracy may be proved by circumstantial evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Conspiracy, Cent. Dig. § 106; Dec. Dig. § 47.*]

27. Conspiracy (§ 48*)—Offenses—Instructions.

The court charged that common design is the essence of a conspiracy, and, while it is necessary to establish a conspiracy to prove a combination of two or more persons by concerted action to accomplish the criminal or unlawful purpose, "it is not necessary to constitute a conspiracy that two or more persons should meet together and enter into an explicit or formal agreement for an unlawful scheme, or that they should directly, by words or in writing, state what the unlawful scheme was to be and the detail of the plans and means by which the unlawful combination was to be effective"; but it is sufficient if two or more persons, in any manner, or through any contrivance, positively or tacitly come to a mutual understanding to accomplish a common and unlawful design. Held, that the meaning of the words quoted, in connection with the remainder of the instruction, was that no explicit or formal agreement need be proved, if it be satisfactorily proved that two or more persons came to a mutual understanding to accomplish a common and unlawful design, and was, therefore, not objectionable.

28. Monopolies (§ 31*) — Restraint of Trade—Instructions.

In a prosecution for conspiracy in restraint of trade, an instruction that if the jury should find from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that pursuant to a common understanding or agreement, express or tacit, between S., a member of a butchers' association, and defendant K., he agreed to and did charge R. more for the meat purchased by him of defendant company than was charged by defendant company to any other member of such association, with intent to lessen competition, the jury should convict, was proper; it being undisputed that S. was a member of the association and on several occasions remonstrated with defendant against his sale of fresh meat to R., and K. having testified that in making sales to R. he was governed by the desires of the members of the association.

29. Monopolies (§ 10*) — Restraint of Trade—Criminal Conspiracy — Statutes.

St. 1907, c. 530, prohibiting combinations in restraint of trade, is not unconstitutional nor in conflict with Pen. Code, § 182, defining criminal conspiracies.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; C. N. Post, Judge.

J. O'Keefe was convicted of violating an act prohibiting combinations in restraint of trade, and he appeals. Affirmed.

L. T. Hatfield and J. W. Lilienthal, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., J. Chas. Jones, Asst. Atty. Gen. (E. S. Wachhorst, Dist. Atty., and Frank F. Atkinson, Asst. Dist. Atty., of counsel), for the People.

HART, J. The defendant O'Keefe was convicted of violating certain provisions of an act of the Legislature of 1907 (St. 1907, p. 984, c. 530), entitled "An act to define trust and to provide criminal penalties and civil damages and punishment of corporations, persons, firms and associations, or persons connected with them, and to promote full competition in commerce and all classes of business in the state." This appeal is by O'Keefe from the judgment and the order of the trial court denying him a new trial.

The information charges that the appellant, as the managing agent of the Western Meat Company, in pursuance of a combination and conspiracy into which they had previously entered with the Sacramento Butchers' Protective Association and the individual members thereof to execute and carry out certain contracts and agreements, the effect of the excution of which would be to destroy free competition in the retail meat business in said city of Sacramento, required and compelled one Albert Robinson, who was engaged in carrying on the retail meat business in said city, to pay to the appellant and said Western Meat Company higher prices for meats than the appellant and said company required the members of said Butchers' Protective Association, each of whom was likewise engaged in the retail meat business, to pay for the same class or character of meats. The refusal of the court to grant appellant's motion to set aside the information, the order overruling the demurrer to the information, insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict, alleged errors in admitting and rejecting certain evidence, alleged erroneous instructions given to the jury, and want of jurisdiction in the superior courts of criminal prosecutions under the act upon the provisions of which the information here is based, are the general reasons upon which a reversal of the judgment and the order is urged.

The act concerned here is what is commonly known as the "Cartwright anti-trust law," and, as its title and provisions clearly indicate, its purpose is to prevent such business combinations as will result in restrictions in trade or commerce, or, in other words, in the destruction of free competition in the manufacture, sale, and purchase of merchandise and other commodities for domestic use. Section 1 of said act reads, in part, as follows: "Section 1. A trust is a combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more persons, firms, partnerships, corporations or associations of persons, or by any two or more of them for either, any or all of the following purposes: (1) To create or carry out restrictions in trade or commerce. * * * (3) To prevent competition in manufacturing, making, transportation, sale or purchase of merchandise, produce or any commodity. * * *"

1. The order denying the motion to set aside the information was proper. The grounds of the motion, stated in general language, are: That the defendant had not been legally committed by a magistrate; that the alleged offense set forth in the information is not the offense stated in the "complaint" filed in the magistrate's court, in that the offense sought to be charged in said complaint is a misdemeanor, while the information purports to charge a felony, and further that the "complaint" does not charge the alleged offense to have been committed against any particular person, while the information charges that the purported offense alleged therein was against one Albert Robinson; "that no order has been indorsed on the complaint holding defendant O'Keefe to answer to the charge contained in said complaint;" that no evidence was adduced before the magistrate authorizing the order holding O'Keefe to answer to the charge alleged in the "complaint." In addition to these, the motion advances some other grounds upon which it is claimed the information should be set aside; but they are not, in our judgment, of sufficient importance to require special notice. The only grounds specified by the Code upon which, upon a proper showing a trial court is authorized to set aside an information, are the following: "(1) That before the filing thereof the defendant had not been legally committed by a magistrate; (2) That it was not subscribed by the district attorney of the county." Section 995, Pen. Code.

Under the familiar rule of construction, "expressio unius est exclusio alterius," a trial court is without jurisdiction to entertain or to grant a motion to set aside the information upon any ground other than those expressly specified in the designated section of the Penal Code. Assuming, therefore, that the evidence presented to the magistrate was altogether insufficient to establish probable cause for believing that the offense for which the defendant was examined and held had been committed and that he committed it, that question could not properly be urged and decided on a motion of the character of the one under consideration. Upon the filing of an information corresponding with the terms of the commitment as to the nature of the offense indicated in the latter, the presumption at once arises that the evidence of which said commitment is predicated was in all respects sufficient to justify the magistrate in making the order (Western Meat Co. v. Superior Court, 9 Cal. App. 538, 99 Pac. 976), and, as the Attorney General has very clearly pointed out in his brief, if the evidence taken before the magistrate was not sufficient to warrant the order of commitment, that question should have been inquired into and determined through some other proceeding than a motion to set aside the information. People v. Beach, 122 Cal. 37, 54 Pac. 369; People v. Lee Look, 143 Cal. 219, 76 Pac. 1028; Redmond v. State, 12 Kan. 172; People v. Cole, 127 Cal. 549, 59 Pac. 984; Ex parte Dimmig, 74 Cal. 164, 15 Pac. 619

The point sought to be made by the appellant that there is a variance between the allegations of the "complaint," so-called, and those of the information, cannot be maintained. The instrument upon which the warrant of arrest is authorized to be issued by a magistrate in the case of an indictable offense is not a "complaint" in the sense that it is a pleading, but is practically a deposition only, setting forth the facts stated by the informant, sufficiently showing the commission of an offense and its perpetration by the defendant to justify the issuance of a warrant of arrest by the magistrate. Sections 811, 812, Pen. Code. The commitment is based upon all the depositions, and not alone upon the so-called "complaint," and the information is in turn founded upon the order of commitment. It is true that the order of commitment in the case at bar does not itself specifically designate or describe the offense for which the defendant was held, declaring only "that the offense in the within depositions mentioned has been committed," and it is, of course, also true, in the absence of a specific description in the order of commitment itself of some offense of which the superior court has jurisdiction, referring therein to the alleged crime for which the accused is ordered held under its generic description only, that if the depositions do not show the commission of the offense to which the commitment refers, or, showing it, do not disclose probable reason for the defendant's connection with its commission, then the commitment is without a prop to uphold it. But, as stated, the presumption prevails, on a motion to set aside an information, that the evidence or depositions taken by the magistrate sufficiently show that the offense mentioned in the commitment was committed by the defendant. In other words, as we have shown, upon such a motion as the one now under examination, the superior court cannot review and overrule the finding of the magistrate that the evidence taken before him was sufficient. People v. Beach, supra; People v. Lee Look, supra; People v. Sehorn, 116 Cal. 507, 48 Pac. 495; People v. Cole, supra.

If, however, the contention is that the so-called "complaint" or the deposition upon which the warrant was issued is necessarily made a part of the order of commitment by appropriate and sufficient words of reference, and, as thus viewed, the commitment designates or describes a distinctly different offense from that alleged in the information, thereby vitiating the latter (People v. Nogiri, 142 Cal. 596, 76 Pac. 490), it is clear that the point is not well taken. Said deposition, in our opinion, states an offense under the provisions of the anti-trust law against the defendant, and, while perhaps such offense is more fully and clearly stated in the information—a requisite strictly applied to criminal pleadings, but not to depositions before a magistrate—the offense charged in both documents is one and the same and for the violation of precisely the same provisions of the law. Redmond v. State, 12 Kan. 172, and People v. Lee Look, supra. No authority has been cited, and, indeed, none can be found, holding even where the commitment itself undertakes to describe the offense for which a defendant is held for trial upon a felony charge, that such offense must be stated therein with the technical nicety and precision required in an indictment or an information, and if the deposition upon which the warrant of arrest was issued in this case is to be treated as a part of the order of commitment (and certainly it cannot be so regarded), the inartificiality of its allegations or its insufficiency in stating with technical accuracy the offense for which the defendant was ordered committed (if these shortcomings could truly be attributed to it) cannot be the basis of a motion to set aside the information, if the latter charges the same offense.

It is further claimed that the district attorney was without authority to file the information because the order of commitment was not indorsed on the "complaint" or upon any of the other depositions taken by the magistrate. But the point is without merit. People v. Wilson, 93 Cal. 377, 28 Pac. 1061; People v. Wallace, 94 Cal. 499, 29 Pac. 950; People v. Tarbox, 115 Cal. 57, 46 Pac. 896. In People v. Wallace, supra, the court says: "When, as a result of an examination, such an order has in fact been made and entered upon the docket of the justice, it would seem that no further action upon his part is necessary in order to authorize the district attorney to file an information against a defendant for the offense named in the order, citing People v. Wilson, supra. The law requires the justice to keep a docket in which must be entered each action, and all proceedings therein (Pen. Code, § 1428); and we are of opinion that an order holding a defendant to answer is in fact and in law made when it is entered upon the docket of the justice, and the failure to indorse upon the complaint or the depositions taken in no manner deprives the order of its validity, or affects any substantial right of a defendant."

2. The information substantially follows the language of the statute, and clearly states an offense under said statute. Briefly stated, the information accuses the defendant and the Western Meat Company (a corporation), of which he is the managing agent in the city of Sacramento, of having entered into a combination and conspiracy with the Sacramento Butchers' Protective Association and other persons, whose names are alleged to be unknown, for the purpose of destroying full and free competition in the retail meat business, by entering into and carrying out "contracts and understandings" made in furtherance of such combination and conspiracy, and as the result thereof, and in the execution of said combination and conspiracy, sold to one Albert Robinson, a dealer in meats in said city of Sacramento, certain meat at a higher price than said O'Keefe, as agent of and for said company, sold the same class of meat to other persons, composing said association, and that by reason of said "compacts and understandings, plans, and schemes," so carried out by said alleged conspirators, said Robinson was compelled to, and did, pay to said company a higher price for meat purchased by him of the company than was paid by said other persons, constituting the said Butchers' Protective Association; that because of said agreement, compacts, plans, and schemes, so executed and carried out by said company, said O'Keefe and said association, and the members of said association, said alleged conspirators did then and there create and carry out "restrictions in trade and directly and indirectly preclude a free and unrestricted competition among the persons, firms, partnerships, and associations of persons constituting and composing the said Sacramento Butchers' Protective Association and other persons, purchasers, consumers, and dealers in the buying and selling of such article and commodity of merchandise, produce and commerce, to wit, meat," etc.

It will thus be observed that the information is, as we have already stated, substantially in the language of the statute, and, while the rule that an offense may properly be stated in the language of the statute defining such offense cannot be uniformly followed, it is in our opinion applicable in this case. We cannot conceive of any other elements which could be required to be alleged in order to state an offense under the first and third subdivisions of section 1 of the anti-trust law than those involved in the allegations of the information here. If the evidence shows, as the information clearly charges, that the defendants had entered into and formed a combination by the terms of which members of the Sacramento Butchers' Protective Association were privileged to purchase meat from the Western Meat Company at prices lower than those at which other persons engaged in the retail meat business were to be allowed to purchase such meat, thus practically confining the business of selling meat at retail to those only who were, fortunately, members of said association, then a plain and palpable violation of not only the spirit, but of the letter, of the statute is disclosed. It was not necessary, as counsel for appellant contend, to allege in the information that the meat company, the defendant O'Keefe, and the Butchers' Protective Association were in a position to control the market with respect to meat. As we have stated, the object of the statute is to prevent such combinations or conspiracies between persons engaged in a particular line of business as will destroy free competition therein, and if the purpose of such combination is to restrict trade or destroy competition in the sale and purchase of "merchandise, produce, or any commodity," or if such combination tends to restrict trade or to prevent free competition therein, such combination is against the letter and paramount object of the law. It is, therefore, not necessary to prove, and much less to allege in the information in order to state the offense denounced by the statute, that the defendants or any of the persons referred to in the information as being connected with the alleged combination were in a position to control the market in the sale and purchase of the commodity to which the charge relates.

As is said by the Supreme Court of Missouri, in the case of State v. Armour Packing Co., 173 Mo. 390, 73 S. W. 653 (61 L. R. A. 464, 96 Am. St. Rep. 515): "The gravamen of the offense of conspiracy is the combination. Agreements to prevent competition in trade are, in contemplation of law, injurious to trade, because they are liable to be injuriously used. * * * If agreements and combinations to prevent competition in prices are or may be hurtful to trade, the only sure remedy is to prohibit all agreements of that character."

In U. S. v. E. C. Knight Co., 156 U. S. 16, 15 Sup. Ct. 255 (39 L. Ed. 325), Chief Justice Fuller, speaking for the court, says: "Again all the authorities agree that, in order to vitiate a contract or combination, it is not essential that its result shall be a complete monopoly. It is sufficient if it really tends to that end, and to deprive the public of the advantages which flow from free competition." See State v. Slutz, 106 La. 182, 30 South. 298; State v. Thompson, 69 Conn. 720, 38 Atl. 868; U. S. v. McAndrews (C. C.) 149 Fed. 836; Bailey v. State, 42 Tex. Cr. R. 289, 59 S. W. 901.

It is further objected that the information is deficient in that it fails to disclose the identity of the persons referred to therein as "certain and divers persons, firms, partnerships, corporations and associations of persons constituting and composing said Sacramento Butchers' Protective Association, the names of whom are unknown except as herein stated," etc. The further contention is made that it does not appear from the information but that O'Keefe acted in the transactions with Robinson independently and without the knowledge and sanction of the Western Meat Company.

Neither of these propositions can be sustained. We have seen that the rule of criminal pleading is that the offense may be stated in the language of the statute if the latter fully and clearly describes the offense denounced as such by its provisions. There is nothing wanting in the language of the law under which the appellant was prosecuted and convicted to fully and accurately define the offense sought to be described therein. The information directly charges that the "persons, firms, partnerships," etc., whose names are alleged to be unknown, are members of the Sacramento Butchers' Protective Association, with which, it is further alleged, the appellant was connected in the inauguration and prosecution of the combination and conspiracy which the statute declares that it is unlawful to maintain. This was sufficient to so identify such persons as to apprise the appellant of the particular persons with whom he is charged with having been in league in the maintenance of an unlawful conspiracy.

In State v. Slutz, supra, it is said: "It is equally true that all the conspirators, whether known or unknown, need not be prosecuted at the same time, but an indictment charging a person known with having a conspiracy with other persons unknown or with other persons whose names are given, but who are not joined as defendants, is good." See 4 Ency. Plead. & Prac. pp. 709, 710; 8 Cyc. p. 663, note 99; State v. Thompson, 69 Conn. 720, 38 Atl. 868.

In other words, where conspiracy is charged, it is manifestly not necessary to make all the alleged conspirators defendants in order to maintain a prosecution against one. The gist of the offense is in the formation of the combination with others to do some unlawful act, and where the information, as here, charges a party with having entered into such a conspiracy with others, not made defendants, it is sufficient to refer to the latter in the accusatory pleading as "persons unknown." The "persons, firms, partnerships," etc., thus referred to in the information in the present case, are not made defendants as individual persons, but only so in so far as they constitute in the aggregate the Sacramento Butchers' Protective Association.

The information with clearness charges that O'Keefe, as manager and agent of the Western Meat Company, and said company itself, entered into the alleged combination and conspiracy with the Butchers' Protective Association and the members of said association. There is, therefore, no merit in the contention that, for aught that appears to the contrary from the allegations of the information, O'Keefe's alleged part in the conspiracy charged was without the knowledge or indorsement or assent of the company of which he was agent, If, as agent of the company, he joined the conspiracy, then certainly his act was that of the company, for the company acted through him, and his act attached to and became that of the company, as the act of a person actually committing a murder necessarily attaches to another who had been in the conspiracy to commit the murder, but who himself did no physical act toward the consummation of the object of the conspiracy. For the purposes of the information, the showing therein was sufficient to connect both the company and O'Keefe. But if, by becoming a member of the conspiracy, O'Keefe acted in excess of his authority as such agent, it then became a matter of defense for the meat company that he had thus exceeded his authority or acted in the premises without its knowledge or sanction.

In the case of Standard Oil Company v. State, 117 Tenn. 618, 100 S. W. 705, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1015, where the company and its agent were jointly indicted under the antitrust law of Tennessee, the Supreme Court of that state uses the following language: "We are of the opinion that, independent of statute, upon principle and in furtherance of sound public policy, both corporations and their officers and agents, who engage in the conspiracy, must be held to be parties to it, and be counted in computing the necessary number to constitute it. There are respectable authorities which tend to this conclusion"—citing People v. Duke, 19 Misc. Rep. 292, 44 N. Y. Supp. 336; Samuels v. Oliver, 130 Ill. 73, 22 N. E. 499; Eddy on Corporations, § 362. See, also, U. S. v. McAndrews (C. C.) 149 Fed. 823.

There is no substantial ground upon which the information may be held to be insufficient because the dates upon which the acts of the alleged conspirators committed in the prosecution of such conspiracy occurred are not definitely stated and fixed in the information. While in no manner vitiating the information, there was, in our opinion, no real necessity for alleging the acts constituting the actual accumplishment of the object or purpose of the combination or conspiracy. They constitute mere probative facts, since the gist of the crime of conspiracy is in its formation for an unlawful purpose, and, therefore, the averments of the information with reference to the times at which such acts were committed may be treated as surplusage. In other words, the legislative power of the government very properly treated combinations formed for the purpose of restricting trade or for any other unlawful purpose very much in the light in which a loaded gun is regarded—a dangerous instrument to be lying around loose—and upon the same principle which sustains local legislative measures declaring it to be a misdemeanor for one to have in his possession burglarious tools and instruments, deals with such combinations so that prevention may be accomplished before a cure becomes necessary. Therefore, the acts constituting the actual execution of the purpose of a criminal conspiracy are only evidence of the existence of such conspiracy, which is the ultimate fact to be proved in order to establish the wrongful act against which the statute inveighs.

3. It is further contended and argued with much earnestness that the superior court is without jurisdiction of criminal cases arising under the anti-trust law, but that such cases are cognizable alone in the justices' or police court. This contention is untenable, as we think we can without difficulty show.

The argument upon this point arises out of the failure of the Legislature to expressly declare, in the penal section of the statute, whether a violation of the provisions of the law constitutes a felony or a misdemeanor, or to expressly designate the jail or prison in which a party, upon conviction, may be imprisoned in the event the court, in the exercise of the discretion vested in it, elects to impose the penalty of imprisonment. The section referred to provides that any person, firm, partnership, etc., violating either or all of the provisions of "this act," shall be "punished by a fine of not less than fifty (50) dollars nor more than five thousand ($5,000) dollars, or be imprisoned not less than six months nor more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment." It is clear, from the nature and extent of the penal punishment which is authorized to be inflicted by the section mentioned, that neither the justices' courts nor the "police court" of the city of Sacramento, if such a court as the latter exists, have jurisdiction to try criminal cases arising under the statute. That this is true will readily become obvious upon reading section 5 of article 6 of the Constitution and from an examination of the statutes establishing the jurisdiction and powers of the inferior courts of the city of Sacramento as to misdemeanors.

The section of the Constitution adverted to, after specifically outlining the jurisdiction of the superior courts as to numerous subjects, provides generally that those courts shall have jurisdiction "of cases of misdemeanor not otherwise provided for." The jurisdiction of the class of misdemeanors to which the one in the case at bar belongs is not, as seen, expressly fixed, and, as we have stated, the penalty authorized to be imposed therefor is beyond the power of the justices' courts or of the "police court" of the city of Sacramento to impose, as will presently more clearly be made to appear. Hence, by the terms of the Constitution itself, the superior court of the county of Sacramento has exclusive jurisdiction of the crimes defined in the statute involved here.

The criminal jurisdiction of justices' courts is expressly confined, by the provisions of section 1425, Pen. Code, to "all misdemeanors punishable by fine not exceeding five hundred dollars, or imprisonment, not exceeding six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment." The jurisdiction thus in general language conferred in criminal cases on justices' courts is in addition to the jurisdiction vested in such courts of other expressly enumerated offenses, for none of which, however, does the penalty exceed a fine of $500 or imprisonment for six months, or both.

There is no distinct court known and designated as the "police court" of the city of Sacramento, exercising the jurisdiction ordinarily given to municipal police courts. The city justice's court of said city exercises the jurisdiction and performs all the functions of a police court under the authority and power vested in it by section 1425, Pen. Code, supra, and not from any power which may be supposed to have been given it by the charter of the city of Sacramento, approved by the Legislature of 1893. St. 1893, p. 564. But even upon the assumption that there resided in the Legislature at the time of its approval of said charter the power to create by such means or through such instrumentality municipal courts or judicial tribunals of any character or to thus confer upon the city justices' courts judicial functions or duties in addition to those prescribed by statute—a power which it has been held did not exist in the Legislature at that time (Ex parte Sparks, 120 Cal. 395, 52 Pac. 715)—the provision of said charter with respect to the jurisdiction of the court thus sought to be set up or upon which new judicial functions were thus attempted to be conferred would not confer upon such court jurisdiction of the offenses denounced by the statute concerned here. Said provision (article 4 subd. 3, of said charter) substantially follows and copies all of section 1425, Pen. Code, and includes the following general language of said section: "And all misdemeanors punishable by fine not exceeding five hundred dollars, or imprisonment not exceeding six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment."

Section 4426, Pol. Code, can have no application here, because, as we have seen, there does not exist in the city of Sacramento a police or any other municipal court, strictly speaking, and if there did exist there such a court the section referred to would clothe it with no more power as to misdemeanors than is conferred upon justices' courts generally by section 1425, Pen. Code.

Counsel for appellant declare that they are sustained in the point now under review by the case of Union Ice Co., etc., et al. v. H. H. Rose (Cal. App.) 104 Pac. 1006. But counsel cannot point out the remotest analogy between the case at bar and the one cited favorable to their contention upon the point under consideration. The cited case involved an application to the District Court of Appeal of the Second District for a writ of prohibition to restrain the respondent, a police court judge in the city of Los Angeles, from further attempting to entertain jurisdiction of a criminal prosecution inaugurated under the anti-trust law, upon the ground that the trial of the case was not, under the provisions of said law, within the jurisdiction of said court, and the appellate court, upholding the constitutionality of an act of the Legislature of 1901 (St. 1901, c. 81), creating police courts for cities of the 1½ class, to which the city of Los Angeles belongs, merely holds that the police courts so created, having been given, by section 2 of said act, jurisdiction of all misdemeanors punishable by fine or by imprisonment, or by both such fine and imprisonment, committed in cities where such police courts are held, are thus invested with jurisdiction to try cases involving offenses created by the Cartwright law. No one will undertake to challenge the soundness of that conclusion. Nor will the proposition be disputed that the Legislature has the right and the power to confer upon justices' and police courts jurisdiction of all misdemeanors, whatever may be the extent of the punishment authorized to be inflicted in the event of a conviction thereof; such courts being limited, of course, in the execution of their judgments of imprisonment to imprisonment in a local or county jail.

But it is at once perceivable upon reading the opinion in the cited case that it has no application here. There is, as we have shown, no police court in the city of Sacramento to which the provisions of the statute of 1901, supra, can apply. Besides, the court in that case in effect expresses the opinion that in those cities where the justices' and police courts are limited in their jurisdiction to the trial of misdemeanors for which no greater penalty than that prescribed by section 1425, Pen. Code, and section 4426, Pol. Code, is prescribed, the jurisdiction of criminal prosecutions under the anti-trust law is exclusively in the superior courts.

Nor does the fact that the Legislature omitted to specifically designate the jail or prison in which a sentence of imprisonment shall be executed under the statute here render any the less manifest the soundness of the proposition that jurisdiction of these cases is alone in the superior courts of those counties where jurisdiction thereof is not otherwise expressly apportioned or assigned. We are not called upon here to inquire whether the Legislature contemplated, in the enactment of the anti-trust law, that more than a county jail sentence of imprisonment should, under any circumstances, be imposed for a violation of its provisions, or intended to give to the superior courts the power to determine in any case whether an infraction of the law shall, by the nature of the punishment inflicted therefor, operate as a felony or as a misdemeanor. Pen. Code, § 17; People v. Gray, 137 Cal. 268, 70 Pac. 20; In re Sullivan, 3 Cal. App. 193, 84 Pac. 781. Nor (the court in the present case having treated the offense of the appellant as a misdemeanor by the nature of the punishment imposed) are we required to speculate as to what may be the effect, if any, upon the question of the validity of the penal section of the statute of a want of uniformity in the nature of the punishments imposed which may arise by reason of the jurisdiction in some instances being alone in the superior courts and in others exclusively in police courts. It is, nevertheless, true, as declared, that no proposition could be further removed from the realm of disputation than that, from the very nature and extent of the punishment prescribed, the justices' courts of the city of Sacramento are without jurisdiction of this class of misdemeanors. We judicially know that the judgments of imprisonment of justices' courts in criminal cases cannot be executed in any other than the county jail, except in those cases where, in certain cities, a justice's court performs the functions of a police court by taking cognizance of cases arising under city ordinances. We further know, judicially, that the judgments of the superior courts in criminal cases are, save in a few exceptional cases, executed either by imprisonment in a state prison or by the infliction of the death penalty. We can, therefore, judicially know and thus readily determine when a statutory offense is cognizable in the superior or the justice's court by reference to the nature and extent of the punishment prescribed, whether the statute designates such offense as a felony or a misdemeanor or as neither, or whether or not it specifies the jail or prison in which the judgment is to be executed. The truth is that, in the determination, whether a certain offense is a felony or a misdemeanor, no material aid is necessarily afforded by the mere characterization of the prohibited and penalized act as either the one or the other, since the nature and extent and mode of the punishment prescribed (or inflicted, where the superior court is clothed with a discretion of determining whether the sentence shall be executed by imprisonment either in a state prison or the county jail) is the sole test. Section 17, Pen. Code. For illustration, if a statute should denounce a certain act as a felony, but limited the power of punishment therefor to imprisonment in the county jail for a term not exceeding six months or a fine not exceeding $500, or by both such fine and imprisonment, it would readily appear, notwithstanding its designation by the statute as a felony, that, from the nature of the punishment prescribed, the act so denounced and designated could be nothing more than an ordinary misdemeanor, of which justices' courts have exclusive jurisdiction. Therefore, in the case at bar the nature of the punishment prescribed, being in excess of the punishment which a justice's court possesses the power to impose, fixes the jurisdiction in the superior court of Sacramento county as clearly and as unquestionably as though such jurisdiction were conferred in express terms.

4. The contention that the evidence does not justify the verdict is not sustained by the record. We shall not undertake an elaborate or detailed examination of the evidence as it is presented by the record and upon which the jury felt justified in adjudging the appellant guilty of the crime charged against him. It will suffice to say that the most that can be said of the evidence is that upon the question of the defendant's guilt there exists therein a substantial conflict, and in that state of the record the verdict only represents the exercise of a power which resides exclusively within the province of the jury.

We may, however, point to these facts which not only stand undisputed, but some of which the appellant himself admitted at the trial: That there existed in the city of Sacramento at the time of the trial an organization known as the Sacramento Butchers' Protective Association, which was composed of a large majority, if not all, with the exception of Albert Robinson, of the retail meat dealers in said city; that said Robinson was not a member of said association; that when he (Robinson) first applied to appellant to supply him with fresh meats to be sold in said city by retail, said appellant stated to him that, before he could give him a definite answer with regard to the proposition, he (appellant) would be required to first confer with the main office at San Francisco; that appellant did finally furnish Robinson with fresh meats, but uniformly charged him, variously, a cent and a cent and a half and two cents per pound more for meats than he charged the members of the association for the same kind of meats. Appellant was a witness for himself and admitted charging Robinson more for meats than he required members of the association to pay for the same class of meats, and the only explanation he had to offer for thus discriminating against Robinson was that he had a right to do so and had been so advised by his attorney. There was other testimony received which tended to establish the truth of the charge against the appellant. It was, for instance, shown that numerous complaints involving protests against selling meats to Robinson by the meat company were made to appellant by certain members of the Butchers' Association, and these complainants, except in the case of one who claimed that Robinson's place of business was situated nearer his place of business than the rules of the association permitted, were usually satisfied after inspecting Robinson's bills, disclosing that he was paying higher prices for meats than they were compelled to pay. It was, moreover, shown by the witness Brier, the stenographer who reported the testimony at the preliminary examination of the appellant, that at said examination O'Keefe was a witness and as such stated, among other things, that he (O'Keefe) "did not wish to encourage Robinson's trade, and also in his testimony said that he consulted with members of the Sacramento Butchers' Association about selling Robinson meat"; that O'Keefe further testified at said examination that "Robinson paid more for his meat than was paid by anybody else purchasing beef from his corporation at that time * * *"; that the "defendant also testified in his examination that the prices on meat sold by him to Robinson from January 4th to 11th, inclusive, were higher than the prices on the meats sold by him during that time to members of the Sacramento Butchers' Protective Association"; that he stated that "he did not propose to give any satisfaction to Robinson; that he knew that Robinson was not a member of the association; that he knew the other dealers getting meat here were members of that association; stated that he talked with members of the association about selling Robinson meat prior to the time Robinson came to see him in reference to buying meat from the Western Meat Company and prior to the time of selling Robinson meat; stated that it was his intention to consult as many of the members as he could before selling Robinson meats; that he would be governed by the desires of the association in dealing with Robinson; and that in his dealings with Robinson he was governed by the desires of the members of the association," etc.

There is considerable more testimony shown by the record corroborative of that of which the foregoing is a mere synopsis; but we have referred sufficiently to the proof adduced by the people to show that the jury were justified in reaching the conclusion that the charge alleged in the information was established by the degree of proof required in criminal cases. As we have before stated, the gist or gravamen of the crime charged in the information is the formation by the parties named therein of the conspiracy for the purpose of destroying free competition in the retail meat business in the city of Sacramento, and, therefore, except in so far as it serves as evidence of the crime charged, the actual execution of the conspiracy is immaterial. It is enough, in other words, to show that the purpose of the combination into which the parties referred to in the information entered was to carry out contracts and agreements and understandings between them in restraint of trade. Therefore, while it is not for this court to analyze the evidence with the purpose of ascertaining and passing upon its probative force and effect, it may well be suggested that with the uncontradicted evidence of the appellant's admissions, considered with the other circumstances to which we have briefly referred, what possible ground is there presented here for holding or even doubting that the conclusion of the jury that the purpose of the combination was to circumvent legitimate competition in the business of retailing meats in the city of Sacramento is not justified? It is idle and no answer to this position to say, as is the fact, that the appellant and each of the members of the Butchers' Protective Association positively denied that there ever was any "understanding, compact, or agreement" between the members of said association and the Western Meat Company or O'Keefe, as the manager of said company, "whereby it was understood or agreed in any manner, shape, or form that the Western Meat Company was to charge persons who did not belong to that association a higher or a different price for fresh meats than would be charged members of the Butchers' Protective Association"; for thus there is, plainly, brought about that conflict only which, under our system, forecloses interference by reviewing courts with the verdict of a jury or the findings of a court.

5. There are many alleged errors assigned in the rulings of the court upon questions involving the admission and rejection of evidence. All these we shall not undertake to specially review, for it will be sufficient to say that we have been unable, after a careful examination of these assignments, to find in any of the rulings, even if it might well be conceded that some of them were erroneous, anything prejudicial to the substantial rights of the appellant. But most of the objections interposed by appellant to the admission of certain testimony in their very nature bear upon the weight rather than upon the question of the competency or relevancy of such testimony. We may, however, point out a few of the overruled objections interposed by the defendant, and of which advantage is sought to be taken by appellant on this appeal, as illustrating the nonprejudicial effect of the rulings generally of the trial court, assuming that they or some of them were not strictly correct.

Certain witnesses, introduced by the people, testified that Robinson bought smoked and cured meats from the company and was charged therefor prices at which the same kind and quality of such meats were sold to other retailers, including the members of the Butchers' Association. There was no complaint, nor was there any dispute upon the proposition that the company discriminated in prices against Robinson in the sale of smoked and cured meats. The charge was, as the evidence clearly discloses, that the discrimination complained of was made on the sale of fresh meats. The testimony with regard to smoked or cured meats was, in some measure—whether large or small is unimportant—corroborative of the evidence of the conspiracy charged, showing that the meat company discriminated in favor of the members of the Butchers' Association and against Robinson in the sale of fresh meats. In other words, it emphasized to some extent the direct proof of the existence of the conspiracy by showing that as to those meats in which the members of the association did not deal the meat company did not discriminate against Robinson, but sold him such meats at normal prices. If such were not the purpose and effect of the testimony concerning cured or smoked meats, then it had none at all, and therefore, if erroneously admitted, could not have been prejudicial.

Objection was also made and overruled to the introduction in evidence by the people of the by-laws of the Butchers' Protective Association. We think the ruling was proper. The by-laws were not only proper for the purpose of disclosing the identity of the members of the association, but also to show the nature and purposes of the association and the object of its connection, if any, with the Western Meat Company. Indeed, if the by-laws tended in any manner to disclose the criminal conspiracy charged in the information, they were competent evidence for that purpose. Judd v. Harrington, 139 N. Y. 105, 34 N. E. 790; 10 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, p. 863. But if the by-laws failed to show, or contained nothing tending to disclose, the conspiracy charged, then, clearly, they were harmless as evidence, and their admission into the record could have had no prejudicial effect upon the rights of the appellant.

The further claim is made that the court erred to the detriment of the defendant by allowing the people to inquire of the members of the association, upon cross-examination, whether they contributed money toward the employment of counsel for the defense or otherwise aided the defendant in the preparation and maintenance of his defense. The object of this cross-examination was, of course, to show that the members of the association were more than ordinarily interested in the defense and were, therefore, partisans. It is not necessary to refer to authorities to show the manifest propriety of the cross-examination which appellant condemns. It is always proper for a party against whom a witness has given damaging testimony to show out of the mouth of the witness himself, if he can, or by other sources, if necessary, that such witness has an unusual interest in the outcome of the case, thus putting the jury in possession of a circumstance which may materially aid them in determining how much weight, if any, the testimony of such witness is entitled to.

Thus we have referred to some of the many objections against the validity of the judgment and order here based upon the rulings of the trial court upon the evidence, and, as suggested, they fairly represent the general character, in their effect upon the rights of the appellant, of those other objections to which we must forbear giving special attention.

6. Many of the instructions of the court are assailed as involving erroneous statements of the law applicable to the case. We shall not specially view all these assignments. The charge of the court, in its entirety, is full, clear, and fair upon all the vital points in the case.

The instructions by which the jury were told that the crime of conspiracy could be proved by circumstantial as well as by direct evidence were perfectly proper. No reason exists for requiring the proof of the crime of conspiracy to be by means of direct rather than by circumstantial evidence. No one has ever challenged the proposition that it is competent to prove any ultimate fact by circumstantial evidence. Indeed, it would be impossible to prove many cases of conspiracy or of any other crime without the aid of such evidence.

The italicized part of the following instruction is particularly criticised: "The common design is the essence of the charge, and while it is necessary, in order to establish a conspiracy, to prove a combination of two or more persons, by concerted action, to accomplish the criminal or unlawful purpose, it is not necessary to constitute a conspiracy that two or more persons should meet together, and enter into an explicit or formal agreement for an unlawful scheme, or that they should directly, by words or in writing, state what the unlawful scheme was to be, and the detail of the plans or means by which the unlawful combination was to be made effective. It is sufficient if two or more persons, in any manner, or through any contrivance, positively or tacitly come to a mutual understanding to accomplish a common and unlawful design. In other words, where an unlawful end is sought to be effected, and two or more persons, actuated by the common purpose of accomplishing that end, work together, in any way, in furtherance of the unlawful scheme, every one of said persons becomes a member of the conspiracy, although the part he was to take therein was a subordinate one, or was to be executed at a remote distance from the other conspirators."

The evident and rational meaning of the portion of the foregoing instruction put in italics, when read with the remainder of said instruction, is that "no explicit or formal agreement" need be proved, if it be otherwise satisfactorily proved that two or more persons, in any manner, come to a mutual understanding to accomplish a common and unlawful design. In other words, the instruction in effect, and with reasonable clearness, declared to the jury that it is immaterial how or in what manner a conspiracy may be formed, so long as it sufficiently appears from the evidence that it was formed for an unlawful purpose. Several other instructions of similar import to the foregoing are complained of; but, in view of what we have said with regard to the quoted instruction, they need not be specially noticed.

The instruction to the effect that, if the jury should find from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that, in pursuance of an understanding or agreement, either express or tacit, between one F. J. Salcedo, a member of the Butchers' Association, and the defendant, whereby O'Keefe agreed to charge and did charge Albert Robinson more for the meat purchased by him of said defendant than was charged by said defendant to any member of said association, with the intent to lessen competition, it would be the duty of the jury to convict the defendant, was pertinent and based upon the testimony of the witness Brier and that of said Salcedo. It is not disputed that Salcedo was, at the times mentioned in the information, a member of the Butchers' Association, and it further appears that on several different occasions he personally remonstrated with the defendant against the sale of fresh meats to Robinson. It will be remembered that it was proved that the defendant himself admitted, while on the witness stand at the preliminary hearing of the charge against him, that in his dealings with Robinson "he was governed by the desires of the members of the association."

We have thus given attention to some of the more important objections to the charge of the court. As declared, the instructions as a whole with clearness correctly declared to the jury the rules by which they were to be governed in considering the evidence.

Some intimation is thrown out by counsel for the appellant that the law against trusts and unlawful combinations is out of joint with the Constitution and as well conflicts with the law on the subject of criminal conspiracies as defined by the Penal Code. The specific ground for the constitutional objection to the law is not pointed out, and we do not think any such objection can be shown. Nor can we perceive any incompatibility, if such an objection could be successfully urged against the anti-trust law, between the latter and the Code section pertaining to the crime of conspiracy. The essence or gist of conspiracy here, as is true of the crime as it is defined by section 182, Pen. Code, is in the formation and maintenance of the conspiracy for the purpose of accomplishing some unlawful object, or also under the Code, for the purpose of accomplishing a lawful object by unlawful means. As we have before declared, in the case at bar the actual acts constituting the crystallization of the object of the conspiracy constitute evidence only of the unlawful combination or agreement to co-operate together for the purpose of destroying free competition in trade, and the only distinction, which is none at all, so far as the crime itself is concerned, between the conspiracy charged here and that with which the Code section deals, is that the former is made to apply to a different object from any mentioned in the Code.

We have found nothing in the record demanding a reversal of either the judgment or the order, and both are, therefore, affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

Ex parte SNOWDEN. (Cr. 143.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Jan. 27, 1910.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 592*) — STREETS—REGULATIONS.

A city ordinance, prohibiting driving at a rate greater than 30 miles per hour in a city, is not contrary to the declaration of policy of the state in punishing speeding upon public highways, because the Motor Vehicle Act (Act March 22, 1905; St. 1905, c. 612), as amended by St. 1907, p. 915, prohibits all motor vehicles from traveling on any of the streets at a greater rate than 15 miles an hour.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1311–1314; Dec. Dig. § 592.*]

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 592*)—POLICE POWER—ORDINANCES.

The mere fact that the state in the exercise of the police power has made certain regulations does not prohibit a municipality from exacting additional requirements, so long as there be no conflict between the two; and, so long as the requirements of the municipal bylaw are not in themselves pernicious as being unreasonable or discriminatory, both will stand.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 592*)—POLICE POWER—ORDINANCE.

Motor Vehicle Act (Act March 22, 1905; St. 1905, c. 612), as amended by St. 1907, p. 915, prohibits motor vehicles from traveling on any streets at a greater rate of speed than 15 miles an hour. A city ordinance provided that wherever the rate of speed should be in excess of 30 miles an hour, the violation should be a misdemeanor, punishable in all cases by imprisonment. The punishment imposed by the motor vehicle act consisted of fine or imprisonment, or both. Held, that the effect of the ordinance was to impose a punishment for a more flagrant violation of the rights of the public than the Legislature had seen fit to punish, and did not violate the rule that municipalities may not by ordinance prescribe a different penalty for the same offense dealt with by an act of the Legislature.

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 112*)—ORDINANCES—FORM AND REQUISITES.

The fact that a city ordinance purports to amend another ordinance does not render it the less a complete enactment in itself, where it is such in fact, since the title to an ordinance is not required by law, and if it should be given one, it is no part of the ordinance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 112.*]

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 703*)—POLICE POWER—USE OF HIGHWAY.

An ordinance regulating the speed of vehicles in streets is not an attempt to interfere with the reasonable exercise of the right of passage over a public highway.

6. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 703*)—POLICE POWER—REGULATION OF HIGHWAY.

A city ordinance limiting the speed of vehicles in the streets was not discriminatory, as it is the right of every municipality to regulate rates of speed of travel on its own streets.

7. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 703*)—ORDINANCES—POLICE POWER.

An ordinance limiting the speed of vehicles in the streets of a city was not invalid because it made speed limitations inapplicable to vehicles operated by the fire and police departments.

8. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 703*)—POLICE POWER—ORDINANCES.

An ordinance, making it a misdemeanor, punishable by imprisonment, to operate a vehicle at a speed in excess of 30 miles an hour, is not invalid on the theory that only motor vehicles can make such a speed, and hence that the provision discriminates against the operators of motor vehicles.

9. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 592*)—ORDINANCES—VALIDITY.

A city ordinance made it an offense, punishable by imprisonment from 10 to 50 days, for one to operate a vehicle on a street at a speed in excess of 30 miles an hour, and for second and subsequent offenses 30 days to six months. Held, that the penalty was not so excessive as to be invalid as out of harmony with the laws of the state, as under the state law one who had exceeded the rate of 20 miles might have been penalized in the sum of $100 and imprisonment for 30 days.

Application of J. H. Snowden for a writ of habeas corpus to obtain his release from the police of the city of Los Angeles, on a charge of violating the traffic ordinance of such city. Writ discharged, and prisoner remanded to custody.

Frank James, for petitioner. Guy Eddie, Pros. Atty., and W. W. Dodge, Deputy Pros. Atty., for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Petitioner is in the custody of the chief of police of the city of Los Angeles charged with violating section 26, Ordinance No. 15,775, of that city, known as the "Traffic Ordinance," as the same was amended by ordinance No. 18,435, by driving an automobile upon and along one of the streets of Los Angeles at a rate of speed greater than 30 miles per hour.

In support of his contention that he is illegally detained, the petitioner urges that the ordinance is void for the following reasons: (1) It is in conflict with the state motor vehicle act (St. 1905, c. 612), as amended March 23, 1907, because it attempts to enact regulations at variance with the provisions of that act, and prescribes a different penalty for an act made a crime and punishable under a general law; (2) that the ordinance discriminates against owners and drivers of motor vehicles; and (3) that the ordinance is unreasonable, and the punishment imposed thereby excessive and out of harmony with the laws of the state prescribing penalties for misdemeanors.

The motor vehicle act as approved March 22, 1905, and amended in 1907 (St. 1907, p. 915), provides for the registration of motor vehicles and the issuance of license certificates to their owners and operators, and the regulation of the rates of speed at which such vehicles may be operated upon the public highways of the state, etc. For streets and highways within the boundaries of incorporated cities and towns it provides a maximum rate of speed of one mile in six minutes, where the contiguous territory is "closely built up," and one mile in four minutes elsewhere in such cities and towns. Graduated penalties for first and subsequent violations of the law are prescribed in the form of fines or imprisonment, or both. The act also limits the power of the local authorities to pass, enforce, or maintain any ordinance, rule, or regulation with reference to motor vehicles, except in accordance with certain express conditions stated in the act, and declares all ordinances, rules, and regulations in force at the time of the passage of the act which do not conform to such limitations to be of no validity or effect.

The ordinance complies with the requirement of the act that the penalties for violation of the speed laws by motor vehicles shall be similar to, and no greater than, those fixed for other vehicles, by making the provisions of the ordinance in this respect applicable generally to all vehicles. Tested by the other limitations of the act, the ordinance does not attempt to exclude or prohibit any licensed owner or operator of a motor vehicle from making any use of the highway permitted by the act itself; it contains no provision affecting the registration or numbering of motor vehicles; prescribes no slower rate of speed for them; and does not regulate their use of the streets of the city in any manner contrary to or inconsistent with the provisions of the act. It divides the city into two districts, and fixes a maximum rate of speed for one of them at 12 miles per hour, and for the other at 20 miles per hour, and provides penalties of fines or imprisonment, or both, graduated in severity for first and subsequent offenses, for all violations of its speed regulations where the speed attained does not exceed 30 miles per hour. In cases in which the rate of speed is in excess of 30 miles per hour, section 26 declares the violation to be a misdemeanor and punishable in all cases by imprisonment in the city jail; the terms being, for the first offense, from 10 to 50 days; for the second and subsequent offenses, 30 days to 6 months.

Conceding, but not deciding, that the motor vehicle act is operative in the city of Los Angeles, it prohibits all motor vehicles from traveling on any of the streets of that city at a greater rate of speed than 15 miles per hour, so that it cannot be said that in prohibiting driving at a higher rate than 30 miles per hour the city is acting contrary to the declaration of policy of the state in punishing speeding upon public highways. The effect of section 26 of the ordinance is only to impose a punishment for a more flagrant violation of the rights of the public than the Legislature has seen fit to punish. This section does not attempt to legalize that which the state has declared unlawful, nor has it violated the rule that municipalities may not by ordinance prescribe a different penalty for the same offense which was declared in In re Sic, 73 Cal. 142, 14 Pac. 405, and which has been approved in several later cases. Ex parte Stephen, 114 Cal. 282, 46 Pac. 86.

It is well settled that the mere fact that the state, in the exercise of the police power, has made certain regulations does not prohibit a municipality from exacting additional requirements. So long as there be no conflict between the two, and so long as the requirements of the municipal by-law are not in themselves pernicious as being unreasonable or discriminatory, both will stand. Ex parte Hong Shen, 98 Cal. 681, 33 Pac. 799; Ex parte Hoffman, 155 Cal. 114, 99 Pac. 517. The decision in Ex parte Hoffman, relied upon by petitioner, is not inconsistent with the position that the ordinance before us is valid, but rather sustains the view that it is. It was there held that an ordinance which established a higher standard for pure milk than that fixed by the state law was not void because in conflict with the general law. Says Henshaw, J., writing the opinion: "The state in its laws deals with all of its territory and all of its people. The exactions which it prescribes operate (except in municipal affairs) upon the people of the state, urban and rural, but it may often, and does often, happen that the requirements which the state sees fit to impose may not be adequate to meet the demands of densely populated municipalities, so that it becomes proper, and even necessary, for municipalities to add to state regulations provisions adapted to their special requirements. Such is the nature of the legislation here questioned." Elsewhere in the opinion it is said: "If the city of Los Angeles had provided that milk might be vended which contained less percentum of milk fats than that exacted by the state law, there would be presented a plain case of conflict. The municipality would be endeavoring to legalize that which the state had declared to be unlawful. But what the city has in fact done has been to impose not fewer, but additional, qualifications upon the milk which may be vended to its consumer."

The power of the city to pass such an ordinance is not open to question. The provisions of the freeholders' charter of the city as it stood at the time of the passage of the original ordinance were sufficient to authorize its passage. But if it were conceded that they were not, the amendments to the charter adopted in 1909, prior to the passage of ordinance No. 18,435, expressly confer such authority on the city. The last-named ordinance is a complete enactment in itself. That it purports to amend ordinance No. 15,775 does not affect the matter, since a title to an ordinance is not required by law; and, if it be given one, this is no part of the ordinance.

The ordinance does not attempt to interfere with the reasonable exercise of the "right of passage over public highways" so strenuously contended for by petitioner; it merely endeavors to regulate and prevent abuse in the exercise of that right. The distinction between the two is quite obvious. The "right of passage" of motor vehicles is not specially restricted because the owners or operators thereof are required to conform to local traffic regulations made applicable to all kinds of vehicles. All other travelers are required to conform to the local ordinances of the communities in which they travel, and it is no discrimination against one class that they, along with all others, should be required to adapt themselves to the rules governing the local residents of a city in the use of its streets. There is nothing unusual or discriminatory in this effect of the ordinance, as it is the universally acknowledged right and province of each municipality to regulate the rates of speed of travel upon its own streets. Dillon's Municipal Corporations (4th Ed.) § 393; 28 Cyc. 907. Of course, it could not be, and is not, contended that this power extends to the exclusion of the motor vehicle from the use of the streets of a municipality.

The ordinance is not invalid because one of its sections makes the speed limitations inapplicable to the vehicles operated by the fire and police departments of the city. The cases cited by petitioner under this head do not sustain the contrary of this, while in the case of State v. Sheppard, 64 Minn. 287, 67 N. W. 62, 36 L. R. A. 305, it was held that an ordinance which prescribed a maximum rate of speed of six miles per hour, without excepting the city fire department from its operation, was unreasonable and invalid to that extent, although otherwise a valid exercise of the police power, which might be enforced as to all others violating its provisions. The exemptions made by section 15 of the ordinance were proper, and did not invalidate the ordinance.

Petitioner contends that, notwithstanding the ordinance by its terms includes all kinds of vehicles, the speed limit fixed by section 26 is so high that only motor vehicles can make the speed necessary to violate this provision, and therefore the section discriminates against the operators of motor vehicles. Respondent suggests that the effect of this argument is to establish that the motor vehicle act is special legislation, and discriminative in favor of operators of motor vehicles, not by implication or inference, but expressly, as indicated by its title as well as its terms, and therefore the act itself is invalid, measured by the same rule. We are inclined to the view that there is enough difference between power-impelled and animal-drawn vehicles to justify their separate classification for purposes of legislation, but we are not required to pass upon this question, nor to assume that there is such a difference that we can say that an ordinance including both was intended to affect only one. The purpose of the ordinance would be accomplished, the protection of human life and limbs as well as property, by deterring every vehicle, whatever its kind, from passing through the streets at an excessive rate of speed.

The reasonableness of a regulation such as we are here considering depends upon its purpose and the conditions requiring it to be made. It is intended to prohibit, not to punish. The offense created by its violation is malum prohibitum, and not malum in se, and the penalty must in such cases rest largely in the sound discretion of the legislative branch of the government, and be such as is necessary to prevent the act which is prohibited. It being deterrent and not punitive in character, there is no element of compensation for a breach to be considered. It is apparent, from the fact that section 26 was added after the penalties of fine or imprisonment had been on trial some time, that these provisions had proven ineffective. Not because of the mildness of the penalties before provided, as the terms of imprisonment were equally severe with those contained in section 26, but because, we must assume, the alternative of fine had been imposed by the courts instead of the imprisonment. The ordinance had failed to deter the rapid operator from violating the law, and as a remedy for this the legislative branch withdrew from the courts, in aggravated cases, the power to impose a fine. We find no point at which the reasonableness of the exercise of this discretion is open to attack.

The penalty attached to the charge upon which petitioner is held is not so excessive as to be out of harmony with the laws of the state. For the first offense he might, under the state law, had he exceeded the rate of 20 miles per hour, have been penalized in the sum of $100 and imprisonment for 30 days in the county jail. Under the provisions of section 26 of the ordinance, for exceeding the rate of 30 miles per hour he may be imprisoned not less than 10 nor more than 50 days in the city jail. That the hazard to life and property increase with the speed of the machine and the corresponding difficulty of keeping it under control must be conceded. Indeed, it would seem not unreasonable to say that, where the state Legislature, after a careful consideration of the subject, has declared that 15 miles per hour is a proper maximum for speed in an incorporated city, and a municipality has extended this limit to 20 miles per hour, the person who drives his machine through the streets of a city at a rate in excess of 30 miles per hour is guilty of wantonly defying all law and restraint.

We have not examined all the sections of the Penal Code to ascertain whether any of the misdemeanors therein mentioned are made punishable by imprisonment for the first offense, without the alternative of a fine. The only sections of the Penal Code, to which our attention has been called, which purport to regulate the conduct of a person who, for love of sport, or speed, is willing to imperil the lives of others are sections 348 and 349. The first of these makes it a felony for the captain of a steamboat carrying passengers, who, either from ignorance or gross neglect, or for the purpose of excelling any other boat in speed, allows the boilers of his boat to be overstrained so as to burst and thereby endanger human life. Section 349 makes it a felony for an engineer or person having charge of a boiler to do practically the same thing. No injury to a human being is necessary to establish the offense in either case. The endangering of human life is alone sufficient. In such cases no intent is requisite, as they, like the matter before us, come within the purview of the last clause of section 20 of the Penal Code: "In every crime or public offense there must exist a union or joint operation of act and intent, or criminal negligence."

If the carrying of passengers by the owner of an automobile for hire at a rate in excess of 30 miles per hour were to be declared by the Legislature to so endanger their lives as to justify the classification of this act with that of the steamboat captain, covered by section 348—that is, to be a felony—we are of opinion that it could not well be said that such legislation was unreasonable or out of harmony with the other penal legislation of the state. The imperiling or endangering of the lives of citizens upon the streets of a city by the same act may, we think, be made punishable with imprisonment in the city jail for from 10 to 50 days without subjecting the ordinance doing this to the criticism that it is out of harmony with the other penal laws of the state because imposing an excessive punishment.

The ordinance being valid on the grounds stated, it becomes unnecessary to consider the question whether or not it can be sustained as legislation relating to a "municipal affair" under section 6, art. 11, of the state Constitution. The writ is therefore discharged, and the prisoner remanded to the custody of the chief of police.

Ex parte KAWAGUCHI. (Cr. 127.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 24, 1910.)

1. Criminal Law (§ 238*) — Commitment—Sufficiency of Evidence.

Evidence held sufficient to support a magistrate's order of commitment for trial under Pen. Code, § 872, providing that if it appears from the magistrate's examination that a public offense has been committed, and there is sufficient cause to believe accused guilty, the magistrate must order that he be held for trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 493; Dec. Dig. § 238.*]

2. Habeas Corpus (§ 30*)—Scope of Remedy.

Habeas corpus cannot be made to serve the office of a writ of error, and hence where there was competent evidence before a committing magistrate tending to establish an offense, and sufficiently showing the connection of the person committed with the perpetration thereof, it is immaterial, upon his application for habeas corpus for insufficiency of the evidence, that hearsay evidence was also admitted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Habeas Corpus, Cent. Dig. § 25; Dec. Dig. § 30.*]

3. Criminal Law (§ 238*)—Preliminary Examination—Evidence—Corpus Delicti.

Upon a magistrate's preliminary examination, evidence that a homicide had been committed, and that the coroner upon holding an inquest had examined decedent's body and found a number of knife and gunshot wounds, an admission of accused that he had inflicted a knife wound on decedent, and testimony of another that he was well acquainted with decedent, and that the body over which the inquest was held was his, sufficiently proved the corpus delicti so as to warrant reception of evidence by the magistrate tending to connect accused with the commission of the alleged crime.

Application by T. Kawaguchi for a writ of habeas corpus. Writ denied, and petitioner remanded.

McCurdy & McCurdy and S. Luke Howe, for appellant. Frank Atkinson, Deputy Dist. Atty., for the People.

HART, J. The petitioner is held in custody by the sheriff of Sacramento county under an order of commitment for the crime of murder; said order having been made on the 27th day of December, 1909, by the justice of the peace of Sacramento township, in said county, acting in his ex officio capacity of magistrate. The petitioner now claims that the magistrate was without jurisdiction to commit him for trial for the alleged reason that the evidence upon which said commitment is founded is insufficient to disclose that a public offense was committed, or, if such offense is sufficiently shown, that there is not enough evidence to establish "sufficient cause to believe the defendant (petitioner) guilty thereof." Pen. Code, § 872.

A copy of the stenographer's transcript of the testimony received by the magistrate at the examination of the charge accompanies the petition here and is made a part thereof, and it is very clear, from an examination of said testimony, that the contention of the petitioner cannot be sustained. The testimony discloses that the homicide occurred at Courtland, in Sacramento county, on or about the 12th day of May, 1909. The deceased, one Nagatani, and the petitioner and two other Japanese, who were jointly charged with the petitioner for the crime of murder in the deposition upon which the warrant of arrest was issued, had been, on the day of the homicide, drinking together at the boarding house of one Arinobu, at Courtland, and that at that time they were all apparently on friendly terms with each other. Finally, all these parties left the drinking place together, going out of the building and to the rear thereof. Subsequently all but the deceased returned to the boarding house, and, when Arinobu made inquiry as to the whereabouts of the deceased, he was told by the petitioner and one Daimaru that he had been killed. The petitioner then admitted to Arinobu that he had inflicted a knife wound in the abdomen of the deceased. The coroner testified that, upon holding an inquest to determine the cause of the death of Nagatani, he examined the dead body and found therein a number of knife and gunshot wounds. Arinobu testified that he was well acquainted with the deceased, and declared that the dead body was that of Nagatani.

The foregoing is a brief résumé of the facts proved before the magistrate, and obviously they are sufficient to support the order of commitment.

Counsel for petitioner point out a mass of hearsay, and therefore incompetent, testimony which was given before the magistrate, and insist that such testimony is insufficient to justify the order of commitment. If all the testimony upon which the commitment was ordered was identically of the same character as that to which we refer, there might perhaps be some basis for the claim that the order committing the petitioner for trial was without authority or beyond the power of the magistrate, for the law does not contemplate that a party shall be put upon his trial for a felony under an information having for its sole support a commitment based entirely upon hearsay or incompetent evidence. Such evidence is in fact no evidence at all. But, as we have shown, there is competent evidence disclosed by the transcript tending to establish the offense and sufficiently showing the petitioner's connection with the perpetration thereof, and, therefore, we are, manifestly, not concerned in this proceeding with the rulings of the magistrate admitting hearsay evidence. In other words, the remedy here applied for cannot be made to serve the office of a writ of error.

The suggestion that the corpus delicti was not sufficiently proved to warrant the reception of evidence by the magistrate tending to connect the petitioner with the commission of the alleged crime is without merit, as must be manifest from the facts which we have shown were proved at the examination of the charge.

The magistrate was fully warranted in committing the petitioner for trial for the crime of murder upon the evidence presented before him, and the writ must, therefore, be discharged, and the petitioner remanded. Such is the order.

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 917*)—SUSTAINING DEMURRER TO ANSWER—REVIEW.

Action by the Pacific Union Club against the Commercial Union Assurance Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Otto Irving Wise, for appellant. Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Action on fire insurance policy issued by defendant upon plaintiff's property situated in the city of San Francisco. A demurrer to the amended answer was sustained, and, defendant declining to further amend, judgment passed for plaintiff in the sum of $1,765, from which defendant appeals. The fire which is alleged to have destroyed plaintiff's property occurred April 19, 1906, the day following the earthquake of April 18th of that year.

The company insured the plaintiff for the term of 12 months "against all direct loss or damage by fire except as hereinafter provided," and among other exceptions was the following: "This company shall not be liable for loss caused directly or indirectly by invasion, earthquake, riot, civil war or commotion. * * *" Basing its defense upon this exception, it is alleged in the answer as follows: "Defendant alleges that in and by the policy of insurance in this action sued upon it was provided, and by and between the plaintiff and the defendant stipulated and agreed, that the defendant company should not be liable for loss caused directly or indirectly by earthquake. And defendant alleges that on the 18th day of April, 1906, the city of San Francisco was visited by a severe earthquake shock between the hours of 5 and 6 o'clock a. m., and by other and similar shocks following said first-mentioned shock; that on the said 18th day of April, 1906, and at the time of the happening of said earthquake shock and of the fires hereinafter referred to following thereupon, there was in said city of San Francisco a fire department fully and sufficiently equipped with fire engine and hose and other proper and sufficient appurtenances for the extinguishing of fires in said city, and there was up to the time of the first of said shocks a water system in use in said city, with water mains, pipes, and hydrants throughout said city and in and along the streets thereof with an abundant supply of water for the extinguishment of fires and for the extinguishing of all of the fires following upon said earthquake shocks, including those immediately caused thereby and other fires resulting therefrom, and all other fires occurring upon said 18th day of April, 1906. And defendant alleges that all of said fires, and each thereof, could and in the usual and ordinary course of events would have been extinguished if said water supply had been available at the time of the breaking out of said fires, and each thereof, and thereafter during said 18th day of April, 1906; but defendant alleges the fact to be that the said earthquake shocks, or some one or more thereof, broke the mains and piping through which said supply of water was brought to and into said city of San Francisco, and shut off said supply of water from said city and from the portion of said city wherein the property described in the complaint was situate, and wherein the fire by which said property was destroyed had its origin, and that by reason of the breaking of said pipes and the shutting off of the water the said fire department was without water to play upon said fires and upon said last-mentioned fire, by reason whereof said fires and said last-mentioned fire spread throughout said city, and said last-mentioned fire reached to said property of the plaintiff and destroyed said property. And defendant alleges that said fire would not have spread and said property would not have been destroyed and said loss would not have resulted if said water supply had not been cut off as in this amended answer set forth."

Assuming, as we must, under the admissions of the demurrer, that defendant could have proven that the cutting off of the water supply caused the loss, but for which no loss would have occurred, the sole question is: Was the loss in legal contemplation caused either directly or indirectly by the excepted peril, earthquake?

Respondent states that the theory upon which the trial court held the amended answer to be insufficient was that it sought to make the "absence of an extrinsic saving power," namely, the water supply, cut off by earthquake, the cause of the loss. It is appellant's contention that "where, as here, there is independently of the first antecedent cause (the lack of water) another cause (the earthquake) but for which such first antecedent cause of the immediate cause (the fire) would not have been operative in bringing about through such immediate cause the final result, and but for which such final result would not have occurred, then, in that case, the independent cause (in this case the earthquake) must, in legal contemplation, be considered the efficient proximate cause to which the result is attributable."

In simple phrase, as we understand the contention, the earthquake broke the water mains and deprived the city of water to fight the fire, and the fire subsequently found its way to plaintiff's property and destroyed it, and hence the earthquake became "the efficient proximate cause to which the result is attributable." Appellant seeks to support this view by quite a number of adjudged cases of most of which McAfee et al. v. Crofford, 13 How. 447, 14 L. Ed. 217, is a typical example. Plaintiffs in error, assisted by others, carried off and frightened away certain slaves who were working for defendant in error on his plantation. By reason of the forced absence of these slaves defendant suffered the loss of much cordwood, through flood, and also damage to and loss of his crops by intrusion of cattle and hogs. The case went to the Supreme Court, and it was there held, affirming the verdict of the jury for defendant in error, that the taking and frightening away of the slaves, the agency through which the damage complained of would have been obviated, could in law have been considered the cause of the losses suffered, and that whether such was or was not the fact was a question for the jury. The application is thus made: The slaves were the saving agency which, if used in the ordinary and expected way, would have averted the injury, as here the water system and water supply would have obviated the injury had it not been cut off, and the plaintiffs in error were related to that case as the earthquake is to the case here. These are cases of recovery based upon the tortious acts of the persons sued.

Other cases are cited where companies were held liable for fire losses for breach of their contract to have water available to extinguish fires. In New York Express Co. v. Traders' Ins. Co., 132 Mass. 377, 42 Am. Rep. 440, the court said: "So far as the question what constitutes proximate cause is concerned, the same considerations apply equally in actions of contract as in actions of tort." In that case the insurance was against loss by fire. The vessel in which the goods were lost met with a collision and was sunk. "With the collision fire instantaneously broke out"; but the fire did not reach the goods, which were lost wholly from the sinking of the vessel. The fire, however, so disabled the engine that the pumps could not be operated, and but for this the water flowing into the breach made by the collision could have been pumped out and the vessel driven into shallow water, and, also, but for which water could have been pumped and the fire extinguished. The court said: "If means and appliances were at hand by which that result (the loss) could have been avoided, and the intervention of a new agency, namely, that of fire, prevented their use, then the fire was the proximate and immediate cause of the loss. It added a new element of destruction which rendered it impossible to control or prevent the consequences which would naturally follow from the collision." It was in this connection that the court stated the rule as to what constitutes proximate cause. It may be doubted whether the fire as an antecedent cause in that case may be likened to the earthquake in the present case, for the fire and collision were nearly, if not in fact, coincident, and the effect of the fire was shown to have been so immediate and direct as to differentiate the case from this case in which the alleged antecedent cause preceded the immediate cause many hours. However, the exception here is, as we think, loss by fire caused directly or indirectly by earthquake, and not loss directly or indirectly by earthquake alone. In Yoch v. Home Mutual Ins. Co., 111 Cal. 503, 510, 44 Pac. 189, 190 (34 L. R. A. 857), it was decided that the words, in a policy of fire insurance, "except as hereinafter provided," in connection with the words "loss or damage by fire," against which the insurance is made, "may be disregarded as a limitation upon the causes of fire against which the insurance is made rather than as a qualification of the contract of insurance." And in Williamsburgh City Fire Ins. Co. v. Willard, 164 Fed. 404, 90 C. C. A. 392, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 103, the court held that inasmuch as the insurance was against direct loss or damage by fire, occasioned by or through earthquake, there must be read into the exception clause the words "by fire," making the policy cover "loss or damage by fire occasioned by or through any volcano, earthquake, hurricane, etc., for it must be that the sole purpose of the exception is to specify certain losses by fire not insured against." We cannot accept the rule to be in this state as stated in the Massachusetts case, supra. The action in the present case is upon contract and does not sound in tort and the rule of proximate cause in actions for breach of contract and not for torts is to be invoked to determine whether under the contract the excepted peril directly or indirectly induced the happening of the peril insured against.

The distinction is clearly pointed out in Hunt Bros. Co. v. San Lorenzo Water Co., 150 Cal. 51, 56, 87 Pac. 1093, 1095, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 913, as follows: "It is the well-settled rule of damages for any breach of contract that the damages that can be recovered for a breach are only such as may reasonably be supposed to have been within the contemplation of the parties at the time of the making of the contract, as the probable result of a breach. Other damages are too remote. In this lies the distinction between damages for tort; the rule as to tort being that the injured person may recover for all detriment proximately caused thereby 'whether it could have been anticipated or not.'" Civ. Code, § 3333. See, also, Westwater v. Grace Church, 140 Cal. 339, 73 Pac. 1055; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Melick, 65 Fed. 184, 12 C. C. A. 544, 27 L. R. A. 629. We see no reason why the rule should not equally apply where the plaintiff seeks to recover under a covenant in the contract, and where the defendant seeks to evade liability under the contract. The following cases illustrate the application of the rule where consequential damages were sought by the plaintiff but were held to be too remote: Friend & Terry Lumber Co. v. Miller, 67 Cal. 464, 8 Pac. 40, failure of a vendor to deliver building material and piles; Pendleton v. Cline, 85 Cal. 142, 24 Pac. 659, failure to make an abstract on time; Elder v. Kutner et al., 97 Cal. 490, 32 Pac. 563, impairment of credit resulting in inability to sell land or contract a loan; Kenyon v. Western Mine Tel. Co., 100 Cal. 454, 35 Pac. 75, failure to be appointed to an office because a telegram had not been promptly delivered. Here we have a policy indemnifying against "loss by fire" with the exception where the "loss," or, as we think was contemplated, "loss by fire," was "caused directly or indirectly by earthquake." The averments are that the earthquake broke the water mains, and the water so escaped that the fire department of the city had no water with which to extinguish the fire occurring the next day. It seems to us clear that the averments fail to show that the earthquake was, in legal contemplation, the cause of the fire.

In the case of Commercial Union Assurance Company, Plaintiff in Error, v. Pacific Union Club, Defendant in Error, 169 Fed. 776, 95 C. C. A. 242, the same parties as here, and where the pleadings were not essentially different from the pleadings here, the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, in a decision rendered May 3, 1909, reached the same conclusion as the trial court in the present case. The opinion is by Mr. Justice Ross and is printed in respondent's brief. We quote: "The insurance was against all direct loss or damage by fire, with the exception that for such loss—that is to say, loss by fire 'caused directly or indirectly by earthquake'—the company should be liable." The court took the same view of the contract as did the court in Williamsburgh City Fire Ins. Co. v. Willard, supra, and read into the exception clause the words "by fire." "What did the parties mean by this express language of their contract? Is it at all reasonable to suppose that where the company stipulated for exemption for loss by fire 'caused directly or indirectly by earthquake' it meant that it should not be liable for any loss or damage by fire which could be prevented by the use of the water supply of the city in the event its use be prevented by the breaking of the water mains by an earthquake shock? As well might it also be said that the company meant that it should not be liable for any loss or damage by fire which could be prevented by the use of the fire department of the city of San Francisco in the event its use be prevented by the destruction of its apparatus, or the killing or disabling of its men or horses by an earthquake shock or shocks. * * * No question of water supply appears to have entered into the contract in question. It contains no clause imposing any obligation on the insurer in respect to water, or specifying any consequences to result from a lack of such supply by the city or any other third party. * * * We think the court below was right in its ruling that the matters set out in the amended answer constitute no defense to the action." Suppose the effect of the earthquake had been such as to render the streets impassable for the fire engines, although the water mains were not disturbed; or that, as suggested by respondent, a "riot" (which is one of the excepted perils mentioned in the policy) of such violence had occurred that the firemen were called out to assist the police in quelling it, and, while so engaged, a fire happened which could not be but would have been extinguished but for the riot, and the fire therefore spread and destroyed the insured property. It certainly could not be contended that the excepted perils would include such a case. Or, suppose by the "invasion" of an enemy (and invasion is one of the excepted perils) the water mains leading to the city had been cut and a fire ensued which could not be extinguished for lack of water, could it be said that such an occurrence practically worked a suspension of this and all similar policies and would shield the insurer? The insurance being against "loss by fire" when "caused directly or indirectly by invasion," it is unreasonable to suppose that the policies contemplated that an enemy might cut the water mains; that a fire might occur thereafter which the fire department could not extinguish because the water supply had been cut off. Such consequence is too remote to be deemed to have been contemplated by the parties.

Reduced to its simplest form, the contention of appellant is that because the earthquake destroyed the water mains, thus preventing the water to be used to extinguish the fire, the earthquake was the cause of "the absence of an extrinsic saving force" which could not be applied to extinguish the fire. We cannot, however, regard the earthquake as the indirect cause of the fire loss. Respondent cites, as illustrative, Ionides v. Universal Marine Ins. Co., 14 C. B., N. S. 259, a case of marine insurance. A ship with a cargo of coffee was insured against perils of the sea, but, warranted free from all consequences of hostilities, went ashore. The light at Cape Hatteras, existing there for many years, had been extinguished by the rebel authorities to impede and harass the United States shipping, and, in consequence thereof, the captain of the ship, intending to round the cape and then to steer due north, being out of his reckoning, and believing that he had passed the cape, ran the ship ashore at Hatteras Inlet, where she was finally lost. The question was whether the loss was a peril of the sea, or whether because of the absence of the light which had been extinguished by the enemy and the insurer thus brought within the warranty. The court held, except as to certain of the cargo which was saved, that the cargo was lost by peril of the sea. After stating that, in the construction of the contract of insurance, the proximate or immediate cause of the loss alone is that to which we can look, as the established law in Europe and America, Byles, J., in his opinion, said: "Then, what were the three things which combined to cause the loss—assuming that the captain would have seen the light if there, and so would have been warned in time to save the vessel? First, the original meritorious cause (and in popular language the cause of the loss) was the captain's being out of his reckoning. He was some 50 miles to the westward of his course, without knowing it. The absence of the light was, as I before observed, merely the absence of an extrinsic saving power. Could that be said to be the cause of the ship's destruction? Suppose a man throws himself into the Serpentine, and the means of rescuing him are not at hand, and he is drowned. Could it be said in that case that the man was drowned because of the absence of the saving power? Apply that here. The absence of the light at Cape Hatteras was but the absence of a warning, leaving the proximate and immediate cause of the loss, the miscalculation of the captain, which is plainly a loss by the perils of the sea." The case of Brown v. St. Nicholas Ins. Co., 61 N. Y. 332, was one of marine insurance upon the cargo of a canal boat, the policy containing a clause that if the boat was "prevented or detained by ice, or the closing of navigation, from terminating the trip," the policy should cease. The boat was proceeding down the Delaware river, on its way to the Chesapeake and Delaware canals, where a storm separated her from the towing tugs, and she was driven ashore, where ice formed around her so that the tugs could not reach her, and she became frozen in, and so remained until a thaw came. A wind then arose, and through it and the ice she was driven upon another boat, broke in two, and sank. The court held that the proximate cause of the loss was the original stress of the weather which drove the boat ashore, and that the fact that the ice formed and prevented the tugs from reaching her did not bring the insurers within the exception in its policy. Referring to the Ionides Case, the court said: "The failure of the tugs to reach the boat was, in the words of Byles, J., the 'absence of an extrinsic saving power.'" We are unable to discover any force in appellant's distinction which it seeks to draw, between rescuing the subject of the loss from the peril and preventing the operation of the destructive peril upon the subject of the loss. Respondent cites, in further illustration of its contention, Northwest Transp. Co. v. Boston Marine Ins. Co. (C. C.) 41 Fed. 793. In that case a vessel was stranded in a fog, and before she could be got off a storm arose, and, to save the cargo and ship, the master scuttled her, causing the loss in question. It was held that the proximate cause of the loss, arising from the scuttling, was the storm, and not the stranding, and that the loss was within the policy. It was urged by the answer in that case that the stranding should be regarded as the proximate or efficient cause of the disaster which befell the vessel, because such stranding never ceased to operate until the loss was complete—because it created the necessity for the scuttling—and should therefore be regarded as the causa causans of the loss, for the reason that if the vessel had not been stranded she would probably have sustained no injury from the storm, or would not have been compelled to resort to scuttling as a means of safety. The opinion is instructive. The court said: "A correct application of the doctrine of proximate and remote cause establishes, in my opinion, the proposition that the storm rather than the stranding should be considered the proximate efficient cause, and the loss resulting from the voluntary scuttling of the vessel. * * * The storm which created the necessity for scuttling the vessel was in no sense set in operation by the stranding, but was a distinct, independent, and intervening cause, nearest to, and therefore properly chargeable with, the disaster."

Appellant makes the point that the words "directly or indirectly" mean "proximately or remotely," and therefore appellant is not liable for a loss of which an earthquake is the remote cause. Each of the parties refers to certain provisions of the policy to support the contention of each that the true meaning of the words used is to be found in the policy itself. It would not be profitable to explore the cases in order to find just when "direct" is held to mean "proximate," or "indirect" to mean "remote." In Williamsburgh City Fire Ins. Co. v. Willard, supra, the court held, as we have seen, that the excepted peril, earthquake, as well as the other excepted perils grouped with it, was intended to be such only when operating as a direct or indirect force in causing or starting the fire (see Yoch v. Home Mutual Ins. Co., supra); and that it was unnecessary to determine whether or not the loss was proximately caused by earthquake, since it was not the direct cause of the plaintiff's loss.

If we resort to other parts of the policy to determine the meaning of the words used in the clause describing the excepted perils, we should only find ourselves in doubt in which case the well-settled rule would require us to construe the words in favor of the insured. Besides, there is this further rule, as quoted in Berliner v. Insurance Company, 121 Cal., at page 461, 53 Pac. 920 (41 L. R. A. 467, 66 Am. St. Rep. 49), from Equitable Ins. Co. v. Osborn, 90 Ala. 201, 207, 9 South. 869, 870 (13 L. R. A. 267): "Exceptions of this kind are construed most strongly against the insurer, and liberally in favor of the insured. This is now the settled rule for construing all kinds of insurance policies, rendered necessary, especially in modern times, to circumvent the ingenuity of insurance companies in so framing contracts of this kind as to make exceptions unfairly devour the whole policy."

We are unwilling to accept as sound the argument of appellant which may be said to rest primarily upon the assumption that earthquake, as an excepted peril, must be regarded as the cause of the fire, although concededly it is not by the pleadings in any way connected with starting it. We are quite satisfied to follow the rule laid down in Hunt Bros. Co. v. San Lorenzo Water Co., supra, namely, "that the damages that can be recovered for a breach of contract are only such as may reasonably be supposed to have been within the contemplation of the parties at the time of the making of the contract, as the probable result of the breach." We cannot bring ourselves to believe that either one of the parties to the contract here ever dreamed, much less contemplated, that earthquake might cut off the water supply of the city, and, if this should happen, that this and all like policies furnished no promise of indemnity from loss by fire occurring during such dearth of water.

A number of cases have quite recently been tried in the United States Circuit Court for the United States—Judge Deitrich presiding—in which the insurance companies made successful defense where they were able to show that the fire was directly traceable to the earthquake. In others they failed where, as here, the defense was that the earthquake indirectly caused the loss by cutting off the water supply, but had nothing to do with starting the fire. Numerous other cases have been tried in our state courts as well as in the United States courts, and this construction of the policies has held good in all of them. We have found but little difficulty in reaching the same conclusion.

The judgment is affirmed.

STOUT v. McNAB et al. (S. F. 5,098.)

1. Gifts (§ 78*)—Causa Mortis—Pleading.

The complaint in an action for the cancellation of an assignment of an insurance policy to a son alleged that plaintiff's testator during his last illness, in pursuance of a desire to divide his property among his heirs by gift to them before death, signed and delivered such assignment to his attorneys with directions to obtain the insurance company's consent to the assignment, but before the consent was given testator changed his intention and resolved to give such son other property and that the assignment was never delivered to such son, but that such son has asserted a claim to the policy, and that the attorneys, after testator's death, gave notice to the company that they claimed the proceeds of the policy for the son, as assignee. At the close of the trial, by leave of court, and with the avowed purpose of making the complaint conform to the proofs and to the theory on which the case was tried, the complaint was amended by adding the allegation that deceased retained possession of the policy during his life, and that he made, signed, and delivered the assignment to the attorneys with directions as aforesaid, without consideration, and with intent to make a gift of the policy to take effect only in case of death. The policy, which was made an exhibit, provided that any assignment thereof would be void unless assented to in writing by the company. Held, that the complaint showed a gift of the policy causa mortis, though the place where such amendment was interpolated left it uncertain as to whether testator's intent or the attorney's was alleged.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Gifts, Cent. Dig. § 151; Dec. Dig. § 78.*]

2. Gifts (§ 55*)—Causa Mortis.

The fact that the written assignment, which was made a part of the complaint, expressly declared the assignment to be "absolute and unconditional," does not necessarily show that the gift was not made in view of death but was a gift inter vivos, and irrevocable, as a gift causa mortis must be as absolute in its terms, so far as the donor and donee are concerned, as a gift inter vivos, the difference between them being that the former is revocable and the latter is not—the words used were merely evidence of testator's intent, but not conclusive.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Gifts, Cent. Dig. § 120; Dec. Dig. § 55.*]

3. Gifts (§ 78*)—Causa Mortis—Findings.

An objection that the finding of the court that the assignment was prepared and given to the attorneys to be forwarded to the company for its consent with the intent on the part of the testator that it should take effect only in case of his death was outside the issues was untenable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Gifts, Cent. Dig. § 151; Dec. Dig. § 78.*]

4. Gifts (§ 78*)—Causa Mortis—Findings.

As under express provisions of Civ. Code, § 1149, if instrument was prepared and delivered with intent that the gift should take effect only in case of the donor's death and in contemplation of death, this makes it a gift causa mortis and legally revocable, the finding of such facts operates as a negation of the effect of the allegations of an answer alleging that it was deceased's intention that the assignment should be absolute, and that it was prepared, signed, and delivered with that intent on his part if, as contended, such allegations were designed to aver a gift inter vivos. It was not necessary to negative the facts in the same language in which they were affirmed in the answer.

5. Gifts (§ 82*)—Causa Mortis—Evidence.

Evidence held to show a gift causa mortis.

6. Gifts (§ 81*)—Causa Mortis—Revocation—Evidence.

Evidence as to conversations between deceased and his attorneys, in the absence of the son, and after the assignment had been delivered to the son and forwarded to the insurance company for its consent, in which deceased directed its recall, and declared that he had changed his mind about giving the policy to the son, and further evidence of sending telegrams to the company directing it to return the assignment, which was done without the son's knowledge or consent, was admissible to show revocation of the gift.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; J. Q. White, Judge.

Action by George W. Stout, as executor of the estate of A. F. Redemeyer, against John L. McNab and others. From a judgment for plaintiff against defendant John A. Redemeyer, and an order denying his motion for new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

Charles W. Slack, Weldon & Held, for appellant. Jesse W. Lilienthal, Mannon & Mannon, Robert Duncan, and Thomas, Pemberton & Thomas, for respondents.

SHAW, J. The defendant John A. Redemeyer, appeals from a judgment against him and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

A. F. Redemeyer died on January 31, 1904, leaving surviving three sons, two daughters, and one grandchild, the daughter of a deceased daughter, as his heirs at law, John A. Redemeyer being one of the sons. In his lifetime the Union Mutual Life Insurance Company issued to him a policy of insurance on his life, which policy was in full force at his death. The plaintiff, as the executor of his estate, brings this action against the defendants to compel them to deliver up for cancellation a certain purported assignment of said insurance policy to the defendant, John A. Redemeyer, dated December 24, 1903, and assigned by the deceased, and to have a decree canceling said assignment and declaring it void. Defendants McNab and Hirsch answered disclaiming any interest in the policy and in the proceeds thereof.

The complaint alleged that the assignment was made by the deceased during his last illness, while he was extremely ill, in pursuance of a desire to divide his property among his heirs by gift to them before his death; that he signed it and delivered it to the defendants, McNab and Hirsch, with directions to forward it to the insurance company to obtain its written consent to said assignment of the policy; that it was so forwarded, but before any consent was given the deceased changed his intention and resolved to give John other property instead and had the said assignment returned to McNab and Hirsch, who were acting as his attorneys and advisers in the matter; and that it was never delivered to John A. Redemeyer, or to any person for him, but that John has asserted a claim to the policy and the proceeds thereof under said assignment; and that McNab and Hirsch, after the death of the deceased, gave notice to the company that they claimed the proceeds of the policy for John A. Redemeyer, as assignee. It is also alleged that the deceased retained possession of the policy during his life, and that he made, signed, and delivered the assignment to McNab and Hirsch with directions as aforesaid, without consideration, and with the intent to make a gift of the policy to take effect only in case of his death. The policy, which is made an exhibit to the complaint, contains a provision that any assignment thereof shall be void, unless assented to in writing by the company.

The appellant claims that the complaint does not show a gift of the policy causa mortis. This claim is based in part on the circumstance that the allegation that the deceased intended the gift to take effect only in case of his death, occurs in such grammatical connection, in the sentence containing it, that it is not a statement of the intent of the deceased Redemeyer, but a statement that McNab and Hirsch had that intent. The case was tried on the theory that a gift in view of death was alleged in the complaint. The aforesaid allegation was not inserted in the complaint until the close of the trial. The defendants' counsel during the trial repeatedly objected to evidence tending to prove a gift in view of death, on the ground that such gift was not alleged. These objections were overruled, obviously because the court believed the complaint sufficient in that respect. At the close of the trial, by leave of court, and with the avowed purpose of making the complaint conform to the proofs and to the theory on which the case was tried, the allegation aforesaid was inserted as an amendment to the complaint. The place where it was interpolated leaves it uncertain as to whose intent is alleged. But no demurrer for uncertainty was filed, or offered for filing, and no objection was then made on that ground. Under the circumstances, the defendants could not have understood otherwise than that the reference was to the intent of A. F. Redemeyer, and we hold the complaint sufficient in that respect. The only other reason advanced in support of the proposition that a gift in view of death is not averred in the complaint is that the written assignment in question, which is made a part of it, expressly declares that the assignment is "absolute and unconditional." This it is argued conclusively shows that the gift was not made in view of death, but was a gift, inter vivos, and irrevocable. This point is not sustainable. A gift in view of death must be as absolute in its terms, so far as the donor and donee are concerned, as a gift inter vivos. The difference between them is that the one is revocable by the giver and the other is not. A gift in view of death may be revoked at any time by the giver, and it is revoked by law upon his recovery from the illness, or escape from the peril, under the presence of which it was made. Civ. Code, § 1151. Gifts of any other kind cannot be revoked by the giver. Civ. Code, § 1148. But the form of a gift in view of death is as absolute and unconditional as a gift inter vivos. The title must pass to the donee at the time the gift is made and the donor must part absolutely with all control and with the title, subject only to the condition imposed by law that it may be revoked, in which case the title is regained by the giver. Daniel v. Smith, 64 Cal. 349, 30 Pac. 575. "The law requires a gift causa mortis to be absolute at the time it is given, but adds to it the condition that it may be revoked at the will of the donor, and that it is revoked by his recovery; but, if by the terms of the gift it is not to take effect until after the death of the donor, the disposal is testamentary and not a gift." Hart v. Ketchum, 121 Cal. 429, 53 Pac. 932. The insertion of the words "absolute and unconditional" in the assignment did not necessarily have the effect of depriving it of the character of a gift in view of death. It received that character from the circumstances under which it was made and the intent of the giver, and not from the terms of the gift or of the instrument by which it was effected. The above words, at most, would be merely evidence on the subject and they would not be conclusive.

The court found that the assignment in question was prepared and given to the attorneys to be forwarded to the company for its consent "with the intent on the part of the said A. F. Redemeyer that it should take effect only in case of his death." Other findings of fact to show a gift causa mortis were also made. The contention that these findings are outside of the issues is based on the aforesaid objections to the complaint, and, as they have been shown not to be well founded, it is unnecessary to say anything in regard to the findings except that they follow the allegations of the amended complaint as we understand it, and as we believe it must have been understood by the parties.

The point is made that the findings do not cover the issues tendered by the answer of the appellant, which alleged that it was the intention of the deceased that the assignment of the policy to John should be absolute, and that it was prepared, signed, and delivered with that intent on his part. These allegations are covered, in effect, by the findings last mentioned. It was not necessary to negative the facts in the same language in which they are affirmed in the answer. Under section 1149 of the Civil Code, if the instrument was prepared and delivered with the intent that the gift should take effect only in case of the donor's death and in contemplation of death, this makes it a gift in view of death and legally revocable, although absolute and unconditional in terms, and the finding of these facts operates as a negation of the effect of the allegations of the answer, if, as contended, those allegations were designed to aver a gift inter vivos.

We think the evidence was sufficient to sustain the findings as to the intention to make a gift causa mortis. The deceased at first mentioned a wish to insert in the assignment certain conditions which would have made the instrument void as an attempt to make a testamentary disposition of his property without executing a will, and he was advised that, if he desired to make a gift of the policy, it must be absolute in terms, and that there must be a delivery. This would be equally true, whether the gift was to be one in view of death or inter vivos. He then assented to the view that it must be absolute in its terms, and it was prepared accordingly. This testimony is not inconsistent with the fact that the gift was intended to be a gift in view of death. The other evidence fully sustains the findings on the subject of a gift causa mortis. Inasmuch as we hold that the assignment could have been revoked, as a gift in view of death, even if the same had been assented to in writing by the company, we do not consider it necessary to discuss or decide the point presented by the appellant that the assignment was good between the assignee and assignor as an equitable transfer, although the company never did consent thereto.

Over the objections of the appellant, evidence was admitted of conversations between the deceased and his attorneys, in the absence of John, and after the assignment had been delivered to John and forwarded to the company for its consent, in which the deceased directed its recall and declared that he had changed his mind about giving the policy to John. Evidence was also admitted of the sending of telegrams to the company directing it to return the assignment; this being done without John's knowledge or consent. There was no error in this ruling. If, as was claimed and found, the gift was a gift in view of death, it was revocable, and evidence of the steps taken by the donor towards such revocation was necessary to establish the plaintiff's contention that there had been a revocation. The evidence was not admissible to affect the validity of the instrument, but to prove a revocation of the gift made, or intended to be made, thereby.

It is proper to say that the case really shown by the complaint is that of an intended gift in view of death, which was not completely executed because, according to the allegations, there was no delivery of the assignment, and a revocation of the intended gift while the attempt to make it was in progress and before it was completed by delivery. The finding that there was a delivery shows that the gift was complete, in point of fact, assuming that the company's consent was not necessary, but this does not deprive it of the character of a gift causa mortis, nor render the evidence of a revocation inadmissible or prejudicial. We find no ground upon which the judgment or order denying a new trial can be held erroneous.

SAUNDERS v. YOAKUM. (Civ. 707.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Feb. 3, 1910.)

1. BROKERS (§ 66*)—COMMISSIONS—AGREEMENT BETWEEN BROKERS TO DIVIDE COMMISSIONS—NECESSITY FOR WRITING.

While Civ. Code, § 1624, requiring agreements employing brokers to buy or sell real estate for a commission to be in writing, does not extend to agreements between brokers to cooperate in making sales for a share of the commission, and recovery may be had in such cases on proof of an oral agreement. This presupposes that a valid contract for commissions is existent, a division of which could be subject of subsequent oral agreement.

Where a broker agreed to divide commissions on the sale of land with defendant if the latter effected a sale, and defendant thereafter agreed to pay plaintiff a commission for finding a purchaser, that the broker subsequently voluntarily gave plaintiff money on account of his influence in connection with the deal did not impair plaintiff's right to recover reasonable compensation for his services from defendant.

Jones & Weller, for appellant. John W. Shenk and E. R. Young, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. This is an appeal from a judgment and an order denying a new trial. The action was one brought by a broker to recover from another broker commissions earned in a sale of real estate. The court finds that one Edwards, under written authority, was constituted the agent of the owner for the sale of a certain tract of land, and in such authorization it was agreed that he was to receive the sum of $2,400 as commission in the event of a sale; that thereafter Edwards verbally agreed with defendant that, if he would effect a sale of the property, he would divide the commissions with him; that thereafter defendant agreed with plaintiff that, if he would procure a purchaser for any or all of the property, he would pay to the plaintiff a commission in the event of a sale; that thereupon plaintiff procured parties to purchase a two-thirds interest in the premises, and defendant himself purchased a one-third interest therein and the property was conveyed to the purchasers by the owner; that the defendant in such purchase received the benefit of $1,200, one-half of the commission so agreed to be paid to him by Edwards; that defendant refused to pay to plaintiff any portion of the commission so earned. The court finds that the value of the services rendered by plaintiff to defendant in and about the sale was the sum of $400, for which amount judgment was rendered.

It is appellant's contention that under these facts no recovery could be had, for the reason that no memorandum in writing was entered into between the plaintiff and defendant with relation to the commission which he was to receive. It is determined in Gorham v. Heiman, 90 Cal. 358, 27 Pac. 289, that section 1624 of the Civil Code does not extend to agreements between brokers to co-operate in making sales for a share of the commission, and that recovery can be had in such cases where only an oral agreement is established. This, however, presupposes that a valid contract for commissions is existent, a division of which could be subject of subsequent oral agreement. Aldis v. Schleicher, 9 Cal. App. 374, 99 Pac. 526.

Appellant further contends that there is no evidence to sustain the finding of the trial court that defendant requested plaintiff to procure purchasers and agreed to pay a commission therefor. There is testimony in the record that defendant stated to a witness that he had agreed to pay plaintiff a commission for his influence in helping to get parties to buy this property. It is true there is some conflict upon this point, but under the well-established rule the finding will not be disturbed. The fact that Edwards subsequently voluntarily gave Saunders $400 on account of his influence in connection with the deal would not have the effect to impair the agreement between plaintiff and defendant, nor to relieve defendant from his obligation to pay to plaintiff a reasonable compensation for his services in assisting defendant to earn the commission.

We find no error in the record, and the judgment and order are affirmed.

SOUTH END WAREHOUSE CO. v. LAVERY et al. (Civ. 575.)

1. JUDGMENT (§ 650*)—RES JUDICATA—DISTRIBUTION OF ESTATE.

2. TRUSTS (§ 205*)—POWER OF TRUSTEES—LEASES.

Under Civ. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Jno. A. Hosmer, Judge.

Action by the South End Warehouse Company (a corporation) against James V. Lavery and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Lent & Humphrey, for appellant. John F. Davis, Charles S. Wheeler, Campbell, Metson & Campbell, and Smith & Pringle, for respondents.

HALL, J. This is an appeal upon the judgment roll from a judgment entered upon an order sustaining the demurrers of the various defendants to the complaint.

The action was brought against James V. Lavery, Milos Mitrov Gopcevic, Charles B. Russell, Henry E. Mathews and Petar M. Gopcevic, as executors of the last will of Harry A. L. Floyd Gopcevic, deceased, and James T. Boyd, Adolphus D. Grimwood, and Cora M. Keeler, as the trustees under the trust created by the last will and testament of Cora Lyons Floyd, deceased, and James T. Boyd, Adolphus D. Grimwood, and Cora M. Keeler, individually. The action concerns a piece of real estate in the city and county of San Francisco, and the claim of plaintiff is predicated upon a lease executed by the defendants Boyd, Grimwood, and Keeler, as trustees under the will of Cora Lyons Floyd, deceased, to plaintiff, of the said premises. Plaintiff in its complaint prayed for judgment against the defendants that said lease is valid, and that it be specifically enforced, that the plaintiff may have such other, further, or different relief in the premises as to the court might seem meet and proper. The various defendants appeared in the groups as they were sued, and in such groups filed demurrers, raising the point only that the complaint failed to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, which were sustained. Leave to amend was not given, and the record before us does not disclose that such leave was asked. Respondents, in support of the order of the court sustaining the demurrers, urge various objections to the complaint, which might readily have been remedied by proper amendments.

Another, and the principal objection to the complaint, goes to the validity of the lease under which plaintiff claims, and is vital to the existence of any cause of action upon such lease, whether the action be considered as one for specific performance, an action in ejectment, or an action to determine adverse claims under section 738, Code Civ. Proc. As before stated, plaintiff claims under a lease executed by defendants Boyd, Grimwood, and Keeler, as trustees under the will of Cora Lyons Floyd, deceased.

It is alleged that the residue of her estate, including the real property involved in this action, was by decree of the court, having jurisdiction of the settlement of her estate, distributed to James T. Boyd, William T. Welcker, and Adolphus D. Grimwood, and their successors (Keeler is the successor to Welcker) "upon the trusts and to the intents and purposes following, that is to say: Upon trust to stand seised of the real property, and to stand possessed of the personal property of every name and description to the residue of said estate belonging. To sell any of the personal estate; * * * and with power also to improve any real estate of which said testatrix died seised, using for such purposes, however, only the property included in the trust thereby created, or the proceeds thereof. To apply as much of the prinicipal and interest of such property as may be necessary or proper to the support, maintenance, and education of the daughter of said testatrix in a manner suitable to her condition in life, until she shall have attained the age of twenty-one years, and thereafter to pay to her two-thirds of the net income of said trust estate, quarter-yearly, so long as she shall live. * * * And upon the death of said Harry Augustus Lyons Floyd to pay over and deliver the whole of the property of said trust estate to her descendants, if any, in accordance with the provisions of the statute of descents and distributions of the state of California. In case she shall leave no descendants, to pay over, convey and deliver the same property to such person or persons, and in such manner, as the said daughter shall or may by her last will and testament designate and appoint, and failing such testamentary disposition, that the estate be divided equally between Mrs. I. L. Mathews, sister of the testatrix, and Mrs. Hume and Mrs. McAdoo, sisters of the testatrix's husband, Richard S. Floyd, and if either of them shall not then be living, her share to go to her right heirs, and if there be no such heirs, to the survivors or survivor of them and her heirs."

The lease in question was executed by the trustees, and plaintiff on the 2d day of February, 1904, and in terms let to plaintiff the premises in suit from the 1st day of June, 1904, for the period of five years from said date, with the privilege to the lessee of an extension for three years at the same rental, and with the privilege of a further extension for two years at a rent to be agreed upon. Before the commencement of the term under the lease, to wit, on February 11, 1904, the said daughter of testatrix, said Harry A. L. Floyd, died leaving a will, which was subsequently admitted to probate, and in which she appointed and devised the premises in suit to Milos Mitrov Gopcevic. Though not expressly alleged it seems to be assumed that she died without issue. It is properly conceded by all parties that as the trust provisions of the will of Cora Lyons Floyd have been carried into the decree of distribution, which has become final, all question as to the validity of the trust is eliminated. Crew v. Pratt, 119 Cal. 139, 51 Pac. 38; Goldtree v. Allison, 119 Cal. 344, 51 Pac. 561; Matter of Trust of Trescony, 119 Cal. 568, 51 Pac. 951.

It will be observed that under the terms of the trust no express power is given to the trustees to lease the real estate, as might have been done under subdivision 2, § 857, Civ. Code, but it is not questioned by respondents that, as incident to the power to receive and apply the rents and profits to the support of the life beneficiary, the trustees had the power to make leases that would endure to the death of such life beneficiary.

Appellant contends that the trustees took an estate in fee in trust, and that notwithstanding that upon the death of Harry A. L. Floyd it became their duty under the trust to convey and deliver the trust property to her appointee, the lease theretofore executed by them was valid and binding upon such appointee. Respondents contend that whether the trustees took an estate in fee, or an estate for the life of Harry A. L. Floyd only, upon her death it was their duty under the trust to convey and deliver the trust property to her appointee free of any incumbrance made by them; that a lease that should endure beyond the life of Harry A. L. Floyd would be in contravention of the trust upon which the trustees held the property, and to that extent would be void. Section 870, Civ. Code. The argument of the appellant is in the main based upon the proposition that the trustees were seised in fee, and though such fee was held in trust, as it comprised the whole estate, they might grant a lesser estate, such as a leasehold, binding upon the ultimate beneficiary. In support of this doctrine we are cited to Greason v. Keteltas, 17 N. Y. 491, Ahern v. State, 115 N. Y. 203, 22 N. E. 193, 5 L. R. A. 449, 12 Am. St. Rep. 778, and Hubbell v. Hubbell, 135 Iowa, 637, 113 N. W. 512, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 496.

The New York cases above cited, as well as Newcomb v. Keteltas, 19 Barb. 608, sometimes cited in support of the same doctrine, all arose under a trust contained in the will of one John Gardner, dated July 2, 1817. In neither Greason v. Keteltas nor Newcomb v. Keteltas did it appear that either of the life beneficiaries were dead. No question was involved in either of said cases as to the validity or force of a lease after the termination of the term of the trust. What was said in either case as to the validity of a lease for a term extending beyond the termination of the trust, and executed by a trustee holding an estate in fee, is obiter, and not involved in the case, as clearly appears from a careful examination of the cases, as well as subsequent New York cases referring to them. Indeed, in Newcomb v. Keteltas, supra, it was only held that the trustees during the term of the trust might make a lease for a fixed term which would not be ab initio void, and it was intimated that such lease might become void upon the termination of the trust. Ahern v. State, supra, incidentally involved the validity of a lease under the same John Gardner trust, after the termination of the trust, but no point was made by the litigants as to its validity. Both parties conceded it to be valid, and the court was not called upon to determine the question, though it used language following and citing Greason v. Keteltas, supra. Hubbell v. Hubbell, supra, reviews the cases upon the general subject, but decides nothing pertinent to the case at bar. It reversed the judgment of the trial court authorizing a lease for 99 years, and intimated that the trustees ought not to make a lease that would extend beyond the probable duration of the term of the trust. Besides the fact that the early New York cases, relied on by appellant, did not involve the validity of the lease after the expiration of the trust, they did not arise under a law such as we have in this state in section 870, Civ. Code. This section provides that "Where a trust in relation to real property is expressed in the instrument creating the estate every transfer or other act of the trustees, in contravention of the trust, is absolutely void."

Subsequently to the creation of the trust involved in the New York cases above referred to a statute of uses and trusts was adopted in New York (1 Rev. St. [1st Ed.] pt. 2, c. 1, tit. 2), section 65 of which is in substance identical with section 870, Civ. Code. It is: "Where the trust shall be expressed in the instrument creating the estate, every sale, conveyance or other act of the trustees, in contravention of the trust, shall be absolutely void." This section was subsequently amended in 1897 so as to authorize trustees to make leases not exceeding a term fixed in the statute that should be valid though the trust should terminate in the meantime. Prior to this later amendment and under section 65 (identical with our section 870, Civ. Code), it was settled law in New York that a lease extending beyond the life of the trust estate would be to that extent invalid, unless such lease were in terms authorized by the trust. Matter of McCaffrey, 50 Hun, 371, 3 N. Y. Supp. 96; Gomez v. Gomez, 81 Hun, 566, 31 N. Y. Supp. 206; Id., 147 N. Y. 195, 41 N. E. 420; Matter of the City of New York, 81 App. Div. 27, 81 N. Y. Supp. 32, affirmed in 179 N. Y. 572, 73 N. E. 1127.

In the Matter of McCaffrey, supra, it was held that a lease ceased to be valid upon the termination of the trust as to the property leased. In this case the property passed to the remainderman without the necessity of a conveyance. It was not a trust to convey. In this case, however, it is pointed out that Newcomb v. Keteltas, supra, and Greason v. Keteltas, supra, arose before the enactment of the statute of uses and trusts, which it is said established a new system. It is pointed out that the doctrine announced in the two early New York cases above cited, that a trustee holding the fee may make leases that will endure beyond the term of the trust, is based on the doctrine that a trustee in fee can alienate the estate to a purchaser for a valuable consideration, but that "under the present statute (section 65 above quoted) he cannot." In Gomez v. Gomez, supra, it was held that a trustee could not of his own motion make a lease with a covenant for a renewal to be enforced after the termination of the trust. The Keteltas Cases are again referred to, and it is said: "These cases arose under a trust created prior to the enactment of the Revised Statutes, which effected a radical change in the law of trusts. In Matter of McCaffrey, 50 Hun, 371 [3 N. Y. Supp. 96], in which it was held that unless expressly authorized by the trust deed a trustee is without power to make leases extending beyond the trust term, and if he attempted it the lease is invalidated by the death of the beneficiary, the Keteltas Cases are considered, and the reasons given why they should not be held to be in conflict with the doctrine of that case. The consideration which they receive meets with our approval, and therefore justifies the omission of their further discussion." It was, however, held that the tenant was entitled to a renewal because the lease providing for such renewal had been authorized by a decree of the court of chancery in a proceeding to which all persons in interest were parties. This case was affirmed by the Court of Appeals (147 N. Y. 195, 41 N. E. 420), and Matter of McCaffrey cited as to power of trustees. The court said: "The trust created by the deed being for the life of Mrs. Gomez terminated with her death, and with her death the powers of the trustees were, as we have seen, at an end, except to turn over and convey the trust property as directed by the deed." The case of City of New York, 81 App. Div. 27, 81 N. Y. Supp. 32, affirmed by the Court of Appeals in 179 N. Y. 572, 73 N. E. 1127, is particularly in point.

The trust was to apply the income of the trust estate for the use of the wife of the testator during her life, and upon her death to divide the estate into five equal parts, and to invest one share for each of testator's five children, and collect and apply the rents from the share set apart for each child, and upon the death of any child to convey, pay, and assign his share to his issue. By the ninth clause of the will power was given the trustees to rent from year to year or for any term of years. The court held that there were two trusts—one terminating with the life of testator's wife and another as to each fifth of the trust estate, terminating at the death of his several children. It was further held that, notwithstanding the power to lease given in the ninth clause of the will, any lease executed during the lifetime of testator's surviving wife would terminate at her death. The court said: "The trust estate, therefore, which the trustees held at the time when the surviving trustee executed the lease in question, continued only during the life of the widow, and, unless express power to lease for a period longer than the duration of this life estate is expressed in terms in the will, the authority to lease would be limited upon the duration of such trust estate." This language is especially significant in view of the fact that the trustees continued to hold the estate after the death of the widow in trust for the children. All the preceding cases are reviewed in this case, and the change wrought in the law of New York by the statute of uses and trusts, providing that "every sale, conveyance or other act of the trustees in contravention of the trust is rendered absolutely void" is clearly pointed out. While the court in its conclusion placed stress upon a codicil to the will, this only had reference to the court's interpretation of the express power to lease given to the trustees by the ninth clause of the will.

The case clearly holds that the cases of Ahern v. State, supra, and Greason v. Keteltas, supra, relied on by appellant, have no application to trusts created under a statute with such a provision as is contained in section 870, Civ. Code, of this state, and that under such a statute the lease, unless expressly authorized in the trust, terminated with the trust. The dissent by certain of the judges was as to the effect of the express power to lease contained in the ninth clause of the will, and does not affect the general doctrine that, in the absence of such express power given by the trust instrument, a trustee may not make a lease that will have force after the termination of the trust. To the same effect is Weir v. Barker, 104 App. Div. 112, 93 N. Y. Supp. 732, where all the cases are again referred to, and it is said to be settled law that, prior to some recent amendments made to the statute of uses and trusts, leases made by trustees were valid only for a period ending with the trust term.

And this we think must be held to be the law of this state. The argument so earnestly urged that such a rule will greatly hamper trustees, holding property for a term of uncertain duration in making advantageous leases of the trust property, is more properly addressed to the wisdom of creating such trusts, without expressly authorizing leases for such terms as may be deemed prudent, by the creator of the trust. That such power may be expressly given is not doubted.

No such authority is contained in the instrument creating this trust. While the trustees are to stand seised of the real property in trust, to apply the income to the support of the daughter of the testator during her life, upon the death of such daughter their trust requires them to transfer and convey the property to other persons or person. A lease that would be an incumbrance upon the estate conveyed to the person or persons entitled thereto upon the death of the life beneficiary would be in contravention of such trust, and is therefore void.

The conclusion we have arrived at concerning the lease makes it unnecessary to discuss the other objections urged by respondents as to the sufficiency of the complaint, but for the reasons above set forth the court did not err in sustaining the demurrers, and the judgment is affirmed.

Under Code Civ. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter Bordwell, Judge.

Petition by Edward E. Taylor for writ of mandate against Mrs. F. W. Marshall and others, trustees of the Monrovia City School District, etc. From a judgment for defendants, and from an order denying plaintiff's motion to vacate the judgment, he appeals. Affirmed.

Edward E. Taylor, in pro. per., and McNutt & Hannon, for appellant. Woodruff & McClure, for respondents.

TAGGART, J. This is a petition for a writ of mandate to compel defendants to reinstate in the positions of principal of the high school and supervising principal of the grammar and primary schools of the city of Monrovia, from which he was dismissed by them, as trustees of that school district, without a regular hearing. The superior court gave judgment for defendants and denied the writ, and plaintiff appeals from the judgment and from an order denying his motion to vacate the judgment. The order mentioned not being appealable, the case is before us on the appeal from the judgment.

The trial court finds that plaintiff was employed by defendants on July 7, 1906, to fill the positions mentioned, for the ensuing year ending June 30, 1907, that he entered upon the discharge of the duties of these positions, and continued to perform them until March 2, 1907, on which date he was discharged by defendants for alleged incompetence, unfitness, and misconduct. No charges were ever preferred against him in writing, and no formal or any other hearing was given him by defendants on the said charges of delinquency. On February 2, 1907, however, said trustees in meeting assembled advised the plaintiff and discussed with him the unsatisfactory and demoralized condition of the schools under his supervision. He admitted that such condition existed, and requested time in which to correct the disorder and rectify the matters wherein the performance of his duties was unsatisfactory, and was given until February 28, 1907, to do so. He failed to make the corrections before that time, and on that date the defendants demanded that he resign on or before March 2, 1907. This he refused to do, and on the last-mentioned day defendants, sitting as a board of trustees, declared the positions occupied by plaintiff vacant. On March 5, 1907, plaintiff appealed to the county superintendent of Los Angeles county for reinstatement, under section 1698, Pol. Code, and after a trial regularly had, at which plaintiff was represented by counsel and presented evidence upon his own behalf, the county superintendent sustained the action of defendants in dismissing the plaintiff.

Plaintiff's application for the writ is based upon the contention that neither of the positions occupied by him in the Monrovia schools was that of a mere employé, but that such positions conferred upon him a right or office which he was entitled to use or enjoy, and that he had been unlawfully precluded from such enjoyment by the defendants. Code Civ. Proc. § 1085. He has exhaustively presented the matter upon the authority of a number of English cases which sustain his view that a school teacher discharged without a hearing will be restored by the courts, and that the proper method of securing this result is by mandamus. It is not necessary to distinguish those cases. The peculiar property rights in place and office recognized in England, which are entirely inconsistent with the general rule in force in most of the states of this country, render the English decisions of little aid here. We think, however, the solution of the question before us lies in the construction of our own statutes. Monrovia, in respect to the employment and dicharge of its school teachers, is governed by the general school law affecting cities "not having a city board of education." Subdivision 7, § 1617, Pol. Code. Because of this distinction in the statute, the case of Kennedy v. Board of Education, 82 Cal. 483, 22 Pac. 1042, and other cases decided by our Supreme Court, involving the construction of the provisions of the Political Code conferring a fixed tenure of office upon city teachers, have no application. This appears to be conceded in effect.

As above stated, plaintiff had a hearing before the county superintendent of schools, which appears to be the only one provided by the Code. We see no injustice in assuming that no other trial was intended to be given in the case of a dismissal of a teacher by the board of school trustees. The trustees are seldom men who would feel themselves qualified to act in a judicial capacity, and, as one or more of them would probably be or become the real contestant of the teacher's fitness, the atmosphere surrounding a tribunal so constituted would be so surcharged with the preconceived opinions of its members that a formal hearing would generally be useless. The course pursued by the defendants here in discussing the alleged delinquencies of the teacher with him and allowing him an opportunity to correct them, after an admission of their truth, is certainly all that the law contemplates shall be done on behalf of the plaintiff by the trustees. The word "dismissal," used in section 1698, does not imply a hearing or trial. This word imports summary action. Its use generally implies that the one dismissed is sent away by authority. In a legal sense, it is used to denote the sending of a case out of court without a trial. It is the summary disposal of a case as distinguished from a trial of it. Words and Phrases, vol. 3, p. 2105.

There is nothing in the language of the section conferring the power, or elsewhere in the statute, to our knowledge, restricting the authority of the county superintendent to act to such cases as have been formally heard by the board of trustees. Thus there was an order of a competent tribunal, regularly made, declaring that plaintiff was unfit to be restored to his former position and sustaining the action of the defendants in dismissing him. This finding and order were as binding upon the defendants as would have been an order directing his restoration. It is apparent that there was no legal duty resting upon them to restore the plaintiff to his position which can be enforced by a writ of mandate.

The remedy of plaintiff, if any he has, is by action on his contract for his salary. This form of action has been recognized by the courts of this state as a proper remedy in such cases. An action will lie against a board of trustees by the principal of schools, whom they have unlawfully deprived of his employment, in breach of his contract, and where it appears that he was ready and willing to perform the duties required and could not and did not obtain other employment, his damages will be measured by the sum he would have received under the contract. Hancock v. Board of Education, 140 Cal. 554, 74 Pac. 44. This would have afforded plaintiff a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law (section 1086, Code Civ. Proc.), and the writ was properly denied. In the absence of any suggestion that the question here involved has become moot from lapse of time, we have decided the case.

Judgment affirmed.

Application for certiorari by the Stimpson Computing Scale Company, a corporation, against the Superior Court of Yuba County. Order to show cause discharged.

J. C. Thomas, for petitioner. Brittan & Raish, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. On the 9th day of February, 1909, the petitioner, a foreign corporation, filed a complaint in the justice court of Marysville township against one J. Blue. At the same time the plaintiff therein filed with said court an undertaking executed on January 30, 1909, by the United States Fidelity & Guarantee Company through H. B. P. Carder, its attorney in fact. Said undertaking provided that: "Whereas an attachment against the said defendant, as security for the satisfaction of any judgment that may be recovered thereon, has been demanded by plaintiff; and whereas the plaintiff is a nonresident of the state of California, and under and by virtue of the Code of Civil Procedure of said state, section 1036, relative to foreign corporations, security for costs and charges, which may be awarded against such plaintiff, as may be required by the defendant, or bond for costs that may be required of the plaintiff on appeal, under and by virtue of section 974 of the Code of Civil Procedure of the state of California, should the plaintiff desire to take an appeal to a superior court, or other court from any judgment that may be rendered by the said justice's court or required to pay any costs in said justice's or superior court of California in and for the county of Yuba: Now, therefore, in consideration of the premises, and of such appeal, and attachment and costs which may be required, the United States Fidelity & Guarantee Company * * * does hereby undertake in the sum of two hundred and fifty dollars, and promises on the part of the plaintiff, that said plaintiff will pay all costs which may be awarded against the plaintiff, if the said defendant recover judgment in said action, plaintiff will pay all costs that may be awarded to said defendant, and all damages that he may sustain by reason of said attachment; and all costs that may be awarded to the said defendant on appeal to the superior court of the state of California, in and for the county of Yuba, and costs that may be awarded by any appellate court against the said plaintiff in favor of the defendant on certiorari or other appellate proceedings in the courts of the state of California, not exceeding the aforesaid sum of two hundred and fifty dollars, to which it acknowledges itself bound."

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes.

On the trial of the action on July 21st the justice of the peace granted a motion for a nonsuit on the ground that plaintiff had failed to prove that it had filed its articles of incorporation with the Secretary of State, as required by statute. On the same day plaintiff gave notice of an appeal to the superior court, and on the 16th day of August the papers were filed in the superior court. On the 3d day of September an amended complaint was filed in said superior court, and an answer thereto by said defendant Blue was filed on the 11th day of September. On September 27th a notice of motion was given to dismiss the appeal on the ground that "the said appeal was not taken in conformity with requirements of sections 975, 977, 978, and 978a of the Code of Civil Procedure." This motion was granted on October 4th following. On application of petitioner an alternative writ of certiorari was issued out of this court on November 3d to review the action of the said court in dismissing the said appeal.

The writ of review, it is clearly established, cannot be made to perform the office of a writ of error for the correction of errors of law or of fact. It only involves the question of jurisdiction. Thomas v. Hawkins, 107 Pac. 578. It is equally well settled that the superior court has no jurisdiction to entertain an appeal unless an undertaking to pay the costs on appeal has been given. It is clearly so provided in the statute and reaffirmed in numerous decisions of the courts. Section 978, Code Civ. Proc., provides that: "An appeal from a justice's or police court is not effectual for any purpose, unless an undertaking be filed with two or more sureties in the sum of one hundred dollars for the payment of the costs on the appeal." This is, as said by the court through Justice Hart in Thomas v. Hawkins, supra, an "essential and indispensable prerequisite to the conferring of jurisdiction of appeals from justices' or police courts on the superior court." Another condition for the perfecting of the appeal is provided in section 978a, Code Civ. Proc., as follows: "The undertaking on appeal must be filed within five days after the filing of the notice of appeal and notice of the filing of the undertaking must be given to the respondent."

In the case before us no such undertaking on appeal was furnished as provided by the statute, and no notice of the filing of any purported undertaking was given to respondent as required by said section 978a. The only undertaking given, as we have seen, was executed and filed months before the trial, while the statute requires that it shall be filed within five days after the notice of appeal is given. The consideration for the undertaking is that notice of appeal has been given, while here the obligation contemplates an uncertain event in the future. By one bond in the sum of $250 it is sought to comply with the requirement of section 867 of the Code of Civil Procedure, requiring an undertaking on attachment in a sum of not less than $50 nor more than $300, as fixed by the justice, also section 1036, providing for security for costs where the plaintiff is a foreign corporation, in a sum not exceeding $300, and the provisions of said section 978 in reference to the costs on appeal. Even if such an undertaking could be considered as a part of the proceeding to perfect the appeal, we would have no right to assume, in view of the record, that $100 thereof could be applied to the payment of said costs. For aught that appears to the contrary, the justice may have required a bond of $250 to indemnify the defendant against loss on the attachment, or the whole amount may have been required under the provisions of said section 1036. At any rate, this is not the bond required by the statute for costs on appeal, it was not filed at the time exacted, and it was not served on respondent. If these provisions of the law are to be disregarded, it would be easy to justify most any departure from the legislative will.

Neither is there any merit in the contention that the question of jurisdiction was waived by the respondent when he filed his answer in the superior court. Parties cannot waive jurisdiction of the subject-matter nor confer it by consent. Whenever the court's attention was called to the fact that no undertaking for costs had been filed or served, it was the court's duty to dismiss the appeal, as it had no legal power to proceed with the trial. Likewise, it may be said that the question before us is not affected by the fact that appellant offered to deposit $100 in the superior court in lieu of the bond.

In the first place, assuming that the court could have authorized such a deposit, it was a matter entirely within its discretion, and to such considerations the writ of review does not extend. Again, it is clear that this discretion may be exercised, if at all, only when some undertaking, though defective, has been given. It does not exist when no security whatever on appeal has been furnished.

For further assurance of the soundness of the foregoing views, we make the following quotations from the decisions:

In Coker v. Superior Court, 58 Cal. 178, it is said: "To effectuate an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace, three things are necessary, viz.: The filing of a notice of appeal with the justice, the service of a copy of the notice upon the adverse party, and the filing of a written undertaking. And all these things must be done within 30 days after the rendition of the judgment. Sections 974, 978, Code Civ. Proc. All of these are jurisdictional prerequisites. None of them can be dispensed with; nor can any one of them, if not done, be supplied, or, if fatally defective, be remedied after the time limited by the statute, for, until all the prerequisites are completed, the appeal is not effectual for any purpose." It may be remarked that the Legislature of 1909 (St. 1909, c. 695) added section 978a, providing the further prerequisite that the undertaking "must be filed within five days after the filing of the notice of appeal and notice of the filing must be given to the respondent."

In McCracken v. Superior Court, 86 Cal. 76, 24 Pac. 845, in reference to the failure of the sureties to justify within five days after an exception to their sufficiency, it is said: "The superior court had no jurisdiction to extend time within which to do an act in the justice's court while the action remained in that court, and, as we have seen, until the sureties justified, the cause remained in the justice's court. The appeal was not effectual for any purpose, and the superior court had no jurisdiction whatever in the case. It may be otherwise where a defective or informal undertaking has been given. In such cases it has been held that the superior court may allow a new undertaking to be filed. Coulter v. Stark, 7 Cal. 244; Cunningham v. Hopkins, 8 Cal. 33; Rabe v. Hamilton, 15 Cal. 31; Coker v. Superior Court, 58 Cal. 177. But to allow the superior court to assume jurisdiction and make the order complained of in this case, as against the plain provision of the Code that, 'if the sureties fail to justify within the term fixed,' it must be regarded 'as if no such undertaking had been given,' would be to override the express and unequivocal language of the statute." It is further stated that: "Authority is given the Supreme Court to accept a new undertaking in lieu of an insufficient one in certain cases and on certain terms, but we know of no such statutory authority on the part of the superior court."

In Lane v. Superior Court, 5 Cal. App. 762, 91 Pac. 405, it is held, as stated in the syllabus: "Upon an attempted appeal from the justice's court, where the sureties fail to justify when required to do so, the appeal must be regarded as if no undertaking had been given, and the cause remains in the justice court until a new undertaking is filed or until the sureties justify. In such case, when the justification of the sureties was abandoned and an undertaking was filed more than 30 days after the rendition of the judgment, the appeal is ineffectual, and the superior court has no jurisdiction thereof."

With greater reason even must it be held that where no undertaking is filed after the notice of appeal is given, and no opportunity afforded for an exception to be taken to the sufficiency of the pretended security, the superior court has no jurisdiction of the appeal.

The cases all emphasize the necessity for a substantial compliance with the requirement of the statute in order to clothe the appellate tribunal with authority to review the action of the trial court.

As here the requirement of the law was disregarded by the appellant, the court certainly had jurisdiction to dismiss the appeal, and the order to show cause is therefore discharged.

1. OFFICERS (§ 100*) — COMPENSATION — INCREASE — CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—"INCREASE IN COMPENSATION."

County Government Act (St. 1905, c. 431), § 215; Pol. Code, § 4290—provided that the salary paid to a county recorder should be in full compensation for all services, and that all deputies should be paid by him out of his salary; and Pol. Code, § 4261, as amended by St. 1909, c. 422, provided that in certain counties the recorder should receive a fixed salary and be allowed two deputies at a certain salary to be paid from a certain fund. Held, that where a recorder's term of office began January 1, 1907, the amendment allowing him to appoint two deputies to be paid by the county was an "increase in compensation," within the meaning of the constitutional provision that the compensation of county officers shall not be increased after their election or during their term of office.

2. OFFICERS (§ 100*) — COMPENSATION — INCREASE—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

Where the statute provides a fixed salary for the officer and for a certain number of deputies, all payable out of the county treasury, an increase in the salary of such deputies, or a provision for extra deputies, is not within the constitutional prohibition against increasing the salary of county officers after their election or during their term of office, since in such case the state has undertaken to pay the officer, and in addition to pay the expenses of running the office.

3. OFFICERS (§ 100*) — COMPENSATION — INCREASE—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

Under the constitutional prohibition against increasing the salary of county officers after election or during their term of office, where the statute allows a lump sum to cover their compensation and expenses, such sum cannot be increased during their term.

Application for a writ of mandate by Pauline E. Hanson against W. H. Underhill, as Auditor of San Mateo County. Writ discharged.

A. Kincaid, for petitioner. J. J. Bullock, for respondent.

COOPER, P. J. This is an application for a writ of mandate to compel the defendant, as auditor of San Mateo county, to draw a warrant upon the county treasurer for the payment of $66.66, claimed to be due petitioner as salary as deputy recorder of said county for the month of September, 1909. A demurrer has been interposed to the petition; and at the argument it was conceded that the facts stated in the petition are true, and that the question for determination is a question of law as to whether or not the petition states facts sufficient to entitle petitioner to any relief.

It appears that, at the November election in 1906, one J. F. Johnston was elected recorder of the county of San Mateo, and duly qualified as such. His term of office commenced on the first Monday after the 1st day of January, 1907. At the time he was elected, and when his term began, the law fixed his salary at $3,500 per annum, and in effect provided that such salary should be in full compensation for all services of every kind and description rendered by him, and that all deputies employed should be paid by him out of his salary. County Government Act 1905 (St. 1905, c. 431) § 215; Pol. Code, § 4290. At the session of the Legislature held in 1909, section 4261 of the Political Code was amended as to counties of the thirty-second class (San Mateo), by which it was provided as follows: "In counties of the thirty-second class the county officers shall receive as compensation for the services required of them by law or by virtue of their office the following salaries, to wit: * * * (3) The recorder, $3,500 per annum, and said recorder may appoint two deputy recorders, which offices are hereby created, who shall receive a salary of $800 per annum. The deputies herein provided for shall be paid at the same time and in the same manner and out of the same fund as the recorder is paid." St. 1909, c. 422. After the said section was so amended, and after it had gone into effect in May, 1909, the petitioner was duly appointed by Johnston deputy recorder of said county of San Mateo, and took the proper oath and qualified as such deputy recorder.

The Constitution of the state, at the time the said Johnston was so elected recorder, provided, and ever since has provided, as follows: "The compensation of any county, city, town or municipal officer shall not be increased after his election or during his term of office." The question then arises as to whether or not the amendment of 1909 to section 4261 of the Political Code increased the compensation of the county recorder of San Mateo county. When he was elected his compensation was $3,500, out of which he was required to pay all his deputies and assistants, as we have before stated, and of course the net sum he received as compensation was the remainder of the $3,500 after so paying his deputies or other assistants. The law then made no provision for paying any deputy or assistant; and hence, if the said recorder had been compelled to employ two deputies at a salary of $800 per year each, his net compensation would have been $1,900. Now if the Legislature had added $1,600 to the $3,500, thus making his salary $5,100, after his election and during his term of office, there would be no question but that such additional compensation would be within the plain prohibition of the Constitution. The Legislature could not, by a plain direct act, in terms increase his salary, and this is so evident that even a layman would so declare. If such salary could not be increased directly, it could not be increased indirectly; and, no matter what it is called, it is in effect an increase in compensation. It is as much an increase of compensation to allow to the recorder $1,600 with which to pay his deputies as it would be if he had been allowed $1,600 with which to pay his house rent or with which to purchase groceries. The case is the same in principle as Dougherty v. Austin, 94 Cal. 601, 28 Pac. 834, 29 Pac. 1092, 16 L. R. A. 161, where it was held that an order of the board of supervisors of Marin county, allowing the county clerk a deputy at a salary of $50 a month, where no deputy had been allowed before, was in effect an increase in compensation and void. It was there said by the Chief Justice: "The sum allowed to any given officer being a lump sum, out of which he must pay for the services of all deputies and assistants necessary for the prompt and faithful discharge of all the duties of the office, it is evident that his own compensation consists of the residue remaining after the payment of such deputies and assistants; and it is equally evident that, just so far as the county assumes the payment of such deputies and assistants, such residue is enlarged and the compensation increased."

The above case has not been overruled, but, on the contrary, has been followed in all subsequent decisions to which our attention has been called. Agard v. Shaffer, 141 Cal. 725, 75 Pac. 343; Humiston v. Shaffer, 145 Cal. 195, 78 Pac. 651. There are cases holding that where the statute provides a fixed salary for the officer, and a fixed salary for a certain number of deputies, all payable out of the county treasury, an increase in the salary of such deputies, or a provision for extra deputies, is not within the prohibition of the Constitution for the reason that in such case the state has undertaken to pay the salary of the officer, and in addition to pay the expenses of running the office, such as clerk hire, deputies, and so forth. Newman v. Lester, 105 Pac. 785 (Oct. 25, 1909); Tulare County v. May, 118 Cal. 303, 50 Pac. 427; Harrold v. Barnum, 8 Cal. App. 21, 96 Pac. 104. In the latter case the rule laid down in Daggett v. Ford County, 99 Ill. 334, is adopted, where it was held that if the statute allowed a fixed compensation as salary to the officer, and a further sum to cover the clerk hire and expenses of the office, if it was found that the sum so allowed was insufficient, such allowance might be increased; or, in other words, that the allowance for expense of clerk hire or deputies might be increased. But we have not been referred to any case that holds that, where a lump sum is allowed to cover compensation and expenses, such sum can be increased.

1. TRUSTS (§ 105*)—CONVEYANCE BY TRUSTEE—EFFECT—CONSTRUCTIVE TRUST.

Under Rev. St. U. S. § 2269, providing that where a party entitled to claim the benefits of the pre-emption laws dies before consummating his claim, his executor or administrator, or one of the heirs, may file the necessary papers to complete the same, the entry to be in favor of the heirs, and that a patent issued thereon, will inure to the benefit of such heirs, where the wife of a deceased person holding land in trust under the statute conveyed it, the deed vested the legal title to the wife's share in the grantee subject to a constructive trust in favor of the other heirs.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Dec. Dig. § 105.*]

2. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 102*)—TRUSTEE—CONSTRUCTIVE TRUST—WHEN STATUTE COMMENCES TO RUN.

The statute of limitations commences to run in favor of the trustee of an involuntary or constructive trust as soon as the trust relation is created.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. §§ 500–502; Dec. Dig. § 102.*]

3. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 103*)—CONSTRUCTIVE TRUST—DISAFFIRMANCE.

No disaffirmance of an involuntary or constructive trust is necessary to set the statute of limitations in motion.

4. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 105*)—PENDENCY OF ADMINISTRATION—TOLLING OF STATUTE.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1453, providing that unless it appears to the court that the rents, issues, and profits of real estate for a longer period are necessary to be received by the executor or administrator, in order to pay debts, or that it will probably be necessary to sell the real estate, the court, at the end of the time limited for the presentation of claims against the estate, must direct the administrator to turn over the real estate to the heirs, the pendency of the administration for more than 20 years could not toll the statute of limitations, since the heirs were entitled to the possession after the time for presentation of claims had passed, unless a sale of the property to pay debts or expenses of administration was necessary.

5. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 105*)—PENDENCY OF ADMINISTRATION—TOLLING OF STATUTE.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1452, providing that heirs may sue to quiet their title to real estate against any one except the executor or administrator, etc., and section 1581 providing that the possession of the executor or administrator is the possession of the heirs for the purpose of bringing suits to quiet title, etc., the pendency of the administration for more than 20 years could not toll the statute of limitations, since the heirs could at any time have brought an action to quiet title.

6. QUIETING TITLE (§ 10*)—TITLE TO SUPPORT ACTION—ADVERSE POSSESSION.

In an action to quiet title, title by adverse possession is sufficient to sustain a judgment for plaintiff.

7. TRIAL (§ 388*)—AGREED STATEMENT—FINDINGS OF FACT—NECESSITY.

Where a case is submitted on an agreed statement covering all the facts of the case, no findings of fact are necessary.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 911; Dec. Dig. § 388.*]

8. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1177*)—REVERSAL—NECESSITY OF NEW TRIAL.

Where the questions of law presented by appellant's brief were conclusions drawn from an agreed statement of facts, the error could not be corrected by a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 1177.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; George H. Hutton, Judge.

Action by Charles F. Earle, as executor of William Y. Earle, deceased, against John S. Bryant, individually and as administrator of William Bryant and Elizabeth Bryant, deceased, and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Nathan P. Bundy and Chas. W. Hatton, for appellants. Chas. S. McKelvey, for respondent.

TAGGART, J. This is an action to quiet title. The case was submitted to the trial court upon an agreed statement of facts. Judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff based upon full and complete findings made by the court. Appellants moved for a new trial upon a bill of exceptions, in which the only exceptions, or alleged errors, presented consist of some 10 specifications of the insufficiency of the evidence to justify or sustain the findings. The appeal is from an order denying that motion.

Plaintiff claims title to the real estate in dispute as executor of William Y. Earle, deceased, to whom it was conveyed for a valuable consideration by Elizabeth E. Bryant, by deed dated November 24, 1886. He entered immediately into possession thereof, improved the property by building a house and making other improvements, paid all taxes levied and assessed against the property, and his occupation and possession thereof were open, continuous, and exclusive, until he died on October 22, 1905. Since that time possession has been held and all taxes thereon paid by plaintiff in the same manner. Defendants' predecessor in title was William Bryant, who, in his lifetime, was the husband of said Elizabeth E. Bryant. Bryant settled upon said premises with his family in the year 1875, and continued to reside thereon until his death on December 22, 1882. In 1877 he made application to the United States Land Office to enter a pre-emption claim upon a government fraction which included the land in controversy. His application was rejected, but after successive appeals to the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Secretary of the Interior, his application was directed to be received by an order dated on February 27, 1885. Elizabeth E. Bryant, who had been appointed administratrix of the estate of William Bryant, deceased, in January, 1884, thereafter, on the 23d day of March, 1885, entered the property as a pre-emption claim, and on January 12, 1889, the patent thereto issued in her name. The land was returned by said Elizabeth E. Bryant as a part of the estate of William Bryant in the inventory and appraisement of said estate filed by her as administratrix; the said property being declared to be community in character. On October 11, 1884, a final account and petition for distribution was filed in said estate, wherein distribution of said property to the heirs at law of William Bryant was prayed for. No decree of distribution was made, and nothing further done in said administration. The petition signed in the name of Elizabeth E. Bryant, by her attorney, enumerates all the defendants, except Timothy Judson and J. E. Hartell, as heirs at law of William Bryant, deceased, and declares them all to be adults, except Amanda M. Bryant, whose age is given at 16 years. Knowledge on the part of William Y. Earle of the interest of the estate in the property mentioned, at the time he purchased, is admitted; and it is also stipulated that all of the defendants have lived in the county of Los Angeles near where said property is situated with knowledge of said conveyance, since it was made, and have never made any claim to the premises until this action was commenced, May 13, 1907.

Accepting the view that the title to the land which Elizabeth E. Bryant obtained from the government created a trust for the benefit of the estate of William Bryant, deceased, under the provisions of section 2269 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as that section then stood, she did not hold the title as administratrix, but under a trust created by the statute. This being the case, the effect of her deed to William Y. Earle was to vest the legal title to the property in him. Her interest therein passed by the deed, and the trust which arose in favor of the other heirs of William Bryant was one created by operation of law and therefore a constructive one. The cases cited by appellants to support their contention that the statute of limitation will not begin to run in favor of a trustee against parties claiming to be the beneficiaries of a trust, until there is a repudiation of the trust, relate to voluntary, continuing, or express trusts, and not to those which are involuntary or constructive.

In the case of the trustee of an involuntary or constructive trust, the statute of limitations commences to run as soon as that trust relation is created by devolution of the title of the trust property on him. No disaffirmance of the trust on his part is necessary to set the statute in motion. Norton v. Bassett, 154 Cal. 411, 418, 97 Pac. 894. The pendency of the administration for more than 20 years could not be said to toll the statute, as defendants were entitled to the possession of the real estate after the time for presentation of claims had passed, unless a sale of the property to pay debts or expenses of administration was necessary (Code Civ. Proc. § 1453); and appellants might have brought an action to quiet title at any time had they desired to do so. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1452, 1581. Title by adverse possession under color of title was clearly established by plaintiff. That is sufficient title to sustain the judgment of the court in plaintiff's favor.

Where a case is submitted upon an agreed statement covering all the facts of the case, no findings of fact are necessary. Gregory v. Gregory, 102 Cal. 50, 36 Pac. 364. The questions of law presented by appellants' brief relate to the conclusions of law of the court drawn from the statement of facts, rather than to any inferences of fact contained in the findings. A new trial could not effectively correct the errors complained of. See Swift v. Occidental Mining Co., 141 Cal. 166, 74 Pac. 700. The questions, however, have been considered upon their merits, independent of the method of presenting them.

Order affirmed.

WINSLOW v. GLENDALE LIGHT & POWER CO. (Civ. 743.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Jan. 28, 1910.)

1. Municipal Corporations (§ 823*)—Special Interrogatories—Request.

Code Civ. Proc. § 625, as amended in 1905 (St. 1905, c. 62), requires the court, upon written request to direct a special verdict upon any issue or findings upon particular questions of fact, and provides that a special finding will control if inconsistent with the general verdict. In an action against a contractor for injuries by tripping over a wire stretched across the sidewalk, defendant requested a special interrogatory whether the wire was in such a position that plaintiff could have observed it by ordinary care, which the court modified by adding, "had she been looking for the wire," and gave. The evidence was conflicting as to whether it was negligence for plaintiff not to look for the wire across the street. Held, that the court was bound to submit special questions requested if the answers were relevant to some material issue, and, if favorable to the requesting party, would be inconsistent with a general verdict for the other party, and an affirmative answer to the question requested by defendant would have been inconsistent with a general verdict for the plaintiff, while such an answer given to the modified question was not, so that it was error not to submit the question as requested.

2. Municipal Corporations (§ 821*)—Obstructions in Streets—Care Required of Pedestrian—Contributory Negligence.

It could not be said as a matter of law that ordinary care in passing along a street required a pedestrian to look for a wire stretched across it so as to make her guilty of contributory negligence in failing to do so.

3. Municipal Corporations (§ 821*)—Injury to Pedestrian—Street Obstruction—Jury Question—Contributory Negligence.

Where, in an action against a contractor for injuries by tripping over a wire stretched across a sidewalk, the evidence was conflicting on the question of contributory negligence, it was for the jury.

4. Evidence (§ 591*)—Conclusiveness on Party Introducing it.

Plaintiff was not bound by the testimony of one of her witnesses which favored defendant's theory and conflicted with the testimony of plaintiff and her other witnesses; her other testimony not being introduced to impeach the witness whose testimony conflicted with her other testimony.

5. Evidence (§ 471*)—Opinion Evidence—Conclusions.

A question as to whom witness was working for on a certain day was not objectionable as calling for a conclusion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 2149–2185; Dec. Dig. § 471.*]

6. Trial (§ 29*)—Misconduct of Judge.

In an action for injuries received by tripping over a wire across a sidewalk, in which defendant attempted to show that the wire was placed across the walk by an independent contractor employed by it, remarks of the trial court upon overruling an objection to a question as to whom witness was working for on a certain date, that "if a man does not know whom he is working for he ought to go off to the woods; it is a very simple question," were not improper so as to prejudice defendant.

7. Witnesses (§ 240*)—Examination—Leading Questions.

The asking of leading and suggestive questions is largely within the trial court's discretion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 795; Dec. Dig. § 240.*]

8. Appeal and Error (§ 1002*)—Findings—Conclusiveness—Conflicting Evidence.

The jury's findings under proper instructions upon conflicting evidence cannot be disturbed on appeal.

9. Appeal and Error (§ 1001*)—Verdict—Conclusiveness.

A verdict will not be disturbed on appeal where there is some evidence to sustain it.

10. Trial (§ 296*)—Instructions—Construction as a Whole.

An instruction which does not direct a verdict is not objectionable for omitting the law relative to some essential element in the case, if such omission is supplied by other instructions.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; W. P. James, Judge.

Action by Mary M. Winslow against the Glendale Light & Power Company. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Tanner, Taft & Odell, for appellant. Morton, Pruitt & Goodrich and O. E. Smith, for respondent.

TAGGART, J. Action for damages for personal injury. Plaintiff, who was 76 years of age at the time of the injury complained of, was walking along the sidewalk of a street in the city of Glendale, and her feet becoming entangled with a wire stretched across the sidewalk, she tripped and fell upon the pavement, dislocating her knee, spraining her wrist, and bruising her face, shoulder, leg, and ankle, rendering her generally lame and crippled. The jury rendered a verdict in her favor against the defendant for the sum of $2,000, upon which verdict judgment was entered.

Defendant appeals from the judgment and from an order denying its motion for a new trial; and as reasons for a reversal of the judgment contends: (1) That the evidence shows that the wire which threw the plaintiff to the ground was placed across the sidewalk by the employés of one John C. Seaman, who was engaged in construction work for defendant as an independent contractor, and not as an employé of the defendant corporation; (2) that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence; (3) that the amount of damages awarded by the verdict is excessive; (4) that the court erred in its rulings upon some 72 objections made by defendant to the admission of testimony on behalf of plaintiff; (5) that the court erred in giving certain instructions requested by plaintiff and in denying some and modifying other instructions requested by defendant; and (6) that the court erred in refusing to give a special interrogatory relating to the issue of contributory negligence requested by defendant, and in giving it in a modified form.

The interrogatory requested by defendant was as follows: "Was the wire, over which it is alleged the plaintiff tripped and fell, in such position that plaintiff could have observed it had she been exercising ordinary care?" This, it is said, the court modified by adding, "Had she been looking for said wire?" The answer given by the jury was, "Yes." If the question had been asked as presented by defendant and this answer returned, it would have been inconsistent with the general verdict, and would have controlled the latter upon the issue to which it related—that is, the contributory negligence of the plaintiff. Section 625, Code Civ. Proc. At the time of the trial of the cause, section 625 of the Code of Civil Procedure was in force as amended in 1905 (St. 1905, c. 62), and under the law as then construed it was the duty of the court to submit to the jury particular questions of fact requested by the parties, and to direct written findings thereon. Plyler v. Pac. Cem. Co., 152 Cal. 125, p. 131, 92 Pac. 56. The Plyler Case sustained a party's right to have such questions submitted to the jury, even where they did not call for a finding upon a material issue, provided the answers to the questions were relevant to some material issue, and, if favorable to the party preferring the request, would be inconsistent with a general verdict for his adversary. Measured by this rule, a finding in defendant's favor in answer to the special question requested by it upon the issue of contributory negligence as above stated would have been inconsistent with the general verdict rendered, while, on the other hand, the finding actually made by the jury, in answer to the modified interrogatory of the court, did not in any way affect the general verdict and is not inconsistent with it. The jury merely finds that if the plaintiff had been looking for a wire at the place of the injury she might have seen it. There is nothing in the record that enables us to say as a matter of law that in the exercise of ordinary care in passing along the public street it was necessary that she should be looking for a wire. Indeed, the court very properly, at her own request, instructed the jury that such was not the law.

The evidence was contradictory upon this subject, and the defendant was entitled to a determination of the question to whose testimony the jury gave credence and consideration. The position of appellant, that because one of the witnesses put upon the stand for the plaintiff testified in support of defendant's theory, while others testified so as to sustain the opposite conclusion, the plaintiff was bound by the testimony of the unfavorable witness, is entirely untenable. The testimony of plaintiff, her daughter and the other witnesses, which was in conflict with that of the witness Harvey, and tended to establish her claim that she acted with ordinary care, was not introduced for the purpose of impeaching Harvey, but to prove a material element in her case, and could not be excluded from consideration by the jury merely because it was inconsistent with the testimony of Harvey. We know of no such application of the rule invoked by appellant.

The objections to certain questions of plaintiff, based upon the ground that the testimony sought to be elicited was but a conclusion of the witness, were properly overruled, and the motions to strike out on the same ground properly denied. The question, "For whom were you working on the 27th day of February, in 1907?" was asked, and this objection was interposed, and the trial judge remarked, in overruling the objection, "A man ought to know who he is working for." This is assigned as error. We do not so regard it. The witness Harvey was asked who employed him and he answered, "J. H. Seaman," and also gave the same answer to the question, "Whom were you working for at that time?" In each answer he attempted to modify this by some statement as to the capacity in which Seaman had acted in engaging him to work, and was interrupted and prevented by the opposing counsel from finishing his answer. Thereupon the examining attorney propounded the question: "I do not ask you who engaged you to work, but for what company or corporation or individual were you working on that day?" Counsel for the defendant prevented the witness from answering the question and demanded the right to cross-examine him as to "whether he knew or not" before permitting an answer. It is contended that it was prejudicial error for the court to say in this connection: "If a man does not know who he is working for, he ought to go off to the woods; it is a very simple question." We see nothing wrong in the assumption by the court of this view as the basis of its ruling, and find no impropriety in the language of the ruling to the prejudice of appellant. Neither was it wrong for the court to ask the question, "Whom were you working for?" This question the witness answered, "I should say the Glendale Light & Power Company." Later, in response to the inquiry, "Were you employed by the defendant here, the Glendale Light & Power Company?" asked first by counsel and then by the court, the same witness replied, "Well, yes, sir" (the answer being given after an admonitory "if you know" by defendant's counsel). Objections subsequently made to questions on the ground that they were improper because assuming that the witness was in the employ of defendant were properly overruled. Some of the questions objected to as leading and suggestive were perhaps open to some criticism on that ground, but the asking of questions in this form rests largely in the discretion of the trial court, and we find no prejudicial abuse of that discretion in any of the rulings complained of.

There was conflict in the evidence as to whether or not the witness Seaman was an independent contractor, and, as above stated, there was at least some evidence to show that the men who were moving the wire were working for defendant. The jury, under proper instructions, found that Seaman was not an independent contractor in doing this job, and we cannot disturb that conclusion. The other contentions based upon the insufficiency of the evidence may be met in the same way—that is, there was some evidence to sustain the verdict. That this is true of the issue of contributory negligence appears from the evidence above referred to in connection with the refusal of the court to submit the special question requested by defendant.

The instructions given at the request of plaintiff, taken together, correctly declare the law applicable to the facts of the case. It is no objection to a single instruction—which does not direct a verdict—that it omits the law relative to some essential element in the case, provided the law be supplied elsewhere in another instruction given to the jury. The instructions requested by defendant, and either denied or modified by the court, wherein the jury were instructed in effect that the evidence showed that the witness Seaman was an independent contractor, or in which it was assumed that the facts as to Seaman's employment enumerated by defendant, established, as a matter of law, that he was an independent contractor, were properly refused and modified, respectively.

The other alleged errors assigned will probably not arise upon a new trial, and it is not necessary to pass upon them. For the failure to submit the special question requested, the motion for a new trial should have been granted.

The judgment and order reversed.

SHIELS v. NATHAN. (Civ. 640.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 9, 1910. Rehearing Denied March 8, 1910; Denied by Supreme Court April 7, 1910.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1078*)—REVIEW—MATTERS NOT URGED IN BRIEF.

A defense that plaintiff, in an action to recover real estate conveyed by an insolvent debtor prior to the commencement of the action, conveyed an interest in the property to her attorneys, who are not made parties to the action, which defense is not urged in defendant's brief, will not be considered on appeal.

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 37*)—DISCHARGE OF EXECUTOR — RIGHT TO APPOINT SUCCESSOR.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1698, provides that the final settlement of an estate shall not prevent a subsequent issue of letters "if other property be discovered, or if it become necessary or proper, for any cause, that letters should be again issued." An executor reported that he was unable to discover any property belonging to the estate, and was discharged. Held, that after his death the court could appoint an administratrix c. t. a. to take charge of subsequently discovered property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Dec. Dig. § 37.*]

3. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 449*)—ACTION AGAINST EXECUTOR—PLEADING.

In an action by an administratrix c. t. a. against the administrator of another estate to recover property in the hands of defendant belonging to the estate of plaintiff's decedent, where the due appointment of plaintiff is alleged in the complaint and is not denied in the answer, the jurisdiction of the court to appoint plaintiff cannot be raised.

4. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§§ 221, 236, 244*)—CLAIM OF EXECUTOR—ALLOWANCE BY JUDGE.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1510, provides that, if an administrator is a creditor of the decedent, his claim must be presented for allowance or rejection to a judge of the superior court, and its allowance is sufficient evidence of its correctness, and must be paid as other claims in due course of administration. Section 1504 provides that a judgment against an administrator upon any claim for money against the estate of decedent only establishes the claim the same as if allowed by the administrator and the judge. Held, that the allowance of a claim of an administratrix by the judge is of equal force with a judgment against the administratrix and may be contested by any person interested in the estate the same as other allowed claims might be contested; but, in case of a contest, the burden is on the party contestant to show that the claim was not properly allowed; and the same rule holds good in an action brought by an administratrix to enforce an approved claim belonging to her.

5. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 57*)—PROPERTY FRAUDULENTLY CONVEYED BY TESTATOR—RECOVERY BY ADMINISTRATOR.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1589, making it the duty of an administrator to prosecute an action to recover for the benefit of the creditors of the estate all real estate fraudulently conveyed by the decedent, the action may be prosecuted by an administratrix who is the sole creditor of the estate.

6. Executors and Administrators (§ 241*)—Right to Contest Allowed Claim.

Where probate proceedings have been regularly conducted and the claim of an administratrix has been allowed, all the world are parties to such proceedings and are bound thereby, subject to the right of an interested party to have the claim set aside for cause, although a judgment is an estoppel only as to parties and privies.

7. Appeal and Error (§ 931*) — Review — Presumptions.

It will be presumed on appeal, in an action by an administratrix to recover property fraudulently transferred by decedent, in order to pay her claim against the estate, that the judge, in approving her claim, heard evidence in support of the facts averred in the claim and found them to be true.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 931.*]

8. Limitation of Actions (§ 100*)—Accrual of Right of Action—Discovery of Fraud.

Code Civ. Proc. § 338, subd. 4, provides that a cause of action for relief on the ground of fraud does not accrue until the discovery by the aggrieved party of the facts constituting fraud. Plaintiff and her husband agreed to a separation and to fully account for all community property to two men selected to divide it. Plaintiff's husband did not return a sum of money on deposit which was community property, and plaintiff knew nothing of its existence. After the separation and division of all the property returned, the husband transferred all his property to defendant's intestate, and after the death of the husband, defendant's intestate was made his executor and was subsequently discharged. After the death of defendant's intestate, plaintiff was made administratrix of her husband's estate, and then discovered the fraud as to the bank deposit, and brought an action against defendant to set aside the transfer of real estate of her husband to defendant's intestate within three years after discovery of the fraud. It did not appear that defendant's intestate, while executor, filed any affidavit showing that he published notice to creditors in the matter of the husband's estate, nor that plaintiff had any knowledge that notice to creditors was published. Held, that the action was not barred by limitations.

9. Executors and Administrators (§ 437*)—Action—Laches.

Plaintiff and her husband agreed to separate and to return all community property held by them to two men appointed to divide the same between them. The husband did not return a sum of money belonging to the community deposited in a bank, and subsequently transferred all his property to defendant's intestate, who was appointed the husband's executor and was subsequently discharged because he found no property belonging to the estate. Plaintiff did not discover the fraud of her husband in concealing the bank deposit for 13 years after the settlement, and made no effort during that time to ascertain the facts. She discovered the fraud shortly before the death of defendant's intestate, but delayed the presentation of her claim against the estate of her husband until after the death of defendant's intestate. The deed by which her husband conveyed the property to defendant's intestate was in consideration of love and affection only. It was not shown that defendant's intestate knew anything about the facts existing at the time of the separation. Plaintiff, after defendant's intestate had been discharged as executor, was appointed administratrix c. t. a., and had her claim for a portion of the bank deposit allowed, and within three years after discovering the fraud of her husband in concealing the bank deposit sued to set aside the conveyance by her husband of real estate to defendant's intestate. Held, that her action was not barred by laches; there being nothing tending to show that the heirs of defendant's intestate, nor any creditors interested in the estate, had suffered prejudice by delay in presenting the claim.

10. Equity (§ 72*)—Laches—Prejudice.

Mere lapse of time less than the statutory period of limitation will not bar an action for equitable relief, unless the delay under the circumstances has been such as to justify the presumption that defendant may have been prejudiced thereby.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Equity, Cent. Dig. §§ 207–220, 225, 226; Dec. Dig. § 72*.]

11. Executors and Administrators (§ 431*) —Fraudulent Conveyance by Decedent — Avoidance — Action — Necessity for Judgment.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1589, providing for the recovery by the personal representative of property fraudulently disposed of by a testator, the requirement that claims of creditors must be evidenced by a judgment, or they must have been allowed by the administrator or executor, the approval by the judge of the claim takes the place of the allowance by the administrator.

12. Executors and Administrators (§ 450*) —Fraudulent Conveyance by Decedent — Avoidance — Action — Evidence of Fraudulent Intent.

In an action by an administratrix who held an unsatisfied claim against the estate, to set aside a transfer by testator of his real estate as fraudulent, evidence held to show the fraudulent intent of the testator in transferring his property.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

Action by Mary Shiels, as administratrix of the estate of Bernard Shiels, against I. C. Nathan, as administrator of the estate of Michael Shiels. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Modified and affirmed.

W. A. Gett, for appellant. M. S. Wahrhoftig and Hinkson & Elliott, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. This is an action, brought under section 1589, Code Civ. Proc., to recover from the estate of Michael Shiels, deceased, certain real estate for the benefit of the creditors of the estate of Bernard Shiels, deceased.

It appears from the complaint that Bernard Shiels died December 31, 1902, leaving a will by which he devised all his property to Michael Shiels, naming him as executor; that Michael was duly appointed as executor, and was thereafter, to wit, November 6, 1903, discharged from his said trust; that plaintiff was duly appointed administratrix with the will annexed shortly thereafter, and ever since has been and now is such administratrix; that Michael died intestate, in the state of Nevada, on December 12, 1905, leaving estate in the county of Sacramento, this state; that defendant was duly appointed administrator of his estate, April 5, 1906, by the superior court of said county, and now is such administrator; that before and at his death Bernard was indebted to Mary Shiels in the sum of $1,691, with lawful interest from November 14, 1890, upon a claim arising out of an agreement of separation (the said Bernard and Mary being husband and wife) and a division of their community property theretofore had between them, "all of which will more fully appear from a copy of the claim of said Mary Shiels, which is hereto annexed (i. e., to the complaint) marked 'Exhibit A,' and is hereby referred to and made part of this complaint"; that on March 7, 1906, said Mary presented to Hon. Peter J. Shields, judge of the superior court of said county, for his approval and allowance, her said claim against the estate of said Bernard Shiels, deceased (amounting then to $3,505, principal and interest) "accompanied with a statement of the facts out of which said claim arose," which said claim was, on said March 7, 1906, allowed and approved by said judge and duly filed in the office of the county clerk. It is then alleged that on December 26, 1902, said Bernard was the owner of certain described real estate referred to in the complaint, situated in said county, and also had on deposit in the Sacramento bank the sum of $1,800; that he then owned no other property, real or personal; that on said last-named day Mary was a creditor of said Bernard, who, "without any valuable or adequate consideration therefor, transferred and conveyed to the said Michael Shiels all of the above-described real estate and said sum of money so on deposit as aforesaid, and from the time of said conveyance and transfer until his death he had no other property out of which said debt could be paid, and he thereby rendered himself insolvent, and he continued to be insolvent up to the time of his death." It is further alleged that said transfer was "with fraudulent intent and purpose to hinder and defraud the said Mary Shiels, and to prevent her from resorting to said real estate and money whereby to collect and satisfy her said debt, and to avoid the payment of the same"; that said Michael immediately thereafter removed said money without the jurisdiction of this court; that there are no assets in the hands of plaintiff nor in the estate of said Bernard Shiels, deceased, with which to pay said claim of said Mary Shiels, or to pay the costs and expenses of administering said estate, and it is necessary to recover the whole of said real estate for such purposes."

The claim referred to in the complaint and as presented and allowed reads as follows: "In the Matter of the Estate of Bernard Shiels, deceased. The undersigned, a creditor of Bernard Shiels, deceased, presents her claim against the estate of said deceased, with the necessary voucher for approval, as follows, to wit: "Estate of Bernard Shiels, deceased, to Mary Shiels, Dr. March 7, 1906, To money owing, due and unpaid from said Bernard Shiels at the time of his death, to claimant founded upon the facts set forth in the statement hereto annexed, and which is made part hereof, and is explanatory of this claim, $1,691.00. Interest owing, due and unpaid on said sum of $1,691.00, from the 14th day of November, 1890, to date, at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, $1,814.00. Total, $3,505.00."

It is set forth in the claim that Bernard and Mary married on November 28, 1872, and were husband and wife until the death of Bernard, December 31, 1902; that during their marriage and up to November 14, 1890, they had, by their joint labor, accumulated "a large amount of money and other property which was then their community property"; that, owing to differences then existing between them, they mutually agreed to make an equal division between them of all their said community money and other community property, and to live separate and apart from each other, and that they would select two men to make a true and correct inventory and appraisement of all their said community property, who should divide the same equally between them, and that each of them should furnish to said two men "a full, true, and correct statement and memorandum of all of said community money and other property that each of them had in his or her possession and under his or her control"; that pursuant thereto claimant did on November 14, 1890, furnish to the said Bernard and the said two men a full statement of all said property in her possession or control, and the said Bernard "furnished to claimant and said two men what he represented and stated to be, and what claimant then believed to be, a full, true, and correct statement and memorandum of all said community money and other property that was then in his possession and under his control, and claimant believed, and had full confidence in said Bernard Shiels, and in his said statement and memorandum, and his assurance, that he had made to her, that said statement and memorandum contained a full, true, and correct statement of all of said community money and other community property that was then in his possession and under his control, and in making a division of said community, claimant believed, and acted solely upon said representations, statement, and memorandum of the said Bernard Shiels"; that said two men acted upon said statement and divided the property accordingly, and, believing said statement to be true, claimant accepted the share set apart to her and consented to the division so made, and thereupon she and said Bernard entered into an agreement in writing to live separate and apart from each other; that from said 14th day of November, 1890, to the day of the death of said Bernard, she remained separate and apart from her said husband, supported herself, and in all respects complied with said agreement of separation; that during all said time she knew nothing of Bernard's business affairs and had no means of knowing or ascertaining anything about his business matters, or of the amount of said community property in his control, and did not know or discover until after his death and until letters of administration were issued to her, on November 25, 1903, that he had money which he had concealed from her and said two men at the time of said division; but that after said letters were issued to her, to wit, on November 28, 1903, she ascertained from the Sacramento Bank, in the city of Sacramento, on presenting to it her authority to act as administratrix of Bernard's estate, that on November 14, 1890, said Bernard had on deposit in said bank the sum of $3,382, which was community property, and which he had concealed from claimant and said two men and was not taken into account in said division and no part thereof was ever paid to her; that one-half thereof belonged to her by virtue of said agreement of separation, and she was entitled thereto on said November 14, 1890, and it was due to her at the date of his death. The claim was duly verified and bore the following indorsement: "Allowed and approved for $3,505.00 this 7th day of March, 1906. Peter J. Shields, Judge. Filed Mar. 7, 1906. Wm. B. Hamilton, Clerk, by S. B. Keller, Deputy."

Defendant demurred to the complaint on several grounds: (1) That the court was without jurisdiction because it does not appear that defendant, as a trustee, has possession of the property; (2) that there is a defect of parties defendant, in this, that Michael Shiels died testate, and his heirs are not made parties defendant; (3) that sufficient facts are not alleged to constitute a cause of action; (4) that the complaint is uncertain, unintelligible, and ambiguous, in this, that no copy of the claim, in form or substance, as required by section 1494, Code Civ. Proc., is attached to the complaint; (5) that no facts are set forth in support of the averment that certain real estate was transferred "with the fraudulent purpose to hinder and defraud," etc. The complaint is demurred to also as barred by certain sections of the Code of Civil Procedure. The demurrer was overruled, properly we think, and defendant answered, pleading the statute of limitations in bar of the action. Denials were made to the material averments of the complaint, except the averments in the first and second paragraphs thereof, in the language of the complaint. For example, the averment of the complaint that at his death Bernard was indebted to Mary in the sum of $1,691, and averments in that connection are simply denied in the language of the complaint. So of the averments as to the presentation and allowance of her claim by Judge Shields. So also of the averments that there are no assets in the hands of plaintiff as administratrix of the estate of Bernard with which to pay said claim or costs and expenses of administration, "and it is necessary to recover the whole of said real estate for such purpose."

A defense is pleaded on the ground that plaintiff, prior to the commencement of the action, conveyed an interest in the property described in the complaint to Messrs. Hinkson & Elliott (who are her attorneys), and that they are necessary parties to the action. This is not urged in appellant's brief and may be dismissed from consideration.

A defense is also pleaded that plaintiff knew, about the time of its execution, of the execution of the deed from Bernard to Michael, mentioned in the complaint, and is guilty of laches, and should therefore not be permitted to maintain the action and is estopped thereby. The answer also pleads laches, in that the complaint fails to show that plaintiff made any effort to recover said money, or property until October 13, 1906, when the complaint was filed, being more than five years after Bernard bought the land in question. But the statute of limitations began to run from the date of the discovery of the fraud, which was in 1903.

The court found the averments of the complaint to be true, except that the amount of money on deposit in the Sacramento Bank was $1,727.78 at the time claimed, to wit, December 26, 1902, and except, also, that the evidence did not show that Michael removed the money from this jurisdiction, but that Bernard did, on December 26, 1902, transfer said money to Michael, and he caused the same to be transferred to his credit and on January 3, 1903, he removed the same from said bank and closed his account; that the conveyance to Michael by Bernard was voluntary and without any valuable consideration and was made while he was in debt to Mary "with intent on his part to hinder, delay, and defraud the said Mary Shiels in the collection of her said claim and to defeat the same and deprive her of her rights." The court finds against defendant as to the material averments of his answer. The judgment was that plaintiff recover "for the benefit of the creditors of Bernard Shiels, deceased, and of his estate," and that the title to the lots in question be henceforth, "without further act or proceeding, vested in the plaintiff for the purposes hereinbefore set forth, free and clear of all claims of said defendant as administrator of the estate of Michael Shiels, or any other person, or persons, claiming by, through, or under said estate of Michael Shiels, deceased, or the defendant as administrator."

Defendant gave notice that he would, on April 17, 1908, move to vacate the judgment on the ground that it was rendered through mistake, inadvertence, surprise, and excusable neglect. The motion was denied, and, as the appeal from that order is not now pressed, it will not be considered.

Defendant also moved for a new trial on most of the statutory grounds, which motion was denied. He appeals from the judgment, from the order refusing to vacate the judgment, and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

When the cause was called for trial, the court asked counsel for plaintiff, after he had read the complaint, whether the allegations of plaintiff were denied by defendant. He replied: "We admit that defendant has attempted to deny all the allegations of our complaint, except paragraphs 1 and 2 thereof, which are admitted; but we do not concede that the denials of defendant are sufficient."

Over defendant's objection, plaintiff submitted evidence showing: That the court had approved and allowed the claim as set forth in the complaint; the will of Bernard by which he devised all his property to his brother Michael, to show an intention, at the time he made the deed, to exclude plaintiff from sharing in his estate; petition of Michael, as executor of Bernard's estate, asking his discharge, and to show that he therein reported to the court that he was unable to discover any property belonging to Bernard, and for that reason asked his discharge; the order of discharge showing that it was made on the ground stated in the petition; inventory in the matter of the estate of Michael showing that it returned the lots in question as part of Michael's estate, of the inventory value of $5,050. It was shown by witnesses that Bernard, when making his deed to Michael, expressed the intention that his wife should have none of his property, as he had made ample provision for her, and she had property of her own, and that he desired that Michael should have all the property he possessed. It was also proven that on December 26, 1902, Bernard had on deposit in the Sacramento Bank $1,728.78, and that he transferred the account to Michael on that day, who drew the money out January 3, 1903, and closed his account.

Defendant offered no evidence. He pleaded the deed from Bernard to Michael and the settlement contract between Bernard and his wife, which, not being denied, are deemed admitted.

Appellant urges many points in support of his contentions: That the demurrer should have been sustained; that his motion for nonsuit should have been granted; and that the evidence does not support the findings. The questions in controversy are more or less involved in all these contentions and may be considered without special reference to either one in particular.

1. It is claimed that the appointment of Mrs. Shiels as administratrix of Bernard's estate was without jurisdiction for the reason that the executor (Michael) of that estate was discharged and jurisdiction over the executor and over the property of the estate was terminated. The only ground for asking the discharge or for making the order, so far as appears, was the averment in the petition, found as fact in the order, that the executor was unable to discover any property belonging to the estate. The contention is that by the discharge the court lost jurisdiction which could only be regained by setting aside the order on some sufficient ground made to appear, and, as no such step was taken, the court could not appoint an administratrix with the will annexed. Section 1698, Code Civ. Proc., provides that the final settlement of an estate shall not prevent a subsequent issue of letters, "if other property be discovered, or if it become necessary or proper for any cause that letters should be again issued." The point is without merit. To have vacated the order discharging Michael as executor would have had the effect to restore him to his office; but he was then dead, and the order would have been futile. The jurisdiction of the court over the estate continued as to subsequently discovered property of deceased. The statute gives the court jurisdiction, even "after the final settlement of an estate," to subject newly discovered property to administration and this without disturbing the settlement. Furthermore, the due appointment of Mrs. Shiels was alleged in the first paragraph of the complaint, and this paragraph is not denied.

2. The other questions are directly or remotely connected with the approved claim of Mrs. Shiels. It therefore becomes of the first importance to determine its status and the extent to which its approval and allowance figure in the case, since it is conceded that it was necessary for plaintiff to show that she was a creditor of the estate of Bernard, which appeared only through her approved claim.

Section 1497, Code Civ. Proc., reads: "Every claim allowed by the executor or administrator, and approved by a judge of the superior court, or a copy thereof, as hereinafter provided, must, within thirty days thereafter, be filed in the court, and be ranked among the acknowledged debts of the estate, to be paid in due course of administration."

Section 1510, Code Civ. Proc., provides: "If the executor or administrator is a creditor of the decedent (the case here), his claim, duly authenticated by affidavit, must be presented for allowance or rejection to a judge of the superior court, and its allowance by the judge is sufficient evidence of its correctness, and must be paid as other claims in due course of administration."

It was held in Estate of More, 121 Cal. 635, 54 Pac. 148, that the judgment of a court and the approval of a claim by the judge are of equal force. See, also, Hall v. Cayot, 141 Cal. 13, 74 Pac. 299. Section 1504, Code Civ. Proc., practically so declares. Speaking of the judgment of the court, the court, in Estate of More, supra, said: "It did, however, establish the claim in the same manner as if it had been allowed by the judge, and was prima facie evidence of its correctness. The judgment was, however, subject to be afterward contested by any person interested in the estate, in the same manner and to the same extent as other allowed claims might be contested. But in all such cases the burden is upon the party contesting to show that the claim was not properly allowed"—citing Estate of Loshe, 62 Cal. 413; Estate of Swain, 67 Cal. 637, 8 Pac. 497. In Estate of Loshe, the court said: "It is not necessary to consider how far the allowance and approval of a claim resemble or give the effect of a judgment; it is sufficient to say that such a claim is to 'rank among the acknowledged debts of the estate, to be paid in due course. If it be an acknowledged debt, it is good until cause be shown.'" In these cases the question arose at some stage of the administration; but we see no reason why the same rule should not apply where, as here, the plaintiff, as a creditor, pleads her approved claim in support of her action. To the extent of showing that she is a creditor, the approved claim should be treated "as an acknowledged debt of the estate," and the burden to show otherwise should be, and we think is, upon the party assailing it. Section 1589, Code Civ. Proc., makes it the duty of the executor or administrator to prosecute the action to recover for the benefit of the creditors of the estate all real estate fraudulently conveyed by the decedent, in his lifetime, and the action may be prosecuted by an administrator who is a creditor, even if a sole creditor.

Appellant contends that the allowance of Mrs. Shiels' claim cannot affect him, as he was a stranger to the estate and was not a party or privy thereto, citing Shay v. McNamara, 54 Cal. 169. It is true that a judgment is an estoppel only as to parties and privies. But subject, however, to the right of an interested party to have the allowance of a claim set aside for cause, all the world are parties to the probate proceedings relating thereto and are bound thereby, where the probate proceedings have been regularly pursued. Let us, then, consider the attack made upon the claim of Mrs. Shiels.

3. It is claimed that the action is barred in three years by subdivision 4, § 338, Code Civ. Proc., if it is for relief from fraud or mistake; that it is barred in two years by subdivision 1, § 339, Code Civ. Proc., if the claim is upon contract not founded upon an instrument in writing; and is barred in four years by section 343, Code Civ. Proc., if the action is for relief not otherwise provided for.

It seems to us that the claim is based upon the contract entered into between Bernard Shiels and his wife as set forth in the statement of facts therewith made. We must presume that before or at the time the judge approved the claim, he heard evidence in support of the facts averred in the claim and found them to be true. Briefly, that Bernard, at the time the agreement of separation was entered into had a deposit in the Sacramento Bank of $3,382, belonging to the community, which he purposely and fraudulently concealed from his wife and of which he made no account in returning to her, and to the two men chosen to divide the property, a memorandum of the community property in his possession, to one-half of which, $1,691.00, she was entitled by the agreement, with interest to March 7, 1906, the date of filing the claim, amounting to $1,814.00; that by the agreement each was to make a full, true, and correct statement and memorandum of all the community property in possession or control of each; that claimant had full confidence in her husband and in his statement and his assurance then made to her that it contained a true and correct return of all his said property; that in making said settlement she "believed and acted solely upon said representations and memorandum of the said Bernard Shiels," as also did the said two men chosen to make said division of the property; that she had no means of ascertaining the facts, and did not discover said money so deposited until shortly after letters were issued to her, to wit, November 28, 1903, and then for the first time was informed by the officers of said bank that Bernard had money on deposit (the amount set out in the claim) at the date of the separation. The claim was admitted in evidence as presented to and allowed by the judge. Defendant offered no evidence tending to dispute any of the facts presumably determined by its approval, and the only defense now made to it is the statute of limitation and laches in failing to make due injury. The discovery of the fraud was made November 28, 1903, and the action was brought within three years thereafter, to wit, October 13, 1906. While the action is upon the agreement of separation, the relief sought is for fraud—"The cause of action in such case not to be deemed to have accrued until the discovery, by the aggrieved party, of the facts constituting the fraud or mistake." Subdivision 4, § 338, Code Civ. Proc. The action was not barred by any statute of limitation. It does not appear from the transcript that Michael, while acting as executor, or at all, filed any affidavit showing that he published notice to creditors, in the matter of the estate of Bernard, nor did it appear that Mrs. Shiels had any knowledge that notice to creditors had been published.

4. It is true that many years passed before the discovery was made by Mrs. Shiels, and it is urged that she ought to have shown that she made some effort to ascertain the facts, that available means of knowledge amount to knowledge, and that there is an utter failure to show any sort of diligence in making the discovery from 1890 until 1903. The answer is that the relation of husband and wife is one of the highest degree of confidence and trust, and although in this case they had "differences," not explained, which led to their separation, the claim stated, and the judge presumably found as fact, that the wife had confidence in her husband and trusted him in making return of his property. Differences might have existed without destroying confidence in each other's honesty and integrity. The husband is entitled to the exclusive possession and control of the community property and presumably knows all about it, while no such presumption attaches to the wife. Accepting the settlement upon the belief that her husband had returned all the community property, she had a right to rest in that belief and was not called upon to pursue an independent search for other property; to have done so would have implied want of confidence in her husband's honesty in making return of the property, whereas her belief in and reliance upon his honesty was the ground on which she accepted the settlement. We do not know, except from the facts stated in the claim, when or how her suspicions were aroused, or when or how she came to make inquiry as to the facts; they were inquired into by the judge who allowed the claim. There is no evidence of any facts or circumstances from which it might be inferred that she knew or had any reason to believe that her husband had deceived her at the settlement, prior to the actual discovery.

5. It is argued, as evidence of her unfairness and laches, that although she learned of the fraud in November, 1903, she delayed the presentation of her claim until after the death of her husband's brother, Michael, to whom the property in question had been conveyed by Bernard; that by his death she could not be confronted with his testimony in explanation of the conveyance. The deed shows that it was without consideration other than love and affection. Besides, it cannot be assumed, and it did not appear, that Michael knew anything about the facts existing at the time of the separation. The defense of laches is sometimes sustained, although the period of delay is less than that provided by the statute of limitation. Mere lapse of time less than the statutory period of limitation will not bar action for equitable relief, unless the delay, under the circumstances, has been such as to justify the presumption that the defendant may have been prejudiced thereby. Ex-Mission Land Co. v. Flash, 97 Cal. 610, 32 Pac. 600; Cahill v. Superior Court, 145 Cal. 47, 78 Pac. 467; Cook v. Ceas, 147 Cal. 614, 82 Pac. 370. There is nothing in the record tending in the slightest degree to show that the heirs of Michael or any creditors interested in his estate have suffered or will suffer prejudice by the delay in presenting the claim.

6. It is urged that there was no evidence of actual fraudulent intent in conveying the property to Michael. The claim presented to and allowed by the judge raised no issue as to the land in question or its transfer to Michael. Only such facts or issues as were then raised are to be deemed adjudged by the allowance. The complaint avers that Mary Shiels was a creditor of Bernard at and before the date of the transfer; that "he, without any valuable or adequate consideration therefor," conveyed to Michael the land and the money on deposit, and thenceforward to the date of his death "he had no other property out of which said debt could be paid, and he thereby rendered himself insolvent," and so continued until he died. It has been held that under section 1589, Code Civ. Proc., it must appear: "(1) That there are creditors to be paid; (2) that there is an insufficiency of assets in the hands of the administrator to meet their demands; and (3) the claims of creditors must be evidenced by a judgment obtained in this state, or they must have been allowed by the administrator or executor, which is the equivalent of a judgment. Aigeltinger v. Einstein, 143 Cal. 609, 615, 77 Pac. 669, 101 Am. St. Rep. 131. (Of course, the approval by the judge takes the place of the allowance by the administrator when the latter is the claimant.) Section 1589 authorizes the action "when the decedent, in his lifetime, has conveyed any real estate, * * * with intent to defraud his creditors, or to avoid any right, debt, or duty of any person, or has so conveyed such estate that by the law the deeds or conveyances are void as against creditors."

There was evidence tending to establish the requirements mentioned in the case cited. It was, however, necessary to show further that the conveyance was with fraudulent intent. It was held, in Emmons v. Barton, 109 Cal. 662, 42 Pac. 302, that, where the consideration was love and affection alone, it was not insufficient unless made with intent to defraud the creditors; that the intent is a question of fact; and that a voluntary conveyance is not prima facie fraudulent, and fraudulent intent is not to be arrived at as a presumption of law. It was further held in that case: "Pronounced insolvency at the time of the grant would, no doubt, be a strong circumstance tending to show fraudulent intent, and, in the absence of other controlling facts, it would be sufficient to justify a finding of such intent."

It appeared from the evidence that Bernard was mortally ill and in the hospital when he made the conveyance, and died five days thereafter; that he declared that it was his intention to convey all the property he possessed, and, so far as known, he did so; that his brother Michael served for a time as executor of Bernard's estate and could find no property belonging to him and for that reason asked to be and was discharged. We think the evidence was sufficient to justify the finding that by the conveyance he rendered himself insolvent. Strictly, he was not insolvent when he made the conveyance, but, coincidently with and by that act, he became insolvent, and this, we think, brings the case within the rule in Emmons v. Barton, supra, and justifies the finding that the conveyance was with fraudulent intent to defraud his creditors.

Whether section 1589, Code Civ. Proc., is to be given the same effect as section 3442, Civ. Code, need not be decided, for, if so, by the terms of the latter section any transfer made "voluntarily, or without valuable consideration, by a party while insolvent or in contemplation of insolvency, shall be fraudulent, and void as to existing creditors." In Gray v. Brunold, 140 Cal. 615, 74 Pac. 303, it was said that an allegation of intent to defraud is no longer required, under section 3442, where insolvency is alleged: but in Estate of Vance, 141 Cal. 624, 75 Pac. 323, the court said that intent to defraud must be alleged, and that the proviso in the section is a rule of evidence and not of pleading. Nevertheless, proof of insolvency establishes the intent. Here there were sufficient allegations and proof. Conceding the rule, appellant says the section does not apply here because there is "but one creditor, and that creditor created by the fraud itself." This rather singular contention is based on the fact that "it was necessary to prove the fraud in the first place, before any advantage can be taken of any special presumption of fraud, in order to establish the status of the plaintiff as a creditor, so that it could be claimed that the transfer was made by an insolvent." We fail to see any force in this point. If she was a creditor, it is immaterial how she became such creditor.

7. It is urged that the judgment is erroneous because it does not conform to the provisions of the Code authorizing it.

Section 1589, Code Civ. Proc., provides that the administrator "may recover for the benefit of the creditors all such real estate so fraudulently conveyed," etc. Section 1591 provides: "All real estate so recovered must be sold for the payment of debts, in the same manner as if the decedent had died seized thereof, upon obtaining an order therefor from the court; and the proceeds * * * must be appropriated in payment of the debts of the decedent in the same manner as other property in the hands of the executor or administrator. The remainder of the proceeds, after all the debts of the decedent have been paid, must be paid to the person from whom such property was recovered."

In Emmons v. Barton, 109 Cal. 662, 668, 42 Pac. 302, 304, it was held that, in a case like this, "the judgment should be that the property fraudulently conveyed, or so much thereof as is necessary, be applied to the satisfaction of the debts, and that the residue, if any, go to the grantee. It is not to go into the assets of the estate for any purpose other than the payment of the debts. The residue does not go to the heir; for he stands in the shoes of the fraudulent grantor." See Tully v. Tully, 137 Cal. 60, 66, 69 Pac. 700. In Estate of Page, 57 Cal. 238, 241, it is said: "But the property, when recovered, must be inventoried as assets of the estate, and sold for the payment of debts, in the same manner as if the decedent had died seised thereof"—citing sections 1589, 1591, Code Civ. Proc.

As the conveyance by Bernard Shiels was void, the statute authorized the recovery of the property and its sale for the benefit of the creditors of Bernard, and to make a sale the title would have to be vested in the administratrix. The judgment vested the title in the administratrix for the benefit of creditors, which was proper; but it also declared it to be "free and clear of all claims of the said defendant as administrator of the estate of Michael Shiels, deceased, or any other person, or persons, claiming by, through, or under said estate of Michael, deceased, or of the defendant as such administrator." This was unauthorized. The heirs of Michael are entitled to the surplus, if any, after the property is sold, and the decree should so provide.

The order denying defendant's motion to vacate the judgment and the order denying his motion for a new trial are affirmed. The judgment is modified by striking out the portion last above quoted and in lieu thereof inserting the following: "And upon the sale of said premises the proceeds thereof shall be applied to the payment of the claims of the creditors of the said Bernard Shiels, which have been or shall be duly allowed, and the residue of such proceeds shall be paid to the administrator of the estate of Michael Shiels, deceased."

And as thus modified, the judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; C. W. Norton, Judge.

Action by R. W. Van Valkenburgh against D. A. Oldham and Cynthia A. Blackburn. From a judgment foreclosing a mortgage upon certain real estate belonging to Cynthia A. Blackburn, she appeals. Affirmed.

A. H. Carpenter, for appellant. Webster & Webster, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The appeal is from a judgment foreclosing a mortgage upon certain real estate belonging to appellant. The nature of the defense is shown by the following averment of the answer: "That neither the note nor the mortgage set forth and described in the plaintiff's said complaint herein were executed by her willingly, freely, or voluntarily, and the same are not and never were her obligations; and her signature to each of said documents, if either or both were signed by her, was obtained by fraud, menace, and undue influence in the following manner and way." Then follows a description in detail of the transaction relating to the execution of said note and mortgage in which are set forth sufficient facts, if established by the evidence, to defeat the action. Indeed, appellant's story, as told upon the witness stand, is a pathetic recital of the subjugation of her will and the coercion of her understanding by the importunity, pertinacity, and misstatements of the stronger personalities interested in obtaining the security, but the case presents a very different aspect when viewed in the light of the testimony of other witnesses. It is true that extreme anxiety was manifested by plaintiff and considerable explanation and persuasion were necessary to induce appellant to execute said note and mortgage, but in contemplation of the rule as to conflicting testimony and of the discretion as to the weight of evidence granted by the law to the trial court, it cannot be said that there was anything in the conduct of plaintiff which is opposed to good morals, legitimate business methods, or any mandate of the statute. This, we think, will appear as we proceed to notice specifically the various contentions of appellant.

1. There can be no controversy as to the principles of law announced by appellant that if the consent of Mrs. Blackburn was not freely or voluntarily given, the note and mortgage were void, even though signed by her. Civ. Code, § 1565; Loaiza v. Superior Court, 85 Cal. 30, 24 Pac. 707, 9 L. R. A. 376, 20 Am. St. Rep. 197. And, if executed, fraud, menace, duress, or undue influence would render them void. Civ. Code, § 1567; Morrill v. Nightingale, 93 Cal. 455, 28 Pac. 1068, 27 Am. St. Rep. 207. And consent is deemed to have been obtained through one of these causes when it would not have been given had such cause not existed. Civ. Code, § 1568; Stockton, etc., Works v. Insurance Co., 98 Cal. 558, 33 Pac. 633.

But the history of the transaction, as gathered from the testimony of plaintiff's witnesses, shows these facts: On May 29, 1906, appellant guaranteed any indebtedness to accrue after that date from a certain firm of Price & Oldham to the California Electrical Works, a corporation (plaintiff's assignor), to the extent of one thousand dollars. By reason of this guaranty, the said corporation furnished said firm with merchandise to the extent of $945. In settlement of this sum the defendants Oldham and Blackburn (the latter as surety) gave their promissory note secured by said mortgage of appellant's property. The one thousand dollar guaranty was then canceled and given to the defendant Blackburn.

As to the immediate circumstances attending the execution of the note and mortgage, the witness Percy Webster testified: "The plaintiff told Mrs. Blackburn that he intended to do what was right; he didn't want anything that did not belong to him, but his company could not afford to lose the money; they looked to him as the man who had let the account be carried, and he wanted to see them whole in the matter, he didn't like to make a woman pay it, particularly if she didn't have much money, but as long as the guaranty was signed by her and Price & Oldham were not good for it, he would have to look to her. As I remember it Mrs. Blackburn then said that she did not think she wanted to pay it; she would want to see somebody; and Mr. Van Valkenburgh said that she could see somebody if she wanted to, but he would not do anything but what was right; all he wanted was his money and no more; and she said that she didn't have any money with which to pay, but she had this property, and it was suggested to her that she could give a mortgage on her property for the payment of it. Mrs. Blackburn asked how that would be done, and then they had some lengthy conversation as I remember it about what to make the terms of the note; they talked it over with Mr. Oldham, and he was told that he really ought to pay it; he said he felt that too, he didn't want to make her pay it; he didn't have any property, but he had an interest in the Commercial Credit Company, and he would be willing to turn over the net profits of that company to the payment of this; and Mr. Van Valkenburgh I believe made the assertion that that was not very good security, but Mrs. Blackburn's property would be, and Mr. J. B. Webster suggested that Oldham give an agreement that he would make the payments, and they figured it out, and he figured that the net proceeds as he made it would be about $25 a month; he would be willing to apply those in payment of the note, and then tney had some talk about what interest was to be paid, and Mr. Van Valkenburgh said he would not make that heavy, make it as light as possible, and called it 5 per cent., and that was agreed upon, and Mrs. Blackburn was asked if that would be satisfactory to her, and she said, 'Yes.'" The mortgage was then prepared, but a mistake was made in the description. The mistake was corrected, after the mortgage had been read to Mrs. Blackburn and signed by her. After the correction the instrument was again read to her, and "I asked her if that was her signature to it; she said, 'Yes'; I said, 'You then acknowledge this mortgage with the change?' She said she did; then I made the acknowledgment; I initialed the change on the mortgage; the note and mortgage were signed at that time by Mrs. Blackburn, and then this agreement—there was an agreement made between Mr. Oldham and Mrs. Blackburn; I wrote it myself;—that he would hold her harmless from the payment of this account; the agreement also assigned to her the net proceeds of the Commercial Credit Company. After this note and mortgage was signed and executed, Mrs. Blackburn made the remark to Mr. Oldham, 'Now, you don't want to let me pay this, you want to see you keep up the payments.' Oldham said he certainly would, he would apply the $25 and maybe more, if the business was good, so as to wipe it out as quickly as possible. Mrs. Blackburn said, 'I hope so, because I hate to have the neighbors know I have a plaster on my house.' Before the execution of the three papers by Mrs. Blackburn, the paper (the guaranty) was explained to her, its contents were explained to her, and after the execution of the three papers, and just before she was leaving, she said she ought to have it, and Mr. Van Valkenburgh said he ought to have it to show his position in the matter. why he was taking the note and mortgage; you said to him she was entitled to it on giving the note and mortgage and she was given the original." It is true the witness stated that appellant was agitated and in tears a part of the time, but it seemed due to her conviction that she had been robbed by one Price who was formerly a member of the firm of Price & Oldham. The only conclusion to be drawn from the testimony of this witness, as we are required to regard it, is that no misrepresentation was made, no undue influence exerted nor fraud practiced in the transaction, but that the execution of said note and mortgage was the voluntary act of said appellant. The same may be asserted of the testimony of plaintiff, although some isolated sentences give color to appellant's contention that advantage was taken of her necessities. Persuasion is not coercion; insistence upon one's legal rights is not undue influence; and pertinacious zeal to secure the payment of a just debt is not fraudulent.

2. It is claimed that another fraud was perpetrated by the insertion in the note and mortgage of $124.99, an indebtedness of Price & Perkins, which, it is asserted, was not included in the guaranty. Reliance is had upon the testimony of plaintiff that everything that was billed prior to June 9th was shipped to Price & Perkins, which amounted to $124.99, and the amount shipped to Price & Oldham was $834.03. Appellant's obligation was expressed as follows: "In consideration of one dollar paid to me by the California Electrical Works and the extension by such company of credit on account from time to time to Price & Oldham which I hereby request, I guarantee the payment of all balances on account and all notes given by them for or on account of such balances up to the sum of one thousand dollars as the same shall become due and payable by them to such company. * * * All bills shall become due the 15th of the month following their dates." The effect of appellant's contention would be to reduce the amount of the principal of the note and mortgage to the extent of said $124.99, but we are required to reject this view since plaintiff testified that, "During the latter part of May, Price came to my office and asked to open an account with them, which I told him we could not do unless he could give us a guaranty. He asked me to open the account in the name of Price & Perkins, and sent a guaranty some few days later in the name of Price & Oldham. In the meantime before he had sent us a guaranty he had sent us a number of orders covering material which he asked us to ship, and these orders were headed Price & Perkins. He asked us to ship them, but we held them awaiting this guaranty. When the guaranty came we shipped a certain part of those orders, and our billing department and shipping department headed our shipping tags 'Price & Perkins.' The shipments were made to Price & Perkins and were taken out by Price & Oldham, Price & Perkins having gone out of business in the meantime, and Price & Oldham succeeding them. All of the material, however, that is charged in either one of those accounts was received by Price & Oldham, and none of the material by Price & Perkins, because we have never made a shipment upon open account to Price & Perkins." Turning to the Price & Perkins account, we find that every item on the debit side, which was charged against appellant, became due after May 29th, the date of the execution of said guaranty. There is evidence, also, that the whole matter was explained to appellant before she executed said note and mortgage. There seems, therefore, no question as to the consideration for the said note and mortgage.

3. There is apparently no merit in the contention that the guaranty was fraudulently dated. It is based upon the testimony of one R. B. Green who declared that he was in Stockton when the guaranty was executed and was in Ashland or Grant's Pass, Oregon, on May 29th, the date the instrument bears, and did not return till June 4th, but he further testified: "I didn't witness the document, but I heard it spoken of, and it was anywhere from the 9th or 10th up to the 15th of June, 1906." His testimony in reference to the date of the execution of said instrument was very properly stricken out as hearsay. It is undoubtedly true that the guarantor's liability is limited to the terms of the agreement (Glassell v. Coleman, 94 Cal. 260, 29 Pac. 508), and sureties are entitled to stand on the precise terms of the bond and are not bound beyond its strict letter (Cadenasso v. Antonelle, 127 Cal. 382, 59 Pac. 765); but these requirements are met by the testimony of the witnesses for the plaintiff and the said amount of $945 is thereby brought within the operation of said guaranty.

4. Another point made is that the mortgage is void for want of delivery. Appellant asserts that "Mrs. Blackburn testified that she had no recollection of signing the note and mortgage on her home, and she asserted positively under oath that she never delivered either of those two alleged documents to the plaintiff or to any other person for him, and her evidence is undisputed." As to this it may be said that the court was entirely justified in concluding from all the testimony of appellant that she was mistaken in the foregoing declaration. Besides, while no witness stated that the note and mortgage were "delivered," it is impossible to give full credit to the testimony of plaintiff's witnesses without reaching the conclusion that everything was done which is necessary to make said instruments effective. There is, moreover, the positive assertion of the said witness Webster that "this note and mortgage was signed and executed." The term "executed," as applied to such instruments, has a well-defined meaning, and includes delivery. Code Civ. Proc. § 1933; Clark v. Child, 66 Cal. 87, 4 Pac. 1058; Nicholson v. Combs, 90 Ind. 515, 46 Am. Rep. 229. Again, the same witness testified that he told appellant of having had the mortgage recorded, and the instruments were actually in possession of plaintiff at the time of the trial, and were introduced in evidence by him. The presumption that they came into his possession lawfully would be sufficient to support a finding of delivery.

5. Appellant complains because the court denied her request for a jury trial. A sufficient answer is found in the decision of the Supreme Court in Downing v. Le Du, 82 Cal. 473, 23 Pac. 202, wherein is quoted with approval the following from Carroll v. Deimel, 95 N. Y. 254: "This is an action for the foreclosure of two mortgages on real estate, and was triable by the court. The defendant was not entitled as matter of right to a trial by jury. Although a sale of the mortgaged premises might result in a deficiency for which a money judgment could be docketed against the defendant liable for such deficiency, such a judgment was not the sole object of the action, but was an incident of the equitable relief sought. It might not even become necessary, as the mortgaged premises might bring a sufficient sum to pay the mortgaged debt and the circumstance, that in the contingency of the premises proving insufficient, a judgment for the deficiency might result, did not entitle the defendant to a jury trial."

6. Certain rulings of the court during the trial of the action are assailed as prejudicially erroneous. Some of them are so manifestly correct that we deem it unnecessary to notice them specifically.

A copy of the said guaranty was received in evidence. Assuming that the circumstance is important, there was a sufficient foundation laid for its introduction, as appears from the testimony of the said Webster and of appellant. The former said that Mrs. Blackburn declared she ought to have the paper, and the plaintiff desired to retain it to show his position in the matter, and "so a copy was made and he indorsed on the original—made a certain indorsement on the original and a copy of it was also made, and she was then given the original; I have an exact copy of it." Mrs. Blackburn testified: "If it was ever given to me, I lost it." She added that she never had it. Be that as it may, the showing was sufficient to justify the conclusion that the original was either lost or destroyed and therefore the copy was admissible. Section 1855, Code Civ. Proc.

The court sustained an objection to the following question asked of the witness Webster: "And you expected to get a pretty good fee, did you not, if you could make this collection against Price & Oldham?" The objection probably should have been overruled, as it is proper to show motive and interest on cross-examination. Section 1847, Code Civ. Proc.; People v. Thomson, 92 Cal. 506, 28 Pac. 589. But the ruling was entirely without prejudice, as the witness had already testified that the matter had been placed in the hands of himself and father for collection, and the court had the right to assume that they were to be compensated for their services. Besides, they were attorneys of record for the plaintiff, and they had asked in the complaint for an attorney's fee of $100. Appellant had the benefit, therefore, of whatever unfavorable inference might be drawn from the fact that the witness was interested in the result of the trial. The plaintiff, in giving his account of the transaction with appellant, was proceeding to state that he said to her, "and that it was not the practice of my company." It was objected to on the ground that it was "incompetent, irrelevant, immaterial, hearsay, and self-serving." The objection was overruled, but whether correctly or not is immaterial, as the witness proceeded no further with the "practice."

The ruling of the court was harmless on the question asked of plaintiff: "Do you remember when you first shipped electrical goods here to Stockton to Price or to any firm of which he was a member?" as it was subsequently answered. The same may be said of some other assignments of error.

As to certain questions asked of appellant after she was recalled and to which an objection was sustained, it may be said that, as far as material, they had all been previously answered by her.

In conclusion, the observation may be indulged that appellant makes the very common mistake of emphasizing the testimony favorable to her theory and assuming that this court will hold that it must be believed in opposition to the testimony sustaining the contention of respondent. It is needless to say that however much we may deplore the misfortunes of appellant, as the evidence is substantially conflicting upon all material points, we cannot enter upon an inquiry as to the relative weight of the evidence and the credibility of the witnesses.

The judgment is affirmed.

DIVORCE (§ 287*)—FRIVOLOUS APPEAL—AFFIRMANCE.

In an action for divorce, which was denied, the court found, as was admitted, that certain land was community property; but in the judgment no order was made with reference thereto, and an order was made under Civ. Code, § 136, for the support of defendant and minor children awarded to her. Held, that her appeal from the judgment, which was criticised only as purporting to declare the status of the property rights of the parties, was frivolous, and the judgment would be affirmed, as there was nothing in it fixing such status, as to which there was no issue.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frederick W. Houser, Judge.

Action by John E. Saul against Emma Saul. There was a judgment in favor of defendant, and she appeals. Affirmed.

Charles Lantz, for appellant. Walter J. Horgan, Frank W. Allender, E. G. Kuster, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. This was an action for divorce, which was denied. Plaintiff in his complaint and defendant in her answer admit that a certain tract of land was property of the community and was all the property owned by them or either of them. The court in its findings of fact found that which was admitted, namely, that the property was community property, but in the judgment no order is made with reference thereto. The custody of some of the children was given to plaintiff and others to defendant, and under section 136 of the Civil Code an order was made requiring plaintiff to pay to defendant for the support of herself and the minor children awarded to her the sum of $12 per week, lawful money of the United States, each and every week until the further order of the court, and that plaintiff pay the costs of the action.

This appeal is from the judgment; the only criticism thereof being that such judgment purports to declare or establish the status of the property rights of the parties. The appeal seems to us to be frivolous. There is nothing in the judgment appealed from fixing the status of property rights, nor was there an issue in relation thereto. The only thing the court did was to exercise the power conferred by section 136 of the Civil Code, of which no complaint is made.

The judgment is affirmed.

COFFIN v. KINGSBURY, Surveyor General. (Civ. 665.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 8, 1910. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court April 7, 1910.)

Taxation (§ 679*)—Sale to State—Delinquent Taxes—Payment of Taxes—Subsequent Purchaser.

Under Pol. Code, § 3788, providing that the Surveyor General shall not permit an entry or sale of state lands deeded to the state for nonpayment of taxes except upon payment of the delinquent taxes and costs by the person proposing to make the entry or purchase, where property has been sold to the state and the taxes are paid by an applicant whose application is subsequently canceled, no further payment is required of future applicants, since the law contemplates only one payment of the taxes and penalties as a condition precedent to the filing of an application for the purchase of the land and the payment of the purchase price.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; C. N. Post, Judge.

Proceedings for a writ of mandate by Franky R. Coffin against W. S. Kingsbury, Surveyor General. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Pardee & Pardee and Wahrhaftig & Shinn, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and M. C. Glenn, Asst. Atty. Gen., for respondent.

BURNETT, J. A proceeding was brought in the superior court for a writ of mandate to compel the respondent to file an application presented by appellant for the purchase of certain school lands. It appears, as stated by respondent, that in the year 1889 a similar application was made by one Billington, who paid 20 per cent. of the purchase price and received a certificate of purchase. He assigned his certificate to George R. Fletcher. The latter permitted the taxes to become delinquent, and his interest was sold through a tax sale. Thereafter a deed was made to the state, and, pursuant to the provisions of section 3785 of the Political Code, the deed was forwarded to the Surveyor General. According to said section, the lands thereupon again became subject to entry and sale, subject to the provisions of section 3788 of said Political Code. On June 8, 1908, William R. Mawer applied for the same lands, and, under the provisions of said section 3788, he paid into the treasury a sum equal to the delinquent taxes, etc., which existed at the time of the sale to the state. The application of Mawer was subsequently canceled by the Surveyor General for the reason that Mawer failed to furnish the necessary proof as to the character of the land. Afterward, one M. P. Barnes presented his application for the said lands, and the Surveyor General required him to pay only the purchase price, for the reason that in the opinion of the Surveyor General the taxes and penalties had been fully satisfied and paid on the application of said Mawer and nothing remained due for the same at the time the said Barnes made his application. Acting upon this theory, respondent declined to file the subsequent application of appellant of the date of April 2, 1909.

It is the contention of appellant that the Legislature, in said section 3788, "prescribes the manner in which and the terms upon which state lands of a certain class, to wit, lands which have been entered, but upon which the full purchase price has not been paid, and which have been sold and deeded to the state for nonpayment of taxes, shall be sold and disposed of. And, by the terms of the section, we find that 'the Surveyor General shall not permit an entry, or make a sale of any lands thus deeded to the state, except upon the previous payment into the state treasury, as other moneys are required to be paid therein, in addition to the price of said lands as compared with the prices fixed for other lands of like character, by the person or persons proposing to make the entry or purchase, of a sum equal to the delinquent taxes, penalties, costs, and accruing costs, by virtue whereof the state became a purchaser of the lands thus sought to be entered or purchased, and also all delinquent taxes, penalties and costs which may have accrued upon such lands from and subsequent to the date of the sale to the state, in pursuance whereof the state received a deed therefor.' It appears clearly from these provisions that the Legislature intended to fix, and did fix, a different price on this class of lands, as compared with the price fixed for other lands of like character. The price thus fixed is the price fixed for other lands of like character, plus a sum equal to the taxes, penalties, costs, and accruing costs by virtue whereof the state became a purchaser of the lands, etc. And this sum equal to the said taxes, penalties, and costs is in terms required to be paid 'by the person or persons proposing to make the entry or purchase.' "

On the other hand, to state respondent's position, we quote quite fully from his brief, as follows: "The state school lands are offered for sale at the rate of $1.25 per acre. Section 3494, Pol. Code. Title 8, within which the last-named section is found, deals with property of the state, and also within this title are contained the provisions as to the sale of school lands. Section 3788 is primarily a section concerning revenue and the collection thereof, and is not in any sense, except in a secondary way, a statute granting any right to purchasers of state land: and, in this light, the section should be considered. The last-mentioned section is found in title 9 of the Political Code, covering the subject of 'revenue,' and the chapter within which section 3788 falls is one dealing with the 'collection of property taxes.' There can be no doubt, therefore, that the main object and purpose of the latter section is to enable the state to collect delinquent taxes, and not for the purpose of fixing the price of school lands. If this be the purpose of the section, it follows that, when the object contemplated thereby has been accomplished, the provisions of the section referring to the delinquent taxes have no further application. * * * We submit that the section, considered in this entirety, is free from ambiguity or doubt. It cannot be given the construction contended for by appellant, when so considered. It provides that, after the deed referred to in section 3785 shall be filed with the Surveyor General, the lands shall again become subject to entry and sale, in the same manner and subject to the same conditions, as apply to other state lands of like character, but that the Surveyor General shall not permit an entry or make a sale of such lands, except upon the previous payment into the state treasury * * * of a sum equal to the delinquent taxes, penalties, and costs which may have accrued upon such lands prior and subsequent to the date of the sale to the state. The section proceeds: 'The money thus paid into the treasury shall be distributed in the manner prescribed in section three thousand eight hundred and sixteen; provided that the moneys received for twenty per cent. of the purchase money, and accruing interest together with the principal in case of full payment on the lands, shall be distributed by the Surveyor General, in the manner now provided by law for such distribution.' Turning to section 3816, it will be found that that section provides for the apportionment of taxes, penalties, etc., on redemption; the county, of course, receiving its proper proportion of such amount. With the latter section incorporated within section 3788, the argument that appellant advances must necessarily fall."

In other words, a different disposition is made of the redemption money and the purchase price of the land, and they are thus clearly treated as separate and distinct.

We are entirely satisfied that when the property has been sold to the state, as in the case at bar, the law contemplates only one payment of the taxes and penalties, etc., as a condition precedent to the filing of an application for the purchase of said land and the payment of the purchase price. When Mawer paid into the treasury the sum prescribed, the state was entirely reimbursed, and the land was in exactly the same condition as though no application had ever been made for its purchase. It was, in other words, subject to application as provided in said section 3494 of the Political Code. It is not contended that Mawer could recover the money thus paid, and it is equally untenable that the status of the land is not entirely restored by the said payment of the "back taxes."

It is true that said section 3788 provides that the Surveyor General shall not permit an entry or make a sale of any lands thus deeded to the state except upon the said payment of the delinquent taxes, etc., "by the person or persons proposing to make the entry or purchase"; but it is clear that the statute has in view the situation after a sale of the land to the state. Thus, before the purchase price can be accepted, the payment of the penalties must be made by the person or persons proposing to make the entry or purchase. There is nothing in the context requiring that this payment of the penalties shall be repeated.

We may add that a perusal of the various sections of the Political Code in reference to the collection of the revenue furnishes additional confirmation of the legislative intent that only one payment of the taxes assessed and accruing penalties is contemplated.

We see no reason to disturb the conclusion of the trial court, and the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

WATSON v. ALTA INV. CO. et al. (WESTERN FUEL CO., Intervener).

1. CONTRACTS (§ 295*)—BUILDING CONTRACTS—SUBSTANTIAL PERFORMANCE — DESTRUCTION OF BUILDING — RECOVERY BY CONTRACTOR.

Where a building contract provided that, if before completion the work should be wholly destroyed by fire or earthquake, the owner should sustain the loss to the extent of the installments paid or due, and the contractor should lose the installments not then due, the contractor, on destruction of the building before completion, could not recover on the theory of substantial performance, though the value of the work remaining to be done was only $48 and the contract price was $13,000; the owner not having received the benefit of the work and not being able to recoup damages for imperfections or omissions therein.

2. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 231*)—EXTINGUISHMENT—DESTRUCTION OF BUILDING.

There can be no mechanic's lien on vacant land, where the uncompleted building, without fault of the owner, has ceased to exist.

3. CONTRACTS (§ 303*)—BUILDING CONTRACTS—DESTRUCTION OF BUILDING BEFORE COMPLETION.

Where a building contract expressly provides how the loss shall be borne in case the building is destroyed by fire or earthquake, a covenant that the building must continue in existence, and that a destruction thereof before completion shall excuse further performance by the contractor and entitle him to recover for the value of the work done, will not be implied.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Buck, Judge.

Action by Sage Watson against the Alta Investment Company and others, wherein the Western Fuel Company intervened. From the judgment, plaintiff and intervener appeal. Affirmed.

See, also, 108 Pac. 50.

Olney, Pringle & Mannon, Jas. Alva Watt, and Max Thelen, for appellants. A. G. & H. K. Eells and W. F. Williamson, for respondents.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an action by plaintiff, as assignee of Watson Bros., for the foreclosure of a mechanic's lien as against the Alta Investment Company, and for the recovery of money due on an express contract as against James Crichton.

The Alta Investment Company entered into a contract with James Crichton, by the terms of which Crichton was to do all the granite and brick work on a building being erected by said company. Shortly thereafter Crichton entered into a contract with Watson Bros., a copartnership, according to the terms of which they were to carry out and be bound by the agreement between the Alta Investment Company and Crichton, except that they were to receive a bonus of $100 from Crichton. Under these contracts the work was to be paid for as it progressed in four equal installments. After the first two payments had been made, the building, through no fault of any of the parties hereto, was entirely destroyed by the calamity of April 18, 1906, which visited San Francisco and vicinity. The third payment was to be made on the completion of the building, and the fourth was to be made 36 days thereafter. If the building was completed prior to its destruction, these two payments became obligatory, and judgment should have gone against the defendants.

The contract between the Alta Investment Company and Crichton contained the following provisions:

"Fifth. The owner agrees to pay $13,000 at times and in the manner following, to wit: * * * Third payment three thousand two hundred and fifty ($3,250) dollars when all work is completed and accepted."

"Fourth. Payment, $3.250 thirty-six days after all work is completed and accepted and notice of completion is filed in the office of the county recorder."

"Provided that when each payment or installment shall become due, and at the final completion of the work, certificates in writing shall be obtained from said architect stating that the payment or installment is due or work completed, as the case may be. * * *"

"Twelfth. In case said work herein provided for should, before completion, be wholly destroyed by fire, defective soil, earthquake or other act of God which the contractor could not have reasonably have foreseen and provided for, then the loss occasioned thereby shall be sustained by the owner to the extent that he has paid installments thereon, or that may be due under the fifth clause of this contract; and the loss occasioned thereby and to be sustained by the contractor, shall be for the uncompleted portion of said work upon which he may be engaged at the time of the loss, and for which no payment is yet due under said fifth clause of this contract. * * *"

The court found: "That said work was not completed, nor was the same accepted. * * * That said architect refused to give said certificate for the reason that said work was not done nor completed to his satisfaction nor at all." Also that before completion of either the building or of plaintiff's work, the building was, without fault of defendant or of any of the parties to the action, "wholly and entirely destroyed by fire" in the calamity of April, 1906, and that at no time thereafter "was there said or any building or structure upon said land."

The finding of the court that the contract was uncompleted is based on evidence which shows that the value of the work remaining to be done was $48. Plaintiff contends that when this amount is compared with the contract price of the granite and brick work, i. e., $13,000, the conclusion is irresistible that the work left undone is of a trivial nature, and therefore that the finding that the contract was not completed is unsupported by the evidence. To sustain this position he cites us to a number of mechanic's lien cases which hold that when the work has been substantially performed the contractor may recover against the owner, notwithstanding that there may be some trivial imperfection in the work. The theory of those cases seems to be that the owner receives the benefit of the work of the contractor, and can be protected by an allowance of damages for trivial omissions or imperfections. But in this case the owner has not received or accepted the benefit of the work, and he cannot recoup damages for the imperfections in it, for which reasons the doctrine of those cases is inapplicable. Moreover, the parties to the contract, in paragraph fifth thereof, stated what they meant by the word "completion," and in the twelfth paragraph they expressly stipulated precisely as to where the loss should fall in the event of the destruction of the building by fire or earthquake.

Recently, in passing upon this exact question, in the case of Seebach v. Kuhn, 9 Cal. App. 485, 99 Pac. 723, this court said: "Undoubtedly the rule is well established that in ordinary cases the contractor in a building contract may recover against the owner, notwithstanding that he has not strictly complied with his contract because of minor defects and imperfections, and even omissions, not willful or fraudulent. This rule is sometimes spoken of as the modern equitable doctrine of substantial performance. It rests for its justification upon the proposition that in such cases the owner has either accepted the benefit of the work of the contractor, or because of the nature of the transaction he perforce receives such benefit to his property, and may be protected from actual pecuniary loss by a recoupment in damages for deficiencies and imperfections. Oftentimes minor defects and imperfections occur in the construction or repair of buildings without intentional fault of the contractor. For such defects the owner may be readily made whole by an allowance of damages. So, too, under the mechanic's lien law it is provided that for the purpose of filing liens a building shall not be held uncompleted because of trivial imperfections. (Citing cases.) But we do not think that the doctrine of substantial performance has any application to this case. The defendant did not accept the work or enter into the use and possession of the building. He did not and cannot receive any benefit from the work done, and he cannot be made whole by any allowance for damages for incomplete performance. Each and all of the just and equitable principles upon which the doctrine of substantial performance rests are absent from this case. It manifestly is not a case where both parties may be protected from loss. On the contrary, when the parties to the contract framed the fire and earthquake clause, they had in mind a contingency under which one or both parties must suffer a loss. They deliberately undertook to provide how that loss should be borne. The contract that they made is perfectly lawful, and we know of no reason why courts should not give it effect according to its terms."

A further reason why the plaintiff cannot recover against the Alta Investment Company is that there can be no mechanic's lien on vacant land when the uncompleted building, without fault of the owner, has ceased to exist. Humboldt L. M. Co. v. Crisp, 146 Cal. 686, 81 Pac. 30, 106 Am. St. Rep. 75.

Plaintiff contends that the law reads into contracts of this character an implied covenant that the building on which the work shall be done must continue in existence, and that a destruction thereof before the completion of the contract excuses further performance by the contractor, and entitles him to recover for the value of the work done up to the time of the destruction. But inasmuch as the contracts in this case expressly provided how the loss should be borne in case the building should be destroyed by fire or earthquake, there is no room for the application of that principle.

Plaintiff suggests that the Alta Investment Company—Crichton contract was only referred to and attached to the contract between Crichton and Watson Bros. for the purpose of showing what work was to be done, and that the latter contract does not include the fifth and twelfth paragraphs hereinabove quoted, but that, the work having been substantially completed, he is entitled to recover as against defendant Crichton. The contract between Watson Bros. and Crichton stipulated that the work to be done on the building in question by Crichton should be done by Watson Bros. according to the "terms" of the agreement and "specifications," etc., of the contract between the Alta Investment Company and Crichton, and a copy of that contract was attached to and made a part of the subcontract. Plaintiff's position in this regard is without merit. One of the terms of the original contract was that, if the building should be destroyed before completion, the contractor should stand the loss for all payments not due, and this provision by reference became one of the terms of the contract between Watson Bros. and Crichton. The payments under the second contract were to be made at the same time as those under the first contract, and the amounts of the payments were the same, except that the third payment from Crichton to Watson Bros. was to contain the $100 bonus. The reference clearly imports the incorporation of all the terms of the original contract into the contract between Watson Bros. and Crichton, including those now in question.

Thus it appears that the plaintiff should not recover on the contract as against defendant Crichton, nor has he any right of lien as against the property of the Alta Investment Company.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. Feb. 8, 1910. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court April 7, 1910.)

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Buck, Judge.

Action by Sage Watson against the Alta Investment Company and others, wherein the Western Fuel Company intervened. From a judgment for defendants and from an order denying a motion for new trial, intervener appeals. Affirmed.

Olney, Pringle & Mannon, James Alva Watt, and Max Thelen, for appellant. A. G. & H. K. Eells and W. F. Williamson, for respondents.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal by the intervener, Western Fuel Company, from the judgment in favor of the defendants, and from an order denying its motion for a new trial, and is taken on the same transcript as case No. 701 (108 Pac. 48), bearing the same title, which we have this day decided. It grows out of the same transaction, and is argued in and submitted upon the same briefs. The intervener furnished materials to Watson Bros., the plaintiff's assignors, to be used in the construction of the building giving rise to the controversy in said case No. 701; and long after the destruction of the building it served notice on the owner, the Alta Investment Company, to withhold any moneys that might be due by it to defendant Crichton. But we have this day affirmed the judgment of the lower court in favor of defendants Alta Investment Company and Crichton, by which it was adjudged that there was nothing due from said company.

For the reasons stated in the opinion in said case No. 701 for affirming the judgment and order in that case, the judgment and order in this case should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 9, 1910.)

1. Insurance (§ 819*)—Action on Benefit Certificate—Sufficiency of Evidence.

In an action on a benefit certificate, evidence held to support a finding that insured was not pregnant when she made application, and did not become so before the certificate was delivered to her.

2. Insurance (§ 819*)—Action on Benefit Certificate—Sufficiency of Evidence.

In an action on a benefit certificate, evidence held to support a finding that insured, to questions as to whether she had consulted any physician as to personal ailment, whether she had undergone a surgical operation, and as to how many miscarriages she had had, with dates, made correct answers to the insurer's officer who examined her, and was told by such officer that a miscarriage suffered by her was not such as contemplated by the question in the application, and that her answer should be, "None," and that acting on such advice she answered it in the negative.

3. Insurance (§ 818*)—Action on Benefit Certificate—Admissibility of Evidence.

In an action on a benefit certificate, where defendant alleged false answers in the application as to insured's having had a miscarriage, a document signed by persons as Supreme Physicians of the insurer, setting forth certain rules to be observed in passing upon the application of a person "who has had a miscarriage," was inadmissible in evidence, it not appearing to be a by-law of the order, nor that the physician making insured's examination, or insured, knew of its existence.

4. Insurance (§ 724*)—Application—Untrue Answers by Agent of Insurer.

Where insured orally gave insurer's agent literally true answers, and the agent wrote down answers not literally true, if insured accepted such answers, she will be deemed to have done so in acceptance of the construction put upon the matter by the agent, and a by-law providing that no officer of the beneficial society is authorized or permitted to waive any of the laws of the society relating to the contract for payment of benefits between any member and the society does not apply.

6. Insurance (§ 818*)—Action on Benefit Certificate—Admissibility of Evidence.

In an action on a benefit certificate, where the insurer claimed untrue answers to a question as to whether insured had had a miscarriage, testimony of a witness as to whether a miscarriage insured had had, in fact had anything to do with one she suffered after the application, was improperly admitted as immaterial, the warranties running to the answers given in the application.

7. Appeal and Error (§ 1050*) — Harmless Error—Admission of Evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Action by Otto Schwartz and others, minors, by Otto Schwartz, their guardian, against the Royal Neighbors of America. From a judgment for plaintiffs and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Benjamin D. Smith and F. E. Cook, for appellant. J. R. Webb and S. L. Strother, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, P. J. This is an action to recover upon a benefit certificate issued by defendant on the life of Cecilia Schwartz. Plaintiff had judgment, from which, and from the order denying its motion for a new trial, defendant appeals.

The benefit certificate was admitted in evidence, is dated Peoria, Ill., May 9, 1906, and was delivered to Mrs. Schwartz, May 21, 1906; also copy of her application dated February 15, 1906, and proof of death which occurred

August 15, 1906. It was admitted that the signatures to the several documents are true and correct, and that all assessments and dues required to be paid under the policy have been paid. The court found all the allegations of the complaint to be true, and all of the defendant's first affirmative defense to be true "except as hereinafter found." This defense is based upon the provisions set forth in the benefit certificate and the conditions thereto affixed, and particularly averring that the insured warranted the answers made by her in her application to be "full, complete, and literally true." Certain specified questions and answers are then set forth as to which it is averred that the answers were false and untrue, "by reason whereof the said benefit certificate herein sued on became, was, and is null and void," to wit: "(18) Have you, within the last seven years, consulted any person, physician or physicians in regard to personal ailment? No. If so, give dates, ailment, length of illness, and person, physician, or physician's name and address. Only confinement." The court found this defense to be untrue. "(19) Have you ever undergone a surgical operation?" To which she answered, "No." This averment is found untrue. "(331) Are you pregnant? * * * If applicant is pregnant, application will not be accepted by Supreme Physician. Examination should be postponed until at least two months after confinement." She answered, "No;" and the answer alleges that at that time, to wit, February 23, 1906, she was pregnant. This averment is found untrue. "(33n) How many miscarriages, and give dates of each?" To which she answered, "None;" it is claimed that prior thereto she had had a miscarriage. As to this the court found that Mrs. Schwartz "made true and correct answer to said question to Mrs. Lulu Case, Deputy Supreme Oracle of defendant, and one of the officers of defendant, and was by said Deputy Supreme Oracle informed that the miscarriage suffered by said applicant was not such a miscarriage as was contemplated by said question by defendant, and that her answer should be, 'None;' that, acting on said advice and information, and believing therefrom that her said answer was literally true as meant by the question asked, said Cecilia Schwartz answered the same in the negative."

A second affirmative defense is based upon the answer given to question 331, and it is particularly averred that if Mrs. Schwartz was not pregnant on February 23, 1906, as warranted by her, the "said condition of nonpregnancy, so certified to and warranted by her said answer, did not continue as so warranted to the completion of the contract applied for in said application; but alleges that on and prior to the 23d day of May, 1906, the said Cecilia Schwartz became and was pregnant and that she failed and neglected to notify the defendant with relation thereto," whereby the said certificate became void. As to this the court found "that said applicant was not pregnant at the time of the delivery to and acceptance by her of defendant's benefit certificate." The findings are challenged as unsupported by the evidence.

It appears that Mrs. Schwartz was born in Germany and did not understand the English language very well, and, when being questioned by Mrs. Case, on several occasions required the questions to be repeated, and seemed "not to understand very well." Her application was solicited at her own home by Mrs. Lulu Case who recommended the application and witnessed it as "D. S. O., Camp Recorder, Deputy Supreme Oracle or Camp Physician." The form of application required the camp physician "to fill in" the answers to questions made part of the application. The answers now claimed to be false were made to and written in the application by Mrs. Case, acting in her official capacity. This examination was had on February 15, 1906, and the applicant was required to verify the answers before a physician. In the record is a verification, dated February 23, 1906, signed by Mrs. Schwartz and by Charles H. Ingrim, M. D. In this verification she affirms the truth of her statements made in her answers; agrees that they shall form the basis of her contract with the company and makes them part of her benefit certificate; agrees that if they are "not literally true" the "benefit certificate shall be void"; agrees that any certificate issued to her "while in sound health, shall be in pursuance of the by-laws of the society"; also, that the benefit certificate and the application "shall be construed as one entire contract." Dr. Ingrim, who signed this verification with Mrs. Schwartz, did not testify, and it does not appear that he asked her any questions.

There was but little testimony, and, as it bears more or less upon all the answers to questions claimed to be untrue, it may here be given. Dr. McMurtry was called by defendant and testified that he was the attending family physician of deceased; that he was called to attend her in November, 1905, and treated her then for a miscarriage and that "she was up in three or four days." He was again called to treat her about August 10, 1906, and she died August 15. He testified that "the direct cause of her death was her kidney condition." She was then pregnant. "The fetus was about half born. I did not measure the fetus, and it is impossible to say how long she was pregnant. I stated once it was about three months, but I think it was in the neighborhood of four months. I did not measure the fetus and could not say positively." On cross-examination he testified: "If it should appear in evidence that Mrs. Schwartz was sick in her monthly period the latter part of April, I should then say that the fetus was about three months old. * * * If it should be a fact that in the latter part of April she was sick, it would be impossible for her to know, definitely, her true condition by the 21st of May." (This was the date she received her benefit certificate.) He testified that she died of convulsions, and "the miscarriage was caused by that also." It appeared from the testimony of Mrs. Schwartz' husband that she "had her last monthly sickness at the end of April the same year she died."

The depositions of Mary Teichman and Rosa Teichman were received in evidence. These witnesses were next-door neighbors of Mrs. Schwartz and were present when the Deputy Supreme Oracle and Camp Physician of the society examined Mrs. Schwartz and took her application. Mary Teichman testified: "At that time I and Rosa Teichman were there, and Rosa's mother, who could not talk English, and also Mrs. Case and Miss Bond, representing the company. Mrs. Case wrote the answers to the questions in the application, and I heard everything she asked and the answers given. I heard Mrs. Case ask Mrs. Schwartz whether she had ever been sick or not, and what kind of sickness she had; how many times she was sick, and she said only once and she said she miscarried and got an operation. Mrs. Case says she don't have to tell doctor about it." On cross-examination she testified: "I do not speak English very well. When the people are talking I do not understand everything they say when they speak in English. You know, Mrs. Schwartz she (Mrs. Case) asked her lots of times questions and she could not understand them very well. She asked her lots of times what mean that. Mrs. Schwartz was German and I am German. Mrs. Case spoke to Mrs. Schwartz in English. Sometimes Mrs. Schwartz did not understand what she said. Then Mrs. Case would speak over. Mrs. Case asked Mrs. Schwartz if she was in a family way or not. She never was in family way at that time when Mrs. Case was there. All I know about it was what Mrs. Schwartz said. Mrs. Case told her she had to go to see doctor for it before she could get her final papers. I was in the room all the time Mrs. Case was there. Mrs. Case had a paper and wrote these things down. When she asked Mrs. Schwartz a question and Mrs. Schwartz answered it, Mrs. Case would write it down." Rosa Teichman testified substantially as did Mary Teichman. She testified: "Mrs. Schwartz at that time was not pregnant. She said, 'I ain't in a family way,' and that was all she said about it. She said she was not so very sick on this former occasion when she had the miscarriage, but that she had a doctor and an operation at that time. I asked Mrs. Case if she should tell Dr. Ingrim about the miscarriage, and she said, 'No, you don't have to tell him.' Mrs. Case was there; she had a fountain pen and asked the questions and wrote down the answers. Mrs. Schwartz did not always understand the question when it was first asked her. * * * Mrs. Schwartz did not know how old her grandpa and grandmamma was, and she asked my mamma about it in German and then told Mrs. Case in English. I spoke to Mrs. Schwartz in English. My people came from the same part of Germany that Mrs. Schwartz's people did." This closed the testimony.

1. As to the answer given by Mrs. Schwartz to question 331, that she was not then pregnant and as to the point that she became pregnant before the benefit certificate was delivered to her, the evidence fully warranted the findings of the court. The first symptom of probable pregnancy occurred the last of April, 1906, and Dr. McMurtry testified that "it would be impossible for her to know definitely, her true condition by the 21st of May," when she received the certificate.

2. Questions 18, 19, and 33n all relate to a single instance of previous sickness, pregnancy, and operation. The evidence is that Mrs. Schwartz made no concealment of the fact that in 1905 she had a miscarriage and an operation, which seems not to have been of any seriousness, for Dr. McMurtry testified that he treated her and "she was up and about in three or four days." She did not make any concealment of the fact from Mrs. Case, but told her the truth, and, after explanations, Mrs. Case, not Mrs. Schwartz, wrote down the answers. There is no evidence that Mrs. Schwartz knew what answers were being recorded against her, except the presumption that might follow from having signed the paper. We cannot, from anything disclosed, impute to her any intention to deceive or that she was knowingly a party to any guilty deception. She was asked no questions, so far as appears, by Dr. Ingrim, the society's medical officer. Mrs. Case was the authorized agent of the society, and appears to have enjoyed the rather high-sounding title of "Deputy Supreme Oracle and Camp Physician," and with her was Miss Bond, an officer of the society. Neither of these persons was called by defendant to explain their conduct or part in the taking of the application. Nor was Dr. Ingrim called to show what occurred when Mrs. Schwartz came to him. We cannot presume that either one of these officers was purposely committing a fraud upon the society which they represented, or was intentionally seeking to mislead it or Mrs. Schwartz. The reasonable, as well as the more charitable view of the transaction, is, that both Mrs. Case and Miss Bond, after hearing the facts about the single previous sickness of any kind which is in question, concluded that it was of little consequence and on their own initiative and through no wish of the applicant, made out the application. Mrs. Schwartz took this application to Dr. Ingrim bearing the recommendation of Lulu Case, who had conducted the examination, and we may well assume that he accepted it without further inquiry, believing that "the Deputy Supreme Oracle and Camp Physician" had sufficiently examined Mrs. Schwartz. Mrs. Schwartz was told that she need not speak of the miscarriage to Dr. Ingrim, but whether she did or not we do not know. Presumably she made no verbal misrepresentations to him or defendant would have shown it by Dr. Ingrim. The burden was on defendant to establish its defense which we think it failed to do. The findings of the court are supported by the evidence.

3. There was admitted in evidence a document signed by Susan McG. Snyder and three others, "Supreme Physicians, Royal Neighbors of America," setting forth certain rules to be observed by themselves in passing upon the application of a person "who has had a miscarriage." It does not appear to be a bylaw of the society, nor does it appear that "Camp Physician" Case or Mrs. Schwartz knew of its existence. It is addressed "To whom it may concern," but we cannot see that it concerns any one of the plaintiffs or has any relevancy to the case.

4. There was also admitted in evidence a section of the by-laws of the society which provides that no officer of the society or local camp officer "is authorized or permitted to waive any of the provisions of the laws of this society which relate to the contract for the payment of benefits between any member and the society." It is contended that the insured warranted her answers to be literally true, and neither Mrs. Case nor any other officer had the authority to waive truthful answers to the questions in her application. The question here seems to us not one of waiver so much as it is the acceptance of the answers as satisfactory by the society's agent. The answer as orally given was literally true, for Mrs. Schwartz said she had had a miscarriage, and, after explanation it was the agent and not Mrs. Schwartz who gave a meaning to the sickness and wrote down what was not strictly true. It was the society's agent and not the insured who did this and if the insured accepted it as her answer we may safely assume that she did so in acceptance of the construction put upon the matter by the agent. In North American Ins. Co. v. Throop, 22 Mich. 146, 7 Am. Rep. 638, 646, Mr. Justice Cooley said: "If the insurer himself, or his agent, drafts an answer to such interrogatory, in which he treats it as immaterial and does not observe strict accuracy in his statement of facts, the assured might well suppose he could be thought captious and hypercritical if he should insist upon answers exactly correct, when the party seeking the information, and who, alone, was interested in it, was satisfied with statements less accurate, and which, with full knowledge of the facts, he had written out to suit himself."

The assured here was a German woman with an imperfect understanding of the English language. Approached by an officer whose title implies one second in authority to the "Supreme Oracle," accompanied by Miss Bond, also an officer of the society, it was natural for her to be guided by these representatives of the society and place confidence in them. If there was a violation of the society's rules or failure of duty it was not on the part of the assured, and her beneficiaries should not suffer through the zeal or shortcomings of the society's agents. It may be observed that the representation related to a matter which in no wise affected the then present physical condition of the applicant.

5. Error is claimed in sustaining plaintiffs' objection to a question put to Dr. McMurtry by defendant: "Doctor, you have said that when Mrs. Schwartz consulted you some several weeks prior to her death, you knew she was pregnant; state whether she had told you before?" The witness had testified that Mrs. Schwartz went to see him "about two weeks before she was taken sick; that about a week before she had spoken to him about being pregnant." The witness had already testified to the fact sought to be elicited. Conceding that the question was proper the ruling was harmless.

6. The witness was permitted, over defendant's objection, to answer the question: "Did you think the first miscarriage had anything to do with the last one?" and answered, "I do not." We think the question was immaterial, inasmuch as the warranties ran to the answers given in the application. But we do not think the ruling prejudicial.

7. When the depositions of Mary and Rosa Teichman were offered, defendant objected. The record states: "It was admitted that the depositions were irregularly taken, and counsel for defendant objected to same * * * on the ground that same and such evidence is incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial; that under the by-laws of defendant no agent has any right to waive the rules of defendant, and that defendant is not bound by the acts of any agent in attempting to waive the rules." If there was such irregularity in the taking of the depositions as to have made them inadmissible, defendant should have so shown. They may have been "irregular" and still admissible. Error must be made to appear. We think it was admissible to show what took place at the time the application was made.

The case is not entirely free from difficulty, but regarding the acts of the parties as free from intentional wrong, though not strictly in conformity with the rules of the society, we feel constrained to uphold the view taken by the learned trial judge.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

PECK v. BERNARD et al. (Civ. 745.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Feb. 5, 1910. On Petition for Rehearing, March 7, 1910.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 651½,* New, vol. 9, Key No. Series)—NAME OF STREETS—CHANGE OF NAME.

Where the name of a street became the official name by resolution of the city council, the subsequent recording of a map of a subdivision giving the street a different name was inoperative to change the official name, without reference to the owners of the property on the street.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 651½,* New, vol. 9, Key No. Series)—NAME OF STREETS—CHANGE OF NAME.

Where a street was officially designated as O. street by resolution of the city council, and some persons called it D. street, an attempt of the city council to change D. street to S. street did not affect the official name.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 294*)—STREET IMPROVEMENTS—NOTICE TO PROPERTY OWNERS.

Where the attempt of the city council to change the official name of a street did not affect the name, a street improvement proceeding taken under the changed name was not notice to the abutting property owners, and, where they had no actual knowledge of the improvement until after the commencement of a suit to foreclose an assessment lien, a judgment of foreclosure was erroneous.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; George H. Hutton, Judge.

Action by E. C. Peck against Pierre Bernard and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant Jeannette Apion appeals. Reversed.

Charles Lantz, for appellant. A. J. Sherer and Edward Winterer, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This appeal involves the validity of the same street assessment considered by the Supreme Court in the two cases Nos. 2,300 and 2,301 (103 Pac. 918, 919), and therein held to be void.

For the reasons given in the opinion of department 2 of that court, filed August 24, 1909, in appeal No. 2,300 (103 Pac. 918), the judgment of the trial court directing a foreclosure of the lien based upon that assessment and directing a sale of the premises described is reversed.

On Petition for Rehearing.

Respondent petitions for a rehearing of this appeal on the ground that the decisions of the Supreme Court in Peck v. Stassforth (Nos. 2,300 and 2,301) 103 Pac. 918, 919, are not applicable to this case because the lot of appellant was identified by being named as lot 12 of Davin & Jullien's subdivision, and the street in question is called Davin on the plat of that subdivision introduced in evidence. We read the decisions mentioned as holding, in effect, that Otto street became the official name of the street in question in 1890 by a resolution of the common council of the city of Los Angeles, and that the recording of the map of the Davin & Jullien subdivision in 1894, giving the same street the name of Davin, did not operate to change the name to Davin. In the application of this rule it was not material who owned the property. There being no such official street as Davin, but the street called by some persons by that name being officially designated Otto street, the attempt of the city council to change Davin to Savannah street did not affect the official name of Otto street at all. Therefore, the property owners on Otto street received no constructive notice that any improvements were being made on that street by any proceeding taken with reference to Savannah street. The appellant, who is not contradicted, testified that she had no actual knowledge of the improvement until after the commencement of the suit, and that no demand was ever made upon her for the payment of any assessment, and that the lot has always been vacant and unoccupied. The claim of estoppel can never be sustained where there is no notice. The further point made by the petition that appellant is bound by any act of E. R. Fox, as her predecessor in title, is repugnant to the express statement in the bill of exceptions: "No evidence was offered by the plaintiff, or by any person, that E. R. Fox ever owned lot 12 of said Davin & Jullien's subdivision, or any property fronting on said Otto street or Savannah street, in said city of Los Angeles."

Petition for rehearing is denied.

1. DIVORCE (§ 109*)—EVIDENCE OF ADULTERY—BURDEN OF PROOF.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1056*)—HARMLESS ERROR—EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE.

In a suit for divorce for adultery, any error in the rejection of evidence that defendant visited a brothel some two months after the suit was brought is not prejudicial, where the finding that the overt acts of adultery charged were not committed is sustained by the evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; S. E. Crow, Judge.

Bertha Johanson brought suit for divorce from Charles J. Johanson. Divorce denied, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Charles F. Carrier and W. P. Butcher, for appellant. W. C. Gammill and H. C. Booth, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. This is an appeal from a judgment upon a bill of exceptions to review errors of law in the exclusion of testimony.

The action was one for divorce upon the ground of adultery. The complaint averred that defendant, on the 16th day of December, 1907, in the city of Santa Barbara, at a house numbered 820 Anacapa street, committed adultery with a woman named Violet; that on January 15, 1908, at No. 822 Anacapa street, in said city, defendant committed adultery with some female whose name is unknown to plaintiff; that defendant has committed adultery at various other times with the said female named Violet, at said house No. 820 Anacapa street, and with other females in said house and elsewhere, the particular dates of said acts of adultery being unknown to plaintiff. The complaint was filed on the 16th day of January, 1908. The evidence offered in support of plaintiff's complaint is entirely circumstantial, it being shown that on January 15, 1908, and at about 11 o'clock p. m. of such date, defendant in company with another man visited a brothel in the city of Santa Barbara; that at the time of such visit there was but one female inmate and the only conduct of defendant established in connection with the visit was that he was seen sitting in the reception room, wherein the inmate was playing the piano and the male companion was dancing. Were it even to be assumed that from a visit to a place of this character adultery is to be inferred, nevertheless the presumption attaching would only cast upon defendant the burden of explaining the object and purposes of his visit. This the defendant did to the entire satisfaction of the trial court, who found that no adultery was committed by defendant as charged in the complaint. The court finds, and there is ample evidence in its support, that defendant did not commit adultery with the woman named Violet at any time or place.

Upon the trial, a witness was called who admitted that she had been an inmate of the brothel during the month of March, 1908, and she was asked by counsel for appellant whether at night after 11 o'clock, on one or more occasions during the month of March, defendant visited that house. The court sustained an objection to this question, and by reason of which error is claimed, and this upon the authority of Carpenter v. Carpenter, 56 Hun, 643, 9 N. Y. Supp. 583, wherein it is held that where adultery is charged in particular houses of ill fame evidence is admissible of visits to other houses of ill fame to show the habits and inclinations of the defendant, and as bearing upon the probability of the evidence in support of the specific charges. It will be observed that the evidence sought to be elicited by this question related to conduct long after the commencement of the action, and in no degree can the same be said to establish the commission of the offenses alleged to have been committed before the filing of the complaint. Assuming, however, such question to be admissible as tending to show the intent with which the visit to the brothel was made at the time specified in the complaint, we do not regard the error in its rejection, if conceded to be such, as sufficiently prejudicial to warrant a reversal of the judgment. The court having found that the overt act was not committed, and the record not disclosing any circumstance or fact from which the court could have found otherwise, it is of little importance as to the intent of the visit. Had there been some evidence from which it might be reasonably inferred that his relations with the female inmate on that occasion had been of an adulterous character, the effect of the exclusion of the evidence might have been different; but in the absence of any testimony or circumstance other than the bare matter of a visit, and it being clearly shown that no offense was committed upon the occasion of such visit, it can scarcely be said that the error was prejudicial.

Judgment affirmed.

Sections 1408 and 1409 provide that on satisfactory proof of ownership the magistrate must order the property to be delivered to the owner. Held, that sections 1408 and 1409, in so far as they are applicable to search warrant proceedings, are unconstitutional for failure to provide for notice of time of hearing to the person from whose possession the property is taken under a search warrant, and an opportunity to be heard, as depriving such person of his property without due process of law, nor was it any answer to such objection that the magistrate would probably see to it that notice and an opportunity to be heard were given.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Prohibition on petition of the Modern Loan Company against the Police Court of the City and County of San Francisco and E. P. Shortall, judge thereof. From a judgment making the writ permanent, respondents appeal. Affirmed.

Charles F. Hanlon, for appellants. Robt. W. Harrison, amicus curiæ. Chas. N. Douglass, for respondent. Campbell, Metson, Drew, Oatman & Mackenzie and W. H. Orrick, amici curiæ.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from a judgment of the superior court making permanent a writ of prohibition. In August, 1908, one Bessie Seaman, presented to Hon. E. P. Shortall, judge of the police court of the city and county of San Francisco, an affidavit, properly subscribed and sworn to by her, in which she averred that in February, 1908, one E. R. Burke had willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously taken and carried away a certain diamond breastpin of the value of $250, the property of said Bessie Seaman, and that there was probable and reasonable cause to believe that said breastpin was concealed at the place of business of the Modern Loan Company, the above-named respondent, in San Francisco. Upon said affidavit the police judge issued a search warrant, pursuant to which the said breastpin was taken from the possession of the respondent. Thereafter, it appearing that said police judge was about to proceed and determine the ownership of said pin, the respondent, claiming a lien upon the same, and asserting that he was entitled as such lienholder to possession thereof, instituted these proceedings in the superior court for a writ of prohibition. That court held that the provisions of the Penal Code, which purport to authorize the police judge to hear and determine "the ownership of" and "title to" personal property, were unconstitutional, and that therefore such police judge was without jurisdiction to proceed in the matter, and a peremptory writ of prohibition issued as prayed for in the petition. From the judgment in favor of the Modern Loan Company appellants prosecute this appeal.

Respondent claims that when personal property has been stolen or embezzled, and that fact is made to appear by affidavit, nevertheless a search warrant should not issue unless a complaint is filed charging the guilty person with the larceny or embezzlement of the property in question. See contra Haworth v. Newell, 102 Iowa, 541, 546, 547, 71 N. W. 404. He also claims that under section 1527 of the Penal Code the evidentiary, and not the ultimate, facts should be stated. Here the affidavit set forth the commission of the larceny, not upon information, but in positive terms; and, in view of the decisions in Ex parte Dimmig, 74 Cal. 164, 15 Pac. 619, and People v. Staples, 91 Cal. 23, 27 Pac. 523, this last contention would seem to have as little merit as the first one. However, the conclusion we have reached on the chief point in the case will render any discussion of these, or any other minor exceptions to the regularity of the proceedings, unnecessary.

The sections of the Penal Code which authorize the disposition and award of personal property seized under search warrants fail to provide for the giving of notice to interested parties, or to afford them an opportunity to be heard on such proceedings, and for this reason respondent contends that those sections are unconstitutional. When personal property has been stolen or embezzled, and, as the result of proceedings under a search warrant, has been seized and delivered to a magistrate, he must dispose of it as provided in sections 1408 and 1409 of the Penal Code. Subdivision 1, § 1524, of the same Code provides that a search warrant may issue "When the property was stolen or embezzled, in which case it may be taken on the warrant from any place in which it is concealed, or from the possession of the person by whom it was stolen or embezzled, or from any person in whose possession it may be." Section 1536 provides: "When the property is delivered to the magistrate he must, if it was stolen or embezzled, dispose of it as provided in sections 1408 and 1413 inclusive. * * *"

Sections 1408 and 1409 of the Penal Code read as follows:

"Sec. 1408. On satisfactory proof of the ownership of the property, the magistrate before whom the information is laid, or who examines the charge against the person accused of stealing or embezzling it, must order it to be delivered to the owner, on his paying the necessary expenses incurred in its preservation, to be certified by the magistrate. The order entitles the owner to demand and receive the property.

"Sec. 1409. If property stolen or embezzled comes into the custody of the magistrate, it must be delivered to the owner on satisfactory proof of his title, and on his paying the necessary expenses incurred in its preservation, to be certified by the magistrate."

We agree with the contention of the respondent that these two sections, so far as they are applicable to search warrant proceedings, are void. One who is in possession of property under a claim of right cannot be deprived of its possession without due process of law; and, in order to constitute due process of law, there must be notice of the time and place of hearing, and an opportunity to be heard. Murray v. Hoboken Land, etc., Co., 18 How. 280, 15 L. Ed. 372; 22 Cyc., pp. 72, 73; People v. Granice, 50 Cal. 447. The statute should give the parties interested in the property an opportunity of presenting, in a deliberate, regular, and orderly method, issues of fact and of law to the court or to a court and jury unless a jury is waived. Under these two sections, irrespective of the value of the property, and without any right of appeal, and without the slightest notice—indeed immediately upon the return of the warrant—the magistrate may proceed to the "proof of the ownership or of title" to the property and make an award. A proceeding permitting this contravenes the provisions of the state and federal Constitutions that a person cannot be deprived of his property without due process of law. It is no answer to the objection urged that the magistrate quite probably will see to it in each case that notice and an opportunity to be heard are given, for the right of a person to his day in court must rest on something more substantial than favor or discretion. It is essential to the validity of a statute that it furnish the means whereby one may enforce his constitutional right.

As said by the Supreme Court of this state in Re Lambert, 134 Cal. 626, 634, 66 Pac. 851, 854 (55 L. R. A. 856, 86 Am. St. Rep. 296): "In the absence from the statute of any requirement of notice to the person, any notice that might be given would be without legal force and authority, and consequently, whether acted upon by him or disregarded, the proceeding would be equally ineffective. 'It is not enough that he may by chance have notice, or that he may as a matter of favor have a hearing. The law must require notice to him, and give him the right to a hearing and opportunity to be heard. The constitutional validity of a law is to be tested, not by what has been done under it, but what may by its authority be done.' Stuart v. Palmer, 74 N. Y. 188 [30 Am. Rep. 289]. It is not what has been done, or ordinarily would be done, under a statute, but what might be done under it, that determines whether it infringes upon the constitutional right of the citizen. The Constitution guards against the chances of infringement. Bennett v. Davis, 90 Me. 105 [37 Atl. 865]."

In the language of Mr. Justice Rich, speaking for the Supreme Court of the state of New York in Re Grout, 105 App. Div. 98, 93 N. Y. Supp. 711: "It is not enough that a person may by chance have notice, or that he may, as a matter of favor or courtesy, have a hearing. The law itself, to be constitutional, must require notice, and give a right to a hearing. It matters not, upon the question of the constitutionality of such law, that the questions involved have been fairly decided. The essential validity of the law is to be tested, not by what has been done under it, but what may by its authority be done." Roller v. Holly, 176 U. S. 398, 20 Sup. Ct. 410, 44 L. Ed. 520; Bennett v. Davis, 90 Me. 102, 37 Atl. 864; Dewell v. Commissioners, 232 Ill. 215, 83 N. E. 811; Fisher v. McGirr, 1 Gray (Mass.) 1, 61 Am. Dec. 381.

It will be unnecessary in this case to consider whether or not the magistrate sitting in search warrant proceedings may, as the language of the statute (sections 1408, 1409, Pen. Code) imports, adjudicate the title to the property. It may be conceded that if he passes upon the title he does so only incidentally (Est. of Rathgeb, 125 Cal. 302, 57 Pac. 1010), and that the person from whom the property was taken in search warrant proceedings may maintain an action in claim and delivery against the person to whom it was delivered, and that the award or action of the magistrate would not be res adjudicata (Moore v. Ewbanks, 66 S. C. 374, 44 S. E. 971; Houghton v. Bachman, 47 Barb. [N. Y.] 388, 393). This statute, however, does at least purport to authorize the magistrate to determine the right of actual possession of the property, and actual possession is a most valued right, and is an essential part of property, and no one, consistent with constitutional safeguards, can be deprived of the possession or title to property, or of any other substantial right, without reasonable notice and an opportunity to be heard. As said by the Supreme Court in Meacham v. Bear Valley Irrigation Co., 145 Cal. 606, 79 Pac. 281, 68 L. R. A. 600: "The guaranty of the Constitution that he shall not be deprived of his property without due process of law gives him the right to be heard in its defense against any claim that may be made against him for its possession." In the case of Havemeyer v. Superior Court, 84 Cal. 327, 24 Pac.

121, 10 L. R. A. 627, 18 Am. St. Rep. 192, the Supreme Court expressed the same idea, saying, per Mr. Chief Justice Beatty: "A court cannot take property from his (the party in possession) possession without a hearing, and compel him to prove title in order to regain it." See, also, Boca, etc., Ry. Co. v. Superior Court, 150 Cal. 147, 88 Pac. 715; Lowry v. Rainwater, 70 Mo. 152, 35 Am. Rep. 420; Hornsby v. U. S., 10 Wall. 242, 19 L. Ed. 900; Ex parte Koser, 60 Cal. 210; White v. Ward, 157 Ala. 345, 47 South. 166, 169, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 568; Bennett v. Davis, 90 Me. 102, 37 Atl. 864; Eustis v. City of Henrietta, 90 Tex. 468, 39 S. W. 567.

Turning from these observations to a consideration of cases which tend more directly to support respondent's position, that the sections in question are void in failing to provide for the giving of notice to the claimant and an opportunity to be heard, in the case of State v. Snow, 3 R. I. 64, liquors of specified kinds kept for sale in violation of the provisions of a certain act were liable to be seized upon search warrant and adjudged forfeited. The court held that the section providing for the mode of condemnation of the liquors was unwarranted, in that the parties interested in the subject of the adjudication were afforded under the act no opportunity to answer and defend. The court said: "In order to the validity of a judicial trial, the parties interested in the subject of the adjudication should be informed of the nature and cause of the charge upon which the adjudication is to be made—they must have an opportunity to answer and defend. Can it be said in this case that there is any such opportunity given to any person who has an interest in the things seized upon the search warrant, that he has any notice of any allegation of the facts necessary to exist in order to warrant a forfeiture, or of any proceeding against the liquors themselves? We think not. No such allegation is anywhere made or to be made. No complaint of that kind is provided for, and the property is to be divested from the owner without any charge or trial of the facts upon which alone he could be legally divested, and without any notice of any such intended trial or inquiry."

In the case of Fisher v. McGirr, supra, the court considered the constitutionality of a statute which made it unlawful for unauthorized persons to keep or to have on deposit spirituous or intoxicating liquors for sale, and directed, upon a complaint being filed showing a violation of the act, the issuance of a search warrant and the confiscation of such liquors. The act however, provided that, before the liquors should be forfeited or destroyed, if the keeper or owner thereof should be known to the officer executing the warrant, such owner or keeper should be summoned forthwith before the officer who issued the warrant to show, if he could, that the liquors were lawfully kept, and if the officer did not know the owner, keeper, or possessor of the seized liquors, notice for the same purpose was to be given by posting for two weeks. That act, it will be observed, as to notice and a hearing, better conserved the rights of parties interested in the property than does the one now under consideration; nevertheless in a very elaborate opinion the court held the act unconstitutional on the ground, among others, that it fixed no time or place at which a claimant might appear with his evidence, and have a trial and meet opposing witnesses face to face. The court said: "If the officer returns the name of some person as owner or keeper, and such person does not appear forthwith, then the liquor may be adjudged forfeited, without further notice or proof. The officer, who, of course, must act upon hearsay and the best information he can obtain, however honestly he may endeavor to obtain the truth, may be mistaken in his return of the name of a person as owner or keeper; then the property may be confiscated and destroyed without any opportunity given the true owner to appear and defend. But suppose the officer happens to be right, and the owner has notice, the notice is to appear forthwith. No day in court is given, no allowance made for the contingency of the owner's absence or sickness or engagements. No provision is made that personal notice shall be given, or that proceedings shall be postponed until personal notice be given. Probably it was not the intention of the Legislature to direct a proceeding subversive of the rights of the subject; and it is quite probable that magistrates and courts, acting in conformity with the more familiar and established maxims governing the administration of justice, have required proofs on the part of the prosecutor, and given to respondents some of the privileges of a defendant, before proceeding to a judgment. But * * * the statute itself must, on its face, be conformable to the Constitution."

In Ieck v. Anderson, 57 Cal. 251, 40 Am. Rep. 115, section 636 of the Penal Code as it then read, providing for the seizure, sale, and forfeiture of apparatus employed in illegal fishing without the formality of a judicial hearing, was declared void and unconstitutional. In that case it was said: "The statute under consideration contained no provisions whatever for determining whether the property was liable for condemnation for the forfeiture denounced against it for the criminal acts of those who had it in their possession. It merely authorizes a peace officer to seize the property without warrant or process, to condemn it without proof, or the observance of any judicial forms, and to destroy it without notice of any kind, or sell it upon notice posted anywhere in the county for five days. Such an enactment cannot be harmonized with those constitutional guaranties which are supposed to secure every one within the state his rights of liberty and property. * * * The law of the land in judicial proceedings requires a hearing before condemnation, and judgment before dispossession."

And in Loesch v. Koehler, 144 Ind. 278, 41 N. E. 326, 43 N. E. 129, 35 L. R. A. 682, a statute authorized certain peace officers, or every agent of any society for the prevention of cruelty to animals, to kill any animal found neglected or abandoned, and which is injured or diseased past recovery, or from age has become useless. The court said that the act could not be maintained as an exercise of police power, as its destruction was not made to depend upon the existence of infectious or contagious disease, or other condition affecting the public health or comfort. And, after citing and quoting from a number of cases, the court held it unconstitutional because it allowed the owner to be deprived of his property without due process of law—without notice. The court said: "It is fundamental that no person can be deprived of any article which is recognized as property without a judicial hearing, after due notice. No degree of misconduct or wrong can justify the forfeiture of the property of a citizen except in pursuance of some judicial procedure, of which the owner shall have notice, and in which he shall have an opportunity to contest the ground upon which the forfeiture is claimed."

Hibbard v. People, 4 Mich. 125, invokes a like principle. There the part of a certain act commonly called the "search and seizures clause" was held repugnant to the Constitution and void, in that the act provides no notice to the owner of the property when, where, or before whom the search warrant is to be returned.

Donovan v. Mayor of Vicksburg, 29 Miss. 247, 64 Am. Dec. 143, was a proceeding to prohibit the sale of two hogs found running at large, contrary to the provisions of an estray ordinance. The court said: "The petition shows that the ordinance complained of was of a summary nature, itself directing the city marshal to seize and sell all hogs found running at large in the city, and to pay over the proceeds of the sales, one half to the use of the hospital, and the other half to retain for his services in executing the ordinance. No process is required to be issued for the seizure or the sale, nor notice given to the owner, either actual or constructive, nor is there any opportunity given to him to appear and show cause, under any circumstances, why the ordinance should not be enforced against his property. The entire proceeding is summary, and calculated to deprive the party of his property in all cases without notice or trial, and however clearly he might be able to show that property seized was not within the operation of the ordinance. It is manifest that it [the ordinance] falls within the condemnation of these provisions of the Constitution. It deprives the citizen of his property without notice or trial, and without the opportunity to protect his rights, and of course without 'due course of law.'" See, also, Poppen v. Holmes, 44 Ill. 362, 92 Am. Dec. 186; Jenks v. Stump, 41 Colo. 281, 93 Pac. 17, 124 Am. St. Rep. 137; Varden v. Mount, 78 Ky. 86, 39 Am. Rep. 208.

Cooley, in his work on Constitutional Limitations, speaking of search warrants, and after referring to a number of objections that would be fatal to such a warrant, says: "The warrant must also command that the goods or other articles to be searched for, if found, together with the party in whose custody they are found, be brought before the magistrate, to the end that, upon further examination into the facts, the goods and the party in whose custody they were may be disposed of according to law. And it is a fatal objection to such a warrant that it leaves the disposition of the goods searched for to the ministerial officer, instead of requiring them to be brought before the magistrate, that he may pass his judgment upon the truth of the complaint made; and it would also be a fatal objection to a statute authorizing such a warrant if it permitted a condemnation or other final disposition of the goods without notice to the claimant, and without an opportunity for a hearing afforded him."

Black on Intoxicating Liquors, at section 351, says: "The statute [i. e., one providing for the confiscation or forfeiture of liquors kept in violation of law] must provide for notice to the party interested in the property, and for a trial and judicial ascertainment of the facts requisite by the statute to warrant a forfeiture, and an opportunity must be given for such party to appear and defend. If the statute fails in these particulars, it is not valid."

McConnell v. McKillip, 71 Neb. 712, 99 N. W. 505, 65 L. R. A. 610, 115 Am. St. Rep. 614, was an action in replevin against a deputy game warden for the possession of three shotguns, held by him under a statute authorizing game wardens to seize and forfeit to the state all guns, ammunition, dogs, blinds, and decoys, and all fishing tackle, in actual use by persons hunting or fishing in violation of the game law. There, in passing upon the contention that the statute was a valid exercise of the police power of the state, the court said there was a wide distinction between personal property, which can only be put to an illegal use, and firearms, which may be used for many other purposes innocent and lawful in their nature, that in the former case the Legislature might declare such property to be a public nuisance, and provide for its summary abatement or destruction by a public officer, but on the other hand, if property susceptible of a beneficial use has been perverted to an unlawful use, and therefore is subject to forfeiture to the state, that such forfeiture can only be declared after the owner of the property has had his day in court. The court said: "We know of no principle of law which justifies the seizure of property, innocent in itself, its forfeiture, and the transfer of the right of property in the same from one person to another as punishment for crime, without the right of a hearing upon the guilt or innocence of the person charged before the forfeiture takes effect." E. 474, 2 L. R. A. 655, and note.

The case of Collins v. Lean, 68 Cal. 284, 9 Pac. 173, lends no support to the position of appellants. There, from an affidavit filed with a justice of the peace, it appeared that Collins had in his possession certain lottery tickets, and that he intended to use them as a means of committing a public offense. A search warrant was issued, under the authority of which the place of business of Collins was searched, and 100 lottery tickets were found and taken by the police officer for the purpose of being used as evidence against Collins in a future prosecution. After the tickets were no longer required as evidence, their return to Collins was refused on the ground that they should be retained to prevent him from committing the public offense of selling them. The court said that, while as a general rule one could not be deprived of property without due process of law, nevertheless it was firmly settled that all property must be kept and used in consonance with the welfare of the general public; that when property is held or used so as to be injurious to the general welfare of the public, it may be seized and destroyed. It was apparent that Collins would put the lottery tickets to an unlawful use, and the refusal therefore to return them was held authorized. In that case the property was seized under subdivision 3 of section 1524, Pol. Code, as property held "with the intent to use it as a means of committing a public offense," and under section 1536, unlike the case at bar, the magistrate was under no duty of delivering the property to its owner "upon a satisfactory proof of title," but was required to retain it in his possession subject to the order of the court to which he was required to return the proceedings before him.

There is a line of cases holding that it is a proper exercise of legislative power to provide for the destruction of property without notice when the public welfare demands summary action. Instances of this kind are the power to destroy diseased meat or decayed fruit, to kill diseased cattle, to destroy obscene pictures and books, to pull down houses in the path of a devastating fire, to destroy property used or kept in violation of the law which is incapable of lawful use (Mullen v. Mosley, 13 Idaho, 457, 90 Pac. 986, 12 L. R. A. [N. S.] 394, 121 Am. St. Rep. 277). The property involved in this case is what is sometimes termed in the books to be "innocent property." It threatens no danger in any way to the public health or morals, and there is no reason why the claimant of the property should not be accorded by statute an ample opportunity to make his defense. It is plain that the present case does not fall within the rule of the cases just cited.

If it be conceded that in a criminal prosecution a court, judge, or magistrate would be authorized and warranted incidentally to pass upon and award the possession of personal property as provided in said sections 1408 and 1409, yet in the case at bar no one has been arrested; no one has been charged with an offense; no one has been brought to trial; nor is the article seized to be used in evidence in any case. Thus it clearly appears that the search warrant proceedings were resorted to for the sole purpose of having the magistrate pass upon the right of possession of property under a law which gives no notice to the person from whom the property is summarily taken. We think that it was never intended, under the circumstances of this case, that the right of possession of property should be adjudicated by a magistrate, especially when the law has provided the means for settling such question by the ordinary action of claim and delivery. In our opinions sections 1408 and 1409, in so far as they purport to authorize a magistrate to pass upon and adjudicate the right to the possession of personal property without notice to the person from whose possession it was taken, or who claims title to it, are null and void.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. DRIGGS. (Cr. 141.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Dec. 17, 1909. Rehearing denied by Supreme Court Feb. 14, 1910.)

1. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 125*)—ALLEGATIONS—CHARGING SEVERAL OFFENSES—"FORGERY."

Pen. Code, § 470, makes any person guilty of "forgery" who, with intent to defraud, signs another's name to a lease, etc., knowing he has no authority to do so, or utters, publishes, or passes such forged instrument as true with intent to injure another, and section 115 makes every person guilty of felony who knowingly procures or offers any forged instrument to be recorded. An information alleged that accused willfully, fraudulently, etc., made and forged a lease, which was set out, and afterwards, knowing the instrument to be forged, and with intent to defraud, willfully and fraudulently uttered, published, and passed such instrument as true by offering it for record by the county recorder and having it recorded. Held, that the information only charged an offense under section 470, and not under section 115, the allegations as to the manner in which the lease was published being of evidential facts which may be disregarded as surplusage.

2. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 154*)—DUPLICITY—OBJECTIONS—WAIVER—FAILURE TO DEMUR.

Failure to demur to the information on the ground that it charges more than one offense, as permitted by Pen. Code, § 1004, subd. 3, waives that objection to the information.

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1036*) — TRIAL — RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE—NECESSITY OF REPEATING OBJECTIONS.

While as a rule objections to testimony are waived by failing to object to its admission, where one has once objected and excepted to the admission of a certain line or character of testimony, he need not make repeated objections to the reception of such testimony in order to have the ruling admitting it reviewed.

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§§ 419, 420*)—EVIDENCE—HEARSAY.

The information charged accused with forging a lease which recited a consideration of past kindness to the purported lessor by accused. The executor of such lessor testified that he had a conversation with the latter during his lifetime, in which he told decedent that accused was apt to have forged papers against his estate, and advised him to convey his property to those he wanted to give it to, which he (decedent) did, saying that that would balk accused in anything she did. Another witness testified to conversations with decedent relative to accused, in which the former said that accused wanted him to sign a lease, but he did not do it, and ridiculed the idea of doing so, and said that accused was an adventuress, and that he was fixing things to head off the old woman in case he died, and another witness testified that decedent told him he expected to have trouble with accused and was deeding his property away, and that he called her a reprobate, etc., and said she was working him as she worked another man. Held, that the evidence was hearsay and improperly admitted.

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1169*)—APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR — ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE — PREJUDICIAL EFFECT.

The admission of the evidence was highly prejudicial to accused.

Gertrude Driggs was convicted of forgery, and she appeals. Reversed.

Paul W. Schenck, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and George Beebe, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

SHAW, J. Appeal from judgment of conviction and an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial.

By information filed by the district attorney the defendant was charged with the crime of forgery, it being averred that she forged the name of one John J. Charnock to an instrument, which purported, in consideration of "past kindness and tender care bestowed upon him by the said Gertrude Driggs," to lease to her for a term of years certain real estate therein described. Appellant attacks the information, claiming that it is defective in that it charges her with the commission of two offenses, namely, that of forgery as defined in section 470, Pen. Code, and also that defined in section 115, Pen. Code, which provides that: "Every person who knowingly procures or offers any false or forged instrument to be filed, registered or recorded in any public office within this state, which instrument, if genuine, might be filed, or registered, or recorded under any law of this state, or of the United States, is guilty of felony."

The information, in appropriate language, charges the defendant with forging the instrument; it being averred therein that: "Gertrude Driggs is accused * * * of the crime of forgery, committed as follows: That the said Gertrude Driggs * * * did willfully, unlawfully, falsely, fraudulently, and feloniously make, alter, forge, and counterfeit a certain lease, indenture, writing obligatory, conveyance, and contract, which instrument is and was in the following words and figures, to wit," which instrument is set out in hæc verba. This is followed by the averment which it is claimed states an offense under said section 115, Pen. Code, and is as follows: "That afterwards, to wit, on or about the 25th day of March, 1909, Gertrude Driggs, well knowing that the said instrument was false, altered, forged, and counterfeited as aforesaid, and with intent to defraud * * * did willfully, unlawfully, falsely, fraudulently, and feloniously, at and in the county and state aforesaid, utter, publish, and pass as true and genuine the instrument aforesaid, by offering the said instrument for record at the office of the recorder of the county of Los Angeles, state of California, and did then and there cause the same to be recorded as a record in said office."

The information in form is identical with that considered in the case of People v. Harrold, 84 Cal. 567, 24 Pac. 106, and it is upon the authority of that case that appellant bases her claim that the information states more than one offense. An examination of the opinion in the Harrold Case discloses the only point there decided was that the instrument which was the subject of forgery, even if genuine, was not one entitled to be recorded, and hence it was not a felony to offer it for record, or to cause or procure it to be recorded; and, for this reason, says the court, the instrument leaves but one offense charged—that of forgery. This was a sufficient ground for so deciding, and we cannot accept the opinion as an authority for holding the information defective upon the grounds claimed in the case at bar. Indeed, it was not so held. All that the allegation purports to aver is that defendant uttered, published, and passed as true and genuine the alleged forged instrument, and that she did this, not by assigning or transferring it, but in a certain specified manner, namely, by offering it for record, etc. The utterance, publishing, and passing of the instrument as true and genuine are acts constituting the offense under section 470. The manner of such utterance and publishing is evidentiary, and should be disregarded as mere surplusage. The averment does not purport to charge the substantive offense defined by said section 115. In the absence of such averment proof that the instrument was offered for record would constitute evidence of its utterance and publication. People v. Baker, 100 Cal. 190, 34 Pac. 649, 38 Am. St. Rep. 323. In our judgment, there is no merit in appellant's contention upon this ground. Moreover, such objection to an information is made the ground for demurrer by subdivision 3, § 1004, of the Penal Code, and when demurrer to the information upon such ground is not interposed, the defendant must be deemed to have waived such objection. Section 1012, Pen. Code. No demurrer was interposed by defendant upon the ground stated; and, even conceding the information to be objectionable for the reasons now urged by appellant, she must nevertheless be deemed to have waived the point.

The lease and attached certificate of acknowledgment bear date March 3, 1909, and John J. Charnock, whose signature thereto was the subject of the alleged forgery, died about March 23, 1909. The court, over defendant's objections, admitted the testimony of several witnesses as to declarations and statements made without the presence of defendant by the deceased in his lifetime. Appellant justly contends that the testimony so received under such ruling was of a character prejudicial in the highest degree to her substantial rights. Against appellant's contention respondent insists that, while some of the testimony so received was objectionable, defendant neglected to interpose objections to its reception, and that by reason of such failure defendant waived any objection thereto. While this is the general rule, nevertheless the law is well settled that, where a party has once excepted to the admission of a certain line or character of testimony his right to a review of such alleged error does not require him to interpose repeated objections to the reception thereof. Green v. Southern Pac. Co., 122 Cal. 563, 55 Pac. 577; Sharon v. Sharon, 79 Cal. 633, 22 Pac. 26, 131. The numerous objections made by defendant to the admission of testimony as to statements made in his lifetime by deceased of and concerning defendant, her efforts to obtain a lease from him, his refusal, etc., all made without her presence, and the rulings of the court thereon and exceptions thereto by defendant, entitle her beyond question to a review of each and all of such rulings.

It is unnecessary to refer to the evidence so received other than in part. Witness Smead, the executor of the will of deceased and in his lifetime his confidential adviser, testified in substance that prior to February 27th he had a conversation with Charnock relative to his sentiments towards Mrs. Driggs; that from his actions and what he said he knew what his sentiments were towards her; that about the 1st of February he told Mr. Charnock that Mrs. Driggs was apt to have forged papers of some kind against his estate, and that he advised him to protect his heirs by getting out deeds to the people he wanted his property to go to, and that Charnock told him to prepare the deeds, which the witness did; that Charnock signed the deeds and stated: "Well, this will balk her, the old woman, in anything that she does." Witness Haas testified in substance that in the latter part of February or 1st of March he had conversations with Charnock in his lifetime relative to defendant, in which Charnock said that Mrs. Driggs and some attorney wanted him to sign a lease, and he says, "I wouldn't sign any lease to any one and didn't sign any papers." George Charnock, a brother of the deceased, testified that his brother John told him Mrs. Driggs had been there and was trying to get a lease, and so on. He just made sport of it. He said: "To think that I would give a lease on land that was already leased and ready to put crops and a man that had been cultivating it for years, and she has no horses or tools of any kind to put a crop in with." He says: "I must be a fool, any one would think of giving a lease to a person under such conditions." "Q. What did he say? A. Well, he didn't sign anything, he told me. I understood him. He didn't tell me right out, but I understood that he did not, had not given any lease." He said Mrs. Driggs was an adventuress; that she was nothing more than an adventuress, and was not really reliable. He said something more, but I don't feel like saying. He told us then that he had made out a will, and he was fixing things so as to head off the old lady, the old woman, as he called her, in case he passed in his checks; he just spoke that way." Witness Stackus testified that deceased said to him that he expected to have some trouble with Mrs. Driggs, and he was deeding most of his property, most of his land, away. "I had talked with him about Mrs. Driggs before, and he had always spoken of her lowly; he called her, and spoke of her as 'that old thing of a woman, I think is going to get—they are trying to get, some of my property.' He called her a reprobate. I was there the Sunday before his death, and had a conversation with him, in which he mentioned Mrs. Driggs. He said that he expected there would be trouble with her, but he thought he had things—business affairs—arranged so that he didn't anticipate any trouble." Witness Reinhart testified: "He told me, he says, 'She is working a good deal as she worked in the Hill case.' He read about the Hill case, and he said to me: 'She is working me about the same as she worked old man Hill; I think that is her game of coming to me with soup.'" Much other testimony of a like character was introduced.

Respondent justifies the rulings of the court in receiving the evidence upon the ground that Charnock and his friends were suspicious of Mrs. Driggs, and believed that she had designs on him; that owing to this fact, and for the purpose of "heading off" Mrs. Driggs in any attempt she might make to forge an instrument affecting his property, he deeded the property described in the lease to his daughter. The suspicion and belief of Charnock and his friends might have been wholly groundless. In no event, however, could it constitute evidence tending to show defendant's guilt. Respondent also insists that, inasmuch as the expressed consideration in the lease was "past kindness and tender care bestowed" upon the deceased by the defendant, the evidence was competent for the purpose of showing no such consideration existed, or, if it existed, no value was placed thereon by Charnock. The forgery, however, did not depend upon the sufficiency or insufficiency of the consideration. Testimony on behalf of defendant to the effect that she had bestowed the tender care and performed the kindly acts specified in the lease, and that it constituted full consideration therefor, could in no wise affect her status under the charge of forging the instrument. If improper in the one case, it must likewise be improper in the other.

Respondent also contends "that sufficient testimony of the acts and declarations of deceased concerning defendant appears in the record, without objection having been made thereto, to cure any possible error in the admission of other similar evidence to which proper objection was made," and for which reason the errors were without prejudice to the substantial rights of defendant. We cannot assent to this; indeed, the circumstances and facts connected with the alleged forgery are of such a nature that it would be difficult to conceive of evidence more prejudicial in its effect upon the jury. Moreover, as we have seen, the record bristles with objections repeated over and over again to the same line of questions.

The mental state of the deceased toward defendant was wholly irrelevant so far as it affected her guilt or innocence. We are aware of no rule of evidence which would warrant the reception in evidence in this case of the statements and declarations of John J. Charnock, deceased, as they are disclosed by the record. They form no part of the res gestæ (section 1850, Code Civ. Proc.), were not authenticated under the solemnity of an oath, nor made in the presence or hearing of defendant, and constituted hearsay pure and simple, if not "vicious and venomous." These views are fully sustained by People v. Landis, 139 Cal. 426, 73 Pac. 153, the facts of which are identical with those in the case at bar, and People v. Irwin, 77 Cal. 499, 20 Pac. 56; People v. Carlton, 57 Cal. 83, 40 Am. Rep. 112; People v. Powell, 87 Cal. 363, 25 Pac. 481, 11 L. R. A. 75; Roosa v. Boston Loan Co., 132 Mass. 439; Bacon v. Charlton, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 581; Meeker v. Boylan, 28 N. J. Law, 274; In re Calkins, 112 Cal. 300, 44 Pac. 577. We have carefully examined the authorities cited by the people, but the points involved therein bear no analogy to the case at bar.

While our attention has been directed to other alleged errors appearing in the record, the improbability of a recurrence of the same upon a new trial renders it unnecessary that we pass upon them.

The judgment and order denying appellant's motion for a new trial are reversed.

STUM v. HADRICH et al. (L. A. 2,419.)

PARTNERSHIP (§ 53*)—CREATION OF RELATION —EVIDENCE.

On an issue as to whether plaintiff had sold to defendant a half interest in his business, evidence held insufficient to show a sale.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Benjamin F. Bledsoe, Judge.

Action by John A. Stum against L. F. Hadrich and others. Appeal by plaintiff from a judgment for defendants. Affirmed.

Frank G. Bryant, for appellant. Wallace W. Wideman, Frank Herald, and Welch & Thompson, for respondents.

MELVIN, J. Appeal from a judgment in favor of defendants. In November, 1904, respondent Hadrich was the proprietor of a confectionery and catering business in Los Angeles. The stock, fixtures, and good will were worth $8,000. Certain negotiations were had between Hadrich and Stum looking to a sale of a half interest in the business to the latter for $500. Stum was an expert caterer, and it was understood in the discussions between him and Hadrich that, if he purchased a half interest in the business at the sum named, he was to devote his entire time to the management of the establishment. Conversations were held at Hadrich's place of business and at that of one Sparks, in which it was arranged that Stum should pay $50 at once, $100 within a day or two thereafter, and that he and Hadrich should obtain the remaining $350 of the purchase price from Sparks upon their joint note. This amount was to be repaid out of Stum's share of the profits of the business. Stum paid the $50 and received from Hadrich the keys of the store and of the cash register, and, at the latter's request, wrote one letter, signing the name "Stum & Hadrich." This, and ordering the porter to clean up the store on one occasion, seem to have been the only services rendered by appellant. When he tendered $100, two days after his payment of $50, Hadrich refused to accept it and repudiated the sale. Subsequently, through his attorney, Hadrich offered to return the $50, but, as the tender was refused, he paid that sum into court for the use of plaintiff. Stum testified at the trial: "It was agreed between Hadrich and me that the sale should be evidenced by an agreement or contract in writing. This was never done. When we went up to see Wideman (the attorney who prepared the bill of sale) about the contract, I would not sign it as prepared, and left them. Thereafter, on the same day, I tendered the $100 as hereinabove stated."

About half a year following the transactions between Stum and Hadrich, the latter exchanged his business for the property in San Bernardino county in which appellant claims an interest. It was alleged in the complaint that appellant, by reason of ownership of a half interest in the business formerly conducted by Hadrich, was entitled to an undivided half interest in the real property obtained by Hadrich in exchange for the stock, fixtures, and good will of his store in Los Angeles. The other defendants are sued as trustees, alleged to be holders of the title to a portion of this land who had taken their respective parcels of the property fraudulently and with full knowledge of Stum's equities.

Although the contract of copartnership was to be the final agreement within which all of the oral negotiations were to be gathered and expressed, plaintiff did not, so far as the evidence shows, offer to defendant any such agreement for execution, nor did he tender a note to Hadrich for signature, nor in lieu thereof offer defendant $350, the amount agreed upon according to his testimony as the final payment of the purchase price of the half interest in the business. He seems to have done nothing to consummate the proposed sale after Hadrich declined to proceed further with the matter. The testimony in his behalf failed utterly to show a completed sale of a half interest in the business, and consequently there is nothing on which to base a claim to a like interest in the property obtained in exchange for the store, fixtures, and good will.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

CITY OF LOS ANGELES v. SOUTHERN PAC. R. CO. et al. (L. A. 2,246.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 14, 1910. Rehearing Denied April 13, 1910.)

1. RAILROADS (§ 76*)—RIGHTS IN STREETS—CONSTRUCTION OF TRACKS.

Where a city ordinance purported to grant the unreserved and unrestricted use of a street to defendant for railroad purposes, defendant was not compelled at the outset to construct all the tracks it had a right to lay in the street under its grant.

2. RAILROADS (§ 75*)—STREETS—USE—EXTENT —DETERMINATION OF CITY COUNCIL.

Where a city council was authorized to grant a railroad certain rights in a street, the council was not required to determine what use of the street was absolutely necessary for the grantee, but might simply determine what street or streets it would devote to the grantee's use, leaving to the railroad company the right to determine what use would be necessary and within the council's jurisdiction to grant, as time and experience should determine.

3. RAILROADS (§ 75*)—USE OF STREETS—MUNICIPAL GRANT—AUTHORITY OF CITY COUNCIL.

Where a city council had jurisdiction to grant a railroad company certain rights in a street, an ordinance exceeding the council's jurisdiction was nevertheless valid to the extent of the council's power to grant.

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§§ 680, 681*)—GRANTS OF RIGHTS IN STREET—MUNICIPAL AUTHORITY—STATUTES—REPEAL.

Act May 20, 1861 (St. 1861, c. 532) § 21, authorizing any county, city, or town to grant to any railroad company the use of any of its streets or highways absolutely necessary to enable the railroad company to reach an accessible point for a depot therein or to pass through the same on as a direct a route as possible, conferred no greater authority on a city council than Civ. Code, §§ 465, 470, relating to the same subject, by which the act was superseded.

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§§ 680, 681*)—GRANTS OF RIGHTS IN STREETS—STATUTES.

Civ. Code, § 465, subd. 5, authorizes cities to grant to a railroad corporation the right to construct its road along any street on its route, provided the corporation shall restore the street to its former state of usefulness as near as may be, or so that the railroad shall not unnecessarily impair its usefulness or injure its franchise. Section 470 declares that no railroad corporation shall use any street within a city unless the right to use it is granted by a two-thirds vote of the city authorities, from which the right must emanate. Held, that section 470 merely makes the municipal grant a condition precedent to the exercise of power given by the Legislature so far as city streets are concerned, and cannot be construed to confer on the city power to authorize a greater use of the street than that declared by section 465, subd. 5, which limited a city's power so to grant.

6. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§§ 680, 681*)—GRANTS OF RIGHTS IN STREETS—POWER OF CITY—"ROAD."

Civ. Code. § 465, subd. 4, provides that a railroad should have power to lay out its road not exceeding nine rods wide, and to construct and maintain the same with a single track and with such appendages and adjuncts as might be necessary for its convenient use, and subdivision 5 authorized the construction of the "road" along any street so as not to unnecessarily impair its usefulness or injure its franchise, etc. Held, that the word "road" was not used in subdivision 5 in connection with "appendages and adjuncts" as in subdivision 4, and therefore should be construed only to include the railroad's single or double track, as the case might be, and hence the city had no power to grant a railroad company the right to lay a third track in a street for any purpose.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; D. K. Trask, Judge.

Action in the nature of ejectment by the City of Los Angeles against the Southern Pacific Railroad Company and the Southern Pacific Company. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Leslie R. Hewitt, City Atty., John W. Shenk, Asst. City Atty., Lewis R. Works, and Howard Robertson, Deputy City Atty., for appellant. J. W. McKinley, for respondents.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of defendants. The action was one in the nature of ejectment to oust defendants of possession of a portion of Alhambra avenue in the city of Los Angeles, occupied by them with a railroad track.

Defendant Southern Pacific Company is in possession of all the railroad tracks of the other defendant, holding and operating trains thereover under a lease from such defendant. In the year 1874 the Southern Pacific Railroad Company constructed a single steam railroad track along the center line of the entire length of what is now known as Alhambra avenue, and in the year 1895 it constructed a second track along the entire length of said avenue parallel to and about eleven feet south of the center line thereof, and has ever since maintained and used the said tracks as part of its railroad system. In the year 1902, it laid a third track along a portion of said avenue, south of the other two tracks, which it has ever since maintained and used for railroad purposes. It is this third track that is in question here. It appears that this track is not a part of the main traveled road of defendant, but is one running to the grounds occupied by the railroad repair shops, and that it is also used for siding and switching purposes. It further appears that the effect of the maintenance of this track in its present condition is to prevent the use of the southerly half of the avenue by wagons or vehicles, but we do not deem this consideration material to a disposition of this appeal.

Defendants base their alleged right to such use of Alhambra avenue upon an ordinance adopted by the city council of the city of Los Angeles on July 24, 1873, and approved by the mayor thereof on July 26, 1873. So far as is material here, that ordinance purported to "set apart" from the public highways of the city of Los Angeles all of San Fernando and Mission streets (the latter being now Alhambra avenue) "to the unreserved and unrestricted use of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company," and to grant to said company "the right of way over and along the same * * * for the building, maintaining, and operating of its railroads by and through the track or tracks which said company shall deem it necessary to build along and over the same and with the privilege to said company to make such embankments and excavations upon said streets as shall be found necessary by the company's engineer to the proper construction of said railroad and its connections with said city." The only reservations or conditions therein were as to the right of the city to maintain zanjas, water courses, sewers, water pipes, and gas pipes, and a provision as to the reversion in the event of nonuse by the grantee. There can be no room for doubt that such use of the street as is being made by the defendants is warranted by the terms of this ordinance. As said by the learned judge of the trial court: "This ordinance purports to grant * * * the 'unreserved and unrestricted use' of the street in question * * * 'for the building, maintaining and operating of its railroads by and through the track or tracks which said company shall deem it necessary to build along and over the same,' * * * excepting or reserving only certain rights as to ditches, street crossings," etc. The language of the ordinance is so plain and unambiguous in this regard as to leave no room for doubt as to the construction that must be placed upon it, and counsel for the city make no claim to the contrary.

It is established by the decision in Workman v. Southern Pacific R. R. Co., 129 Cal. 536, 62 Pac. 185, 316, that the grantee was not compelled to construct at the outset all the tracks it had a right to lay in the street under its grant, but that, constructing a single track at first, it might construct any additional track or tracks authorized by the ordinance at any time in the future and "whenever it should become desirable from the necessities or convenience of operating its road." It was further determined by that case that the city council was not required to determine what use of the street was "absolutely necessary," for the grantee, but that it might simply determine what street or streets it would give to the use of the railroad company, leaving to the railroad company the right to determine what use will be necessary, "as time and experience shall demonstrate." We are speaking, of course, of such "use" as might legally be granted by the council.

It is contended by appellants that the ordinance is absolutely void, for the reason that it granted rights beyond the power of the council to give. It is not claimed that the council did not have the right to authorize a limited use of Alhambra avenue by the grantee for railroad purposes, but it is insisted that it had no right to give the railroad company the practically absolute control of the whole street, or any such right therein as would authorize it to maintain the third track under the existing conditions. It is clear, in view of the concession that the city council had the legal right to authorize a limited use by the railroad company of Alhambra avenue, that the ordinance cannot be held to be absolutely void. As said by counsel for respondents, it is undoubtedly valid "to the extent of the right which was within the power of the council to grant," and as said by this court of another ordinance in Workman v. Southern Pacific R. R. Co., supra, it gives "to the company the right to make such use of the street as the city could authorize." Admittedly, the city council at that time had only such power in this regard as had been conferred on them by the Legislature of the state. Their authority to grant such a use of the street by the railroad company as includes the maintenance of this third track must be found, so far as we have been able to ascertain, in sections 465, 470, Civ. Code, as the same stood at the time of the adoption of this ordinance, for no other provision of law bearing on the matter has been called or has come to our attention. Learned counsel for respondents cites certain sections of the act providing "for the incorporation of railroad companies," etc., approved May 20, 1861 (St. 1861, p. 607), under which the Southern Pacific Railroad Company was organized. The particular section of this act relied on is section 21, authorizing any county, city, or town, by a certain vote of its legislative body, to grant to any railroad company the use of any of the streets or highways which may be absolutely necessary "to enable any such company to reach an accessible point for a depot" therein, "or to pass through the same on as direct a route as possible and accommodate the traveling and commercial interests thereof." Read in connection with the other provisions of the act, this section conferred no greater authority on a city council than the provisions of the Civil Code above cited, and by which, we have no doubt, it was superseded upon the going into effect of the Civil Code, January 1, 1873. At the time of the adoption of this ordinance, the only legislative authorization of the use of a public street for railroad purposes was in subdivision 5, § 465, Civ. Code, the section enumerating the powers of railroad corporations. That subdivision purported to empower any such corporation to "construct their roads across, along, or upon any * * * street, avenue or highway * * * which the route of its road intersects, crosses or runs along, * * *" with the proviso that "the corporation shall restore the street, avenue, highway * * * to its former state of usefulness as near as may be, or so that the railroad shall not unnecessarily impair its usefulness or injure its franchise." This subdivision was a part of the original Code, and has never been amended. It is to be observed that this provision is limited to the "road" of a railroad corporation; in other words, that it grants to a railroad corporation the right to use a street, avenue, or highway only as a place for its "road." Nothing is said therein, as in the next preceding subdivision, to which we will refer later, about "such appendages and adjuncts as may be necessary for the convenient use of the same." This, as we have said, was the only purported legislative authorization of the use of any street for railroad purposes. Section 470, Civ. Code, as it then and has ever since stood, providing that "no railroad corporation must use any street, alley or highway, or any of the land or water, within any incorporated city or town, unless the right to so use the same is granted by a two-thirds vote of the town or city authority from which the right must emanate," is simply a limitation upon such authorization, making such a grant by the town or city authority a condition precedent to the exercise of the power given by the Legislature so far as streets in incorporated cities or towns were concerned. See Arcata v. Arcata, etc., R. R. Co., 92 Cal. 645, 28 Pac. 676. In other words, section 470, Civ. Code, cannot be construed as conferring on the "town or city authority" the power to authorize any use of a street greater than that declared by subdivision 5, § 465, Civ. Code. The city council of Los Angeles was limited therefore to a grant of the right described in said subdivision 5, § 465, Civ. Code, and, in so far as the ordinance exceeded this, it was without legislative authority and ineffectual to give the railroad company any rights. The power given by that subdivision was simply "to construct their roads across, along, or upon" a street or highway.

What was meant by the term "roads" as therein used? We think it must be held to have meant the single or double-track road referred to in subdivision 4 of the same section as it stood at that time, and until amended after the judgment in this case (St. 1907, p. 99), and which provided that every railroad corporation has power "to lay out its road not exceeding nine rods wide, and to construct and maintain the same, with a single or double track, and with such appendages and adjuncts as may be necessary for the convenient use of the same." Doubtless the words "and with such appendages and adjuncts," etc., as used in this subdivision, include necessary sidetracks, but this subdivision is not the one dealing with the right to use a street or highway. When we come to that subdivision (subdivision 5), we find that right limited to the "road." The words "such appendages and adjuncts," etc., as used in subdivision 4, are words of broad import, including perhaps, as practically decided in Southern Pacific R. R. Co. v. Raymond, 53 Cal. 223, even workshops for repairing the cars and locomotives of the railroad company. In the absence of very clear language to that effect, we are not inclined to construe subdivision 5 as intending or authorizing any such use of a public highway by a railroad corporation as would include the occupation thereof for all such purposes as would be included in the term "such appendages and adjuncts," etc. While such appendages and adjuncts may be a part of the "road" in one sense of the word, they are not a part of the road as the same is described in subdivision 4. As there described, the appendages and adjuncts are things additional to the road proper, things necessary to the convenient use of the road, which the railroad corporation has the general power to construct and maintain in such places as it may lawfully acquire and occupy for the purpose. The omission of any reference thereto in the subdivision relative to the use of public highways shows the intention to confine such use to the road itself, consisting of not exceeding two tracks. In our opinion the subdivision did not authorize the city council to allow a third track to be placed on the street. The amendment of 1907, heretofore referred to, allowing "one or more tracks" instead of a "single or double track," can, of course, have no effect in this case, which must be determined upon the law as it stood at the time of the adoption of this ordinance. The case of Workman v. Southern Pacific R. R. Co., supra, relied on by learned counsel for respondents, is in point here only so far as already indicated. The question there was the right of the railroad company to lay a second track after it had constructed and operated for many years only a single track, under an ordinance giving it the right of way for its "track or tracks." This court said that under the law the railroad company was authorized to construct and maintain "a single or double track," and that the grant contained in the ordinance gave to the company "the right to make such use of the street as the city could authorize, and as circumstances may at any time thereafter require." (The italics are ours.) The case of Arcata v. Arcata, etc., R. R. Co., 92 Cal. 639, 28 Pac. 676, involved the question of the right of a board of trustees of an incorporated town to allow a second track, where it had previously given permission for a single track. The second track was called a "side track" it is true, but we do not think this affects the question. What was said in the opinion in that case must be construed with reference to the precise question presented. We are satisfied that the opinion should not be construed as intimating either that the trustees had the right to permit a use not warranted by subdivision 5, § 465, Civ. Code, or that said subdivision authorizes the maintenance of a third track for any purpose. We have examined the cases cited from other states, and find none that affect the question here discussed.

No question is raised as to the right of the city of Los Angeles to maintain this action, if the occupancy by the defendants of the portion of the street occupied by the third track is unauthorized.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

McNEIL v. MORGAN (McNEIL, Intervener).

(S. F. 5,021.)

1. QUIETING TITLE (§ 35*)—SUFFICIENCY OF COMPLAINT.

A complaint which alleged that plaintiff was the "owner and in possession of the land, and that defendant claimed some right, title, or interest in the premises, but neither in law nor in equity had any claim, right, title, or interest," was sufficient as against the objection that it did not in terms proclaim the adverse nature of the claim respecting which plaintiff sought to have his title quieted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Quieting Title, Cent. Dig. §§ 73, 74; Dec. Dig. § 35.*]

2. JURY (§ 14*)—RIGHT TO TRIAL BY JURY—EQUITABLE ACTION.

An action to quiet title to land, instituted by a plaintiff in possession, is in equity, and remains so notwithstanding a petition by the intervener asserting exclusive ownership and right to possession, as such intervener is merely in the position of an original defendant out of possession, and he is not entitled to trial by jury as a matter of right.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Jury, Cent. Dig. § 75; Dec. Dig. § 14.*]

3. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 22*)—APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL ADMINISTRATOR.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1412, providing that appointment of a special administrator may be made at any time and must be made by entry upon the minutes of the court specifying the powers to be exercised by him, was not mandatory as to the entry of a minute order, and the appointment was complete when the order was signed, and failure of the clerk to enter it on the minutes would not invalidate it.

4. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 420*)—ACTIONS—SPECIAL ADMINISTRATORS.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1582, permitting actions to quiet title against administrators, includes special as well as general administrators.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; A. L. Rhodes, Judge.

Action by Louise R. McNeil against Frank E. Morgan, in which James McNeil intervenes. From an order denying the motion of the intervener for a new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

Sullivan & Sullivan, Theo. J. Roche, and Cassin & Lucas, for appellant. D. M. Delmas, W. T. Jeter, and Benjamin K. Knight (Wm. T. Jeter and Henry C. McPike, of counsel), for respondent Morgan.

MELVIN, J. This is an appeal by James McNeil, intervener, from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, Louise R. McNeil, and from an order denying the motion of said intervener for a new trial.

Plaintiff, Louise R. McNeil, brought suit against Frank McLaughlin as administrator of the estate of James McNeil, deceased, seeking a judgment against the estate of said deceased quieting her asserted title to certain real property in the city of Santa Cruz. On the day after it was filed, the defendant answered, and, pursuant to a stipulation of the parties, the cause was transferred to the county of Santa Clara and to a department of the superior court in which the Hon. A. L. Rhodes presided. Both parties to the action also by stipulation in writing waived a trial by jury.

After the cause was set for trial in Santa Clara county, Margaret McNeil and James McNeil, who alleged that they were respectively the surviving wife and son of the deceased, filed their complaint in intervention. In the first cause of action pleaded it was alleged that the land in suit was community property of Margaret McNeil and the deceased; that, after the death of James McNeil, the plaintiff took possession of the said property, claiming to be the owner thereof, and that she was still holding it adversely to the estate and the heirs of James McNeil, deceased. The second cause of action was based upon the theory that James McNeil, deceased, and Margaret McNeil had been tenants in common, each owning an undivided one-half interest in the land. The interveners prayed judgment that the plaintiff had no interest in the real property, that the respective interests of the various claimants be ascertained, and that the said interveners should recover possession of the land.

The plaintiff and Frank McLaughlin, as administrator, answered, denying all of the essential allegations of the complaint in intervention, except that James McNeil was an heir of James McNeil, deceased. After the cause was at issue, the interveners demanded a trial by jury upon all matters of fact involved, but their request was denied by the court. Thereafter Margaret McNeil dismissed her complaint in intervention. This left James McNeil, appellant here, the only intervener.

At the trial it appeared that an appeal had been taken from the order appointing Frank McLaughlin administrator of the estate. The court therefore substituted F. E. Morgan, special administrator, as defendant in the action in the place and stead of said McLaughlin. The special administrator was permitted to file an answer to the complaint. None was filed by him, however, to the complaint in intervention. After the trial and this appeal the special administrator accounted and was discharged. F. J. Hoffman was appointed administrator of the estate of James McNeil, deceased, and the said Hoffman, as administrator, has been substituted as a party in the place and stead of the said Morgan, special administrator.

Appellant questions the sufficiency of the complaint on the ground that it does not in terms proclaim the adverse nature of the claim respecting which plaintiff seeks to have her title quieted. Section 738 of the Code of Civil Procedure authorizes an action to quiet title to real property adverse to that of the person seeking the remedy, and appellant contends that such an action is not available against one whose interest in or claim to the land involved in the action is not opposed to that of plaintiff, but "consistent with and subordinate to plaintiff's assertion of title." It is not necessary to decide this precise question because the complaint in substance does seek repose of title against adverse claimants. The complaint alleges that plaintiff is "the owner and in possession" of the land, and, further, that defendant "claims some right, title or interest in the premises, * * * but neither in law nor in equity has he any claim, right, title, or interest therein or thereto or in or to any part thereof." It seems to us that, if one is the owner and in the possession of property and another asserts a claim to that property which is founded neither in law nor in equity, the asserted claim is necessarily adverse to that of the owner or possessor of the land.

Respondent seeks to justify the refusal of the lower court to accede to the intervener's demand for a jury upon two grounds: (1) That he "is bound by the record of the case at the time of intervention," and was therefore subject to the terms of the stipulation of the original parties to the action in which a jury trial was expressly waived. (2) That an action to quiet title to land, instituted by a plaintiff in possession, remains in equity, and cannot be removed to the domain of law where trial by jury may be demanded as of right by the mere averment of an intervener that he is the owner entitled to the possession of the property. It is true, generally speaking, that one who intervenes in an action is bound by the record of the action at the time of intervention. For example, it has been held that such a party is bound by depositions taken prior to his intervention (Rainbolt v. March, 52 Tex. 246), but, the right of trial by jury being a very important privilege preserved by our Constitution, we would be loath to extend the rule in such manner as to deprive an intervener of a trial upon matters of fact by a jury in an action where he would enjoy the right to such manner of trial in an action commenced by him originally. "An intervention merely adds new parties for the purpose of determining all conflicting claims to the matter in controversy, and does not affect the nature of the action so that plaintiff in an action at law is not deprived of his right to a jury trial by an intervention praying for equitable relief"—citing Reay v. Butler, 7 Pac. 669. "While, on the other hand, if the case is properly triable by jury, a jury may be demanded by the intervener, although it has not been demanded by either of the original parties"—citing Lacroix v. Menard, 3 Mart. N. S. (La.) 339, 15 Am. Dec. 161; 24 Cyc. 114. It is not necessary for us to decide this interesting question, however, because the court was justified in refusing a jury trial upon the second ground stated by respondent, namely, because the intervener was not entitled to a jury trial as matter of right, even if there had been no stipulation of the other parties waiving a jury. In Angus v. Craven, 132 Cal. 696, 64 Pac. 1091, in discussing section 738 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the following language was employed: "The purpose of the section is evidently to afford a remedy similar in character to that of the old bill of peace, but extending it to cases which the latter remedy did not reach. See Curtis v. Sutter, 15 Cal. 259. Courts, however, in guarding the constitutional rights to a jury trial, have repeatedly held that where the suit should have been, and in substance is, an action for the recovery of the possession of land, the right of a defendant to a jury cannot be defeated by the mere device of bringing the action in an equitable form. And so it has been held that the right to a jury is not defeated, where, at the commencement of the action, the defendant, and not the plaintiff, was in the actual possession of the premises involved; and it has also been held that where the defendant had been for a long time in the actual possession, and the plaintiff had ousted him, the plaintiff, by first bringing his action to quiet title, could not, by such inversion of parties, avoid the defendant's right to a jury, but that the action should be treated as substantially an action to recover possession. But this is as far as this court has gone in Donahue v. Meister, 88 Cal. 121, 25 Pac. 1096, 22 Am. St. Rep. 283; Newman v. Duane, 89 Cal. 597, 27 Pac. 66; Gillespie v. Gouly, 120 Cal. 515, 52 Pac. 816; Moore v. Copp, 119 Cal. 434, 51 Pac. 630, and kindred cases. As was substantially said in Donahue v. Meister, supra, the decision of the question whether in an action brought under section 738 either party is entitled to a jury must depend greatly upon the facts in that particular case. It has never been held by this court that an action to quiet title under the Code cannot be maintained as an equitable action, where the plaintiff was, and for a considerable period of time had been, in actual possession, and defendant had never been in possession, or that in such case a defendant can overthrow the equitable character of the action by simply answering that he had title, and praying that he, for the first time, be let into possession. A complaint showing that plaintiff is the owner of the land, and in actual possession of it, and that defendant asserts some right or title thereto which is unfounded, followed by an answer admitting plaintiff's possession, and not showing a prior possession in defendant, seems to present the very action contemplated by the Code provision; and, under these conditions, its continued equitable character is not affected by the particular kind of right which the defendant sets up."

Intervening in a case in which the possession of the property had been alleged by the original plaintiff who also asserted exclusive ownership, James McNeil is in exactly the position of an original defendant out of possession who asserts title and the right of possession as against the person in actual possession. As such a defendant he would not have a right to a trial of the matters of fact by jury unless he had been recently dispossessed by the nominal plaintiff. In such a case he would be treated as really a plaintiff in possession entitled to demand a trial by jury of the issues of fact involved. Donahue v. Meister, 88 Cal. 121, 25 Pac. 1096, 22 Am. St. Rep. 283. The rule announced in Angus v. Craven, supra, has been followed in Johnson v. Peterson, 90 Minn. 503, 97 N. W. 384, where the court, speaking through Mr. Justice Collins, said: "This action was brought to determine an adverse claim made by defendant to 80 acres of land in Chicago county in the possession of plaintiff. By an amendment to the original complaint the latter's right to the land and the extent of her possession were set forth in detail, but the nature of the action was not thereby changed. It was still an action to determine an adverse claim. In his answer the defendant denied the alleged ownership of the plaintiff, admitted, however, that she was in possession, and then alleged that this possession was wrongful, unlawful, and without any right. Defendant further alleged that he was the owner in fee simple, setting out that his title was derived from the United States government through certain conveyances. He demanded that he be declared the owner in fee simple, and entitled to possession. In her reply, plaintiff alleged title by adverse possession, under the statute. When the case came on for trial, defendant moved that a jury be impaneled to try the issues. The motion was denied, and the case was thereupon tried by the court without a jury.

"(1) The character of this action has been heretofore stated. It was brought to determine an adverse claim to real property; the plaintiff being in possession, and the answer setting up a counterclaim in ejectment. Except as otherwise provided by statute, all the ordinary rules governing suits in equity to quiet title apply to this action, and it was triable by the court and not by a jury. Roussain v. Patten, 46 Minn. 308, 48 N. W. 1122. See, also, Larkin v. Wilson, 28 Kan. 513; Angus v. Craven, 132 Cal. 691, 64 Pac. 1091, in which the same rule is announced. Under the complaint, the case was for trial by the court without a jury, and the fact that the answer contained a counterclaim in the nature of ejectment did not change the procedure." The rule announced above has long been established in California, and we are convinced it was properly applied in this case by the learned judge of the superior court who refused the intervener's demand for a jury.

Appellant objects to the substitution of the special for the general administrator. He insists that there was no warrant in law or in fact for such substitution. We cannot agree with this contention. The special administrator was appointed by an order duly signed by the judge of the court in which the probate proceeding was pending. In his petition for appointment as special administrator the defendant Morgan asked that he be given power, among other things, to "commence or maintain suits." The order recited that the court on reading his petition appointed him special administrator "with the powers of said estate enumerated," and directed that a minute order "to that effect" be entered "specifying the powers to be exercised by said special administrator." Objection was made to the introduction in evidence of this order upon the ground that it did not appear that a minute order had been entered in accordance with the court's direction. We do not think that the entry of such an order is "mandatory" as appellant contends, under the provisions of section 1412 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Estate of Sackett, 78 Cal. 300, 20 Pac. 863, cited in that behalf, does not sustain that view, for it was there merely held that, the order appointing the special administrator not being before this court, it could not be determined whether any error was committed by the court below in disallowing a certain item in the special administrator's account. The appointment of Morgan was complete when the order was signed, and the failure of the clerk to enter it upon the minutes was a mere neglect of a ministerial duty. It was entirely within the power of the probate court to appoint a special administrator with authority to commence and maintain or defend suits and other legal proceedings (Section 1415, Code Civ. Proc.), and it was also within the scope of the authority of the court to try this case and make the order substituting the special for the general administrator as a party (section 385, Code Civ. Proc.). The language of section 1582 of the Code of Civil Procedure is general, providing that actions to quiet title may be maintained against administrators. Obviously, special, as well as general, administrators, are included within this term. If this section were held to apply only to general administrators, as distinguished from those specially appointed, it would be necessary to postpone the trial of the action to quiet title until after the determination of the appeal from the order appointing the administrator. Such a rule would be obviously unjust. The substitution of the special for the general administrator was properly ordered by the court on suggestion of the general administrator's disability.

It follows that the judgment and order should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

GEORGE J. BIRKEL CO. v. HOWZE et al.

(Civ. 750.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Feb. 15, 1910.)

GAMING (§ 11*)—GAMBLING CONTRACTS—OPTION TO REPURCHASE STOCK.

A contract reciting that certain shares of corporate stock have been delivered on an agreed valuation, and that the right and option is reserved in the person receiving the stock, at any time after the expiration of one year, on demand to reassign and redeliver them, and receive the money paid, with interest, is not within Const. art. 4, § 26, providing that all contracts for the sale of corporate stock on margin, or to be delivered at a future day, shall be void.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Gaming, Dec. Dig. § 11.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; W. P. James, Judge.

Action by the George J. Birkel Company, a corporation, against John Howze and others. Plaintiff had judgment, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Clair S. Tappan, for appellants. E. S. Williams, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. The complaint filed by plaintiff sets out a written instrument in the words and figures following: "Sept. 1st, 1906. George J. Birkel Company, Los Angeles, Calif. —For value received, we herewith hand you twenty-five (25) shares of Mount Washington Company stock certificates No. 60, 61, 64, at a total value of twenty-five hundred ($2,500) dollars. We agree, at the expiration of one (1) year from date, on demand, to purchase said stock for twenty-five hundred dollars, with interest added at six per cent. per annum from date. [Signed] Jno. Howze, Robert Marsh, J. E. Marsh."

It is averred that on August 6, 1907, plaintiff gave notice to defendants that on September 1, 1907, it would demand of defendants that they pay the sum of $2,500, with interest, for said stock under said agreement; that accordingly the certificates mentioned evidencing the shares specified were duly indorsed by plaintiff so as to assign and transfer the same to defendants, and a tender made and a demand of payment; that defendants refused to accept or pay for said shares of stock. Defendants, in their answer, admit the execution of the instrument, but deny the other allegations of the complaint, and allege further that the contract attempted to be set forth in plaintiff's complaint is void, inasmuch as it is repugnant to the provisions of section 26, art. 4, of the Constitution of the state of California. Upon the trial of the action the court found in favor of plaintiff upon all of the issues, and rendered judgment accordingly; defendants appeal therefrom upon the judgment roll.

The only question, therefore, presented upon this appeal is as to the character of the written instrument—the basis of the action. The constitutional provision referred to is: "All contracts for the sale of shares of the capital stock of any corporation or association, on margin, or to be delivered at a future day, shall be void." It is appellants' contention that this instrument upon its face is one indicating a gambling transaction. With this we do not agree. This instrument, under section 1643, Civ. Code, is entitled to such a construction as will make it lawful, operative, and capable of being carried into effect, if it can be done without violating the intention of the parties. As we read the instrument, it declares upon its face that certain shares of stock have been delivered to plaintiff upon an agreed valuation, and that the right and option is reserved in plaintiff at any time after the expiration of one year, upon demand, to reassign and redeliver the shares and to receive the money paid, with interest. Agreements of this kind are not within the spirit of the constitutional provision referred to. The object sought by this constitutional provision was to strike down a species of gambling in mining stocks—an evil then rife in this state. Cashman v. Root, 89 Cal. 382, 26 Pac. 883, 12 L. R. A. 511, 23 Am. St. Rep. 482. "It is not the purpose of this provision of the Constitution to interfere with legitimate business, or to make void all time contracts for the purchase of shares in incorporated companies." Kullman v. Simmens, 104 Cal. 600, 38 Pac. 363. It is true that this form of contract could be used to effect a prohibited transaction, but, if its true character is different from that expressed upon its face, the burden is upon the party seeking to be relieved therefrom to show such variance. There is nothing in this record indicating that the transaction is other than the one which upon its face it purports to be. In addition to this, it is said by our Supreme Court in Gay v. Dare, 103 Cal. 459, 37 Pac. 466, that in all classes of cases where a purchaser pays the price, but stipulates that he may, if he so desires, return the property and receive back the price paid, it is usually held not to be a contract of purchase, but is the exercise of an option of rescission, and the title upon the exercise of the option at once vests in the original vendor.

Viewing this case, therefore, from either standpoint presented, we think the judgment of the trial court was warranted and the same should be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1110*)—APPEAL—TRANSCRIPT.

Though an order appearing in the transcript on appeal in a criminal case did not on its face show that the time to pass sentence was extended for the purpose of hearing a motion for new trial, a certificate authorized under rule 14 (78 Pac. x), showing that by the minute entry the time was extended for such purpose, imported verity, and not that any change in the minute entry was made; the implication being that the transcript failed to give the entry as it in fact existed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mariposa County; J. J. Trabucco, Judge.

S. Shehadey was convicted of murder, and from the judgment, and from an order denying his motion for new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

C. H. Fairall and R. B. Stalder, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., for the People.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Defendant was convicted of murder in the first degree and was sentenced to imprisonment for life. He appeals from the judgment of conviction and from the order denying his motion for a new trial. The points urged in the brief for reversal of the judgment and order are (1) that there was no sufficient foundation for the admission of the dying statement of deceased; (2) that, if the dying statement of deceased can be considered, it is not supported by evidence sufficient to sustain a verdict of conviction; (3) that there was nothing in the conduct of the defendant, subsequent to the homicide, indicating guilt on his part; (4) that defendant established an alibi.

1. At the argument the point was made for the first time that the time appointed for pronouncing judgment was extended to a date unauthorized by section 1191, Pen. Code, as amended in 1909, and hence, upon the authority of Rankin v. Superior Court, 106 Pac. 718, the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial must be reversed and a new trial ordered as provided by section 1202, Pen. Code, as amended in 1909. The verdict was rendered June 9, 1909, and the court thereupon fixed Saturday, June 26, 1909, at 9 o'clock a. m., "as the time for passing sentence." Section 1191, Pen. Code, was amended April 14, 1909, and took effect June 13, 1909, so that when the order was made, June 9th, the court was acting under the old law, by which the court was not limited in its power to defer sentence, and the time for sentence was properly fixed for June 26th. The transcript, as filed, showed, on that day, to wit, June 26th, the following: "On motion of the defendant, it is ordered that the time for passing sentence herein be and the same is continued to July 2, 1909, at 10 o'clock a. m." And the transcript shows that on that day defendant came into court with his attorney, and asked for a new trial. The order as appearing in the transcript does not on its face show that the time to pass sentence was extended "for the purpose of hearing or determining any motion for a new trial," in which case the court, under section 1191, could have extended the time 10 days. Since the transcript was filed, however, the Attorney General has filed a certified copy of the "Minute Entry of June 26, 1909, vol. 3, page 220, Minutes of the Superior Court, Mariposa County," reading as follows: "June 26, 1909. "People v. S. Shehadey. Present: J. J. Trabucco, Judge, officers of the court, the district attorney, the defendant and his attorney, G. G. Goucher. On motion of the defendant, it is ordered that the time for passing sentence herein be and the same is hereby continued to July 2, 1909, at 10 o'clock a. m., so as to enable defendant to prepare affidavits of newly discovered evidence on motion for new trial." The continuance thus given, counting from June 26th, as we may, was within the 10 days allowed by section 1191. Defendant replies: "We admit the power of the court to change its records to conform to the truth, but there is nothing in the record before the court at this time to show that such change has been made upon the order of the court." The answer is that the latest certificate, showing what the minute entry in fact is, comes to us importing verity, and not that any change in the minute entry has been made. The implication is that the transcript failed to give the minute entry as it in fact existed and the certificate was authorized under rule 14 (78 Pac. x), by which either party may "for the purpose of correcting any error or defect in the transcript suggest the same in writing, * * * or may produce the same duly certified without such order." It is not claimed by defendant that the minute entry as last certified is not correct. It appears by the foregoing that the court was acting within its powers, and not in violation of section 1191, and it is therefore unnecessary to consider further the scope and meaning of that section.

2. The defendant kept a small store at the town of Varian, Mariposa county, a station on the Yosemite Valley Railroad, on the Merced river, and lived with his family in the rear part of the store building. Near by he also kept a saloon. T. F. Halloran, whom he was charged with killing, was a section hand of the railroad company at that point, and up to about two weeks before his death had boarded and lodged with defendant's family, but had moved into a small cabin 67 feet distant from the Shehadey saloon, or Tent saloon, as sometimes so called, which latter is 67 feet from the Shehadey store or residence. From Halloran's cabin to the railroad section house is 266 feet. From the window in the section house, as testified to by civil engineer N. C. Ray, he could see the door of Halloran's cabin, and could also see a man when walking all the way to the Shehadey saloon. Deceased died from a gunshot wound inflicted by a No. 12 shotgun loaded with No. 7 shot and fired at very close range. The witnesses differed as to the time the shot was heard, varying from 8 p. m. to about 9 p. m. of April 5th. The moon was full and shining brightly. It was testified that the deceased appeared at the section house a few minutes after the noise of the shot was heard. He "was in his shirt sleeves and drawers" and "in his stockings feet." The section house was occupied by one Hernandez and his wife and they kept boarders. There were three or four men in the house at this time. Two of them went for John Varian, the postmaster at Varian, who lived about a half a mile distant. He went at once to the section house, and found Halloran lying on a quilt suffering from "a large wound, a little to the right of the navel side, right under the short rib. One of his hands had the middle finger gone from the first joint, and the other two fingers the points were injured." The evidence, aside from the alleged dying statements of deceased, was circumstantial, and not in itself conclusive, or very strongly incriminatory. It is not probable that defendant would have been convicted but for the statements in question, and it is, therefore, important first to inquire as to their admissibility.

Witness John Varian testified: "Halloran said that he was going to die, and that he would like to tell me something about his estate, how he wanted it divided, which he stated. He said that defendant shot him, that he came to the door, and tried to force the door, and he was in bed at the time, and finally defendant went off from the door and came up to the door and hollered to him, and told him that Si wanted to see him. He went to the door, and, as he opened the door, he said defendant shot him. I told Halloran that I did not think that he was going to die. I said to him as soon as the doctor would get there he would fix him in shape, and he said, 'I will never live long enough to see a doctor.' Before Halloran died, I went to Halloran's cabin at his request to get $20 in coin in his pants and some blankets, as he was getting cold, and he requested me to take charge of his cabin, which I did. Halloran died about 11:40 a. m., April 5th" (a. m. should read p. m., as clearly appears). On cross-examination the witness testified: "Halloran said he knew defendant because he knew him by his voice and clothes. * * * It was near 9 p. m. when they came after me. It took me about 12 minutes to go up to the section house. * * * When Halloran died, there were present Mr. Plyler, myself, some of the section men, and two wood choppers."

Witness Plyler testified: "I am a merchant. * * * My store is about one-fourth mile from defendant's store and Varian station. * * * Two Mexicans came after me on the night of April 5th, and I arrived at Halloran's bedside before he died. He was lying on the floor in the section house. He had a big hole on the right side of his body. The inside part of it came away out. Nearly three inches protruded. Halloran said 'that Shehadey came to my door and told me Si wanted to talk to me, and shot me all to pieces.' He said good-bye to all of us and died. He died within five minutes after he made the last statement. He made the statement more than once that he was going to die." The witness arrived at the section house about 10:15 p. m. of the 5th of April. The testimony of the coroner was that there "was an oblong wound measuring 2¾ inches in length and 1¾ inches in width on the right side of the abdomen of deceased. An eighth of an inch of the first finger of the right hand was shot off. About one-fourth of an inch of the second finger of the right hand was off the same as the others. There were no other wounds of consequence. I found shots in the entrails and in the flesh near the wound in the abdomen. I picked these shots out of the intestines and some from the edges of the wound."

We are aware of the strictness of the rule governing the admissibility of dying declarations, and that the courts should and do exercise extreme caution in their admission. The sense of impending death is deemed a sufficient substitute for an oath, but the test of cross-examination—a most valuable medium of ascertaining the truth—is wanting. In People v. Sanchez, 24 Cal. 17, 24, Mr. Justice Sanderson stated the rule in these words: "An undoubting belief existing in the mind of the declarant at the time the declarations are made is indispensable to that sanction which the law exacts." In People v. Bemmerly, 87 Cal. 117, 25 Pac. 266, the court said: "It is enough, if it satisfactorily appears in any mode that they were made under that sanction, whether it be directly proved by the express language of the declarant, or be inferred from his evident danger, or the opinion of medical or other attendants, stated to him, or from his conduct, or other circumstances of the case, all of which are resorted to in order to ascertain the state of the declarant's mind." 1 Greenl. Ev. § 158. The cases hold that all the attending circumstances may be considered in determining whether the deceased made the dying declaration under a sense of impending death. People v. Yokum, 118 Cal. 437, 50 Pac. 686; People v. Lem Deo, 132 Cal. 199, 203, 64 Pac. 265. Among the circumstances that may be considered as influencing the mind of the declarant is the seriousness of the wound inflicted upon him. It seems to us that the learned trial judge was justified in accepting the statements as coming within the rule and in letting them go to the jury.

3. It appeared that defendant and deceased, while the latter was living with the family of the former, had some angry words growing out of a small account for goods purchased by deceased from defendant; also, that defendant had shown some bitterness towards deceased because of his undue attentions of the wife of defendant. In this connection defendant had made some threats of bodily injury to deceased. Whether it was because of this disagreement, or because defendant's wife on account of her sickness could no longer cook for deceased, that he left and went to his cabin, does not very clearly appear. Judging from defendant's feeling towards deceased at that time, it is altogether likely that he quit defendant's house because of the unfriendly attitude of defendant towards him.

Witness Nickerson, chief engineer of the Yosemite Valley Railroad, received a letter from defendant, dated March 13, 1909. Defendant is a Syrian by birth, and could neither read nor write the English language. This letter was written by his stepdaughter at his dictation, and he admitted having dictated it. The letter is principally a complaint against deceased, and in it defendant alludes to his demand upon deceased to pay his bill, and also refers to his interference with his family.

Aaron Varian testified that he was employed hauling freight for defendant; that he arrived at his store with a load on the evening of April 5th. He testified: "While defendant and I were returning to the store from the barn, we could see a light in Halloran's cabin and defendant said: 'There is that damned son of a bitch that has got a light in his house.' He was somewhat angry." John Varian, Jr., testified: "I had a conversation with defendant on or about March 17, 1909, relative to Halloran, wherein I asked him how Halloran was getting along. Shehadey said, 'Oh, that son of a bitch, some day when I am feeling right, I will fix that Irish son of a bitch.' At that time Halloran was not boarding at Shehadey's. He was boarding over at his cabin where he built his house. When defendant spoke of Halloran, he said it kind of laughing."

Richard Carter testified that at the time Halloran left defendant's house and moved to his cabin he had a conversation with defendant. "I told defendant that Halloran was eating his breakfast, and defendant said he was going to make out Halloran's bill right away, and, if he did not pay it that day, he would kick his head off. Defendant also said that Halloran wanted to play with his wife, and he did not want any man to play with his wife, that he could make his own babies, and make them quick if he wanted to." Witness Wiley was present and testified to this conversation. This testimony was put forward as tending to show motive. Obviously, as the provocation to a murderous assault, the facts present no very persuasive proof, and yet we cannot say but that in defendant's mind they might have been a contributing cause leading to a strong feeling for revenge.

Mrs. Louisa Hernandez, wife of Benino, who kept the section house, testified: "Before the wounded man came to the house, I looked out of the window in the dining room, and saw a man dressed in white leave the house where the wounded man lived and walk rapidly toward the saloon. I don't know if he went into the house or the saloon. It was three or four minutes after I saw this man before the wounded man came to my house. I heard a shot just a little while before I looked out the window." On cross-examination, she testified: "When I heard the shot, my husband and friend were at my bed, and I was in the kitchen. I naturally looked out of the window immediately I heard the shot. It was moonlight, and I could see everything, but did not look very long. When I saw the white figure, it was right at the door of the wounded man's cabin. The white figure went towards the house or the saloon; and I think it was a man. When I last saw him, he was up on the hill, the bank, the grade. I saw a gun in his hand. * * * I did not have much time. I was only there a few moments. The figure I saw while looking out the window wore white pants or white drawers; don't know which. I only had a glimpse of the figure. It was 8 o'clock p. m. when the wounded man came to the house by my watch in the kitchen."

It was in evidence that defendant had a shotgun of No. 12 bore, and that he kept ammunition for such a gun in his store. There was evidence that the defendant was dressed that evening in light-colored clothes. Hernandez had a gun of this bore, but he testified that it had not been used for some time before. Deputy Sheriff Walter Davis testified that he reached Varian about midnight, and Halloran was dead. "The Shehadey store is a wooden structure, and his residence is in the rear part of the store. I went around the building several times, but heard no noise of any kind in it. I went to the front door of Shehadey's store and residence a little after midnight, and called in a loud voice as follows: 'Solomon, Shehadey, Shehadey.' I received no reply. I arrested defendant about daylight on the morning of the 6th day of April, as he came out. I told him that this piece of business last night was pretty bad. He said he did not know anything about it. I said, 'There is a man shot,' and he said, 'I don't know nothing about it,' and I said the section boss was shot. I asked him if he had a gun, and he said he had. He went into the room and pointed to the gun. I told him to walk past, and I came and took the gun. The gun was standing at the head of the bed. The bed had the appearance of having been occupied. * * * Both barrels of the gun were empty." The testimony of defendant, his wife, and stepdaughter was that defendant went to bed with sick headache about 6 p. m., was called up to wait upon certain customers who bought some articles, and went to the saloon and had a drink with defendant, and that he returned from the saloon to the house and went to bed again and remained there until morning; that they none of them knew of the shooting nor heard of it until the next morning, although the whole neighborhood seems to have been aroused and aware of the tragedy. Undersheriff Paine took charge of defendant on the 6th, and took the gun from Deputy Sheriff Davis. "Defendant said it was his gun. I observed both barrels. They had been cleaned since they were fired. The left barrel was very much cleaner than the right. * * * I had a conversation with defendant. He said that he did not hear any shot, and heard no noise during the night, as he was asleep. He said he went to bed at 7 and was asleep by 7:30. * * * In a conversation with defendant, I asked him if he and deceased ever had any trouble, and he said they had a little difference about a bill. Defendant also stated that deceased had bothered his wife by going into her room and kind of making free with her. J. H. Ellis asked him in my presence if it didn't make him 'mad for Halloran to bother your wife,' and he said, 'I think my wife is all right; that is her business.'" The three persons who called at the store on the night of the 5th testified that defendant drank with them and was slightly intoxicated, and that they parted with defendant at 8:45 p. m. The homicide was committed after these persons left defendant, and it must have been very soon thereafter. Defendant's wife and stepdaughter did not retire, according to their testimony, until about 11 o'clock, but they testified that they heard no shot, and knew nothing of the homicide that night. The section house where the deceased lay was but 114 feet distant from the Shehadey store and Halloran's cabin was about 135 feet distant. It would seem hard to believe that with all the coming and going of that night to this section house no one at Shehadey's heard what it was about. Without further comments, our conclusion is that the dying declarations of the deceased find support in the evidence.

4. The proof of alibi rests largely upon the testimony of defendant, his wife, and stepdaughter and upon the variance in the testimony as to the time when the shot was fired. Mrs. Hernandez testified that the wounded man came to her home at 8 o'clock as shown by her watch in the kitchen. Other testimony of the people's witnesses shows that it must have been after half past 8 o'clock and near to 9. There was time for defendant to have gone to the cabin from his saloon, after parting with his customers, and committed the crime and returned to his house before 9 p. m., as the distance was but 67 feet. The jury evidently did not accept the testimony of defendant and his family as to his whereabouts the night of the 5th of April. We have set out most of the facts and circumstances on which the verdict rested. But in this as in all similar cases there was no doubt an atmosphere surrounding the trial which, while indefinable, had its influence upon the jury, but could not be incorporated in the record. This atmosphere is sometimes charged with local prejudice and passion and improperly influences the jury. But a careful reading of the record here fails to disclose any evidence that witnesses were testifying under outside pressure in any degree. There was no evidence that any person other than defendant had any feelings of enmity against the deceased, nor was there any evidence casting the slightest suspicion on any one other than defendant.

There are no assignments of error committed in the course of the trial. Defendant seems to have been ably defended, and his cause is well presented here.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

TACKETT v. HENDERSON BROS. CO. et al.

(Civ. 684.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 18, 1910. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court April 15, 1910.)

1. ELECTRICITY (§ 16*)—INJURIES INCIDENT TO USE—FAILURE TO INSPECT.

Failure to discover that a live wire was lying on the ground near a walk from 1 o'clock p. m. on Friday until 6:30 o'clock p. m. the following Sunday is such negligence as renders the owner liable for the resulting death of a child, where the same could have been discovered by reasonable care and inspection.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Electricity, Dec. Dig. § 16.*]

2. ELECTRICITY (§ 18*)—INJURIES—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

A boy 11 years of age is not guilty of such contributory negligence in touching a wire lying on the ground near a walk as to prevent recovery against the owner for his death thereby, where there was nothing to indicate that it was charged with electricity.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Electricity, Dec. Dig. § 18.*]

3. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT (§ 159*)—LIABILITY OF PRINCIPAL FOR NEGLIGENCE OF AGENT.

The owners of property are liable for the negligence of persons acting within the scope of their employment in the management of the property for them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Agent, Cent. Dig. §§ 599–613; Dec. Dig. § 159.*]

4. NEGLIGENCE (§ 4*)—NATURE—"DUE CARE"—"ORDINARY CARE."

The terms "due care" and "ordinary care" as used in the law of negligence are relative terms, and mean a degree of care commensurate with the danger involved.

5. ELECTRICITY (§ 14*)—INJURIES INCIDENT TO USE—CARE REQUIRED.

A person or corporation using wires charged with electricity is bound, while the public is not, not only to know the extent of the danger arising from them, but to use the very highest degree of care practicable to avoid injury.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; C. W. Norton, Judge.

Action by J. L. Tackett against Henderson Bros. Company, a corporation, Maria Cary Sanborn, and others. Plaintiff had judgment, and defendants other than the corporation appeal. Affirmed.

A. L. Levinsky, for appellants. J. A. Plummer, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. There is no serious controversy as to the facts herein, which may be stated as follows: The appellants own all the wires, poles, and electrical appliances used for distributing electricity in the town of Lodi, San Joaquin county; Cary Bros. being the managers of the plant. The electricity which they distribute is purchased by them from the American River Electric Company. This company has no control nor supervision over the wires or electrical appliances belonging to appellants. Appellants strung the wire in controversy a year before the electrocution of plaintiff's minor child, caused by coming in contact with said wire. This wire was given two wraps around a pole, carried across a sidewalk over an office building, and attached to an iron pipe of a water tank. It was an ordinary galvanized wire, uninsulated, and having the appearance, as some of the witnesses stated, of being used as a guy wire, and not as one charged with electricity. Said wire was used as a "third leg" or ground wire of the system, and it thus saved the expense of another wire. From the date of its erection until the death of said child no attention seems to have been paid to this wire. At a time when the current was shut off an employé of Henderson Bros., thinking that said wire was a guy wire, cut it in order to change the iron stand pipe to which it was attached. The wire was cut between 1 and 2 o'clock of Friday, August 2d, and remained in that condition until Sunday evening between 6 and 7 o'clock of August 4th. At this time the deceased, who was nearly 11 years old, was walking north on Sacramento street with his mother, he being on the sidewalk and she being in the street. When he saw the wire he called to his mother, saying: "This is the electric wire." He then grasped hold of it, and this resulted in his immediate death. Appellants were not notified that the wire was to be cut, or any change was to be made in it, nor did they have any knowledge that it had been cut until after the death of the said child, Millard M. Tackett. The wire did not fall by reason of any structural infirmity or defective fastening. The entire length of the wires owned by appellants in the town of Lodi was about 15 miles, which could be inspected in one day, and the scene of the catastrophe was only a short distance from the office of the company. It appears also that other persons saw the wire, and attempted to take hold of it, believing from its appearance that it was not charged; the testimony showing that even electrical experts, seeing a wire wrapped as this, would conclude that it was simply a guy wire.

Many questions of law are discussed by appellants, and various reasons are assigned for a reversal of the judgment, but the vital propositions involved are: (1) Were appellants chargeable with negligence? and (2) was the deceased guilty of contributory negligence in taking hold of the said detached wire?

As to the first, upon special issues submitted, the jury found that the "defendants Cary Bros., by the exercise of reasonable care and inspection, could have discovered the condition of the fallen wire between about 1 o'clock Friday afternoon and about 6:30 o'clock the following Sunday afternoon," and also that "the wire which was placed in position by the defendants Cary Bros., at the time it was placed in position, and up to the time when it was cut loose from the iron pipe on the tank, was dangerous to any person passing underneath." In reference to this latter finding it may be observed that the menace from the wire in position lay in the fact, as has already been indicated, that its appearance and adjustment were such as to lead to the belief that it was not charged with electricity. This finding, however, need not be considered at length, since the general verdict as to negligence follows from the answer to the aforesaid special issue as to the ability of appellants to ascertain the condition of the wire after it was cut, and before the accident.

We think it was unquestionably the duty of appellants to make frequent inspection of the system, and upon reason and authority it must be held that their ignorance of the condition of said wire amounts to actionable negligence, with the burden imposed of responding in damages for any injury occasioned thereby. That they omitted a plain and imperious duty in the premises appears from the testimony of the manager that: "So far as I knew, the wire as I strung it across there remained in the same condition it was put up until the day somebody cut one end. I paid no further particular attention to that wire that I know of after it had been put up. I told Mr. Bauer under certain conditions that wire was dangerous. * * * I cannot tell how long it had been prior to the occurrence that I had given the wire any attention." It is apparent, of course, that no attention was paid to it during the interval to which we have referred, as otherwise it would not have been allowed to remain hanging loose. The contention of appellants in this connection is that they are relieved of responsibility because they had no actual knowledge of the condition of the wire. But in view of the character of the agency with which they were dealing, and the solicitude of the law for human life, the failure to exercise diligent and proper care to obtain information is equivalent to actual knowledge of the situation, as far as their civil liability is concerned.

The ground for the strict exaction of the law in reference to the obligation of appellants is well set forth in the opinion of the court in Mitchell v. Raleigh Electric Company, 129 N. C. 166, 39 S. E. 801, 55 L. R. A. 398, 85 Am. St. Rep. 735, as follows: "The defendant company was engaged in the business of manufacturing, producing, leasing, and selling light made from the use of electricity, which is the most dangerous and deadly power recognized as a necessary agency in developing our civilization and promoting our comfort and business affairs. It differs from all other dangerous utilities. Its association is with the most inoffensive and harmless piece of mechanism, if wire can be classified as such, in common use. In adhering to the wire it gives no warning or knowledge of its deadly presence; vision cannot detect it; it is without color, motion, or body; latently and without sound it exists, and, being odorless, the only means of its discovery lie in the sense of feeling, communicated through the touch, which, as soon as done, becomes its victim. In behalf of human life and the safety of mankind generally it behooves those who would profit by the use of this subtle and violent element of nature to exercise the greatest degree of care and constant vigilance in inspecting and maintaining the wires in perfect condition." Many cases to the same effect in connection with the foregoing are cited in Shawnee Light & Power Co. v. Sears, 21 Okl. 13, 95 Pac. 449, wherein it is held that: "An electric light company, using the public streets of a municipality for its poles, wires, and appliances in conducting its business, is required to exercise the highest degree of care, and to maintain in the best possible condition the best appliances known to the science to render its business safe and to use that degree of care, caution, and circumspection in keeping with the dangerous character of its business." In the Sears Case, supra, the chief complaint of appellant was directed against an instruction informing the jury that it was "the duty of defendant to keep its appliances in a safe condition for those who might be brought in close proximity with them in traveling along the public streets, and if plaintiff, without fault on her part, was injured as complained of, then she was entitled to recover damages in the action." In reference to this instruction the court said: "At the time instruction No. 3 was given by the court, plaintiff's evidence had shown that, without fault on her part, proceeding on the public highway in a place where she had a right to be, she came in contact with the appliances of the defendant company at the edge of the footwalk; that the appliance was one in a most exposed place, and where people were liable to come in contact with it, and one which in the operation of its plant the defendant did not use for the transmission of its current, and in which its current would not then have been except for the want of due care and regard for safety on its part or its servants. Under these circumstances the instruction was given, and the question arises: Was the company liable from a showing of these facts? We hold that it was, and that this is sustained by a great weight of authority in this country and in England"—citing, on [page 24 of 21 Okl.], page 453 [of 95 Pac.] a long list of authorities.

The Supreme Court of Montana stated the rule in slightly different phraseology as follows: "The owner or operator of an electric plant is bound to exercise a reasonable degree of care in erecting pole lines, selecting appliances, insulating the wires wherever people have a right to go and are liable to come in contact with them, and in maintaining a system of inspection by which any change which has occurred in the physical conditions surrounding the plant, poles, or lines of wire, which would tend to create or increase the danger to persons lawfully in pursuit of their business or pleasure, may be reasonably discovered. It would hardly do to say that the defendant can only be required to exercise due diligence after it receives notice of any defect in its appliances, or of any change in the physical conditions surrounding them, for this would be placing a premium upon negligent ignorance." Bourke v. Butte Electric & Power Co., 33 Mont. 267, 83 Pac. 473. In Mitchell v. Charleston L. & P. Co., 45 S. C. 146, 22 S. E. 767, 31 L. R. A. 577, it was held that: "Where a company permitted for a day and a half a circuit breaker to be displaced so as to allow a trolley system to come in contact with a telephone wire, it is guilty of negligence, irrespective of how the displacement occurred."

In Pennsylvania the rule as to gas companies is stated as follows: "While no absolute standard of duty in dealing with such agencies can be prescribed, it is safe to say, in general terms, that every reasonable precaution suggested by experience and the known dangers of the subject ought to be taken. This would require, in the case of a gas company, not only that its pipes and fittings should be of such material and workmanship, and laid in the ground with such skill and care, as to provide against the escape of gas therefrom when new, but that such system of inspection should be maintained as would insure reasonable promptness in the detection of leaks that might occur from deterioration of the material of the pipes, or from any other cause within the circumspection of men of ordinary skill in business." Similarly, in District of Columbia v. Woodbury, 136 U. S. 463, 10 Sup. Ct. 995 (34 L. Ed. 472), it is held as to those having the care of the streets that they are responsible for their condition if they have actual or constructive notice thereof, and that it is their duty to keep themselves informed concerning the same, and "if a street remains in a dangerous condition so long that the authorities could not help, in the exercise of ordinary care and diligence, knowing that fact, and did not know it because they failed to exercise proper diligence, then the law imputes notice to them; in other words, they have notice in contemplation of law and that is constructive notice." The same principle is affirmed in the courts of this state. In Giraudi v. Electric Imp. Co., 107 Cal. 124, 40 Pac. 109 (28 L. R. A. 596, 48 Am. St. Rep. 114), it is said: "Defendant was using a dangerous force, and one not generally understood. It was required to use very great care to prevent injury to person or property. It would have been comparatively inexpensive to raise the wires so high above the roof that those having occasion to go there would not come in contact with them." In Davoust v. City of Alameda, 149 Cal. 69, 84 Pac. 760, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 536, it is held that, "where the death was caused by a live wire negligently allowed by the city to remain upon a beaten path four feet wide over a vacant lot which had been used for many years by residents of the neighborhood in going from their homes to a railroad station, it was sufficient to prove the negligence of the city."

Many other cases are cited by respondent in line with the foregoing, which emphasize the great care required of such companies for the protection of life and property, and our attention has been called to none holding that careless ignorance exonerates from liability. Of course, when the injury to the wire is done by another without the knowledge of the owner, the latter would be entitled to a reasonable time to repair the damage, but here we are satisfied that the failure of appellants for such an interval to ascertain the condition of the wire cannot be justified nor excused.

If the deceased had accidentally touched the wire, there could be no difference of opinion among reasonable persons as to the liability of appellants. The problem, however, is somewhat complicated by the fact that the act was voluntary on his part, and hence the claim is made of contributory negligence. This is rendered more plausible by the consideration that he was an unusually bright boy, but, after all, the question is: Was his conduct under the circumstances indicative of the want of that care which is to be expected, and which the law demands of a boy of his age, seeing what he saw and knowing what he knew? In the solution of the question we cannot lay out of view the fact that he was a mere child, that he did not know of the dangerous character of the wire, and that there was nothing in its appearance to indicate that it was a live wire. That a person of this boy's age is not held to the same degree of caution as is required of an adult will not be challenged by any one, and it is abundantly supported by the cases. That he did not know the wire was dangerous is shown by his conduct in grasping it, res ipsa loquitur. It is not at all probable that the boy would have seized the wire if he had any knowledge or intimation of the hazard involved. His actions show that he was deceived by the appearance of the wire; and, since appellants were responsible for that condition likely to mislead even experienced electricians, they cannot escape liability upon the ground that the deceased should not have been deceived. The question is at least open to frank and reasonable discussion, and as we view it, the conclusion that the lad was not chargeable with contributory negligence is not unreasonable. We, therefore, feel bound by the finding of the jury adverse to the contention of appellants.

As to this point we refer also to some of the decisions expressing views in line with the foregoing. In Haynes v. Raleigh Gas Co., 114 N. C. 203, 19 S. E. 344, 26 L. R. A. 810, 41 Am. St. Rep. 786, it is said: "A child of 10 years of age is not chargeable with contributory negligence because he took hold of a wire in the street charged with a deadly current of electricity, if there was nothing from which even an adult could have inferred that the wire was carrying any current of electricity whatever." Therein is announced the rule that: "A child is held to such care and prudence as is usual among children of his age and capacity." In the course of the discussion we find this language: "We should be very loath to declare an adult guilty of negligence for grasping a wire such as this one, under circumstances such as the defendant contends surrounded the deceased. We certainly cannot declare that this boy, whose conduct must be judged with due regard for his boyish nature and habits, negligently caused his own death." In Temple v. McComb City Electric Light & Power Company, 89 Miss. 1, 42 South. 874, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 449, 119 Am. St. Rep. 698, it is held that: "If a boy climbs into a tree through the branches of which an uninsulated electric wire has been placed by an electric light company, and he is injured by coming in contact with such wire, the company is liable therefor, when the tree is such as any small boy would be attracted to and use in his play." In the Giraudi Case, supra, the rule is clearly stated by our Supreme Court as follows: "The mere fact that a dangerous agency is used raises no presumption that the public know enough of its nature to avoid the danger which may arise from its use, and the public—aside from the consumers using the commodity—owe no duty to those introducing it; but it is the duty of those making a profit from the use of a dangerous element, such as electricity, to use the utmost care to prevent injury to any class of people, and they must protect those possessing less than ordinary knowledge of the character of the commodity. * * * Where a person injured from contact with electric wires was ignorant of the danger that might result from the contact, a less degree of care is demanded of him than would have been required if he had been informed of the danger; and what constitutes reasonable care must be judged by the circumstances of the case of which the jury are the judges." See, also, Griffin v. United Electric Light Co., 164 Mass. 492, 41 N. E. 675, 32 L. R. A. 400, 49 Am. St. Rep. 477. Without multiplying authorities, we conclude that it would be harsh and brutal to hold that beyond reasonable controversy the deceased was guilty of contributory negligence, and that it was against the mandate of the law to submit the determination of this question to the judgment of the jury. To hold with appellants would be to indorse the doctrine that a snare may be laid for the unwary, and that the guilty may take refuge behind the childish credulity of the innocent.

The cases cited by appellants in opposition to these views do not reach the point. We notice specifically only two California decisions. Studer v. S. P. Co., 121 Cal. 400, 53 Pac. 942, 66 Am. St. Rep. 39, and George v. Los Angeles Ry. Co., 126 Cal. 358, 58 Pac. 819, 46 L. R. A. 829, 77 Am. St. Rep. 184. In the former it was held that: "A child between 12 and 13 years old, who attempts to cross between the cars of a freight train standing at a crossing, and while in the act of climbing over the couplings, is killed by the sudden and unannounced starting of the train, is chargeable with contributory negligence as matter of law"—and furthermore that: "Children, as well as adults, must use the discretion which persons of their years ordinarily have, and cannot be permitted with impunity to indulge in conduct which they know, or ought to know, to be careless." The danger there was obvious to any child of that age of ordinary intelligence, and it was held that the risk was so great and so manifest that the deceased had no right to assume it. In the George Case the question of contributory negligence was submitted to the jury, who found for the defendant, and the Supreme Court held it was proper to leave this question to the jury, "free from any presumption as to plaintiff's incapacity." In those cases the danger was open to the observation, and could be comprehended by children over 10 years old, of average intelligence. Here the danger was hidden and concealed, and by reason of the negligence of appellants would not be suspected even by adults, and therefore an altogether different situation is presented.

The court's instructions, as we view them, stated the law correctly. There seems to be no valid objection to instruction No. 3, charging that: "The owners of property are liable for any acts of negligence upon the part of persons who may be managing such property for them, and if you believe from a preponderance of the evidence that the Cary Bros. were guilty of the negligence charged in the complaint, and that their negligence was the proximate cause of the death of Millard Tackett, and that at the time of the death of said Tackett the Cary Bros. were acting as managers of the electric system at Lodi for the defendants Blanch D. Cary and Maria Cary Sanborn, then your verdict should be, not only against the Cary Bros., but also against the said Blanch D. Cary and Maria Cary Sanborn." The instruction is hypothetical, does not assume any fact as proven, embodies a correct principle of law, and is based upon the evidence. The only criticism that could be directed against it is that it does not specifically require that the acts of the managers, in order to bind the principal, must be within the scope of their employment, but that element is necessarily implied, and the jury were explicitly so directed in another instruction.

An instruction was also given that: "The terms 'due care' and 'ordinary diligence' as used in the law of negligence are relative terms, and mean a degree of care commensurate with the danger involved. * * * Wires charged with an electric current may be harmless, or they may be in the highest degree dangerous. The difference in this respect may not be apparent to ordinary observation, and the public, therefore, while presumed to know that danger may be present, are not bound to know its degree in any particular case. The company or persons, however, using such a dangerous agent are bound to know the extent of the danger, and to use the highest degree of care practicable to avoid injury to any one who may be lawfully in proximity to its wires, and liable to come accidentally in contact therewith. * * * Where one places or maintains a wire charged with a highly dangerous current, or a wire likely to become charged with a highly dangerous current, over a public street, the law requires that he must use the highest or utmost degree of care in the construction, maintenance, and operation of said wire, and he must use the best materials and most approved methods of construction to prevent injury to any one who may lawfully or accidentally come in contact therewith and also use due care and circumspection over such wire to prevent it from sagging down within reach of pedestrians lawfully using a public street or sidewalk space adjacent thereto. Any failure to observe these requirements renders the person so failing liable for all damages that may thereby be caused to others who, without fault of their own, come in contact with such wire or wires." The objection to this instruction made by appellants is that: "The jury were instructed that, while the public may be presumed to know the danger, they are not bound to know its degree, and furthermore that these appellants were compelled to exercise due care and circumspection to prevent the wire from sagging down, which was not a fact in the case, because the wire did not sag down, and therefore these appellants had performed their duty. It sagged down by reason of having been cut without notice to these appellants, and it was an instruction not based upon the evidence, and, like the last instruction, permitted the jury to romance, guess, and surmise."

The proposition however, as to the degree of knowledge has been affirmed in many decisions, among them the case of Fitzgerald v. Edison Electric Illuminating Company, 200 Pa. 540, 50 Atl. 161, 86 Am. St. Rep. 732, wherein it is said: "A person or company using wires charged with an electric current is bound while the public is not, not only to know the extent of the danger arising from them, but to use the very highest degree of care practicable to avoid injury, etc. The duty is not only to make such wires safe by proper insulation, but also to keep them so by constant oversight and repair." It is also directly upheld in this state by the Giraudi Case, supra. There was evidence also—in fact, it is undisputed—that the wire was 'sagging' or hanging down over the sidewalk for two days. It is true that, as before seen, it was cut by another, but appellants' negligence consisted in allowing it to remain so. The objections of appellants are thus seen to be without merit.

Many objections were made to the admissibility of evidence. We do not feel called upon to review them in detail. We think no prejudicial error was committed. Some of the questions were proper on behalf of the defendants other than appellants; and, if the answers thereto should not have been considered as against the latter, it is sufficient to say that there was no request to so limit them, and there were other questions where an objection was overruled that were not answered at all.

We find no material conflict in the special findings of the jury, nor do we think they are opposed to the general verdict. The case seems to have been fairly tried, the verdict is a very moderate one, and we think the judgment and the order denying the motion for a new trial should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

WELDON v. ROGERS. (L. A. 2,447.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 24, 1910.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 843*) — REVIEW — SCOPE—MATTERS NOT NECESSARY TO DECISION—VENDITIONI EXPONAS.

On appeal from an order requiring the sheriff to sell property on which an execution had been levied, entered after the return, the matter of the correctness of the return is collateral, the title of the purchaser at a sheriff's sale not depending on the return.

2. EXECUTION (§ 146*)—LEVY—ABANDONMENT.

A levy under an execution on an original judgment is not abandoned by the subsequent issuance of an execution on a judgment on the bond given by the judgment debtor on his appeal from an order refusing to vacate an order for an execution on the original judgment, though the judgment creditor at one time mistook his remedy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Execution, Cent. Dig. §§ 381, 382, 389, 391–393; Dec. Dig. § 146.*]

3. EXECUTION (§ 146*)—ALIAS EXECUTION—IRREGULARITY.

The issue of an alias execution while a levy on a prior execution remains undisposed of is an irregularity which may be corrected by the vacation of the alias, and, unless the circumstances establish the abandonment of the levy under the prior writ, abandonment will not be inferred merely from the irregular issue of the alias.

4. EXECUTION (§ 146*)—DELAY IN SALE—EFFECT.

Mere delay in making a sale under an execution does not operate as an abandonment of the levy, the time within which the sale may be had being under the control of the court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Execution, Cent. Dig. §§ 381, 382, 386; Dec. Dig. § 146.*]

5. EXECUTION (§ 351*) — ORDER OF SALE — AMOUNT TO BE COLLECTED.

Where there could properly be no credit on an original judgment by reason of a sale under an execution on a judgment on a bond given by the judgment debtor on appeal from an order refusing to vacate an order for an execution on the original judgment because the execution was void, the purchaser at that sale being therefore entitled to a return of his money, the court, in ordering a sale under the execution on the original judgment, properly ordered a sale for the full amount of the original judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Execution, Cent. Dig. § 1074½; Dec. Dig. § 351.*]

6. EXECUTION (§ 98*) — SALES — POWER OF COURT.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 187, providing that, where jurisdiction is conferred on a court, all the means necessary to carry it into effect are also given, and in the exercise thereof any suitable mode may be adopted, etc., the court has complete authority over its records and the power to pursue any suitable method for effectuating its judgment which appears most conformable to the Code, and it may permit a sheriff to withdraw from the files a returned writ of execution for his use in making a sale of property levied on.

7. SHERIFFS AND CONSTABLES (§ 84*) — AUTHORITY OF SUCCESSOR AS TO PENDING PROCEEDINGS.

Under Pol. Code, § 4171, providing that, when any process remains with the sheriff unexecuted at the expiration of his term, it shall be executed by his successor, the successor of a sheriff who made a levy of personalty under an execution, and who made a return before the termination of his office may complete the sale.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sheriffs and Constables, Cent. Dig. § 111; Dec. Dig. § 84.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; N. P. Conrey, Judge.

Action by Sophie B. Weldon, as executrix of T. J. Weldon, deceased, against Ralph Rogers. From an order requiring the sheriff to sell property levied on under an execution and from the part of the order which authorized the sheriff to withdraw the execution from the files of the court, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

McNutt & Hannon, for appellant. J. W. McKinley and Louis Luckel, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. This is an appeal from an order of the superior court of Los Angeles county made and filed on the 8th day of March, 1909, requiring the sheriff of that county to sell the real and personal property upon which levy had been made under and pursuant to a writ of execution issued on the 10th day of April, 1905. Defendant also appeals from that part of the order which authorized the sheriff to withdraw the execution from the files of the court for the purposes stated in the order.

The original execution in this case was issued on the date last mentioned under the provisions of section 685 of the Code of Civil Procedure which had been amended during the first five years of the life of the judgment. Under this execution levy was made upon certain real and personal property of the defendant, and then an appeal was taken from an order refusing to set aside the order enforcing the judgment. An undertaking on appeal was given, appellant claiming and respondent denying that this bond was potent to stay the execution. In order that this question might be authoritatively determined, defendant, on July 18, 1905, gave notice of motion for a writ of supersedeas. Pending the hearing thereon, all proceedings were stayed by order of this court from September 14, 1905, to October 16th of the same year when the motion for the writ of supersedeas was denied. The sheriff, however, without any suggestion from the respondent had returned the writ showing the levy, upon certain property. The date of this return was August 11, 1905. This is the writ contemplated in the order from which the present appeal is taken. Subsequent to the denial by this court of the writ of supersedeas, the defendant filed an undertaking in double the amount of the judgment, conditioned that if the order appealed from or any part thereof should be affirmed, or the appeal dismissed, appellant would pay to respondent the amount involved. On July 23, 1907, this court affirmed the order of April 10, 1905, enforcing the judgment. Weldon v. Rogers, 151 Cal. 432, 90 Pac. 1062. Supposing that the undertaking in double the amount of the judgment had operated as a stay, respondent had not directed anything to be done by the sheriff under the original levy. Instead, a judgment on the bond was entered against the sureties and the appellant, and execution thereon was issued. On appeal this judgment was held void with respect to defendant because it was entered ex parte as to him, and this court also determined that, under section 942 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the bond did not operate as a stay, and that, therefore, neither the sureties nor the appellant were liable. Weldon v. Rogers, 154 Cal. 632, 98 Pac. 1070. On February 23, 1909, plaintiff gave notice of motion for an order directing the clerk to issue a writ of venditioni exponas, or an order commanding the sheriff to sell the property upon which levy had been made under the original writ, and, as we have seen, this appeal is from the order granting that motion.

Appellant's first contention is that there never was any valid levy on his personal property, owing to the fact that the sheriff's return shows that he transposed the notices of attachment so that the cashier of the Pacific Savings Bank was notified of a levy on the stock of defendant in the Ralph Rogers Company, while the secretary of the last-named corporation was apprised of a similar attachment on defendant's stock in the Pacific Savings Bank. Blood v. Light, 38 Cal. 649, 99 Am. Dec. 441, is cited as authority to the effect that such mistake is fatal to the validity of the levy. That case, however, is authority against appellant's contention, for it is there held, as to the sheriff, "that his power to sell comes from the judgment and execution, and is not to be measured by his proceedings under the writ; * * * that the performance of the acts described in the statute as a levying of the execution is material only in reference to the intervening rights of third persons, or persons who are not parties to the writ; that it is, undoubtedly, the duty of the officer to proceed strictly according to the statute, and if he does not do so, the sale may be set aside, upon motion, or he may be made to respond in damages to any one who has been injured by his neglect; but it would be gross injustice to hold that by proof of such neglect, made, perhaps, years after the sale, the purchasers' title shall be defeated." It has been frequently held that the title of the purchaser at sheriff's sale does not depend on the return to the writ. Hibberd v. Smith, 67 Cal. 564, 4 Pac. 473, 8 Pac. 46, 56 Am. Rep. 726; McFall v. Buckeye Grangers' Warehouse Ass'n, 122 Cal. 471, 55 Pac. 253, 68 Am. St. Rep. 47. It is therefore clear that the matter of the correctness of the sheriff's return is one collateral to this appeal.

The next and principal point made by the appellant is that the levy of April 10, 1905, under the writ of execution of that date, was abandoned and could not be revived thereafter. The only authority cited in this behalf is Freeman on Executions, § 271, where it is said, among other things, that "the only proper object of a levy is to compel satisfaction of the writ out of the property seized; and if the plaintiff, by his long delay in following his levy by a sale, or by directions to return the writ unsatisfied, or by any other course of action, indicates that his employment of the writ is not to coerce the prompt payment of his debt, then the levy is abandoned. When property levied upon is not sold before the return day, the proper writ to enforce a sale thereof is a venditioni exponas; while the proper writ to authorize a new levy is an alias fieri facias. Hence, the suing out of the latter instead of the former writ has sometimes been held to be conclusive, and sometimes to be prima facie evidence that the plaintiff had abandoned his levy." We are asked to hold here that the execution of January 14, 1908, constituted practically an alias writ, and that whether we consider the issuance of such writ as conclusive or prima facie evidence of abandonment, the order reviewed in this appeal, based, as it was, upon the records alone, is void because made without jurisdiction. We fail to see, however, how the later execution, purporting to be based upon the undertaking on appeal, must be taken as an alias to the execution on the judgment; or how the mistaken resort of respondent to that void process was evidence of an abandonment of the original levy. Freeman, in the very section cited by appellant, observes that "the issue of an alias or second execution, while a levy on a prior writ remains undisposed of, is an irregularity which might very properly be corrected by the vacation of the second writ. It indicates misguided zeal in attempting to obtain satisfaction rather more than a desire to permit the first writ to become dormant, or to abandon any advantage gained by it. Unless other circumstances tend to establish the abandonment of a levy, we do not understand how it can be inferred merely from the mistaken and irregular issue of an alias writ. Nor is an abandonment of a regular and adequate levy inferable from a subsequent irregular levy."

While we do not question the fact that respondent at one time mistook her remedy, and that the pursuit of appellant's property under the original execution was postponed on account of the appeal disposed of by the decision in 154 Cal., 98 Pac., we do not see that her course of action indicated an intention to forego any advantage which she may have theretofore obtained by reason of the existence of the writ issued in 1905. That the issuance of a second writ is not necessarily an abandonment of the first one has been held in Dunham v. Bentley, 103 Iowa, 140, 72 N. W. 437; Bouton v. Lord & Hatheway et al., 10 Ohio St. 458; Mason v. Hull, 55 Ohio St. 272, 45 N. E. 632; West v. St. John, 63 Iowa, 292, 19 N. W. 238; Menge v. Wiley, 100 Pa. 619. Nor does mere delay in making the sale operate as an abandonment of the levy, as was said by this court in Southern California Lumber Co. v. Ocean Beach Hotel Co., 94 Cal. 224, 29 Pac. 629 (28 Am. St. Rep. 115) speaking of the validity of a sale by the sheriff after the return day of the writ: "Having the right to subject the property to a sale for the satisfaction of the judgment, the time within which it may be done is but directory, and under the control of the court." The court did not err in ordering a sale for the full amount of the judgment. Although under the void execution of January 14, 1908, there was, according to the return thereon, a sale made by the sheriff of Orange county, the purchaser under that writ was entitled to a return of his money, and there could properly be no credit upon the original judgment by reason of such sale. The withdrawal of the writ from the files for the sheriff's use was proper, the court having complete authority over its records, and having power, also, to pursue any suitable method for effectuating its judgments and orders, which may appear most conformable to the spirit of the Code. Code Civ. Proc. § 187.

Appellant is of the opinion that as far as the personal property is concerned, any sale thereof should have been made by the sheriff making the levy and not by his successor in office. In this behalf he cites section 62 of Freeman on Executions (3d Ed.). Although the general rule in the absence of statutory mandate to the contrary was that the officer who made the levy under a writ of execution on personal property must complete the sale, we have in this state section 4171 of the Political Code, which is but a re-enactment of a law that has existed in California since 1883. See section 107 of the county government act (St. 1883, p. 322). This section provides that "when any process remains with the sheriff unexecuted, in whole or in part, at the time of his death, resignation of office, or at the expiration of his term of office, said process shall be executed by his successor or successors in office." Appellant would have us make the distinction that the rule above announced does not apply to process which did not remain with the sheriff unexecuted, but which, before his term expired, had been returned. The very order of the court, however, withdrawing the writ from the files for the sheriff's use, was in effect a finding that the process was returned without proper authority, and that, therefore, the writ had, in contemplation of law, remained with the sheriff unexecuted.

The order from which this appeal is taken is affirmed.

MELVIN, J. Appeal from a judgment of foreclosure. Defendants James I. Wagy and Julia I. Wagy on July 2, 1906, gave their note for $7,000, payable on or before one year after date, with interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum. This note was secured by a mortgage on certain real property in Los Angeles county. Mrs. Jane Johnson was sued as one claiming some interest in the property by purchase from the Wagys.

In the answer the defendants James I. and Julia I. Wagy did not deny the due execution of the note and mortgage, and defendant Johnson merely made denial on information and belief. The defendants pleaded payment of all interest to September 1, 1908, except $130, and averred that plaintiff extended time on said payment for 90 days. They also alleged that about July 1, 1908, plaintiff agreed, in consideration of the payment of interest at the rate of 8 per cent. instead of 7 per cent. per annum, to extend the time of settlement of the note and interest until January 1, 1909.

Plaintiff introduced in evidence the note and mortgage and certain receipts for the taxes which he had paid, and another voucher showing the payment by him of $10 for searching the title to the property. On the witness stand plaintiff stated that having prepared to institute foreclosure proceedings in August, 1907, he was induced by James I. Wagy to forego suit at that time in consideration of the payment to him by the Wagys of $50, together with the interest due on the note July 2, 1907, and the promise that the note and interest at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum (instead of the 7 per cent. mentioned in the note) would be fully paid on January 2, 1908. In January, 1908, according to plaintiff's testimony, defendant James I. Wagy paid him $280, being interest on the note from July 2, 1907, to July 2, 1908, at 8 per cent. In September, 1908, another payment of $150 was made by the Wagys and duly credited. Shortly afterwards Wagy asked for an extension of the time of payment to January 2, 1909, promising to pay, in consideration therefor, the interest then due and 8 per cent. interest. McKelvey, the plaintiff, said that he would accept this offer if the accrued interest would be paid within one week, but no further sum was paid to plaintiff as a result of this offer, and in October, 1908, this suit was commenced. This testimony was not contradicted by any one, the defendants offering no evidence at all. Yet in spite of this plain, uncontroverted statement of fact, appellants' counsel in their brief insist that an extension of the time to January 2, 1909, for payment of the note had been proven, and that the suit was therefore prematurely commenced.

Appellants object to the items in the judgment of $154.08 for taxes and $10 for searching of title, on the ground that the complaint contained no averments upon which to base said motions; but the mortgage itself which, by copy attached as an exhibit, is made a part of the complaint, provides for the reimbursement of the mortgagee for all sums expended in the payment of taxes and in searching the title; and the prayer of the complaint asks, among other things, for general relief.

Findings were not waived, and appellants' claim of error is predicated upon failure to file formal findings. In the decree and order of sale, however, the court did find that "all the allegations in said plaintiff's complaint contained are true." The mere fact that this finding was not set off by itself and marked as such does not prevent us from considering it. The statute requiring that findings of fact and conclusions of law shall be separately stated is directory. Reiner v. Shroeder, 146 Cal. 411, 80 Pac. 517; Butler v. Agnew, 9 Cal. App. 327, 99 Pac. 395; Spencer v. Duncan, 107 Cal. 426, 40 Pac. 549. A general finding that all of the allegations of a complaint are true has been repeatedly upheld by this court. Gale v. Bradbury, 116 Cal. 39, 47 Pac. 778; Johnson v. Klein, 70 Cal. 186, 11 Pac. 606. And it has been decided here that findings are unnecessary where no evidence is introduced in support of an affirmative defense. Robinson v. Muir, 151 Cal. 118, 90 Pac. 521; People v. McCue, 150 Cal. 195, 88 Pac. 899; Roberts v. Hall, 147 Cal. 434, 82 Pac. 66.

This is a frivolous appeal. Defendants, who offered no evidence on their own account, are appealing upon matters which were so plain as to be almost axiomatic. That appellants had any faith in any of the questions involved in the appeal I greatly doubt. They must have had some motive for instituting this appeal other than a belief that serious error had occurred. Perhaps the suit was brought for delay, but, whatever the impelling reason, the practice of appealing upon frivolous matters should be discouraged. A penalty of $50 damages to plaintiff is therefore imposed, and the judgment from which the appeal was taken is affirmed.

FICKERT v. ZEMANSKY et al., Board of Election Commissioners. (S. F. 5,362.)

ELECTIONS (§ 126*)—NOMINATIONS AND PRIMARY ELECTIONS—CANDIDATES.

Primary Law 1909 (St. 1909, c. 405) § 12, subd. 4, provides for the leaving of a blank space under each group of names of candidates, in which the elector may vote for any person whose name is not printed on the ballot by writing his name therein, and by section 23 the person receiving the highest number of votes is the nominee of the party, although his name was not printed on the ballot. Section 12, subd. 8, restricts a voter's right in voting for delegates to his party convention to qualified electors of his party. Pol. Code, § 1366a, provides that the elector shall not be permitted to vote on behalf of any party or for delegates to the convention of any party other than the party designated in the registration. Held, that where, on a primary election, no person was named for the candidate of the Union Labor party for the office of district attorney, but a blank space left where the elector might write the name of the person he desired to vote for, and plaintiff's name was written in by the greatest number of electors of that party, he was entitled to have his name placed on the printed ballots as the candidate of the Union Labor party for the office of district attorney at the general election, although he was also the candidate of the Republican party for the same office.

In Bank. Application for writ of mandate by Charles M. Fickert to compel J. H. Zemansky and others, composing the Board of Election Commissioners of the City and County of San Francisco, to print plaintiff's name upon the ballot for the general election as a nominee of the Union Labor party for the office of district attorney. Writ granted.

George Hewlett and Ira S. Lillick, for petitioner. Thomas V. Cator and Hugh J. McIsaac, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This was an application for a writ of mandate to compel the board of election commissioners of the city and county of San Francisco, when it prepared the ballots to be used by voters at the general city and county election to be held on November 2, 1909, to print the plaintiff's name upon said ballots as the nominee and candidate of the Union Labor party for the office of district attorney of the said city and county. Upon the hearing, the writ was issued as prayed, but we deem it proper for guidance in future cases that the reasons for the decision should be given.

At the primary election previously held, under the primary law of 1909 (St. 1909, p. 691), for the nomination of party candidates to be voted for at the November election, no nomination papers had been filed proposing any person as the candidate of the Union Labor party for district attorney. On the primary ballot of that party the name of no person was printed as candidate for that office, but a blank line was left thereon as the law directs, whereon a Union Labor voter could write the name of the person whom he desired to nominate as the candidate of his party for that office. At said primary election divers persons were voted for as the Union Labor candidate for district attorney by thus writing the name on said blank line, and the plaintiff had received the highest number of such votes, and was thereby made the candidate of that party for that office.

The board placed its refusal to print plaintiff's name on the general election ballot as candidate of the Union Labor party upon the admitted fact that plaintiff was a member of the Republican party and not a member of the Union Labor party and upon the fact that he had been, at said primary election, duly nominated as the candidate of the Republican party for the same office. The theory was that one party cannot, at a primary election, nominate as its own candidate a member of another party, and that the voter of a party, in writing on the blank line placed on the primary ballot for that purpose, the name of some person as his nominee for an office, must confine himself to members of his own party.

There is nothing in the primary act or in any other law of this state that purports to preclude the nomination as a candidate for office by the electors of one party of a member of another party. The primary act provides for the leaving of a blank space under each group of printed names of candidates, in which the elector may vote for any person whose name is not printed on the ballot by writing his name thereon (section 12, subd. 4), and the person receiving the highest number of votes for the nomination is the nominee of the party, although his name was not printed on the ballot. Section 23. Nowhere is it intimated that the elector is to be restricted in thus voting to members of his party; a clear distinction in this regard being made as to his right in voting for candidates for nomination for public office, and his right in voting for delegates to his party convention, he being restricted in the latter case to "qualified electors of his party." Subdivision 8 of section 12. Section 1366a of the Political Code has no application. The provision therein "nor shall he (the elector) be permitted to vote on behalf of any party or for delegates to the convention of any party other than the party so designated in the registration," simply means that the elector registered as a member of a particular party cannot participate at the primary in the selection of the candidates for any other party. For instance, if he be registered as belonging to the Union Labor party, he cannot cast any vote upon the question who shall be the Republican or Democratic nominee for any office, or who shall be the delegates to the Republican or Democratic convention, but is confined to the selection of candidates and delegates for his own party. This is the whole effect of the provision. Its whole object is to confine the control of a party to the electors thereof, and to prevent electors of another party from interfering with such control.

The question we have here discussed was not involved in Socialist Party v. Uhl, 155 Cal. 776, 103 Pac. 181. Nothing said in the opinion in that case warrants the conclusion that an elector voting at his party primary may not write in the blank space placed on the ballot for each office the name of any person he wishes to have made the nominee of "his" party for that office, regardless of the political affiliations of such person, or that if a person whose name is thus written in receives the highest number of votes therefor at the hands of the electors of that party, he is not the nominee thereof simply because he belongs to another party or is an avowed candidate for a nomination for the same office at the hands of another party. Such a conclusion would find no support in the law.

Therefore petitioner, who, from the showing made here, received the highest number of votes for the Union Labor nomination for district attorney of the city and county of San Francisco, was the nominee of that party for that office, and was entitled to have his name printed on the ballot for the general election as such nominee, notwithstanding that he was a member of the Republican party and was registered as such, and notwithstanding he was a regular candidate at the primary election for the Republican nomination.

PAULEY v. BRODNAX et al. (L. A. 2,325.)

1. EJECTMENT (§ 94*)—ACTIONS—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In ejectment for a tract claimed by plaintiff to be located within a half section owned by him, evidence held to sustain a finding that the land claimed was not so located.

2. BOUNDARIES (§ 35*)—EVIDENCE.

In ejectment for land claimed to be located in a half section owned by plaintiff, in which the original survey stakes were shown to have been destroyed and other stakes set up in their place, a stake found many miles from the land claimed, but in the territory originally surveyed by those who surveyed plaintiff's land, was properly excluded from evidence; it not appearing that such evidence could have assisted the jury in determining the boundaries of the land claimed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Dec. Dig. § 35.*]

3. BOUNDARIES (§ 35*) — ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

In ejectment to recover land claimed by plaintiff to be located in a half section owned by him, a diagram drawn by a witness to illustrate his testimony as to location of boundary stakes, etc., was properly admitted in evidence, where the court instructed that it was only admitted to illustrate witness' testimony, and should not be considered as evidence of the location of the boundaries; not being objectionable as tending to confuse the jury.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1064*)—HARMLESS ERROR—INSTRUCTIONS.

An instruction in ejectment that defendants had reclaimed and tilled land occupied by them was harmless to plaintiff, if erroneous, where most of the facts regarding the improvements and cultivation were brought out by plaintiff's counsel.

5. EJECTMENT (§ 110*) — ACTIONS — INSTRUCTIONS.

In ejectment for a tract claimed by plaintiff to be located in a half section owned by him, an instruction that defendants had reclaimed the lands occupied by them and tilled the soil, etc., preceding a statement of defendants' contention that the land occupied by them was not in the section owned by plaintiff, was proper, being merely a recital of the manner of defendants' possession; the court having also instructed that the action could not be defeated by showing that defendants made improvements on the land.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Ejectment, Dec. Dig. § 110.*]

6. BOUNDARIES (§ 41*) — ACTIONS — INSTRUCTIONS.

In ejectment for a tract claimed by plaintiff to be located in a half section owned by him, in which the evidence showed that the original stakes had been lost, an instruction that if stakes or monuments were found which plaintiff claimed fixed the location of the boundaries of the tract in question, or of the quarter corners of the original official survey, the burden was upon plaintiff to show by a preponderance of the evidence that such stakes were those of the original official survey, and establish or locate particular or designated boundaries of such original survey, and, unless he did so, they should be disregarded as evidence of the boundaries of the tract claimed. Held that, while the words "establish and locate," etc., might seem to place too great a burden upon the stakes and monuments in establishing the boundaries, in that they should be considered in their relation with each other and with natural objects in fixing the boundaries, the instruction, construed as a whole, merely meant that the stakes and monuments must be shown to be official, and so identified that the tract sought to be bounded from them could be ascertained, and was proper.

7. EJECTMENT (§ 110*) — ACTIONS — INSTRUCTIONS—MISLEADING INSTRUCTIONS.

In ejectment for a tract claimed to be located within a half section owned by plaintiff, where the stakes of the original official survey were lost, the court charged the language of the Revised Statutes of the United States, requiring public lands to be divided by north and south meridian lines, crossed at right angles so as to form townships six miles square, and further charged that when the field notes of a government surveyor show that section corners were established on such straight lines between the township corners and fix their location by courses and distances, they are presumptively correct and can only be overcome by a preponderance of the evidence that the surveyor actually established corner monuments at points other than shown by the field notes, and that the fixed monuments would control courses and distances only where the boundaries are fixed and known, otherwise the courses and distances shown by the field notes of the original survey being considered. Held, that the part of the instruction quoting the federal statutes was not erroneous as tending to impress the jury that the particular township in which the land claimed was located was six miles square, being simply explanatory of the rest of the charge.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Ejectment, Dec. Dig. § 110.*]

8. Boundaries (§ 33*) — Courses and Distances.

While, under the direct provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 2077, subd. 2, permanent and ascertained boundaries, or monuments are paramount when inconsistent with the measurement, where the monuments are unknown, the field notes of a government survey showing the courses and distances are presumed to be correct.

9. Appeal and Error (§ 1064*)—Harmless Error—Instructions.

In ejectment for land claimed to be located in the half section owned by plaintiff, the court instructed that the fourth standard parallel, if established in part, must be assumed to extend in the same general direction, unless diverted by some fixed monument, and also stated, "if you further find from the evidence that two or more permanent survey stakes have been found on the standard line, which indicate and fix the course thereof," etc. The testimony as to stakes on the line claimed by the surveyor to be the fourth standard parallel had been stricken, but there was evidence that the surveyor fixed such line with reference to natural monuments. Held, that error in charging as to the effect of the stakes when the testimony thereon had been stricken was harmless, the gist of the charge being that the parallel line is presumed to extend in the same general direction when established in part, and not as to the effect of the stakes.

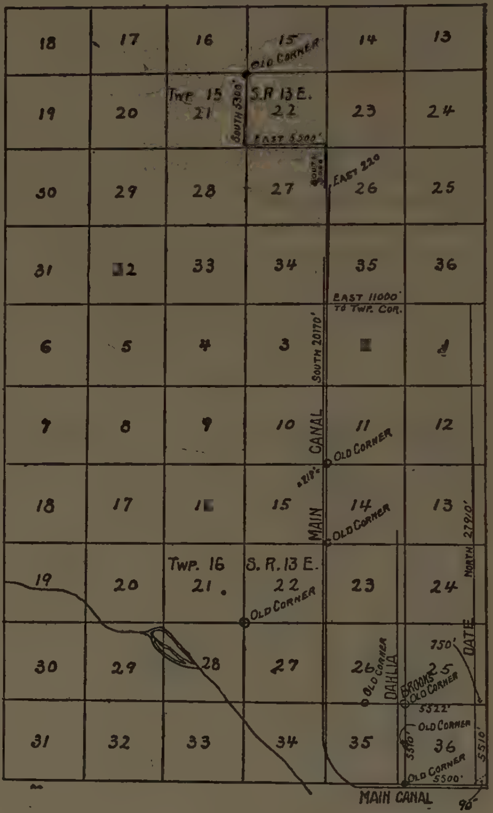
Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; N. H. Conklin, Judge.

Action by Charles W. Pauley against Thomas W. Brodnax and others. From a judgment for defendants, and an order denying a motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Hunsaker & Britt and Cassius Carter, for appellant. W. J. Mossholder, C. F. Holland, H. R. Comly, Powers & Holland, and Marks P. Mossholder, for respondents.

MELVIN, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of defendants and from an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial. The action was one in ejectment, and presents some of the problems arising from the efforts to retrace the old surveys of the United States government in the Imperial valley. While admittedly there was a conflict of evidence at the trial, appellant contends that in no material particular was his proof traversed, and that the verdict was contrary to the evidence. He also complains of certain rulings on the admission of evidence and in the instructions to the jury.

At the trial there was no contention that plaintiff was not entitled to the N. ½ of section 36 in township 16 S., range 13 E., San Bernardino base and meridian, which was involved in the action; but defendants denied that any of the land occupied by them was located in that half section. Plaintiff, depending upon the official surveys of Derby made in 1854 and Mathewson made in 1856, sought to re-establish the lines of the section 36 in question from the measurements tied to the monuments of the original surveys, which they asserted had been rediscovered by their witnesses. To illustrate appellant's position, we reproduce a diagram made by one of the surveyors, Mr. Ward, who testified in his behalf:



It will be noticed that Ward's diagram shows three monuments on the west line of section 36 designated by him as "Old Corners." Appellant asserts that these three monuments, which were mesquite stakes, were the original posts set by Mathewson in 1856 when he ran the section lines to conform to the township boundaries previously established by Derby. The most northerly of these stakes which, according to appellant, was set at the corner common to sections 25, 26, 35, and 36, was first shown to Mr. Ward in 1902. Subsequently it disappeared, and in 1904 Mr. Ward set a white stake in its place. Later the mesquite stake was found in the possession of one Donovan, was procured by defendants, and was introduced in evidence by them at the trial. The other two stakes had been found by Mr. Ward by running south from the alleged corner stake somewhat farther than the distances indicated in Mathewson's field notes.

Witness Ward stated that these stakes were practically in alignment, the deviation being but a matter of a few feet. Witness Van Horn testified that he was present when Mr. Ward examined the stake which is alleged to have been at the northwest corner of section 36. The location of these stakes 500 feet east of the Dahlia canal was described at the trial by other witnesses who had been in that locality as early as 1901. Alverson, a surveyor, testified that in 1904 he ran south from the locality of the most northerly of these three stakes and found the other two. He gave it as his professional opinion that the most southerly of these stakes, marked "35" on one side and "36" on the other was set by Mathewson to mark the corners on the fourth standard parallel of sections 35 and 36.

But appellant contends that, even if the three stakes near the Dahlia canal be rejected, his right to the greater portion of the land occupied by defendants is established by reference to other monuments. He asserts that his witnesses have discovered and identified the following monuments mentioned in Mathewson's field notes: A tree common to the corners of sections 10, 11, 14, and 15; a bearing tree south 15° W. 170 links from the corner common to sections 14, 15, 22, and 23; and a palo verde tree at a quarter section corner between sections 33 and 34. According to the measurements of witness Caines the three stakes were 867 feet further east of the palo verde tree than the 2 miles indicated in Mathewson's field notes. Ignoring the stakes, this appellant urges, would move the western line of section 36 867 feet west. As fixing the northern boundary of the section, appellant calls attention to the testimony of respondents' witness Henderson that he found the distance from the tree (claimed by appellant as being at the corner of sections 10, 11, 14, and 15), to a line running east to the white stake set by Mr. Ward to be 16,470 feet south—an excess of 630 feet. Readjusting the lines according to these measurements, and allowing nothing for errors in Mathewson's work, still, so appellant contends, the N. ½ of section 36 would include more than two-thirds of the lands of respondents. But it is earnestly contended that the distances between Mathewson's monuments were always greater than the field notes indicated, and that this discrepancy accounts for the excess found in measuring from the trees, claimed as monuments, to the stakes on the alleged western boundary of section 36. In measuring from the trees near the center of township 15 S., range 13 E., to the tree indicated by appellant as the corner of sections 10, 11, 14, and 15 in township 16, Messrs. Ward and Alverson found an excess of 200 or 300 feet in a mile not shown in Mathewson's field notes. All of the surveyors who testified for plaintiff said that such excess existed. Witnesses for appellant testified to the finding of the original stake marking the corner of sections 15, 16, 21, and 22 of township 15 S., range 13 E. This they accomplished by running lines from the trees known as the "Imperial Bearing Trees," near the present city of Imperial, and mentioned as appellant's witnesses assert in Mathewson's notes. Respondents' witness Mr. Henderson said, referring to these trees, that he would not accept them as bearing trees without other evidence than the markings which he saw upon them. Mr. Bates also testified that he would consider it questionable if these trees were what appellant's theory would make them. Mr. Butler, another surveyor, was similarly in doubt. But appellant's counsel argue that mere doubts are of no value when opposed to the positive testimony of their witnesses with reference to the location and markings of the alleged monuments. Appellant's counsel call our attention to the relation between the "bearing trees" in township 15 and the palo verde tree at the quarter section corner on the line between sections 33 and 34 in township 16. The evidence, they say, establishes these bearing trees and the palo verde tree almost in the same line north and south although they are nine miles apart, and this correspondence in alignment, they argue, can hardly be merely accidental. Counsel warn us against giving great weight to the failure of their witnesses to find the water courses corresponding with any degree of accuracy to those mentioned and described by Mathewson in his field notes, as there have been numerous overflows and floods in the valley during the half century since the government surveys were made. We have thus followed carefully the arguments of appellant's counsel based upon the essential matters of proof in order that we might fully test the assertion that there was no material impeachment of the evidence adduced by them and that the verdict against plaintiff was clearly contrary to the evidence. Let us now examine the evidence offered on behalf of respondents.

The first criticism of respondents is directed to the great excess of measurements over the calls of the field notes which must be made in order to tie the alleged fixed monuments to the stakes on the purported east line of section 36 in township 16. Commencing their survey at the two trees near Imperial, designated by them as the bearing trees marking the corner common to sections 15, 16, 21, and 22 in township 15, these surveyors found the purported section 36, to use the phrase of respondents' counsel, "more than a half mile too far south, and nearly a mile and a quarter too far east to be identified as plaintiff's land." Upon this point Mr. Alverson, one of the witnesses for plaintiff, testified as follows: "We found that instead of counting two miles from the corner common to 15, 16, 21, and 22, running two miles east in order to bring us exactly north of the southwest corner of section 36, we had to run an additional 1,122 feet; in other words, before we got directly north of the southwest corner of 36, as shown on this diagram (Exhibit G), in running from the old corner common to sections 15, 16, 21, and 22, township 15 south, we had to run two miles and 1,128 feet. We assume that those monuments found were corners, no matter what the excess. The southwest corner of section 36 is 2,876 feet in excess of the nine miles called for from the Imperial bearing trees in township 15. The excess called for in the field notes is 228 feet. The excess not called for in the field notes is 2,648 feet. There is practically a half mile excess in measuring from this northerly corner to the southerly line in this township 16 and practically 1,128 feet excess in the easterly."

Next our attention is called to the fact that the jurors saw the northerly stake which was found on the supposed western line of section 36, and were the best judges of its genuineness or spuriousness as one of the markings of the original survey. We are also reminded that witness Van Horn swore that he saw no stakes when visiting that immediate locality in 1901. Another evidence of the falsity of appellant's conclusions with reference to the three stakes, according to respondents' counsel, is the fact that Mathewson described the land on the west boundary of section 36 as perfectly level, while the land along the line of the stakes was said by witnesses at the trial to be rough and full of hummocks. The field notes describe the north line of section 36 as level, while the north line of that section as plaintiff claims its location crosses an arroyo which has evidently been many years in existence because it contains good sized trees, one of the largest being about 16 inches in diameter. All these circumstances tend to prove, say respondents' counsel, that appellant's surveyors were mistaken in their efforts to locate section 36.

The jury was also given an opportunity to note the intersection with the north boundary line of township 15 of a line run due north from the so-called "Imperial Bearing Trees." This intersection is at a point 403 feet west of the old channel of New river, whereas a line drawn from the corner common to sections 15, 16, 21, and 22, as shown on the official map, would meet the north boundary line of the township at a point more than a mile and a half west of New river. Respondents' criticism is also leveled at the markings on the bearing trees which it is claimed were too distinct and fresh to have existed more than half a century. Respondents called Mr. Henderson, the surveyor, who under contract and with written instructions from the government of the United States made a survey of the exterior boundaries of these townships in Imperial valley. In doing this work he was required to fix the fourth standard parallel. According to his testimony, the fourth standard parallel which forms the southern line of section 36 passes to the north of some of the property in question and his location of this line would place all of the land of the defendants outside of the north half of section 36, township 16. Although certain testimony of Henderson with reference to alleged stone monuments was stricken out, one means whereby he assured himself that he was on the fourth standard parallel was an observation on Signal mountain agreeing with that of Derby taken from section corners 3 and 4, range 12 E., township 17 S. He also testified that he ran north to the third standard parallel and found it. From the foregoing discussion it will be seen that there was a substantial conflict of evidence both as to the authenticity of alleged monuments and the courses and distances. So sharp has been this conflict that we cannot say there was no material contradiction of plaintiff's evidence. There was testimony ample, if believed, to justify the jurors in finding in favor of the defendants and the court in denying the motion for a new trial.

Appellant assigns as error the court's refusal to admit in evidence a certain stake found by witness Alverson many miles away from the land in dispute. It was with a number of other stakes, and its relevancy, if it be relevant at all, would depend upon the fact that it was found in territory originally surveyed by Derby and Mathewson. There was nothing of greater authenticity respecting its origin than there was with reference to the stakes found near the land claimed by plaintiff. We cannot see how its introduction in evidence could have assisted the jury. Clearly the ruling rejecting it was correct.

The court permitted defendants to introduce the diagram drawn by witness Henderson to illustrate his testimony, and appellant assigns this as error upon the theory that it tended to confuse the jury and was not founded upon any monuments. The court was careful, however, to explain to the jury that the drawing was merely admitted in evidence "for illustrating the witness' testimony so far as it was applicable, not as evidence any further than illustrating the testimony of the witness." In the instructions the jury was again warned that the diagrams were not to be considered "any evidence at all of the location on the ground of the boundaries of said section or of said fourth standard parallel south."

Nor was there error in the court's instruction that defendants had reclaimed the land occupied by them, tilled the soil, etc. Most of the facts regarding the improvements and tilling of the soil were brought out by plaintiff's counsel in establishing the rental value of the land. This part of the instruction, therefore, could have done no harm even if it were erroneous; but as it was merely a recital of the manner of the possession by defendants of the property, followed by a statement of their claim that the land so occupied by them is not in section 36, we can see that it has a logical place in the court's directions to the jury. The court was careful to limit the effect of this instruction, for the jury was told that "plaintiff's suit cannot be defeated by a showing that the defendants placed improvements upon the land or any part of it."

Objection is made to an instruction which was as follows: "If you find from the evidence that stakes or monuments have been found which are claimed by plaintiff to indicate and fix the location of the boundaries of the land in question, or of sectional or quarter corners of the original official government survey of said land, or of land in the vicinity, or surrounding territory, then you are instructed that the burden is upon the plaintiff to show by a preponderance of evidence, that such stakes or monuments are those of the original, official government survey, and, also, that such original stakes or monuments establish and locate particular and designated boundaries, section, or quarter corner of such original survey; and unless such stakes or monuments are of such official and designated character as above specified, and shown to be such by a preponderance of evidence, then they should be disregarded by you as evidence of the boundaries of the land in question, or of section or quarter corners of said official government survey." This instruction in effect admonished the jury that, unless the supposed monuments were what they purported to be, they must be disregarded. Perhaps the words "establish and locate," taken in their strongest sense, might seem to impose, as appellant says, too great a burden upon the stakes and monuments, because the stakes and monuments are to be considered in connection with their relation to one another and to natural objects described in the field notes. Read as a whole the instruction clearly means that the stakes and monuments must be shown to be official in their character, and so identified that the tract of land sought to be delimited by them or by measurements from them may be correctly ascertained.

The court gave as an instruction a part of section 2395 of the Revised Statutes of the United States,[1] as follows: "The public lands shall be divided by north and south lines run according to the true meridian, and by others crossing them at right angles, so as to form townships of six miles square, unless where the lines of an Indian reservation, or of tracts of land heretofore surveyed or patented, or the courses of navigable rivers, may render this impracticable; and in that case this rule must be departed from no further than such particular circumstances require." This instruction would not have a tendency to impress the jury, as appellant seems to fear, with the idea that this particular township was six miles square. It is simply explanatory of the method of running surveyors' lines, and makes clearer the rest of the instruction, which is as follows: "Therefore, when a government surveyor, in the field notes returned by him to the government, shows that such section and quarter section corners are established on such straight lines between the township corners, and fixes their locations by courses and distances, these field notes are to be accepted as presumptively correct, and can only be overcome by a preponderance of evidence that such surveyor actually established such corner monuments at points other than those indicated by the government field notes. The rule that fixed monuments shall control courses and distances only prevails when the boundaries are fixed and known, and monuments exist. And where the boundaries are not fixed and known, and the location of the monuments themselves is uncertain, or left in doubt by the evidence, then courses and distances as shown by field notes and maps of the original survey will be considered in fixing the boundaries." This is merely another way of saying: "The survey as made in the field and the lines actually run on the surface of the earth * * * must control." Kaiser v. Dalto, 140 Cal. 172, 73 Pac. 830. When the monuments are known of course they prevail: "When permanent and visible or ascertained boundaries or monuments are inconsistent with the measurement, either of lines, angles or surfaces, the boundaries or monuments are paramount." Code Civ. Proc. § 2077, subd. 2. But when the monuments themselves are unknown, the presumption in favor of the correctness of the field notes must prevail.

The instruction to the effect that the fourth standard parallel, if established in part, must be deemed to extend in the same general direction unless diverted by some fixed monument would be above criticism if the instruction did not contain the following language: "And if you further find from the evidence that two or more visible, permanent, identified, and undisputed stakes or monuments of the survey of said line have been found on said standard line, and which indicate and fix the location, course, and direction thereof." Doubtless the court overlooked the fact that the testimony of Mr. Henderson with reference to monuments on this line claimed by him to be the fourth standard parallel had been stricken out. However, there was evidence that Henderson fixed this line by reference to natural monuments such as Signal mountain and certain points on New river; and respondents maintain that the language with reference to stakes or monuments that might have been found on the standard line is immaterial. The jury of course knew that all testimony with reference to monuments on this line had gone out, but the gist of the instruction was not the effect of monuments on the line.

but the rule that such a line once established in part is presumed to extend in the same general direction. The error therefore was harmless.

No other alleged errors require particular notice.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

CHRISTENSON LUMBER CO. v. SEAWELL, Judge. (S. F. 5,505.)

APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 612*)—TRANSCRIPT OF RECORD—CERTIFICATION BY JUDGE—NECESSITY.

On appeals under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 953a, 953b, 953c, the judge is not required to certify the transcript which the clerk may certify, but is only required to correct, approve, and certify in lieu of a bill of exceptions the stenographic notes of the trial containing the proceedings and evidence which would form no part of the record, unless authenticated as the statute provides.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2694-2701; Dec. Dig. § 612.*]

In Bank. Mandamus by the Christenson Lumber Company against James M. Seawell, as judge of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco. Writ denied.

Charles M. Bufford, for plaintiff.

PER CURIAM. Petition for writ of mandate.

The petitioner was allowed to intervene in an action between other parties. Subsequently demurrers of the defendants in the action to the third amended complaint of the plaintiffs, and to the complaint in intervention, were sustained and the action, including the intervention, dismissed. Separate appeals from the judgment were taken by the defendants and the petitioner, following the procedure prescribed by sections 953a, 953b, and 953c of the Code of Civil Procedure, and they have presented to the defendant a transcript on appeal with a request that he certify it. His refusal to do so is based upon the fact that the transcript so presented contains nothing but the pleadings and orders constituting the judgment roll in the action. We think the defendant correctly construes the statute as not applying to a transcript which the clerk may certify. What a judge is required to correct, approve, and certify under the new practice in lieu of a bill of exceptions is the stenographic notes of the trial containing the proceedings and evidence which would form no part of the record unless authenticated as the statute provides.

Writ denied.

SPARKS v. CALDWELL et al. (L. A. 2,386.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 21, 1910.)

PLEDGES (§ 58*)—ENFORCEMENT—RIGHT OF ACTION PLEDGED.

Defendants, who were the payees of a negotiable note, indorsed thereon, "For value received, I hereby guarantee the payment of the within note, waiving demand," etc., and signed the same, and transferred the note as collateral security. Civ. Code, § 2888, provides that, "notwithstanding an agreement to the contrary, a lien or a contract for a lien transfers no title to the property subject to the lien." Held, that an answer of defendants in a suit on the note setting up such transfer stated a good defense, and it was error to strike the same as frivolous, although the answer failed to allege that the full amount of the note was not due; the amount due not being important, and the pledgee of the note not having the right to sue the pledgor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pledges, Dec. Dig. § 58.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frederick W. Houser, Judge.

Action by H. S. Sparks against H. J. Caldwell and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed and remanded.

Watkins & Blodget, for appellants. John W. Kemp and Keefer & Bowers, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff. The suit was on a promissory note for the principal sum of $2,100 made by one Frank R. Bear in favor of the appellants Caldwell and Tungate. The note was indorsed as follows: "For value received, I hereby guarantee the payment of the within note, waiving demand, presentment for payment, protest and notice of protest. H. J. Caldwell, D. W. Tungate." In their answer appellants admitted delivery of the note to respondent, but alleged that it was transferred as collateral security for the payment of a note for $2,000 previously made by them and payable to Sparks, the respondent. Upon motion their answer was stricken out as frivolous, and judgment on the pleadings was given according to plaintiff's prayer.

The one question presented is whether or not a pledgee can sue a pledgor as guarantor of a collateral security in the nature of a negotiable instrument.

Respondent contends (1) that there is nothing to prevent the pledgee of a negotiable note from suing upon the pledged security without bringing an action on the principal obligation; and (2) that, even if the rule be otherwise when the pledge is transferred by mere indorsement and delivery, nevertheless in cases like his where a distinct contract of guaranty is made in favor of the pledgee, he may sue upon the pledged note and recover upon it even when the amount of the note and interest is in excess of the indebtedness which the collateral note was intended to secure. Both of these positions are met, we think, by two Californian cases. In Haber v. Brown, 101 Cal. 452, 35 Pac. 1038, this court said: "The case has been discussed thus far upon the theory of the complaint that the original transfer of the note in suit to Dinkelspiel & Co. was an absolute transfer thereof by indorsement in the ordinary course of business. But the answer, proofs, and findings show that the transfer was by way of pledge, or collateral security, to secure the indebtedness of John H. Carter and of the firm of Carter & Barker to Dinkelspiel & Co. The Civil Code expressly provides that, 'notwithstanding an agreement to the contrary, a lien or a contract for a lien transfers no title to the property subject to the lien.' Civ. Code, § 2888. It is settled in this state that, as between the pledgor and pledgee, the general property in a pledge remains in the pledgor, notwithstanding an apparent transfer of legal title to the pledgee. Cross v. Eureka Lake, etc., Canal Co. 73 Cal. 306 [74 Pac. 885, 2 Am. St. Rep. 808], and cases cited. The pledgee is but a trustee for the pledgor (Wheeler v. Neubould, 16 N. Y. 398; Hawks v. Hinchcliff, 17 Barb. [N. Y.] 492), and is accountable to the pledgor for any surplus realized above the amount of indebtedness existing at the date of enforcement of the pledge. Civ. Code, § 3008. The transfer of a pledged note and mortgage to the pledgee does not transfer the title any farther than to enable the pledgee to collect the note and mortgage from the maker thereof. Ponce v. McElvy, 47 Cal. 159. In no event, even under the law merchant, could an indorsement of negotiable paper by way of collateral security authorize any recovery against the pledgor beyond the amount remaining due upon the principal debt. Williams v. Smith, 2 Hill [N. Y.] 301. It is unnecessary to decide whether, under the code rule respecting the retention of title in the creator of any lien, regardless of the form of the transaction, the indorser of negotiable paper by way of pledge is liable to the pledgee as an indorser under the law merchant. But it seems clear, in view of the code provision, that a mere indorsement of nonnegotiable paper by way of pledge should be restricted in effect to an authority from the pledgor to the pledgee to enforce the obligation in his own name as trustee and agent for the pledgor, and to apply the proceeds in payment of the debt secured, accounting to the pledgor for any surplus collected. It could not operate as an assignment of the general title so long as the pledge subsists, and could only operate as such in case of an agreement that the pledge should be extinguished, and the amount of the collateral security applied as a payment upon the debt secured, or in case of a transfer of the collateral security by the pledgee to third parties." And in the case of Ponce v. McElvy, cited in the foregoing quotation, this language was used: "The note and mortgage made to Ponce by Le Coat was received by the defendant Powell merely as collateral to secure the payment of the note of Ponce, as given by the latter to George. It was, as between these parties, a pledge. The assignment which Ponce made was not intended to transfer the title any further than to enable the assignee to obtain satisfaction of the debt from Le Coat. To give it any effect other than this would be to do violence to the obvious intention of the parties, which was to create a security for the protection of the note to George—nothing more." Respondent, while admitting the apparent force of these decisions, seeks to differentiate them from the case at bar. For example, our attention is called to the fact that in Haber v. Brown, supra, the pledge was nonnegotiable paper, the pledgor merely indorsed the collateral, and the pledgee did not take the steps necessary to charge the pledgor as an indorser, while in the case at bar the pledge was a negotiable note, there was a contract of guaranty as well as an indorsement, and the pledgee took the necessary steps to charge the pledgors as indorsers and guarantors. These differences, in view of the allegations of the answer, would be immaterial. It is alleged in the answer that the note was transferred as collateral security for the payment of another note for $2,000 given by appellants to Sparks on July 30, 1906, due 60 days later, and still owned by Sparks. In view of section 2888, Civ. Code, we fail to see how the form of the contract indorsed upon the collateral note affects the matter at all, nor do we see how this case differs in principle from Ponce v. McElvy, supra.

But the answer fails to allege that the full amount given by the judgment is not due. Therefore, according to respondent, no legitimate defense is presented, and the order striking out the answer must have been correct. But we think the amount due is not the important point. The title to the note is the all-significant matter. According to the answer the title remained in the appellants, and the respondent was clothed only with the power as their agent to collect the amount due from the maker of the note and to apply such sum to the payment of his debt. It follows that the order striking out the answer as frivolous and as surplusage was erroneous.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded.

GRAY v. WALKER. (S. F. 5,324.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 19, 1910.)

1. TRUSTS (§§ 17, 18*)—NECESSITY of WRITING.

In the absence of a confidential relation, or facts raising a trust by operation of law, a trust in lands cannot be imposed on the grantee under an absolute deed, unless it is declared by a writing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. §§ 15–24; Dec. Dig. §§ 17, 18.*]

2. QUIETING TITLE (§ 44*)—TITLE OF PLAINTIFF—EQUITY.

A finding of ownership in a plaintiff suing to quiet title is not sustained by proof that the defendant owns the legal title, subject to an equity in favor of plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Quieting Title, Cent. Dig. § 91; Dec. Dig. § 44.*]

3. QUIETING TITLE (§ 34*)—PLEADING—ELEMENTS OF ACTION.

A complaint, alleging that plaintiff is the owner and in possession of certain land, that defendant claims an interest therein, adverse to plaintiff, and that such claim is without right, contains every element of a complaint to quiet title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Quieting Title, Cent. Dig. §§ 69–77; Dec. Dig. § 34.*]

4. QUIETING TITLE (§ 35*)—SUFFICIENCY OF COMPLAINT—SHOWING TITLE IN ANOTHER.

A complaint, alleging all the essentials of a complaint to quiet title, is not defeated by an allegation that plaintiff had given an absolute deed to the land, where the deed was given long enough before suit to have enabled plaintiff to re-acquire title by adverse possession.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Quieting Title, Dec. Dig. § 35.*]

5. TRIAL (§ 396*) — PLEADING — APPLICATION OF FINDINGS.

Where an action is tried on a fifth amended complaint, and the court makes a general finding that all the allegations of plaintiff's complaint are true, an objection that the finding refers to the original complaint is hypercritical.

6. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 16*) — CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTE—"USUALLY CULTIVATED OR IMPROVED."

Code Civ. Proc. § 325, providing that adverse possession, not based on a written instrument, judgment, or decree, may be established by showing that the land was "usually cultivated or improved," means that the land should be cultivated or improved in the manner and to the extent usual in the case of similar property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adverse Possession, Dec. Dig. § 16.*]

7. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 20*)—IMPROVEMENT OF LAND—STATUTES.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 325, providing that the elements of adverse possession, not based on a written instrument, judgment, or decree, are either, first, that the land be protected by substantial inclosures, or, second, usually cultivated or improved, improvements alone are sufficient if they are improved in the manner or to the extent usual in the case of similar property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adverse Possession, Cent. Dig. §§ 106–108; Dec. Dig. § 20.*]

8. EVIDENCE (§ 471*)—CONCLUSION OF WITNESS—ADVERSE POSSESSION.

On an issue of adverse possession not based on a written instrument or judgment, testimony of plaintiff that he held actual possession of all the property for the requisite time is not inadmissible as a conclusion, since it tended to prove actual occupancy.

11. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 93*)—PAYMENT OF TAXES—REDEMPTION FROM TAX SALE.

Where payment of taxes is relied on to establish adverse possession, the fact that in one year the land was sold for delinquent taxes and redeemed by the one claiming adversely would not prevent the acquisition of title.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Henry A. Melvin, Judge.

Suit by John Gray against William Walker. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

R. E. Hewitt, for appellant. E. Huffaker, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. Appeal by defendant from a judgment quieting plaintiff's title to three parcels of land in Alameda county. The evidence is incorporated in a bill of exceptions.

The fifth amended complaint, upon which, with the answer thereto, the action was tried, alleged that on December 23, 1896, plaintiff was seised and possessed of, and ever since has been and now is the owner in fee simple absolute of, the lots in controversy; that on December 23, 1896, plaintiff executed and delivered a deed of said land to the defendant, his uncle, with the understanding that said defendant would reconvey the same upon request; that said conveyance was made at the request of defendant, "and for the further reason that the plaintiff at said time was suffering mentally and physically from injuries received some two years prior to said time by a horse falling upon him." It was further alleged that there was no consideration for the deed; that ever since its execution plaintiff had held possession of said lands against the defendant and the whole world, and for five years had paid all taxes levied and assessed upon said lands, and had "improved and treated said real estate as his own, without a suggestion or an objection from any one in the world." The refusal of the defendant to reconvey on request is averred, as is the fact that he claims an interest in the property adverse to plaintiff; such claim being, as is alleged, without right. A demurrer to this complaint was overruled. Of the various grounds of demurrer specified, but one—i. e., the want of facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action—is here argued. The contention of appellant is that the plaintiff cannot, by the mere averment of an oral agreement that the title conveyed should be held in trust for him, or be reconveyed to him, overcome the effect of his deed of December, 1896. In the absence of a confidential relation or of facts raising a trust by operation of law—and it is plain that this complaint sets up no such case—a trust cannot be imposed upon the grantee under an absolute deed, unless it be declared by a writing. Feeney v. Howard, 79 Cal. 526, 21 Pac. 984, 4 L. R. A. 826, 12 Am. St. Rep. 162; Babcock v. Chase, 111 Cal. 351, 43 Pac. 1105; Sheehan v. Sullivan, 126 Cal. 189, 58 Pac. 543. The language of this complaint would seem to indicate clearly that there was no intent to rely upon a writing, and that the alleged agreement to reconvey was verbal. In any event, there was no proof of a writing, and the decree cannot, if the complaint may, be sustained on the theory that the title to the property was held by the defendant subject to a trust in favor of plaintiff. Furthermore, a finding of ownership in a plaintiff suing to quiet title is not sustained by proof that the defendant owns the legal title, subject to an equity in favor of plaintiff. Buchner v. Malloy, 155 Cal. 253, 100 Pac. 687, and cases cited.

But, independently of every allegation concerning the deed, the complaint contains a statement of all the facts necessary to constitute a cause of action. It avers that plaintiff is the owner and in possession of certain land, that defendant claims an interest therein adverse to plaintiff, and that such claim is without right. Here we have every element of a complaint to quiet title. Code Civ. Proc. § 738. Furthermore, if we read with these facts the averment that plaintiff made a deed to defendant in 1896, the cause of action is not destroyed. The plaintiff may have acquired a perfect title by adverse possession after the execution of the deed, and, in fact, the complaint undertakes, by separate averments, to set up such acquisition of title.

The court found, in general terms, that "all the allegations and averments of plaintiff's complaint are true." It is objected that this is a finding in favor of the facts alleged in the original, rather than in the fifth amended, complaint. We think this suggestion hypercritical. Each of the pleadings in question was a complaint, and the finding should be taken as intended to refer to the complaint on which the case was tried. The answer, mentioned in the same finding, was the answer to that complaint.

There are various specifications of insufficiency of evidence to support findings; but, in view of what we have said concerning the complaint, it will appear to be unnecessary to do more than to examine the evidence on the question whether plaintiff acquired a title by adverse possession. As he was not claiming under a written instrument, a judgment, or a decree, the elements necessary to constitute adverse possession are those set out in section 325 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Under that section the land must be either (1) protected by a substantial inclosure; or (2) usually cultivated or improved. There is no showing in the record that any of the three lots in question was either inclosed or cultivated. On the other hand, there was evidence tending to show that, for more than the statutory period, improvements had been maintained by plaintiff on each of the three lots. The requirement of the statute that the land be "usually cultivated or improved" means that it should be cultivated or improved in the manner or to the extent usual in the case of similar property. Allen v. McKay, 120 Cal. 332, 52 Pac. 828. If so improved, it is not necessary that it should be either cultivated or inclosed. Daniels v. Gualala M. Co., 77 Cal. 300, 19 Pac. 519. While the evidence on the point is not very full, there is nothing in the record to indicate that the plaintiff's improvements on the lots in question were not such as to comply with the statute. The plaintiff testified that he had, from December 23, 1896, to the date of the trial, held actual possession of all the property. This testimony was proper, as tending to prove actual occupancy (Nathan v. Dierssen, 146 Cal. 63, 79 Pac. 739), and, in the absence of a clear showing that the improvements relied on were inadequate, is sufficient to support the finding under consideration. The plaintiff's further evidence, if true, showed that his possession was both hostile and exclusive. It was contradicted by the defendant's witnesses; but, as we have so often said, a conflict of testimony presents a question which is to be answered finally in the trial court.

It is urged that the other requirement of section 325, viz., payment of taxes for five years, was not shown. But the evidence was ample on this point. The plaintiff introduced tax receipts showing the payment of all taxes assessed on two of the lots for more than the statutory period. On the third lot the taxes had been paid by Mary Walker, a witness for defendant. But plaintiff testified that he had given her the money to pay these taxes, and that she had kept the receipts, for the reason that she owned an adjoining lot, which was assessed with the one claimed by plaintiff. This was, in effect a payment by plaintiff.

The fact that in one year the land was sold for delinquent taxes, and subsequently redeemed by plaintiff, did not prevent the acquisition of title by adverse possession. Owsley v. Matson, 104 Pac. 983.

Certain errors in admitting or excluding evidence are specified. The objections, rulings, and exceptions are merely stated in appellant's brief, without any citation of authority or any argument beyond the bald declaration that "in deciding these objections against the defendant the court erred." We do not feel called upon to consider points so presented. Duncan v. Ramish, 142 Cal. 689, 76 Pac. 661; Bell v. S. P. Co., 144 Cal. 573, 77 Pac. 1124; Bird v. Potter, 146 Cal. 286, 79 Pac. 970.

The judgment is affirmed.

In re KENNEDY'S ESTATE. (S. F. 5,133.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 1, 1910.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 181*)—SETTING OFF HOMESTEAD—ALLOWANCE OF SUPPORT—RELATION TO TESTAMENTARY DISPOSITION.

The power of testamentary disposition of property as conferred and defined by statute is not paramount, but is subordinate to the authority conferred on the probate court to appropriate the property for the support of the family of the testator, and to set apart a homestead for the widow and minor children, as well as for the payment of debts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 681-685; Dec. Dig. § 181.*]

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 181*)—SETTING APART HOMESTEAD—DEFEATING DEVISE.

Though property be specifically devised by will, the probate court may set apart such property as a homestead to the family, and thus defeat the devise.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 681-685; Dec. Dig. § 181.*]

3. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 195*)—SETTING ASIDE HOMESTEAD—TITLE GIVEN.

Where a homestead is set apart absolutely by order of the probate court, the title of the person to whom it is so set apart is in no way derived by will, even though such person was the devisee, but comes solely from the homestead order, and money paid from the funds of the estate by order of the court for the maintenance of the widow and children is on the same basis.

4. TAXATION (§ 860*)—INHERITANCE TAX—CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTE.

The provision of Inheritance Tax Law (St. 1905, c. 314) § 1, that all property "which shall pass by will or by the intestate laws" shall be subject to the tax, means to pass by virtue and force of the law governing testate or intestate succession.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 1675; Dec. Dig. § 860.*]

5. TAXATION (§ 856*)—"INHERITANCE TAX"—NATURE OF TAX.

An inheritance tax is not a tax on property as such, but one on the right of succession, a tax on one for the privilege of succeeding to property.

6. TAXATION (§ 866*) — INHERITANCE TAX — SETTING APART HOMESTEAD — ALLOWANCE FOR SUPPORT — WHAT COVERED — "PASS BY WILL."

St. 1905, c. 314, authorizing an inheritance tax, provides in sections 1, 2, 7, 9 and 28 that all property which shall pass by will shall be subject to a tax, and provides for the rate of tax and method of collection, and also by section 12 provides that, when any debt shall be proven against the estate after the tax has been paid, etc., a refund of a proportion of the tax shall be made. Code Civ. Proc. § 1465, provides that during the administration the probate court may set apart a homestead for the surviving spouse and minor children. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1466, 1467, provides that the probate court may make a reasonable allowance for maintenance of the family, which shall be paid in preference to all debts, except funeral charges and expenses of administration. Held, that the homestead set apart by the probate court and the allowance as well did not pass under the will, but by the order of the probate court, especially in view of section 12, and hence the words in the taxing act, shall "pass by will," did not cover such property, and a tax on their value was erroneous.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. V. Coffey, Judge.

Proceedings to collect an inheritance tax from the Estate of John F. Kennedy. From an order fixing the amount of the tax, the county treasurer of the city and county of San Francisco and Alice Kennedy, the widow, separately appeal. Modified and affirmed.

Campbell, Metson, Drew, Oatman & Mackenzie, for appellant Kennedy. Hartley F. Peart, for appellant Treasurer.

ANGELLOTTI, J. These are separate appeals by the treasurer of the city and county of San Francisco and Alice Kennedy, surviving wife of deceased, from an order fixing the amount of inheritance tax to be paid by Mrs. Kennedy under the provisions of the act of March 20, 1905 (St. 1905, p. 341), and directing payment thereof.

Deceased died testate, giving by his will all his property to his wife. The value of all his property was $82,752.50. The debts of deceased and the expenses and charges of administration, exclusive of family allowance, aggregated in amount $9,975.93. Under an order for family allowance duly made in accord with the provisions of section 1466, Code Civ. Proc., there was paid to the widow during administration the sum of $4,600. Under the provisions of section 1465, Code Civ. Proc., there was also regularly selected, designated, and set apart to her absolutely by the court in probate as a homestead certain real property of the deceased of the value of $14,000. In fixing the amount upon which the tax should be calculated, the superior court deducted from the whole value of the estate the debts, expenses, and charges of administration ($9,975.93), and the family allowance paid ($4,600), but refused to deduct the value of the property set apart as a probate homestead, thus leaving $68,176.57 as the amount upon which the tax was to be calculated. The property going to the widow in this case, and the act in terms exempting from the tax in favor of the widow "property of the clear value of ten thousand (10,000) dollars transferred to the widow" of a decedent, the court deducted the further sum of $10,000, fixing the amount of $58,176.57 as the amount upon which the tax against the widow must be calculated, resulting in a tax of $888.53. The treasurer's claim is that the $4,600 family allowance should have been included in fixing the amount upon which the tax was to be paid, and the widow claims that the value of the property set apart as a homestead should have been excluded.

We are of the opinion that there is no question of "exemption" presented by these appeals, but that the real question is whether the act purports to impose any tax as to property of a decedent disposed of in the course of administration as was this property. The only exemptions provided for by the act are those specified in section 4 thereof, being of property "transferred" for charitable, etc., purposes, "property of the clear value" of certain designated amounts to various classes of relatives of the deceased, and "property of the clear value" of $500 to more distant relatives and strangers in blood. There is absolutely nothing in the act purporting to "exempt" even the amount of charges of administration or debts of the deceased from any tax imposed by the act; section 12 relied on as implying such an intent as to debts to our minds implying an entirely different intent.

The all-important section of the act in this controversy is the section imposing the tax, the section declaring the property that shall be subject to the tax. That is section 1. So far as material here, it provides: "All property which shall pass, by will or by the intestate laws of this state, from any person who may die seised or possessed of the same while a resident of this state, * * * to any person or persons, or to any body politic or corporate, in trust or otherwise, * * * shall be and is subject to a tax hereinafter provided for * * *; and such tax shall be and remain a lien upon the property passed or transferred until paid and the person to whom the property passes or is transferred * * * shall be liable for any and all such taxes until the same shall have been paid as hereinafter directed." Section 2 prescribes the rates to be paid by different classes of persons "entitled to any beneficial interest in such property" when the property or interest "so passed or transferred" exceeds in value the exemption specified in section 4, and does not exceed in value $25,000, while section 3 prescribes the rates for amounts in excess of $25,000. Section 4 provides for exemptions as already stated. Section 7 makes all taxes "due and payable" at the death of decedent, and provides that they may be paid "within eighteen months" thereafter without any charge for interest. Section 9 provides that any administrator, etc., having in charge any legacy or property for distribution, "shall deduct the tax therefrom," or, if it be not money, shall collect the tax from the legatee or person entitled to the property, and that he shall not deliver any specific legacy or property until he shall have collected the tax thereon. Section 12 provides: "Whenever any debts shall be proven against the estate of a decedent after the payment of legacies or distribution of property from which the said tax has been deducted or upon which it has been paid, and a refund is made by the legatee, devisee, heir or next of kin, a proportion of the tax so deducted or paid shall be repaid to him by the executor, administrator or trustee, if the said tax has not been paid to the county treasurer or to the state controller, or by them, if it has been so paid." Section 28 provides that the words "estate" and "property" as used in the act "shall be taken to mean the real and personal property or interest therein of the testator, intestate * * * passing or transferred to individual legatees, devisees, heirs, next of kin, grantees, donees, vendees, or successors." The act is entitled "An act to establish a tax on gifts, legacies, inheritances, bequests, devises, successions and transfers, to provide for its collection, and to direct the disposition of its proceeds," etc.

Section 1465, Code Civ. Proc., provides that at any time during the administration of the estate subsequent to the return of the inventory the court, if no homestead has already been selected, must select, designate, and set apart and cause to be recorded a homestead for the use of the surviving husband or wife and the minor children, and the effect of an order under this section setting apart absolutely certain real property as a homestead is to vest such property in the surviving husband or wife, if there be no minor child, and to relieve it from administration as a part of the estate. Section 1468, Code Civ. Proc.; Estate of Moore, 96 Cal. 531, 31 Pac. 584. Section 1466, Code Civ. Proc., provides that if the property set apart is insufficient for the support of the widow and children, or either, the court or judge in probate must make such reasonable allowance out of the estate as shall be necessary for the maintenance of the family according to their circumstances during the progress of the settlement of the estate, and by section 1467, Code Civ. Proc., it is provided that any such allowance must be paid in preference to all other charges except funeral charges and expenses of administration. By its terms the taxing act is limited to such property as "shall pass, by will or by the intestate laws of this state," from the deceased to some other person. It must be borne in mind that we are speaking regardless of other provisions applicable to grants, etc., made by a deceased in contemplation of death or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment after death, for these provisions can have no application here.

In one sense of the word all of the property of deceased of which he died seised did "pass, by will," to his sole devisee at the moment of his death—that is, she, by reason of the will, at once became vested with the title to the full property (Brenham v. Story, 39 Cal. 188)—but she took under the will "subject to certain burdens, as the payment of the debts of the deceased, and the right of the court to appropriate some portion of the estate for the support of the family of the deceased" (Id. p. 185). It is thoroughly settled that, as was said in Sulzberger v. Sulzberger, 50 Cal. 385, "the power of testamentary disposition of property, as conferred and defined by the statute, is not paramount, but is subordinate to the authority conferred upon the probate court to appropriate the property for the support of the family of the testator, and for a homestead for the widow and minor child or children, as well as for the payment of debts." And to the extent that this power is exercised by the probate court in any estate the devisees and legatees take no beneficial interest at all. Although real property be specifically devised by a will, the probate court may set apart such property as a homestead to the family, and thus defeat the devise. Sulzberger v. Sulzberger, supra; In re Davis, 69 Cal. 458, 10 Pac. 671; Estate of Huelsman, 127 Cal. 275, 59 Pac. 776; Estate of Firth, 145 Cal. 236, 78 Pac. 643. Where it is so set part absolutely as a homestead, the title of the person to whom it is so set apart is in no way derived by will, even though she was the devisee, but comes solely from the homestead order. Of a similar situation it was said in Estate of Huelsman, supra, "notwithstanding, then, the specific devise of one-half of the farm to the widow, her title to all of it is deraigned from the homestead order." Money paid from the funds of the estate by order of the court for the maintenance of the widow and children, if any, is on the same basis. It is paid regardless of and even in opposition to the terms of the will and those receiving it take it not "by will," but solely by reason of the order of the court diverting it from the purposes to which it was appropriated by the will. It is clear, therefore, that the widow did not receive any beneficial interest in the real property set apart as a homestead or in the $4,600 paid her as family allowance by reason of the will. That she would have received it as sole devisee and legatee had there been no order for homestead or family allowance is absolutely immaterial. The rule applicable is necessarily the same here as it would be if the legatee or devisee were another person. What the widow takes under such orders of the probate court she does not take by will. It is equally clear that she does not take property so set apart by the probate court "by the intestate laws of this state." The language "pass, by will or by the intestate laws of this state," means to pass by virtue and force of the law of this state governing testate or intestate succession. In re Joyslin's Estate, 76 Vt. 88, 56 Atl. 281. "The term 'intestate laws' is intended to cover the statute of descents which relates to the descent of real estate, and the statute of distribution which provides for the distribution of the personal property of decedent after the payment of his debts, * * * and after the setting apart to the widow and minor children of the exemptions specified. * * * These exempt articles are in no way governed by the statute of distribution." Estate of Page, 39 Misc. Rep. 223, 79 N. Y. Supp. 384. "A homestead right, or a right to have a homestead, is not a right which vests under the law by succession. It is a right bestowed by the beneficence of the law of this state for the benefit of his family. Upon the death of an intestate, his property goes by succession to his heirs, subject to administration. * * * Setting apart a homestead is a part of the probate proceeding, as much as is a family allowance." Estate of Moore, 57 Cal. 442.

If, then, the widow is liable at all for a tax as to the property set apart as a homestead and the money paid as family allowance, it must be upon the theory that within the meaning of the inheritance tax statute such property passed to her as sole devisee and legatee at the moment of the testator's death, and must be regarded as having so passed, although subsequently diverted and removed from administration by the probate court in due course of administration, and thus not constituting any part of the distributable assets of the estate. This theory, however, not only appears to us to be inconsistent with the provisions of the tax act, but is absolutely opposed to the decisions rendered by the courts of other states in cases involving similar questions. It is recognized by this court and by the courts generally that a tax of this character is not a tax on property as such, but one upon the right of succession, a tax upon one for the privilege of succeeding to property. See In re Wilmerding, 117 Cal. 284, 49 Pac. 181, and cases cited. It was said in the case just cited: "The same authority which confers this privilege may attach to it the condition that a portion of the estate so received shall be contributed to the state." The act construed by the Supreme Court of Connecticut in Appeal of Gallup, 76 Conn. 617, 57 Atl. 699, was materially the same as our tax act; the description of property being "any property * * * which shall pass by will or by the inheritance laws of this state," etc. The court said that the design of this act was a tax based on the distribution of the net proceeds of the decedent's property, after payment of his debts and costs and charges of administration and after deduction of amounts and articles exempted, to the persons upon whom it devolves. The New York Court of Appeals said of a similar statute in Estate of Gihon, 169 N. Y. 443, 62 N. E. 561: "The collateral inheritance tax does not attach to the very articles of property of which the deceased died possessed. It is imposed only on what remains for distribution after expenses of administration, debts, and rightful claims of third parties are paid or provided for. It is on the net successions to the beneficiaries." In that case a deduction of certain fees and disbursements in a will contest was upheld. The court said that this was an expense of administration, and therefore chargeable to the estate, and not to the legatees or devisees. In Pepper's Estate, 159 Pa. 508, 28 Atl. 353, the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, construing a similar act, in holding that there should be deducted from the amount upon which the tax was calculated a sum paid in compromise of a claim, said that the legatees were not liable thereon for the reason that the amount paid was never received by them, and that "under the act it is only so much of the estate which actually passes to them by virtue of the will that is liable to the tax." Of a similar act the Supreme Court of Iowa said in Estate of Stone, 132 Iowa, 140, 109 N. W. 457: "The collateral inheritance tax is on the right to succession to property, and not on the property itself, and it is collectible out of each specific share or interest, not out of the general property of the estate." And in Morrow v. Durant, 140 Iowa, 437, 118 N. W. 781, 784, the same court held that money properly devoted by the executor to the erection of a monument to the deceased and thus taken from legatees was not to be included, because the tax is only on the property that passes to the legatees, and that in such cases the money so used does not pass to the beneficiary. In Wolfe's Estate, 89 App. Div. 349, 353, 85 N. Y. Supp. 949, 953, it is said: "If no transfer is effected, because it turns out that there is no property to transfer, no tax can be collected." In Estate of Thomas, 39 Misc. Rep. 223, 79 N. Y. Supp. 571, in fixing the amount of inheritance tax, the court said: "Where the legal representative makes a proper payment in the course of administration, the transfer from the estate is subordinate and subject thereto"—citing Estate of Gihon, supra. In the Matter of Page, 39 Misc. Rep. 223, 79 N. Y. Supp. 382, it was held that, in view of a statute providing in effect that certain enumerated articles should go to the widow and minor child or children and not be considered as assets for the purposes of administration, such articles did not "pass" by will or by the intestate laws of the state, but that the beneficiaries took absolutely by the express terms of the statute, and whether the decedent died testate or intestate, and that such property was not subject to the tax. In the Matter of Maresi, 74 App. Div. 76, 77 N. Y. Supp. 76, it was held, following Estate of Gihon, supra, that the costs and expenses of an action instituted by the executor of the will to obtain a judicial construction of the will and instructions as to distribution must be deducted as a necessary expense of administration in estimating the amount of tax. No case cited or discovered by us hints at any different doctrine than that declared by these decisions, except, perhaps, the case of Estate of Millward, 6 Misc. Rep. 425, 27 N. Y. Supp. 287, where there is some language of the surrogate that may be construed as supporting a contrary view. But, if so construed, it is but the expression of a single judge plainly in conflict with the views later expressed by both the Supreme Court of New York and the Court of Appeals of that state. All these cases are based not on the theory that there is any express or implied exemption provided by the tax act under consideration, but upon the theory that the act does not purport to impose the tax as to such property, being confined by its terms to such property as actually passed to the beneficiary; that is, to his distributable interest. No substantial distinction can be found in any matter material to the question involved here between any of the acts so considered and our own act. The decision of this court in Estate of Moffitt, 153 Cal. 359, 95 Pac. 653, 1025, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 207, that the surviving wife's share of the community property is subject to this inheritance tax was based solely on the proposition, established in this state by several prior decisions, that the wife takes such property solely by succession as an heir of the husband, and therefore "by the intestate laws of this state."

The provisions of our tax act clearly show that the tax imposed thereby is one solely upon the devisee, legatee, or heir, and one upon him only as to such property as he actually takes on distribution as devisee, legatee, or heir. It would appear to be a most absurd and inequitable provision that imposed a tax on one for the privilege of succeeding as heir, devisee, or legatee to certain property of the decedent, where the very property to which he is so held to succeed is lawfully diverted by the probate court to other purposes and never can be distributed to him. Suppose in this very case the real property set apart as a homestead had been devised by the will to another person than the wife. Suppose, also, that the money paid as family allowance exhausted the property available to pay a legacy given to still another person. Under the treasurer's theory that the property had passed to the devisee and the legatee, within the meaning of the act, at the moment of the death of deceased, the devisee and legatee would be liable for the whole tax thereon although both devise and legacy had been wholly defeated, so far as any practical effect is concerned, by the orders of the probate court. As we have seen, the fact that the wife was here the devisee and legatee is of no consequence in determining the proper construction of this act. Happily no such conclusion appears to be warranted by the act. Section 12, relied on as implying an "exemption" as to debts due from a deceased, is rather a clear recognition that no tax was intended to be imposed as to property that was lawfully diverted by the probate court from the purposes declared by the will or by the laws of succession; the object thereof being simply to provide a method for the repayment to the legatee, devisee, heir, or next of kin of a proper proportion of the money theretofore paid by him as a tax where the property already delivered is diminished by the subsequent proving of debts against the decedent.

In view of what we have said, it is apparent that such cases as Trippet v. State, 149 Cal. 526, 86 Pac. 1084, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1210, Estate of Martin, 153 Cal. 225, 94 Pac. 1053, and Estate of Stanford, 126 Cal. 112, 54 Pac. 259, 58 Pac. 462, 45 L. R. A. 788, are in no way pertinent to the question here involved. The doctrine of those cases is simply that the right of the state to the tax imposed by the act vests upon the death of the testator or intestate, and cannot be surrendered or limited by any subsequent act of the Legislature. For instance, in Estate of Stanford, supra, in the act in force at the death of the testator, there was no exemption as to legacies or devises to nephews, nieces, or educational institutions. By an act enacted subsequent to his death, the original act was amended by providing for such exemptions, and it was specially provided that the amendment should apply to the estates of persons who had died prior to the amending act. It was very properly held that this could not be done and that the right of the state was determined by the act in force at the time of the death of the testator. This doctrine was affirmed in Trippet v. State, supra, where it was held that the act in force at the death of the testator gave to the state a right which vested immediately upon such death, and which could not be surrendered by subsequent legislative act or by a repeal of the law under which the right became vested, as such a surrender would be a gift or donation from the state in violation of section 31 of article 4 of the Constitution. Estate of Martin is practically to the same effect. While undoubtedly correct, these decisions do not touch the point here under discussion. Whatever tax was imposed by the act in force at the death of the deceased, the right thereto vested in the state at the moment of his death, and could not be legally divested by any department of the state, executive, legislative, or judicial. But it was only as to the tax imposed by such act that the right so vested, and, when it is determined that the act imposed no tax as to property lawfully diverted by the court in probate with the consequence that it could never be distributed to the devisee, legatee, or heir, it is apparent that no vested right of the state is impaired.

To summarize: Under the tax act of March 20, 1905, property of a decedent set apart absolutely as a homestead by the court in probate under the provisions of section 1465, Code Civ. Proc., and moneys paid under order of the probate court under section 1466, Code Civ. Proc., do not pass by will or by the intestate laws of the state, and the persons taking under such orders are not liable for any tax under such act; and the devisees, legatees, and heirs to whom said property would have been distributed under the will or the succession laws of this state if such property had not been so diverted by the court in probate are not liable for any tax on account thereof, for such property never passed to them within the meaning of the act.

It follows that the learned judge of the trial court was correct in his conclusion as to the family allowance, but erred as to the real property set apart as a homestead. The tax fixed by the order was excessive therefore by $280.

It is ordered that the order of the superior court be, and the same is hereby, modified by reducing the amount of tax fixed thereby from $888.53 to $608.53, and as so modified the order is affirmed.

(Supreme Court of California. March 30, 1910. Rehearing Denied April 28, 1910.)

1. ATTACHMENT (§ 316*)—CARING FOR GOODS—COMPENSATION—ORDER ALLOWING.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1206, providing that in cases of attachment, etc., any person having a claim against the defendant for labor done may give notice thereof, and that, unless the claim is disputed, it must be paid out of the proceeds of the sale, and, if disputed, an action must be begun within 10 days for the recovery thereof, etc., where the court, subsequent to the filing of claims under section 1206, made an order allowing compensation to the sheriff for caring for the attached property, the compensation was properly allowed as part of the costs in the judgment, since the rights acquired under section 1206, are purely statutory, and there could therefore be no trust fund created in the hands of the sheriff which could not be subjected to any lawful order of the court with reference to fees.

2. ATTACHMENT (§ 316*)—CARING FOR GOODS —ORDER ALLOWING COMPENSATION—COSTS.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1206, an order, made subsequent to the filing of a claim under that section, allowing compensation to the sheriff for caring for attached goods, and taxing them as costs in the judgment, is as effective as if made within the time required by law; the court having jurisdiction to amend its process in furtherance of justice, and no opposition being made to such amendment by those having notice and being entitled to object.

3. MOTIONS (§ 61*)—COLLATERAL ATTACK ON ORDER.

Where no appeal was taken from an order fixing the amount of compensation for keeping attached goods, where the sheriff acted under the attachment proceedings, and served due notice upon all interested counsel, who were all present and participated in the proceedings, the order became final.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1206, providing that in cases of attachment, etc., any person having a claim against the defendant for labor done may give notice thereof, and, unless the claim is disputed, it must be paid out of the proceeds of the sale, etc., the right of the interveners is a mere priority, entitling them to enjoy the fruits of the attachment and sale in preference to the plaintiff, but otherwise they have no superior rights to plaintiff.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Nevada County; George L. Jones, Judge.

Action by the Legg & Shaw Company and others against the Morning Star Gold Mining Company, in which W. A. Worthington and others intervened. From an order denying a motion to require the sheriff to pay the interveners the proceeds of an attachment sale, they appeal. Affirmed.

Thomas S. Ford, for appellants. Nilon & Arbogast and Fred Searls, for respondents.

MELVIN, J. This is an appeal by certain intervening lien claimants from an order made after final judgment. In November, 1905, Legg & Shaw Company, a corporation, filed a complaint against the Morning Star Gold Mining Company, a corporation, praying judgment for $677.31 on account of goods sold and delivered. Attachment issued on the same day on which the complaint was filed. On December 2, 1905, the sheriff made return of said writ, certifying that he had attached certain of the property of the defendant corporation by taking said property into his custody and placing a keeper in charge of it. On June 8, 1906, judgment for plaintiff by default was entered, and on the same day plaintiff filed its cost bill, which included, among other items $416 keeper's fees. On June 17, 1906, appellants presented their claims in accordance with section 1206 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and on June 18th the property which had been held under attachment was sold at public auction for $295. Thereafter the lien claimants gave notice of a motion to have the sheriff pay over to them the proceeds of the sale minus $15.70 admittedly due the sheriff as costs. This motion coming on regularly to be heard was duly argued on August 6, 1906. It appeared that no order had ever been made by the court allowing the sheriff to have a keeper or fixing the keeper's compensation. It was further shown that the amount paid to the keeper and mentioned in the cost bill had been advanced by the plaintiff. On August 13, 1906, the court made an order, which was entered in its minutes, to the effect that the sheriff might be permitted to withdraw his return of sale under the writ of execution for the purpose of amendment, and in the meantime plaintiff was to be permitted to move to have the court fix the amount of keeper's fees. To this order the counsel for the preferred creditors duly excepted. The sheriff did not then amend his return, however, and nothing was done, either by the plaintiff or by the lien claimants, until January 5, 1909, when the preferred creditors gave notice of a motion to set aside the order submitting their motion of August 6, 1906, and to resubmit the said motion in which they asked the court to order the payment to them of the money realized from the sale under execution. The hearing of this matter was duly and by consent continued to January 26, 1909. On January 20, 1909, the sheriff gave notice of a motion to have the court fix the amount of keeper's fees. On January 26, 1909, both motions were heard and submitted. On February 15, 1909, the court made a formal order permitting the sheriff to amend his return. It was also ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the compensation of the sheriff for the keeping of and caring for the property under attachment and execution was fixed at $525, and that item was allowed as a part of the costs in the judgment for plaintiff. On February 23, 1909, the sheriff filed his amended return. In this he accounted for a bar of gold bullion valued at $66.38 and omitted from the former return. He also certified that the sum of $361.38, the entire amount realized from the sale, plus the value of the bullion, had been applied upon his fees, costs, commissions, and compensation of keeper, leaving unsatisfied, not only the judgment, but also $173.32 of the costs. On March 15, 1909, the court formally denied the motion of the lienholders that the sheriff be required to pay them the proceeds of the sale, excepting the small amount of costs which they conceded to be payable to the sheriff from that fund. It is from this last order that the present appeal is prosecuted.

Section 1206 of the Code of Civil Procedure as it stood in 1906 was as follows: "In cases of execution, attachments, and writs of a similar nature, issued against any person, except for claims for labor done, any miners, mechanics, salesmen, servants, clerks and laborers or any other person who renders services or performs work, who have claims against the defendant for labor done or work performed, may give notice of their claims and the amount thereof, sworn to by the person making the claim, to the creditor and the officer executing either of such writs, at any time before the actual sale of property levied on, or, in the event of a levy upon money, at any time before the transfer of such money under execution; and, unless such claim is disputed by the debtor or a creditor, such officer must pay to such person, out of the proceeds of the sale, or in the event of a levy upon money, out of such money, the amount each is entitled to receive for services rendered within the sixty days next preceding the levy of the writ, not exceeding one hundred dollars. If any or all of the claims so presented and claiming preference under this section are disputed by either the debtor or a creditor, the person presenting the same must commence an action within ten days for the recovery thereof, and must prosecute his action with due diligence, or be forever barred from any claim or priority of payment thereof; and the officer shall retain possession of so much of the proceeds of the sale or money as may be necessary to satisfy such claim until the determination of such action; and in case judgment be had for the claim, or any part thereof, carrying costs, the costs taxable therein shall likewise be a preferred claim with the same rank as the original claim."

Appellants' first contention is that, inasmuch as the keeper's fees can only properly be due after allowance by the court, and as no such order of court was made prior to the filing of their claims, therefore the money in the sheriff's hands when their demands were made, in accordance with the provisions of section 1206 of the Code of Civil Procedure, became subject to their liens, and could not thereafter be exhausted by a nunc pro tunc order of court made long subsequent to the intervention of appellants, whereby the compensation, to be paid the keeper was sought to be fixed. We think this position is untenable, because the rights of appellants are purely of statutory origin, and there could therefore be no trust fund created in the hands of the sheriff in this action which could not be subjected to any lawful order of the court with reference to fees. But we are cited to Galindo v. Roach, 130 Cal. 389, 62 Pac. 597, as holding that a cost bill cannot be amended after the time limited by section 1033 of the Code of Civil Procedure. and that no additional items may be adjudged due after the passing of the period set by section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Respondents admit that the item $416, due to the keeper, which was included in the sheriff's first return, had no place there until after the court had fixed the amount of such fees. St. 1889, p. 269. But they point to the fact that in Galindo v. Roach, supra, there was objection to the correction of the cost bill, while here no opposition was made to the court's permitting an amendment to the sheriff's return on the writ and to a similar change in the cost bill. The court having jurisdiction to amend its process in furtherance of justice, and no opposition being made to such amendment by those having notice and being entitled to object, the order of the court is as effective as if made within the period of the limiting statute.

But appellants deny the court's jurisdiction to amend the cost bill on the ground that this was not done in the attachment proceeding. The answer to this contention is that the sheriff did act under the attachment proceeding, and served due notice upon the attorneys for the appellants, as well as upon those who represented plaintiff (defendant being in default), and when the matter was regularly heard all interested counsel were present and participated. No appeal has been taken from the order fixing the amount of the keeper's compensation, and it has become final.

But the appellants argue that, if the court had jurisdiction to make the order allowing the keeper's fees after the expiration of six months, there was an abuse of discretion in the present case. Respondents' answer to this is that no appeal was taken from that order, and that the order from which an appeal was taken does not involve the exercise of discretion. We think this position is correct. The order fixing the amount of the keeper's compensation having become final, the refusal of the court to order the payment to the interveners of the proceeds of the sale follows as a matter of course, and the latter is the only order involved in this appeal. The entire argument of the appellants seems to be based on the theory that by serving the notices prescribed in section 1206 of the Code of Civil Procedure their rights attached to the property in the sheriff's hands, and upon sale to the fund realized therefrom. But their right under section 1206 of the Code of Civil Procedure is a mere priority, entitling them, under certain circumstances, to enjoy the fruits of the attachment and sale in preference to the plaintiffs. They are treated as interveners, and surely they would have no superior rights to those of the plaintiffs, except that of first recourse to the moneys realized from the sale. If they had not appeared at all, the plaintiffs could not complain of the proceedings taken after due notice and without objection in correction of the sheriff's return and in amendment of the bill of costs. Surely these appellants, who are the beneficiaries of a special statutory privilege which must be strictly followed, are not given rights which will permit them to wait until such action of the court as would bind the other parties to the suit becomes final, and then review the whole case upon an appeal from an order which is merely the logical result of the previous action of the court, from which no appeal has been taken.

The order of the superior court from which this appeal was taken was proper, and it is therefore affirmed.

In re SOULE.

(S. F. 5,087, 5,088.)

1. Executors and Administrators (§ 315*)—Distribution of Estate—Decree—Sufficiency.

Where the decree of distribution of the estate of a testator omitted a clause in the will as to a devise over, but by reference to the will embodied the entire will in it, the omission was of no consequence.

2. Trial (§ 404*)—Findings of Fact—Conclusions of Law.

Where the only question, that of the proper construction of a testamentary trust, was determined by the court from the face of the will and a decree, the conclusion of the court that testator failed to make any distribution of the corpus of the trust property on the termination of the trust in a specified event was a conclusion of law, and was not a finding of fact, though inserted among the findings of fact.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Dec. Dig. § 404.*]

3. Trusts (§ 331*)—Settlement of Account—Effect.

A decree in proceedings under Code Civ. Proc. § 1699, for the settlement of an account of a testamentary trust, rendered without appearance or contest, which settles the account and approves of payments made by the trustee to a beneficiary, operates as a bar to any subsequent attempt to recover such payments; but, in a subsequent suit involving other property of the trust estate, it is not res judicata of the nature of the interest of the beneficiary in the trust, though the payment passed involved that question.

4. Judgment (§ 812*)—Res Judicata.

A judgment in a proceeding in rem, where there has been no contest or litigation, is res judicata as to the matter actually involved and as to any fact affecting the particular matter involved, but no further, and the judgment cannot be invoked as res judicata in a subsequent proceeding affecting other property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 1435–1442; Dec. Dig. § 812.*]

5. Wills (§ 629*)—Construction—Rules of Construction.

The rules for ascertaining whether a remainder is contingent or vested are subordinate rules of construction of a will and are applied only in the absence of all other indications in the will to the contrary, and in support of an intention of testator to create a vested remainder.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 1461, 1462; Dec. Dig. § 629.*]

6. Wills (§ 440*)—Construction—Intention of Testator.

The court, in construing a will, must, if possible, arrive at the intention of the testator sought for in the language of the will.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 956; Dec. Dig. § 440.*]

7. Wills (§ 440*)—Construction—Intention of Testator.

Where the terms of a will are free from ambiguity, the language thereof must be interpreted according to its ordinary meaning and legal import, and the intention of testator ascertained thereby.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 956; Dec. Dig. § 440.*]

8. Wills (§ 439*)—Construction—Intention of Testator.

The presumption against intestacy and the presumption created by Civ. Code, § 1341, that testamentary devises are presumed to vest at testator's death, are subject to the cardinal rule of construction that a will must, as required by section 1317, be construed according to the intention of testator.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Dec. Dig. § 439.*]

9. Wills (§ 630*) — Construction — Vesting of Gift.

A legacy or devise given to one to be paid at a future time vests immediately in the legatee or devisee, while a legacy or devise not given until a future time is contingent and does not vest until that time occurs.

10. Wills (§§ 634, 671*)—Construction—Estates Devised—Time of Vesting.

Testator gave his residuary estate to a trustee to pay enumerated bequests and to convert the residue into money and invest the same in real estate and pay the net income to his two daughters and granddaughter until they reached the age of 30, directing that, as each arrived at that age, she could demand and receive a third as her distributive share to hold the same to her and her heirs forever, and, if either of the daughters or granddaughter died without issue and before receiving her distributive share, her share should go to the surviving daughters or granddaughter, share and share alike. Held, that testator made two gifts, first, a devise to the trustee to pay the income to the daughters and granddaughter, and, secondly, a devise of the corpus both in title and possession to them on their attaining the age of 30; but their attainment of that age was a condition precedent to the vesting of the corpus, and where the grandchild did not reach that age she did not acquire any vested interest in the trust property.

11. WILLS (§ 678*)—TRUSTS—VALIDITY.

An express testamentary trust to be exercised for the purpose of conveying title to the beneficiaries is void, and an implied trust for the same purpose is also void.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Dec. Dig. § 678.*]

12. WILLS (§ 630*)—CONSTRUCTION—CONTINGENT GIFT.

Where there is no separate and antecedent gift, independent of the direction and time for payment, the legacy is contingent, and, where a gift is only implied from a direction to pay, it is necessarily inseparable from the direction, and must partake of its quality.

13. WILLS (§ 597*)—CONSTRUCTION — CONTINGENT GIFT.

The purpose of an habendum clause in a will, creating a trust and providing that each beneficiary as he attains a specified age may demand and receive a share of the trust property to have and to hold the same to him and his heirs forever, is to limit, define, and make clear the estate granted, and the clause shows testator's intention to give the beneficiaries a fee-simple estate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 1319; Dec. Dig. § 597.*]

14. WILLS (§ 634*) — CONSTRUCTION — "DISTRIBUTIVE SHARE."

Where testator gave his residuary estate to a trustee to pay enumerated bequests and convert the residue into money and invest the same in real estate and pay the net income to his two daughters and granddaughter until they reached the age of 30, and further provided that, as each arrived at that age, she could demand and receive a third as her "distributive share" to hold the same to her and her heirs forever, and, if either of the daughters or granddaughter died without issue and before receiving her distributive share, her share should go to the surviving daughters or granddaughter, the words "distributive share" merely referred to the quantum of the estate which the beneficiaries were to take if they took at all, and the words could not be considered as terms of devise.

15. WILLS (§ 634*) — CONSTRUCTION — GIFT OVER.

A devise over must be construed as indicating an intention of the testator not to make a vested devise.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 1488–1510; Dec. Dig. § 634.*]

16. WILLS (§ 630*)—CONSTRUCTION—MEANING OF WORDS—"AS."

The word "as," in a will creating a trust to pay the income to beneficiaries until they have respectively reached a specified age, and providing that "as" each arrived at that age he should have his share, imports contingency, though the word may not be directly conditional.

17. WILLS (§ 634*)—CONSTRUCTION—CONTINGENT ESTATES.

The rule that where the only gift is in a direction to pay and deliver at a future time, and the entire interim income is given to the beneficiary, a present gift of title to him is presumed, is a rule of presumption to be indulged in only when there is no other language employed by testator showing a contrary intention.

18. WILLS (§ 595*) — BEQUESTS BY IMPLICATION.

Bequests by implication are sustained where no direct language in a will supports them, and, where from uniformity of language such reasonable construction can be placed thereon as implies an intention to make a bequest, the court will raise an estate by implication in favor of a surviving child on slight indication of an intention to that effect.

19. WILLS (§ 448*)—BEQUESTS BY IMPLICATION.

The court in construing a will must indulge in the presumption that testator intended to dispose of his entire estate, and, if possible, the will must be construed to prevent intestacy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 964; Dec. Dig. § 448.*]

20. WILLS (§ 440*) — CONSTRUCTION — INTENTION OF TESTATOR.

The court in construing a will must aim to reach the intention of testator from what he has said, which includes not only a determination of what he meant by the explicit use of language, but also the necessary implication arising from the language employed, though less explicit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 956; Dec. Dig. § 440.*]

21. WILLS (§ 634*)—CONSTRUCTION — ESTATES ACQUIRED—"ISSUE."

Testator gave his estate to trustees to invest the same in real estate and pay the income to his two daughters and granddaughter until they respectively reached the age of 30, and provided that, as each reached that age, she could demand and receive a third of the estate as her distributive share, and, if either died without issue and before receiving her distributive share, her share should go to the survivors. By a codicil he provided that lapsed legacies should revert to the estate. Held, that the provision for a devise over, in the event of the death of a beneficiary without issue and before receiving her distributive share, raised a devise by implication in favor of the children of the granddaughter dying before attaining the age of 30; the word "issue" in the devise over being a word of purchase and implying a devise to the issue, who thereby took as purchasers under the will.

LORIGAN, J. Francis Blake died in 1888, leaving his widow, Mary C. Blake, two daughters, Alice S. Blake and Helen F. Witcher, and a granddaughter, Ethel Pomroy, then nine years of age, a child of a deceased daughter, as his heirs at law. He left a large estate and an olographic will, by which, having made certain bequests, he then devised the rest and residue of his estate to trustees in trust, first, to pay a large number of bequests, and then: "After the payments of the bequests enumerated in article 3, I direct my said executrix, executors and trustees to convert the rest and residue of my personal estate, if any there be, into money, and to invest the same in improved real property, and to hold all the rest and residue of my estate and pay over the net income therefrom in equal proportions quarterly to my said daughters, Alice S. Blake and Nellie F. Witcher, and my granddaughter, Ethel Pomroy, until they shall respectively arrive at the age of thirty years, and as each of my said daughters and granddaughter arrives at the age of thirty years she shall have the right to demand and receive one-third of the rest and residue of my said estate as her distributive share thereof, and to have and hold the same to her and her heirs forever, and if either of my said daughters or granddaughter shall die without issue and before she receives her distributive share of my estate, it is my desire that her share of my said estate shall go to the surviving daughter, daughters or granddaughter as the case may be, share and share alike." The portion of the trust we have italicized above was omitted from the decree of distribution which in due course was made in the estate. That decree, after setting forth the trust clause, omitting the italicized portion, then distributed the residue of the estate (the beneficiary Alice S. Blake having attained the age of 30 years) as follows: "To the said Mary C. Blake (the widow) in her individual right an undivided one-half thereof, being her half of the community property. To the said Alice S. Blake in her own individual right an undivided one-sixth thereof. To the said Mary C. Blake, James Moffitt, and Charles L. Taylor, as trustees under the said last will and testament, and upon the trusts therein mentioned, in trust for the said Nellie F. Witcher under and in accordance with the provisions of the said last will and testament, an undivided one-sixth thereof. To the said Mary C. Blake, James Moffitt, and Charles L. Taylor, as trustees under the said last will and testament, and upon the trusts therein mentioned, in trust for the said Ethel Pomroy under and in accordance with the provisions of the said last will and testament, an undivided one-sixth thereof."

Subsequent to the decree of distribution, Helen F. Witcher attained the age of 30 years, and the property distributed to the trustees in trust for her was turned over by them to her. Thereafter the beneficiary Ethel Pomroy married Beach C. Soule, and two children were born to them. In 1905 she died intestate at the age of 27 years, leaving as her sole heirs at law her husband and their two minor children. After her death, Alice S. Blake, who had become sole trustee of the trust, filed in the superior court an account of her administration of the trust, and a petition for distribution of the trust property, stating in the latter that she was in doubt as to whom the corpus of the trust property should be distributed, and asked the court to judicially determine the question. Answers to the petition were filed respectively by the guardian of the minor children of Ethel Pomroy Soule, deceased, and by the administrator of her estate, in which they joined with the trustee in a request for such judicial determination. Answers were also filed by said Alice S. Blake and Helen F. Witcher, asserting that they were each individually entitled to one-third of the corpus of the trust property. On the hearing the court judicially construed the trust provisions and found and decreed that Francis Blake failed to provide in his will, creating the trust, for the disposition of the corpus of the trust property upon the termination of the trust, in the event of the death of Ethel Pomroy Soule under the age of 30 years, and the said event had occurred, and hence that the said corpus of the trust property "is vested, * * * one-third * * * in Alice S. Blake, individually; one-third * * * in Helen F. Witcher, * * * individually; and one-third * * * in the heirs at law of Ethel Pomroy Soule, deceased"—as the heirs at law of said Francis Blake, deceased. A decree in accordance with this construction of the trust provisions was made.

While separate appeals are taken by the minor children and the administrator of the estate of Mrs. Soule from those portions of the decree immediately referred to, and taken upon separate records, they involve the construction of the same trust provisions. They are presented here—except as to one point—in identically the same briefs, and the questions presented on both appeals can be readily and consistently disposed of in the same opinion.

The only question on this appeal calling for serious consideration is the legal soundness of the construction given by the superior court to the trust provisions contained in the will and embodied in the decree of distribution in favor of the beneficiary Ethel Pomroy.

On the part of respondents, Alice S. Blake and Mrs. Nellie F. Witcher, the contention below was, and here is, that, under the will of Francis Blake, Ethel Pomroy was given a contingent remainder only in the corpus of the trust property; that neither the title nor right of possession to said corpus was to vest in her until she reached the age of 30 years; that as she never attained that age the remainder never vested; that no provision was made in the will for the disposition of the corpus of the trust property in the event which actually occurred, namely, the death of the beneficiary "with issue and before she received her distributive share" of the estate of testator, and, hence, the testator died intestate as to such property, and it descended and should be distributed to his heirs at law. This was the construction given to the provisions of the will by the trial court and the accuracy of which is questioned by the appellants.

As far as the appellant the administrator of the estate of Ethel Pomroy Soule is concerned, it is insisted that under the will and decree devising and distributing the trust property to the trustees there was vested immediately in Ethel Pomroy on the death of the testator a remainder in fee in said property (possession only being deferred) defeasible only upon a condition subsequent, namely, her death "without issue and before she received her distributive share" (attaining the age of 30 years), the happening of which has now become impossible, and that on her death the corpus of the trust property passed to her heirs in fee simple.

On behalf of the surviving minor children it is insisted that even if the contingency by which their mother was to take the corpus of the estate—the attainment of the age of 30 years—did not happen, and the fee of the property therefore never vested in her, still the testator did not fail to dispose of the trust property, but, on the contrary, they insist that the trust clause providing for a devise over on the death of their mother "without issue and before she received her distributive share" was a devise by implication to them of such corpus as her issue; that, even, if the devise failed to vest in fee in their mother, they took the property as donees or purchasers under the will itself as a devise in their favor. In the event, however, that their contention in this respect be by the court deemed untenable, they then stand with the administrator, and insist that the devise to their mother was of a vested remainder defeasible only on condition, subsequent, the happening of which has now become impossible.

Some preliminary matters require attention before approaching the real merits of the appeals, though they will be considered but briefly.

It will be observed that the clause in the will as to the devise over was omitted in the trust provisions set forth in the decree of distribution. In our opinion, however, such apt reference is made to the will in the decree as to embody the entire will in it so that this omission is of no consequence. In fact, we do not understand any point to be made on the omission; all parties relying on the devise over in support of their particular positions as to the construction to be placed upon the entire trust provisions.

It is, however, contended by respondents that the court found as a fact that Alice Blake and Mrs. Witcher were respectively vested with a one-third interest in the corpus of the trust property, and they assert that as there is no specification in the bill of exceptions attacking the sufficiency of this finding, and as it supports the decree, the latter must for that reason be affirmed. We do not, however, consider this a finding of fact, but rather a conclusion of law. It is true that it is found among the findings of fact—19 and 20—but is evidently misplaced. While the court made findings of fact, there was really no question of fact at issue under the pleadings, and none was tried. What are embodied in the findings of the court are simply matters appearing in the decree of distribution, or in the petition of the trustee for a judicial construction of the trust provisions and of the truth of which there were no question made. The only question that was presented to the court—purely a legal question—was: What was the proper construction of the terms of the trust? This was determined by the court from the face of the will and decree, and its conclusion that the testator, Francis Blake, failed to "make any disposition of the corpus of the trust property upon the termination of the trust in the event of the death of Ethel Pomroy Soule under the age of 30 years," was the basis for the further immediate conclusion of law that one-third of the corpus was vested respectively in Alice Blake, Mrs. Witcher, and the heirs of Mrs. Soule. Though these are inserted among the findings of fact, they are really conclusions of law which the court made from the sole matter which was before it for consideration, namely, the construction of the trust provisions of the will.

It is insisted by appellants that it was res ajudicata in the superior court prior to the inauguration of this proceeding for the construction of the trust provisions that Ethel Pomroy Soule took a vested estate in remainder in the corpus of the trust property. This claim is predicated upon the settlement of an account of a former trustee of the trust in which the court approved the payment by him to Mrs. Soule, absolutely, of certain moneys derived from a portion of the corpus of the trust property; the argument being that this approval of such account necessarily involved a determination by the court that the devise made of the corpus of the trust property was a vested one.

We do not think, however, that the principle of res adjudicata has any application here. There was no actual controversy over the settlement of the account referred to. Proceedings towards its settlement were under section 1699 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and jurisdiction was acquired by posting of notice of the hearing. While the decree settling the account would operate as a bar to any subsequent attempt to recover that portion of the proceeds of the corpus of the trust property, payment of which to the beneficiary was approved by the court, it is only to the extent that the payment was sanctioned that the decree can be deemed res adjudicata. Evidently the payment to her was improperly made and approved, under any view of the trust provisions. But the decree did not operate as a bar to the remaindermen or beneficiaries to maintain this proceeding affecting other and different property. The rule of the authorities is that a judgment in a proceeding in rem where there has been no contest or litigation is res adjudicata with respect to the matter or res actually involved in the proceeding and is res adjudicata as to any fact which affected the particular matter or res involved in it, and this is as far as it operates. The judgment cannot be invoked as res adjudicata in a subsequent proceeding which affects other property. Cromwell v. County of Sac., 94 U. S. 351, 24 L. Ed. 195; Overby v. Gordon, 177 U. S. 214, 20 Sup. Ct. 603, 44 L. Ed. 741; Freeman on Judgments, vol. 1, § 253.

Mr. Freeman, in discussing the effect of a judgment in one proceeding when invoked as res judicata in another proceeding involving a different though similar subject-matter, says: "In order to successfully invoke this rule (res judicata) it must be shown that in the former action the issue was in fact litigated and decided. It is not sufficient that it was there so involved that it might have been litigated. * * * In a subsequent action involving a different subject-matter the former adjudication cannot be relied on unless it appears, not that the issue presented was presented and ought to have been litigated in the prior action, but further that it was litigated and decided, as well as involved." Under this rule the judgment settling the account on the proceeding, had without appearance or contest on their part, did not operate as a bar to the remaindermen or beneficiaries to maintain this proceeding.

This brings us to a consideration of the appeal on its merits—the nature of the remainder devised to Ethel Pomroy—whether it is to be considered as a contingent or vested remainder, and, if the former, was there still a devise to the issue of the beneficiary by implication?

Counsel on both sides in support of their respective positions have brought to their aid much of the abstruse learning which has been devoted to the subject of remainders. There is no subject in the law to which more refinement of learning has been applied, nor one where, particularly in ascertaining whether a remainder is a contingent or vested one, more nice, technical, and shadowy rules of construction have been formulated. Counsel for appellants more particularly invoke the aid of these rules, upon the theory that the language of the will is so uncertain as to the nature of the remainder devised as to make them applicable to the proper determination of the intent of the testator in that respect. As to these rules, however, it may be said that there are none of them which may be taken as an unvarying standard by which the meaning or intent of all testamentary devises in remainder may be construed. They have not been harmoniously applied in jurisdictions where they obtain, and whether they are applicable at all must depend upon the particular provisions of each will which is under consideration. They are simply subordinate rules of construction which are applied only in the absence of all other indications in the will to the contrary and in support of an intention on the part of the testator to create a vested remainder.

While appreciating the earnestness with which counsel for appellants insist that the language of the will is so indefinite in its terms respecting the devise to the beneficiaries as to make these rules applicable in ascertaining the intent of the testator regarding it, we are not inclined to agree with him that there is any such indefiniteness. On the contrary, it appears to us quite apparent from a consideration of the trust provisions that the testator plainly and definitely fixed the time when the corpus of the trust property should vest, both in title and in possession, in the beneficiaries, and hence there is no necessity of applying any technical or arbitrary rules of construction in aid of discovering that intent.

The cardinal rule in the interpretation of a will is that "it is to be construed according to the intention of the testator." Civ. Code, § 1317. As said in Estate of Young, 123 Cal. 337, 55 Pac. 1011: "The purpose of construction as applied to wills is unquestionably to arrive, if possible, at the intention of the testator; but the intention to be sought for is not that which existed in the mind of the testator, but that which is expressed in the language of the will." It is not the business of the court to say, in examining the terms of a will, what the testator intended, but what is the meaning to be given to the language which he used. Where the terms of a will are free from ambiguity, the language used must be interpreted according to its ordinary meaning and legal import, and the intention of the testator ascertained thereby. It is true that presumptions are to be indulged in which will prevent intestacy (Le Breton v. Cook, 107 Cal. 410, 40 Pac. 552), and that testamentary devises are presumed to vest at the death of the testator (Civ. Code, § 1341); but these presumptions, like the auxiliary rules of construction relied on by appellant, are subordinate to the cardinal rule just stated.

Now, coming to a consideration of the terms of the trust, itself, we think that the language of the testator, given its legal import, clearly shows that only a contingent remainder was devised to Ethel Pomroy, and that as far as that question is concerned the trial court properly so held.

There can be no question as to the rule relative to contingent and vested remainders and the difference between them. The difficulties which have filled the books with dissertations on the subject have arisen in an endeavor to determine from indefinite terms of devise to which class the remainder belongs. The general rule is that, where the legacy or devise is given to a person to be paid at a future time, it vests immediately. When, however, it is not given until a future time, it is contingent and does not vest until that time occurs. As said in the note to Goebel v. Wolf, 10 Am. St. Rep. 470, 113 N. Y. 405, 21 N. E. 388, quoted approvingly by this court in In re Rogers, 94 Cal. 526, 530, 29 Pac. 962: "The leading inquiry upon which the question of vesting or not vesting turns is whether the gift is immediate, and the time of payment or of enjoyment only postponed, or is future and contingent, depending upon the beneficiary arriving of age, or surviving some other person, or the like. * * * According to the prevailing doctrine, a postponement of the time of payment will not of itself make a legacy contingent unless it be annexed to the substance of the gift; or, as it is sometimes put, unless it be upon an event of such a nature that it is to be presumed that the testator meant to make no gift unless that event happened. Thus, where the legacy is given, payable or to be paid when the legatee attains the age of 21 years, the legacy vests immediately upon the death of the testator. It is a present gift, the time of payment only being postponed; but where the time is annexed, not to the payment only, but to the gift itself—as when the legacy is given to the legatee at 21, or 'if' or 'when' he attains the age of 21—the legacy does not vest until the legatee attains that age. His attaining the age specified is a condition precedent; and, if the condition be not fulfilled, the legacy never vests."

Examining the trust provisions of the will under this clear distinction between vested and contingent remainders, and giving to the language used by the testator its proper legal import, we perceive no room for question but that the attainment of the age of 30 years by the beneficiary, Ethel Pomroy, was made a condition precedent to the vesting of the corpus of the trust property in her, both in title and possession, and, hence, the devise was of a contingent remainder.

This conclusion reasonably follows, whether we look at the provisions of the trust separately or view them collectively. The testator had devised the legal title in the trust property to his trustees and in the first portion of the trust clause, as far as the beneficiaries, including Ethel Pomroy, are concerned, provided only for the payment to them of the net income of the estate in equal proportions "until they shall respectively arrive at the age of thirty years." The meaning of this provision is plain. The trustees simply took the legal title to the trust property to the extent that it was necessary for the fulfillment of their trust duties. There is nothing in it whereby any title was passed to the beneficiaries. An express trust to be exercised for the purpose of conveying title to the beneficiaries would have been void (Estate of Fair, 132 Cal. 523, 60 Pac. 442, 64 Pac. 1000, 84 Am. St. Rep. 70; Estate of Dunphy, 147 Cal. 95, 81 Pac. 315), and an implied trust would have been equally illegal, as what the testator could not do directly he could not do indirectly or effect by implication, so that, unless the other provisions of the will give it, it is quite apparent that none of the beneficiaries would have taken any interest in the corpus of the trust property. Now the only language in the will which can be insisted upon as giving them any interest in the trust property is found immediately following the provision as to the payment of the interim income, namely: "And as each of my said daughters and granddaughter arrives at the age of thirty years she shall have the right to demand and receive the rest and residue of my said estate as her distributive share thereof, to have and to hold the same to her and her heirs forever." This is the only clause in the will wherein the testator attempted to make a gift of the corpus of the trust property to the beneficiaries, and the gift springs from the right given "to demand and receive" one-third of the residue "as each arrives at the age of thirty years." Reading this entire provision, aside from any artificial rules of construction, we think it is clear that to whatever the right "to demand and receive" applied, whether to the title or possession of the corpus of the trust property, it was subject to a condition precedent that, before the beneficiaries would have the right "to demand and receive" anything, each must have attained the age of 30 years. While it is insisted by appellants that this right "to demand and receive" applied only to the possession, we do not see how any reasonable construction of the testator's language can support this claim. Of course, it is conceded that the right "to demand and receive" may apply to either a right to demand and receive possession or to the vesting of title, or to both; but under the trust provisions of the will the right "to demand and receive" cannot apply alone to possession because, if it applied simply to possession—the right on attaining the age of 30 to receive the possession of the trust property, title to which had already vested—where can there be found any provision in the will conferring title or vesting the devise? If possession only is to be implied from the right "to demand and receive" the corpus on attaining the age of 30 years, then there must be some other language in the will from which a gift or vesting of title to the trust property at the testator's death may be implied. But clearly there is no other provision in the will except the one under consideration which makes any gift to the beneficiaries at all except save of income, and, if the right "to demand and receive" applies only to possession, there is no gift of title at all. In fact, if it were not for the right "to demand and receive," no estate, either contingent or vested, would be given to the beneficiaries under the will. Undoubtedly, however, the testator intended that the beneficiaries should receive both title and possession, and, if the right "to demand and receive" applies only to the gift of possession, the gift of title, as there are no other words in the will which expressly provide for it, must be implied from this gift of possession. But as the gift of possession is certainly future and contingent on the beneficiary attaining the age of 30 years, it is the rule of authorities that the gift of title implied from this gift of possession is likewise future and contingent. Moore v. Smith, 9 Watts (Pa.) 403; Leake v. Robinson, 2 Merrivale, 363; Stead v. Platt, 18 Beav. 50; Merry v. Hill, L. R. 8 Eq. 619; Gifford v. Thorn, 9 N. J. Eq. 702.

The rule of these authorities is announced in Moore v. Smith, 9 Watts (Pa.) 407: "The ruling principle of a case like this is that, where there is no separate and antecedent gift which is independent of the direction and time for payment, the legacy is contingent; and it seems to be as well founded in reason as rules of interpretation usually are. Where a gift is only implied from a direction to pay, it is necessarily inseparable from the direction, and must partake of its quality; insomuch that, if the one is future and contingent, so must the other be."

But that the gift of the title or the vesting in right of the corpus of the trust property, as also the right of possession, was what the testator intended the beneficiaries should take under the right "to demand and receive" on the contingency that they attained the age of 30 years, is further apparent from a consideration of the trust provision. As the testator says, each beneficiary as she attains that age is "to demand and receive" a portion of his estate as her distributive share to "have and to hold the same to her and her heirs forever." Now this latter portion of the provision—the habendum clause—clearly defines the nature of the interest in the devised property which each beneficiary was "to demand and receive" on attaining the age of 30 years; she was to receive the property "to have and to hold the same to her and her heirs forever." The purpose of a habendum clause is to limit, define, and make clear the estate granted or conveyed. It has a technical meaning, and applies, as used here, to the passage of title in fee. As the only words in the will under which title can pass are those giving the right "to demand and receive," it is quite apparent that in using the language of the habendum clause, which is employed when title in fee is to pass, it was such title which the beneficiaries had a right "to demand and receive" as they attained the prescribed age. As said in Wheeler v. Wayne Co., 132 Ill. 599, 24 N. E. 625, "'to have and to hold,' etc., is but a habendum clause, the purpose of which is merely to define the estate which the grantee is to take in the property conveyed." As used in this will it defined the estate which the beneficiaries were to take under their right "to demand and receive," and, as they could only take it on attaining the required age, no title was passed or could pass to them until that period arrived.

It is true, as asserted by appellants, that an habendum clause is not necessary to be used to pass title under the law of this state. But this is beside the question. Here the testator has used it. He made his own will and undoubtedly gave importance to this language as defining the estate which on attaining the required age he intended the beneficiaries should take. If he had not deemed it important, he would not have employed it. It cannot be rejected, but on the contrary, must be considered and given effect, as must all the language of a will. It has a well-recognized meaning as defining the estate the testator intended the beneficiaries were to take—a fee simple—and it must be construed, to be given any effect at all, as having been employed by him to indicate that intention. Nor is there anything in the use of the term "distributive share" used in the devise, or considering here the use of the words "distributive share" and "share" found in the devise over, militating against the view that but a contingent remainder was devised to the beneficiaries. These are not terms of devise, nor were they attempted to be used as such by the testator. The devise is in the words giving the right "to demand and receive," and a devise to the beneficiaries is found nowhere else in the will. The words "distributive share" in the devise itself simply refer to the quantum of the estate which the beneficiary is to take, if she takes at all, and which is explicitly mentioned by the testator to be one-third of the residue of his estate, and as used in the devise over the words "distributive share" or "share" under no construction can be considered as terms of devise but are used in specifying the contingency upon which the devise over shall be operative.

Aside from these considerations addressed particularly to the devising clause of the will which, of itself, satisfies us that the devise to Ethel Pomroy was of a contingent remainder, this conclusion is further supported by the devise over. While there is a conflict in the authorities elsewhere as to the effect of a devise over in determining whether a remainder which is not fixed by direct words of devise is contingent or vested, the matter in this state is settled.

In the case of In re Rogers, heretofore referred to, the testator had bequeathed to his grandson a legacy of $10,000 to be paid in certain proportions and as he attained certain years of age; the first payment to be made when he attained 15, the final payment when he reached 25. The clause in the will making this bequest provided further that: "If my said grandson die before arriving at the ages herein named, then the remaining or unpaid amounts of said bequests, together with the income thereon, I direct shall be distributed * * * to the brother and sisters of myself and wife * * * share and share alike." During the administration of the estate the grandson died at the age of six or seven years and before any of the bequests were payable to him. On distribution of the estate his mother applied for payment of the legacy to her as his heir at law under the claim that the bequests to her son vested in him on the death of the testator, asserting that a bequest "payable" or "to be paid" to a person "at" or "when" he shall attain the age, etc., vests the estate immediately in him, and his interest is transmissible to his representatives. The question squarely before the court in that case was whether the legacy was vested or contingent. It was held to be contingent, and in reaching that conclusion the court took into consideration the devise over, and said: "If the last clause (the devise over) had been omitted, it might no doubt be successfully claimed that there was a present and absolute bequest, the times of payment only being deferred, and that it vested in the legatee on the death of the testator. That clause, however, makes it clear, we think, that the intention was not to make an absolute bequest, but a conditional one to take effect only if the legatee should reach the ages named for its payment." Hence, in this state the rule is that a devise over is to be construed as indicating an intention on the part of the testator not to make a vested devise, and, applied to the devise here in question, imparts additional force to the conclusion which we think apparent from the language of the devise itself that only a contingent devise was made to Ethel Pomroy; that it was only to take effect in title and possession on the condition of her attaining the age of 30.

While it is insisted by appellants that the word "as," employed in the provision, "and as each of my said daughters and granddaughter arrives at the age of thirty years she shall have the right to demand and receive," etc., is not conditional, and, hence, the provision quoted in which it is used did not operate to create a condition precedent to the vesting of the corpus but operated to give an absolute interest in fee in it to the beneficiaries and denoted only the time when the remainder should take effect in possession, we perceive no room for discussion on this point, as we are of the opinion that reasonably construed the right "to demand and receive" the corpus of the trust property applies to both title and possession. It appears to us that if there is any one intention clearly disclosed by the will itself it is that the beneficiaries are "to demand and receive" nothing until they attain the age of 30. Futurity is annexed as of the very substance of the gift. And while the word "as" may not be directly conditional, still it imports contingency and is generally so construed. Colt v. Hubbard, 33 Conn. 281; Seibert's Appeal, 13 Pa. 501; Fearne on Remainders, vol. 2, p. 145.

We are mindful, too, of the rule particularly insisted upon by appellants that where the only gift is in a direction to pay and deliver at a future time, or what is asserted to be the equivalent here, the "right to demand and receive" at a future time, and the entire interim income is given to the beneficiary, a present gift of title to him is presumed to have been intended by the testator. Under this rule appellants insist that from the gift of the entire interim income to the beneficiaries here it is to be inferred that the testator intended a present gift of the corpus to them, and that the right "to demand and receive" as used by him only applied to the possession of the corpus, and, therefore, the devise became vested on the death of the testator subject to become divested should any beneficiary die without issue and before obtaining possession of her share of the corpus. The general rule at common law is as asserted by appellants; but, without considering other objections which respondents urge against its application to this particular devise, it is at best but a rule of presumption to be indulged in only when there is no other language employed by the testator showing a contrary intention. But, as we have heretofore pointed out, the language actually used by the testator in connection with the right "to demand and receive," and the other matters in the will to which we have called attention, defines the estate which is to be taken by the beneficiaries in the future under this right as being both title and possession. Futurity applies to both by the express language of the testator so there is no room for indulging in any presumption.

We perceive no reason for pursuing this branch of the inquiry further. In our opinion, taking the trust provisions of the will in their entirety, it was the intention of the testator to make two gifts—a devise to the trustees to pay the income to the beneficiaries, and a devise of the corpus both in title and possession to them on attaining the age of 30 years—that the attainment of this age was a condition precedent to the vesting of the devise at all, and that, as the beneficiary Mrs. Soule did not reach the required age, she never acquired any vested interest whatever in the trust property.

This brings us to a consideration of the claim asserted by the appellants the minor children of Mrs. Soule that, though the devise to their mother was a contingent remainder and the condition under which she was to take, or the devise over was to become effectual, never occurred, still the testator did not fail to dispose of the corpus of the trust property, but the minor appellants took directly as purchasers under the will of Francis Blake the share which would have vested in their mother had she attained the age of 30 years.

In this regard it is insisted that the provision for a devise over in the event of the death of a beneficiary "without issue and before she receives her distributive share" raises a devise by implication in favor of the minor appellants as the issue of their mother. We think this position is sound and sustained in reason and by the authorities. Bequests by implication have from remote times been sustained where no direct language in a will is found to support them, but where from informal language used such reasonable construction can be placed on it as implies an intention to make a bequest. As said in the American and English Encyclopedia of Law (1st Ed., vol. 29, p. 382): "Implication may arise under a recital, reference of elliptical expression which necessarily implies something else as contemplated by the testator; from the form of the gift; or from a direction to do something which cannot be carried into effect without of necessity involving something else as a necessary consequence."

While, of course, conjecture and speculation cannot be indulged in to import into the will of a testator something which no language used by him warrants simply because he seems to have omitted something which it is reasonable to assume should have been provided for, still, when he has used language which can be reasonably interpreted to raise a devise, it should be so construed. Looking at this devise over, it would appear to be absurd to say that while the testator provided that in the event of death "without issue" of a contingent devisee a remainder over is to take effect, yet if the contingent devisee leave issue the devise over shall be defeated and without benefit to either the parent or child. To defeat attributing to the phrase such a purposeless effect, courts, as said in 1 Jarman on Wills, "will lay hold of slight circumstances to raise a gift in the child and thereby avoid imputing to the testator so extraordinary an intention as that the devisee or legatee over is to become entitled if the first taker have no child, but that the property is not to go to the child, if there be one, or its parents." And, as said in Underhill on Wills, § 468: "The court accordingly will raise an estate by implication in favor of a surviving child upon slight indication of an intention to that effect."

The presumption must be indulged in that the testator intended by his will to dispose of his entire estate, and, if possible, its provisions must be construed to prevent intestacy. It is apparent under our view of the trust provision that as the devise to the mother of these minors was of a contingent remainder, and neither the contingency upon which she was to take nor upon which the devise over was to pass occurred, the testator, unless a devise by implication was made to the issue of Mrs. Soule, died intestate as to the share which would have gone to her of the corpus of the property.

While the intention of the testator is to be reached from what he has said, this includes not only a determination of what he meant by the explicit use of language, but also the necessary implication arising from language which he has employed, though less explicit. This necessary implication when employed in raising a devise thereby "is called necessary because the court finds it so in order to answer the intention of the testator." Coryton v. Helyar, 2 Cox, 340, 348; Weed v. Scofield, 73 Conn. 670, 49 Atl. 22. A strong probable implication of a devise arising from the will is sufficient (Coale v. Smith, 4 Pa. 376), and the tendency of modern cases is rather to extend than narrow the rule of raising devises by implication (2 Powell on Devises, 211).

Now, if we assume that the words of limitation over on death "without issue" are insufficient of themselves to raise a gift by implication to the issue (though in Burton v. Black, 30 Ga. 638, the inference, it is said, may arise from the phrase itself in the limitation over), yet the rule is that this implication may be drawn from slight circumstances appearing from the will. Now as to the circumstances and considerations indicative of such intention: In article 3 of the will referred to in the trust provision of article 4 the testator provided for the payment of a number of legacies to relatives and friends, mainly the latter, and specified that, except in two instances, if any of the legatees should die before the testator, the legacies should go to the lineal descendants of such legatees. Subsequently in a codicil he provided that lapsed legacies should revert to his estate. It appears, therefore, that the testator knew exactly what language to apply when he wanted the legacies not to lapse on the death of the legatees and when he intended they should lapse and revert. It is to be assumed that the testator would be more solicitous for the welfare of his lineal descendants, as the issue of these beneficiaries would be, than for the lineal descendants of his friends, and as he provided in the first instance that the descendants of his friends should take so as to prevent a lapse of legacies, and knew how to change the provision so as to provide for a reversion of such legacies to his estate, it is a fair and just inference that in providing for the limitation over on the death of a beneficiary "without issue" that he intended the issue should take the share of a parent rather than that such share should revert to his estate, which would be the effect unless the phrase is to be construed as an implied devise to such issue. Aside from this we may look at the possible consequences which would result from a construction of the provisions of a will, for the purpose of determining whether, where the language is not explicit but open to construction, it was the intention of the testator that they should follow. All the beneficiaries were the lineal descendants of testator, and by the trust devise they are all treated with equal favor. Is it at all reasonable to say that, when the testator provided that a beneficiary should take an absolute estate on attaining the age of 30, in providing for a devise over if she should die "without issue," he had no devising purpose when referring to issue, but that such issue were only to take by right of representation a share in the portion of the trust property devised to their mother, as estate of which the testator had died intestate, and along with the surviving beneficiaries who might have actually attained the required age and already received their two-thirds of the entire trust estate, as is exactly the situation here? Or to take one of the illustrations of counsel for the minor appellants: If one of the daughters of testator had died before attaining the age of 30, leaving a numerous family, and the two other beneficiaries had attained 30, married, and died, never having had issue, but leaving their respective husbands surviving them, this situation would be presented: The children of the deceased beneficiary would divide $^{2}/_{27}$ of the trust fund among their number; their father would take $^{1}/_{27}$ thereof; and the remaining $^{8}/_{9}$ might pass forever away from the line of Francis Blake. Of course, it is insisted by respondents that this only presents a situation which the testator should have provided against but has omitted to do. But he has met this situation and provided against such consequences if a devise can be implied from the elliptical expression as to issue, and these circumstances and consequences afford circumstances which naturally support this as the implied intention of the testator.

In making his will the testator recognized that his daughters and grandchildren were the natural objects of his bounty, and he devised his estate to them, contingent, however, on their reaching a designated age. Having bequeathed the interest which they should severally take in his estate and designated when it should vest, he then proceeded to provide for its disposition over should the contingency upon which they should take not be met. In making such provision it naturally suggested itself to him that a beneficiary might die before attaining the age when she would be entitled to her share of his estate, but might leave children. It is to be assumed that the testator would have the same natural solicitude for the issue of the child as for the child herself, and, contemplating the possibility of issue, he provided that in the event of issue the share of the deceased beneficiary should not go over. This was a natural provision. Such issue would be his lineal descendants and naturally entitled to the same consideration from him as their parent. He recognized that in the event of issue their welfare would be a matter of solicitude on the part of their mother, and, having this in view, he provided that the share which would be hers if she attained the age of 30 years should go over only in the event of her dying without issue before she received her share of the estate. He had the possibility of issue in his mind, and, as he intended that the parent should not take unless she attained the age of 30 and intended that the devise over should not be effective if issue survived her, it seems the only reasonable inference to be deduced from the mention of issue at all that they were to take the share which otherwise their mother would have taken. As the devise over was to be ineffectual if the beneficiary died with issue, and the testator intended to dispose of all his estate, this is the only effect which can be given to the mention of issue, if any effect is to be given at all.

That this is the construction to be given to the mention of issue is well supported by the authorities where the effect of such mention was involved when found in the limitation over of a devise. Ex parte Rogers, 2 Madd. 449; Burton v. Black, 30 Ga. 638; Myrick v. Heard (C. C.) 31 Fed. 241; Wetter v. United Hydraulic Cotton Press Co., 75 Ga. 540; Sturges v. Cargill, 1 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 318; 1 Jarman on Wills, 500; Bentley v. Kaufman, 12 Phila. (Pa.) 435; Still v. Spear, 3 Grant, Cas. (Pa.) 307; Kay v. Scates, 37 Pa. 31, 78 Am. Dec. 399; Beilstein v. Beilstein, 194 Pa. 152, 45 Atl. 73, 75 Am. St. Rep. 692; Kinsella v. Caffrey, 11 Ir. Chan. 154; Hauser v. Craft, 134 N. C. 319, 46 S. E. 756; Luthieullier v. Tracy, 3 Atk. 796.

Quotations from an English and a couple of American cases will suffice, as all the other authorities harmonize with them. In Ex parte Rogers, supra, the executor was directed by the will to place £1,000 in a funds, in trust to pay the interest thereof to a niece during her life, "and at her decease without child or children the principal sum, with all interest due thereon, to go and be divided between her surviving sisters equally." The court held that there was a devise by implication of the thousand pounds to the children of the niece, saying: "The residuary legatees cannot take because the residue only after payment of this legacy was given to them. It could not go to Hester Chambers, because she was only to take if M. D. Rogers died without children. As the testator did not mean to give it to the residuary legatees, and as he did not mean to die intestate as to any part of his property, to whom could it go but to

M. D. Rogers or her children? Why mention children if he did not mean them to take? The existence of children was considered as material; so much so that, if there were any, the legacy was not to go over. By necessary implication the children must be considered as entitled to the £1,000." In Beilstein v. Beilstein, 194 Pa. 152, 45 Atl. 73, 75 Am. St. Rep. 692, the devise over was in the event that the first taker died without family. It was held that there was a devise to her family by implication, if she left one; the court saying: "The devise over in case Gertie should 'die leaving no family' is an implied devise to the family if she should leave one. It is only if she does not that the devise over is to be effectual, and there is a necessary implication that in the unexpressed contingency of her leaving a family the estate is to go to them." In Burton v. Black, 30 Ga. 638, the rule is recognized that persons may take by inference, and that: "This inference is generally associated with a limitation over; the inference itself being that those are intended to take the property who are designated to prevent its going over. * * * If property is given to A. for life, and if he shall die without issue, then over to B., the issue of A. are the persons whose existence is to prevent the property from going over to B.; and the just inference is that the 'issue,' without further description, are intended to take." The case first quoted from (Ex parte Rogers) is commented on in Ranelagh v. Ranelagh, 12 Beav. 200, but we do not understand it to be there overruled. If it were, there are still other ample authorities cited by us to sustain our conclusion as to a devise by implication. In this latter case the judge deciding it declared his inability to answer the query contained in Ex parte Rogers, "Why mention children, if he (testator) did not mean them to take?"

While there are some authorities—we are only referred to three or four—holding that in a devise over "without issue" the word "issue" is a word of limitation, still the great weight of authority is to the contrary, and that as employed in the devise over under consideration here it is a word of purchase and implies a devise to the issue who thereby take as donees or purchasers under the will.

Those portions of the order appealed from are reversed, with instructions to the trial court upon the findings as made (eliminating therefrom what are inserted as findings 19 and 20, but which are conclusions of law as pointed out in the early part of this opinion) to enter a decree distributing directly to the appellants, the children of Ethel Pomroy Soule, as purchasers under the last will of Francis Blake, deceased, the corpus of the trust property involved in this controversy.

LOWE v. YOLO COUNTY CONSOL. WATER CO. (Sac. 1,684.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 30, 1910. Rehearing Denied April 28, 1910.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1056*)—HARMLESS ERROR—EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE.

Though a water company is not liable for failure to deliver water to an applicant where there are prior applicants for all its water, refusal to allow it to show there were prior applicants, who were supplied, is harmless; the uncontradicted evidence showing that, after supplying them, there was sufficient water running to waste to supply the later applicant.

2. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 243*)—ESTOPPEL BY JUDGMENT.

The judgment for a water company in a proceeding by it to condemn a right of way for a ditch estops it, in an action against it for failure to deliver water on demand to one over whose land a strip for the right of way was condemned, to deny it was exercising purely a public use for the benefit of the landowners along the line of the ditch, it being only on the theory that it was exercising a public use that it could maintain such proceeding and recover such judgment; its complaint therein describing the public use for which the right of way was sought, as one for the supplying of the farming neighborhood with water for irrigation purposes; and issue on such matter having been joined and determined in such proceeding.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 627–629, 700; Dec. Dig. § 243;* Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 1306.]

3. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 263*)—TO GROWING CROPS—ALFALFA.

As land prepared for alfalfa will produce several crops each year for several years without further care, except in the way of irrigation, the measure of damages of one who just after preparing his land for alfalfa, and cutting the first crop, was wrongfully denied water for irrigation by a water company, whereby he lost the two additional crops, which, with irrigation, the land would have produced that year, and a reseeding was necessary, is the value of the two crops lost, less cost of irrigation and cutting, plus cost of reseeding.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Dec. Dig. § 263.*]

4. CORPORATIONS (§ 498*) — LIABILITY FOR EXEMPLARY DAMAGES—ACTS OF OFFICERS.

A corporation may, because of the acts of those whom it has placed in charge of its affairs, be held guilty of malice or oppression, making it liable, under Civ. Code, § 3294, for exemplary damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1909; Dec. Dig. § 498.*]

5. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 263*)—EXEMPLARY DAMAGES—MALICE AND OPPRESSION—EVIDENCE.

The conclusion that defendant water company was guilty of malice and oppression in failing to furnish water to plaintiff for irrigation, making it liable for exemplary damages, is authorized by evidence that its general manager told him not to put in a side gate to receive water from its ditch; that its directors had notified him to tell plaintiff that they would not give him any water for that land, and that plaintiff knew why; that its president told him its directors were bitter towards him because of the condemnation proceeding for its right of way, and that it would furnish him no water till plaintiff paid back the damages he received in that proceeding, and while he was occupying with his ditch a portion of its right of way; and that no attention was paid to his written demand for water which he left with the person in charge of its office, at the same time making tender of water rates, as defendant had, and must have known it had, no right to insist on such matters as a condition precedent to furnishing water.

6. EVIDENCE (§ 244*)—STATEMENTS OF OFFICERS OF CORPORATION.

Statements of the general manager and the president of a water company to an applicant for water, as to the reasons for refusing him water, made in connection with such refusal, are admissible to show the motive of the company, on the question of exemplary damages; as such officers are to be presumed, prima facie at least, to have been acting in accord with the desire of its board of directors.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 916–936; Dec. Dig. § 244.*]

7. TRIAL (§ 96*) — MOTION TO STRIKE EVIDENCE.

The motion to strike out, being directed to the whole statement introduced in evidence, which included unobjectionable matter, was properly denied.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 248; Dec. Dig. § 96.*]

8. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 254*)—IRRIGATION COMPANIES—DEMAND FOR WATER.

The leaving of a written demand for water at the office of a water company, during office hours, with the person in charge thereof, is a sufficient compliance with Act March 12, 1885 (St. 1885, c. 115) § 10, as to demand for water.

9. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 263*)—WATER COMPANIES — REFUSAL OF WATER — SUFFICIENCY OF DEMAND—RIGHT TO QUESTION.

The avowed position of a water company, expressed through its manager and president, to an applicant for water, being that it would not supply him, even if he paid the charges, and his subsequent demand left at its office, describing with certainty land planted in alfalfa, for irrigation of which water was demanded, and offering to pay, in addition to the amount therewith tendered, any further sum necessary, having been simply ignored, the company, in an action against it for damages for not furnishing the water, may not object to the sufficiency of demand or tender.

10. TRIAL (§ 252*)—WATER COMPANIES—DUTY TO FURNISH WATER—INSTRUCTIONS.

An instruction, in an action against a water company for refusal to furnish an applicant with water, that before it was required to deliver water to an applicant he must make necessary provision for receiving it is properly refused; its refusal to furnish water not having been based on any such ground, and it appearing that the applicant was about to put in his side gate for diversion of the water when notified by defendant's general manager not to put it in, because it would not furnish him water.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 505, 596–612; Dec. Dig. § 252.*]

11. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 263*)—WATER COMPANIES — REFUSAL TO FURNISH WATER FOR IRRIGATION—DEFENSES.

It is no defense to an action against a water company for refusal to furnish an applicant water for irrigation, that his ditch for taking water from its ditch be in part on its right of way, if it be there with its consent, or if its refusal was not based on such ground.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Dec. Dig. § 263.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Yolo County; H. M. Albery, Judge.

Action by O. A. Lowe against the Yolo County Consolidated Water Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and new trial denied. Defendant appeals. Affirmed.

A. L. Shinn and N. A. Hawkins, for appellant. A. C. Huston, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial in an action for damages for failure on the part of defendant to deliver to plaintiff water for the irrigation of 42 acres of land in Yolo county for the season of 1906. There was a trial by jury, and plaintiff had verdict and judgment for $1,099, consisting of $599 actual damages and $500 exemplary damages. There was an appeal by defendant from the judgment on the judgment roll alone. On that appeal the judgment was affirmed by the District Court of Appeal of the Third appellate district, and an application for rehearing in this court was denied. See Lowe v. Yolo County, etc., Co., 8 Cal. App. 167, 96 Pac. 379.

There appears to be some difference between counsel as to the effect of the decision on the appeal from the judgment. The only questions involved on that appeal related to the sufficiency of the complaint and the right of the plaintiff, in view of those allegations, to exemplary damages. It was held that the complaint sufficiently stated a cause of action for damages against one who had appropriated waters for sale, rental, and distribution to the general public, and that the allegations of the complaint were in accord with the theory that defendant was such an appropriator, and governed by the provisions of the act to regulate and control the sale, rental, and distribution of appropriated waters in this state, approved March 12, 1885, St. 1885, p. 95. It was further held that section 3294 of the Civil Code, providing for the recovery of punitive or exemplary damages in an action for the breach of an obligation not arising from contract, where the defendant has been guilty of oppression, fraud, or malice, express or implied, is applicable in an action for damages for failure on the part of such an appropriator to furnish water when demanded in accord with the provisions of said act, and that the allegations of the complaint in this respect were sufficient to bring the case within the provisions of such section. These were the only questions decided on such appeal, as we read the opinion of the District Court of Appeal.

1. We shall accept the admission of learned counsel for defendant, contained in their closing brief, that defendant "never seriously contended that it did not exercise a public use, or that it was not amenable to the act of 1885." So far as this plaintiff is concerned, defendant would appear to be estopped to claim otherwise, in view of the condemnation proceedings on its behalf against plaintiff, whereby, upon the theory that it was exercising such a use for the benefit of a specified district including plaintiff's land, it obtained a decree of condemnation of a strip of said land of plaintiff for the very ditch from which he seeks to be served with water.

Section 10 of said act of 1885 requires every such appropriator for sale, rental, or distribution, "upon demand therefor, and tender in money, of such established rates, * * * to sell, rent, or distribute such water to such inhabitants at the established rates to the extent of the actual supply of such appropriated waters, * * * for such purposes," and provides that, if such appropriator, "having water for such use," refuses for five days to comply with the demand "to the extent of his or its reasonable ability so to do," he or it shall be liable in damages to the extent of the actual injury sustained by the party making such demand.

Defendant's real claim now is that it was not obligated to comply with plaintiff's demand for water if all the water available was needed for the purpose of supplying prior users, in other words, that plaintiff could be entitled to water from this ditch only in the contingency that there was water enough to supply both him and all others whom defendant had previously been and was then serving with water for the irrigation of their lands. Although by two of its instructions the trial court apparently adopted this theory of defendant, instructing the jury substantially that the law gives to the first user of water a preferred right as against those subsequently demanding water, and that the defendant was under no obligation to deliver water to plaintiff unless it had sufficient to supply all previous takers and also an excess which was available for plaintiff's use, it sustained objections to all evidence offered by defendant for the purpose of showing that there were prior users of the water for irrigation purposes, who applied for the water for the year 1906.

This contention is rendered immaterial by the uncontradicted evidence in the case. It was shown that at the time plaintiff demanded the water from the defendant, and for a sufficient time thereafter to have satisfied that demand, sufficient water to irrigate plaintiff's land was flowing in the defendant's ditch at plaintiff's intake therefrom to have fully irrigated plaintiff's lands, and that this water was not used by other customers of defendant, but was allowed by the defendant to run into Putah creek at the lower end of its ditch, and thus go to waste. There is no substantial evidence in contradiction of these facts. There was never any pretense that all those claiming to have preferential rights were not supplied with the water to which they were entitled. The offers of evidence made in this behalf included the offer to show not only that they had made application for the water, but also that they had received it. Notwithstanding such use by all such parties, the evidence shows without conflict, as we read the record, that there was still sufficient water running to waste to have satisfied the demands of plaintiff. To this surplus, after the demands of the prior users had been satisfied, plaintiff was certainly entitled. The refusal to admit the evidence offered was, therefore, harmless error, if error at all.

2. We are satisfied that the judgment in the condemnation proceeding brought by defendant against plaintiff was admissible in evidence, and that its effect was to estop defendant from denying that, so far as plaintiff was concerned, it was exercising purely a public use for the benefit of the landowners along the line of the ditch constructed in part over plaintiff's land. It was only upon the theory that it was exercising a public use that defendant could maintain the action and recover such judgment, and the particular public use for which the right of way for the ditch was sought was described in the complaint in such action as being one for the supplying of the farming neighborhood of Winters, which includes plaintiff's land, with water for irrigation purposes. Issue was joined upon both these matters, and those issues were litigated and determined in that case. In his complaint in this action, plaintiff alleged this estoppel by judgment. In view of the estoppel created by this judgment, if the court erred in refusing to admit in evidence defendant's articles of incorporation, the error was without prejudice.

3. We find no error in the rulings of the court in the admission of evidence relative to the amount of actual damage suffered by plaintiff by reason of the refusal to furnish water, nor any force in the claim that the evidence was insufficient to sustain the conclusion of the jury that the amount of this actual damage was $599. According to plaintiff's evidence the facts were as follows: He had seeded his 42-acre tract to alfalfa, and at the time he needed and demanded water—July 6, 1906—had just cut his first crop therefrom. The first crop ran about one ton to the acre. The cost of putting the land in alfalfa was $10 per acre. This is what plaintiff meant by saying that the "stand of clover" with the first crop thus cut was worth $10 per acre, as is shown by his cross-examination. It would have produced two more crops of hay during the season of 1906 if properly irrigated. Hay was worth a minimum of $5 per ton, cut and in the field. It would not cost to exceed $1 an acre for each cutting, and $25 for each watering of the whole land. By reason of the failure to obtain water, no crop was obtained during the year 1906, except the crop that was cut prior to the demand. Three-fourths of the alfalfa died for want of water, and the evidence was such as to warrant the conclusion that a reseeding of the whole piece would be necessary to put it in the condition it was in at the time water was refused. There was a conflict of evidence as to some of these matters, especially as to the probable yield of the alfalfa stand per acre, and also as to the cost of reseeding the land, but we must here look at the evidence in the light most favorable to plaintiff. Upon these facts the jury would have been warranted in concluding that the cost of reseeding the 42 acres would be $420, and that the net profits of the alfalfa stand for the season of 1906, exclusive of the first crop, would have been $286, of all of which plaintiff was deprived by the failure of defendant to furnish water as demanded. This would make an aggregate of $706, actual damages, and the verdict was for $599 actual damages. We are of the opinion that these elements constitute the proper measure of damages in a case of this character. Land prepared for alfalfa will produce several crops each year for several years, without further care except in the way of irrigation. At the time of the refusal to furnish water this land had just been so prepared, and with the requisite water would have produced crops for several years to come. Its capacity in this regard was wholly destroyed by reason of defendant's wrongful act. The case is practically that of the destruction of a meadow. In Bradley v. Iowa Central Ry. Co., 111 Iowa, 562, 82 N. W. 996, the question of the proper measure of damages in such a case was discussed, and the court held that the measure of damages is the cost of reseeding and the rental value until restored, finding a clear distinction between such case and that of the destruction of growing trees. As was substantially said, the purpose of the law where one has been injured by the tort of another is to reimburse the sufferer for his loss, and the cost of restoration together with the value of the use of the meadow during the time lost can be accurately ascertained in the case of a meadow, and shows the amount of loss occasioned by the wrongful act as clearly and correctly as any method of which we can conceive. The cost of restoration, together with the value of the use of the meadow during the time lost, in this case the value of the profits plaintiff would have made from the crop during the season of 1906, in our opinion constitute the damage he must be held to have suffered. See, also, 4 Sutherland on Damages (4th Ed.) p. 3001. Clearly such a rule as to the measure of damage does not result in awarding double damages. All of the evidence introduced by plaintiff as to the amount of damage was directed to these two elements, and was properly admitted on the issue of damages.

4. As we have said, the decision on the appeal from the judgment establishes that section 3294 of the Civil Code, relative to exemplary damages, is applicable in a case of this character. It is urged that the evidence was insufficient to warrant the recovery of such damages in this case. It is not disputed, of course, that a corporation may be held guilty of malice or oppression by reason of acts of those whom it has placed in charge of its affairs and who "constitute, to all purposes of dealing with others, the corporation." See Maynard v. F. F. Ins. Co., 34 Cal. 54, 91 Am. Dec. 672. The claim of defendant in this behalf is necessarily based on the further claim that certain evidence given of declarations made to plaintiff by both the general manager and the president of defendant must be disregarded, for that evidence, taken in connection with the absolute refusal and failure to furnish any water, amply warrants a conclusion of malice and oppression. Plaintiff had prepared his field, and was making his preparations to receive the water therefor. He had spoken to defendant's general manager several times about the water, and had been given no reason to doubt that it would be ready for him when needed. He was about to put a side gate in the ditch for the purpose of receiving the water, when defendant's general manager told him not to put it in; that the board of directors had notified him to notify plaintiff that they would not give him any water for that particular piece of land. Plaintiff asked Mr. Gregory, the manager, for the reason, and Gregory replied that plaintiff knew the reason, and, when asked if he thought that was right, said: "I don't know anything about it; I was notified to notify you you couldn't have any water." Plaintiff then asked the president of the corporation why water would not be furnished, and was informed by him that some of the directors were bitter towards him on account of "that lawsuit," and that the directors had decided not to give him any water until he had paid back the money paid him under the condemnation decree as damages. Within two or three days thereafter, viz., on July 6, 1906, he went with his attorney to the office of the defendant company, and presented to the person in charge thereof, one L. H. Stephens, the accountant of defendant, a written demand for water for irrigation of the land. He then made a tender of $100 for the water, and offered to pay such other sums as might be necessary. No objection was made to the sufficiency of either written demand or tender. They were simply ignored and no water was ever furnished. It must be assumed that the fact of demand and tender were made known to the directors of defendant. The evidence of the general manager and the president in regard to the reasons assigned for the refusal of water did not present a materially different situation. The testimony of the president and general manager introduced by defendant showed that it was claimed that plaintiff was occupying a portion of the defendant's right of way with his own ditch, and that they told plaintiff that they would give him no water while he had that ditch there. The president further testified that he told plaintiff that it would be right and proper for him to pay back to the company the cost he had put them to in the matter of procuring the right of way. There was not prior to this action any pretense that defendant did not have sufficient water to supply plaintiff, and the defendant failed to furnish the water when subsequently formally demanded without giving any reasons for such refusal. It is obvious that defendant had no right whatever to insist upon a compliance by plaintiff with either of the conditions stated as a condition precedent to furnishing him with water, and must have known that it had no such right. If he was trespassing upon the right of way, appropriate proceedings would lie therefor, and the money that he had been awarded in the condemnation proceedings was his own, awarded him by judicial decree. As said before, there was in all this clearly sufficient support for the conclusion that the defendant was guilty of malice and oppression.

It is urged, however, that the declarations of the general manager and president to plaintiff were not admissible. We think that there can be no question that the statements of these officers as to the reason for refusing water, made in connection with such refusal, were admissible for the purpose of showing the motive of the corporation. As has often been said, and as is necessarily obvious, a corporation can speak only through the acts and conduct of those whom the persons composing it have put in charge of its business. Such officers of the corporation as the president and general manager, when dealing with members of the public in matters pertaining to the ordinary business of the corporation, and acting within the apparent scope of their authority, must necessarily be presumed, prima facie at least, to be acting in accord with the desire of the board of directors, who as said in Maynard v. F. F. Ins. Co., supra, are deemed to be the mind and soul of the corporation entity, and whose motives and intentions are to be imputed to the corporation itself. Boiled down, the statement attributed by plaintiff to the president was simply that the defendant would not furnish plaintiff with water unless he paid back to defendant an amount that he had received from it as damages for the right of way, those managing the corporation believing that it was inequitable and unfair for him to retain it. Here was simply a statement by the official head of defendant to an applicant for water as to the condition upon which it would be furnished to him by defendant. It is only fair to assume that it was authorized by the defendant. See 4 Thompson on Corp. § 4656; Bullock v. Consumers', etc., Co., 31 Pac. 367, 370; 1 Clark & Marshall, Pri. Corp. § 239. The statement attributed to the general manager was no more than an absolute refusal by the officer in charge of the business of defendant to furnish water, professedly made by authority of the directors. It may be that the portion of the statement attributed to the president, to the effect that "Uncle Larry and Uncle Joe are very bitter towards you on account of that lawsuit" was objectionable, but the motion to strike out was directed to the whole statement, which included unobjectionable matter, and the motion was therefore properly denied. There was no serious pretense on the trial that either the president or general manager was not acting in accord with the wish of the board of directors. It must be assumed that the formal written application of plaintiff for water, which had been left at the office of the company with the person in charge thereof, was brought to the attention of the board of directors, and that they were made fully aware by the president of his refusal to furnish water except upon the condition stated. See Balfour v. Fresno Canal, etc., Co., 123 Cal. 397, 55 Pac. 1062.

5. Numerous other points for reversal are made by counsel for defendant. Many of them are substantially disposed of by what we have already said, and it will be unnecessary to enumerate them here. Others are not so disposed of, and we will briefly refer to the most important of them.

We cannot doubt that the leaving of the written demand for water at the office of the defendant corporation during office hours, with the person in charge thereof, was a sufficient compliance with the requirements of section 10 of the act of 1885 as to demand. There was never prior to this action any claim that the demand was in any way uncertain or insufficient, or that the tender of money for water was in any way insufficient. The avowed position of the defendant expressed through both its general manager and president was that it would not furnish plaintiff with any water, even if he paid the amount legally chargeable therefor. The written notice subsequently presented described with certainty land that had been "planted in alfalfa," and for the irrigation of which water was thereby demanded. In it, plaintiff further offered to pay, in addition to the $100 tendered, such further and other sums as might be necessary. As said before, this demand and tender were simply ignored, without further objection or reason of any nature ever being given. We are satisfied that defendant cannot now be heard to object to the sufficiency of either demand or tender.

We do not read the record as indicating that defendant offered or attempted to show that its ditch was not completed to an extent sufficient to enable it to furnish water therefrom. There is, therefore, nothing in its contention that it should have been allowed to show this.

Under the circumstances of this case, the court did not err in refusing to instruct the jury that, before the defendant was required to deliver water to a customer, such customer must make all necessary provision for receiving it, including a suitable method of diverting water from the main canal. Defendant's refusal to furnish was not based on any such ground. It was established without conflict that plaintiff was about to put in his side gate for the diversion of the water when he was notified by defendant's general manager that he need not put it in, for the defendant would not furnish him with water.

We find no error in the modification by the court of defendant's requested instruction 10. The fact that plaintiff's ditch for the taking of water from defendant's ditch may have been in part on defendant's right of way certainly constituted no defense to this action if it was there with the consent of defendant, or if defendant's refusal to furnish water was not based on that ground. The instruction, as modified, left these questions with the jury, and was certainly as favorable to defendant as the law warranted.

We have been unable to find in the evidence contained in the record any foundation for defendant's requested instruction 12.

There is no other point made that, in our opinion, requires notice.

The order denying a new trial is affirmed.

NICHOLL v. KOSTER, Auditor. (S. F. 5,326.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 28, 1910.)

1. STATUTES (§ 94*)—"MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS"—POLICE POWER—GENERAL LAWS.

Act March 8, 1909 (St. 1909, c. 133), providing for the care and custody of children who are likely to develop criminal tendencies, and giving additional powers to the superior courts in respect thereof, provides for an exercise of the police powers of the state through the judicial department, and its subject-matter is not embraced within "municipal affairs" as used in Const. art. 11, § 6, providing that charters of cities and towns except in municipal affairs shall be subject to and controlled by general laws, though the functions of the particular extension of the system may be exercised exclusively within incorporated cities having a freeholders' charter.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, p. 4619; vol. 8, p. 7726.]

2. COURTS (§ 125*)—JURISDICTION—POWER OF LEGISLATURE.

Const. art. 6, § 1, provides that the judicial power of the state is vested in various courts, including the superior court and such other inferior courts as the Legislature may establish in any city or town or city and county. Section 5 provides that the superior court shall have jurisdiction of all such special cases and proceedings as are not otherwise provided for. Held, that the Legislature has sole authority over the jurisdiction and powers of the superior and inferior courts of the state, with the exception of the police courts of cities which under Const. art. 11, § 8½, may be established by freeholders' charters of cities; and hence the freeholders' charter of San Francisco does not control Act March 8, 1909 (St. 1909, c. 133), providing for the custody of children who have shown, or who from lack of care are likely to develop, criminal tendencies, and giving additional jurisdiction to the superior court in respect thereof, prescribing the necessary procedure, and providing the means of exercising and enforcing that jurisdiction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Dec. Dig. § 125.*]

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 79*)—SPECIAL CHARTERS—CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS.

Const. art. 11, § 6, providing that municipal charters prevail over general laws in municipal affairs, relates only to cities and towns and not to San Francisco, which is a consolidated city and county, partaking of the nature of both, except in so far as that subdivision of the state possesses and exercises municipal functions and constitutes a city as distinguished from a county; the power of the Legislature to enact general laws for the government of counties, including San Francisco, remaining unaffected by the section.

4. COURTS (§ 42*)—JURISDICTION—POWER OF LEGISLATURE.

Const. art. 11, § 8½, provides that, where a city and county government has been merged and consolidated into one municipal government, it shall also be competent in any charter framed by it, under section 8, providing for freeholders' charters, to provide for the manner in which, the time at which, and the terms for which, the several county officers shall be elected or appointed, for their compensation, and the number and compensation of their deputies. Held, that the freeholders' charter of the consolidated city and county of San Francisco, not providing for compensation of probation officers of the juvenile court and their assistants, provided for by Act March 8, 1909 (St. 1909, c. 133), who are a part of the machinery of the judicial system of the state, and officers of the superior court provided to enable the court to effectually exercise the special jurisdiction given by the act, the city and county are bound by the provisions of that general act, making such officers' compensation payable from the county treasury.

5. COUNTIES (§ 61*) — OFFICERS — POWER OF LEGISLATURE.

Even if the probation officers and assistants be considered deputy sheriffs, yet, under Const. art. 11, § 5, conferring upon the Legislature plenary power to prescribe the duties of sheriffs and other county officers and to create other county offices and provide for the appointment of persons thereto as public convenience may require, in addition to the other officers specifically named therein, and in view of section 8½, which does not provide that the duties of the county officers may be fixed by the charter of the consolidated city and county, the Legislature could create a new county office for performance of the duties of the probation officers, which are different from those usually imposed on sheriffs, and provide for the appointment of persons to perform the duties thereof who would be county officers, and, in the absence of any provision in the charter creating such an office or providing compensation therefor, could require such officers' compensation to be paid out of the county treasury.

6. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 74*) — DISTRIBUTION OF GOVERNMENTAL FUNCTIONS—CONSTRUCTION OF CONSTITUTION.

Const. art. 3, providing that no person charged with the exercise of powers properly belonging to the executive, judicial, or legislative department shall exercise any functions appertaining to either of the others, except as expressly permitted by the Constitution, refers to the respective departments of the state government and not to local, county, and municipal governments which the Legislature might establish; and a superior judge, though he be classed as a person charged with the exercise of powers belonging to the judicial department of the state, in appointing probation officers, as expressly provided by Act March 8, 1909 (St. 1909, c. 133), which officers are not officers of the state government, but minor officers of the local county government, does not exercise functions intended to be described in the Constitution as appertaining to the executive department of the state.

7. COURTS (§ 55*)—JURISDICTION—INCIDENTAL POWERS.

The appointment of persons to discharge acts necessary to be done to enable a court to transact its judicial work in an orderly and expeditious manner, or necessary or even merely convenient to the exercise of its jurisdiction, has always been recognized as a power incidental to the judicial office; and if the Legislature or the Constitution should fail to provide such persons, the court, invested with jurisdiction, would have power to appoint such assistants as might be required.

In Bank. Mandamus by William H. Nicholl against John A. Koster, Auditor of the City and County of San Francisco. Writ granted.

Garret W. McEnerney and J. R. Pringle, for petitioner. Francis V. Keesling, for respondent auditor. Percy V. Long, City Atty., and Jesse H. Steinhart, Asst. City Atty., for respondent city and county of San Francisco.

SHAW, J. This is an original action in this court in mandamus, to compel the defendant, as auditor of the city and county of San Francisco, to approve and allow the demand of the plaintiff for $125, alleged to be due and payable to him out of the treasury of said city and county, for his salary for the month of April, 1909, as assistant probation officer, under the act approved March 8, 1909. St. 1909, p. 213. This act provides for the care, custody, and maintenance of dependent and delinquent children, defines such children, gives to the superior court of the county jurisdiction to determine whether or not a child is "delinquent or dependent" as defined therein, and to commit such children to a detention home, or to the custody of some reputable person, establishes the office of "probation officer" in every county, and of "assistant probation officers" in some counties, nine being allowed in San Francisco, authorizes the judge of the superior court exercising such jurisdiction to appoint such officers, and fixes the salary of an assistant probation officer in San Francisco at $125 per month, declaring that the same shall "be paid out of the county treasury of the county for which they are appointed, respectively, in the same manner as the salaries of county officers."

The defendant claims that the provision making the salaries of the probation officers and their assistants payable out of the county treasury is invalid when applied to the consolidated city and county of San Francisco. This claim is based on two propositions: First. That the compensation of the officers of the city and county is a municipal affair, which, by section 6, art. 11, of the Constitution, is governed exclusively by the charter of the city and county, and that the charter has provided fully for such compensation; wherefore the act is not operative upon that point with respect to probation officers in San Francisco. Second, that under the last clause of subdivision 4, § 8½, art. 11, of the Constitution, a special city charter may provide for the election, appointment, and compensation of all officers and deputies, and that, as the charter has made such provision, the general law cannot apply to San Francisco. It is also claimed that the part of the act giving power to the judge of the superior court to appoint the probation officers is void, as giving executive power to a member of the judicial department of the state.

The main purpose of the act is to provide for the care and custody of children who have shown, or who from lack of care are likely to develop, criminal tendencies, in order to have them trained to good habits and correct principles. To accomplish this it gives additional jurisdiction and power to the superior courts of the state and provides the officers necessary for the execution of that jurisdiction and power. It is an exercise of the police powers of the state, through the judicial department. It is a matter which concerns the whole state as much as any other extension of the judicial system. These have been held to be matters of state policy and not "municipal affairs," within the meaning of that term in the Constitution, although the functions of the particular extension of the system may be exercised exclusively within incorporated cities having a freeholders' charter. Graham v. Fresno, 151 Cal. 470, 91 Pac. 147; Fleming v. Hance, 153 Cal. 165, 94 Pac. 620; Robert v. Police Court, 148 Cal. 136, 82 Pac. 838; Jackson v. Baehr, 138 Cal. 270, 71

Pac. 167. Under section 1, art. 6, of the Constitution, the judicial power of the state is vested in the various courts there named, and such other inferior courts as the Legislature may establish in any city or town or city and county. By section 5 of the same article, it is declared that the superior courts shall have jurisdiction of all such special cases and proceedings as are not otherwise provided for. The effect of the decisions last cited is that the Legislature has sole authority over the matter of the jurisdiction and powers of the superior and inferior courts of the state, with the single exception of the police courts of cities, which, under section 8½ of article 11, may be established by the freeholders' charter of such cities. It is perfectly obvious, therefore, that the San Francisco charter does not control the provisions of this general law, so far as the law gives additional jurisdiction to the superior court, prescribes the necessary procedure and provides the means of exercising and enforcing that jurisdiction.

The superior courts are established in each of the counties of the state. The consolidated city and county of San Francisco partakes of the nature of a city and a county. It has the powers and performs the functions of both. The section of the Constitution declaring that municipal charters prevail over general laws in municipal affairs relates solely to cities and towns. It has no application to San Francisco, except in so far as that subdivision of the state possesses and exercises municipal functions and constitutes a city, as distinguished from a county. With respect to the powers and functions of a county exercised by San Francisco, as in any other county of the state, that section has no concern. The power of the Legislature to enact general laws for the government of counties, as such, including San Francisco, remains unaffected and unimpaired by that section. It does not make the charter of San Francisco paramount to such laws as to county affairs. The only section of the Constitution which abridges the power of the Legislature in this respect over counties is section 8½, above mentioned. The last clause of that sections is as follows: "Where a city and county government has been merged and consolidated into one municipal government, it shall also be competent in any charter framed under said section eight of said article eleven, to provide for the manner in which, the times at which, and the terms for which the several county officers shall be elected or appointed, for their compensation, and for the number of deputies that each shall have, and for the compensation payable to each of such deputies."

In Fleming v. Hance, supra, the court, speaking with reference to legislative power to establish inferior courts, said: "It is thoroughly settled by the decisions of this court that the Legislature had the power, prior to the constitutional amendments in question, not only to establish police or other inferior courts in municipalities, but to provide for the payment of the salaries and office rent of the judges or justices of such courts out of the county treasury. Jenks v. Council, 58 Cal. 576; Bishop v. Council, 58 Cal. 572; Coggins v. City of Sacramento, 59 Cal. 599. It would seem to follow from the views above expressed that in cities governed by charters which have made no provisions for police courts, or other inferior courts exercising similar functions, the Legislature may still, notwithstanding the adoption of section 8½ and the amendment of section 6 of article 11 of the Constitution, provide that the city must pay the salaries of the police judges or city justices created by general law." The principle applied in this passage to inferior courts established by general laws, under section 1 of article 6 of the Constitution, is equally applicable to laws giving additional jurisdiction to superior courts, such as that here involved. The San Francisco municipal charter makes no provision for the compensation of probation officers and their assistants. They constitute a part of the machinery of the judicial system of the state, officers of the superior court provided to enable that court to effectually exercise the special jurisdiction given by the act, concerning which the charter does not speak. Conceding that, if their compensation was provided for in the charter, its provisions would prevail over the provisions of the act, both as to the amount and as to the manner of payment, the necessary conclusion, in the absence of such charter provisions, in view of this principle, is that the act is in force, and that the city and county is bound by its provisions relating to the compensation of the probation officers of the so-called "juvenile court."

The defendant contends that these officers are nothing more nor less than deputy sheriffs, and that as the charter provides for the number and compensation of such deputies, and for an increase in their number when necessary, the attempt of the Legislature to add to their number by the device of calling the additional deputies probation officers is unavailing and without effect. But section 5 of article 11 confers upon the Legislature plenary power to prescribe the duties of sheriffs and other county officers. Section 8½ does not say that the duties of the county officers may be fixed by the charter of a consolidated city and county. That power still remains with the Legislature. The duties to be performed by these probation officers are in some respects not unlike those prescribed for sheriffs by the previous laws on the subject. He was required to "obey all lawful orders and directions of all courts held within his county." Pol. Code, § 4157; St. 1907, p. 402, § 4157. Perhaps the juvenile court jurisdiction of the superior court could have been carried on within the city and county of San Francisco by requiring the sheriff and his deputies to execute its orders and processes in that behalf. But these duties are of a character not before imposed upon sheriffs. The probation officer is required to inquire into the antecedents, character, family, history, environments, and cause of delinquency of every child brought before the court, to be present in court and represent the interests of such child upon the hearing as to its being a delinquent, to give the court such information and assistance upon that hearing as the court may require, to take charge of the child before and after the hearing if so ordered, and, in some circumstances, he is required to act in a capacity similar to that of a guardian of such child. Section 5 of article 11 gives the Legislature power to create such other county offices and provide for the appointment of persons thereto, as public convenience may require, in addition to the officers specifically named therein. For the performance of these new duties, of a character different from those usually imposed on sheriffs, the Legislature undoubtedly had the power, under this constitutional provision, to create a new county office, and provide for the appointment of persons to perform the duties thereof who would be county officers. And as the city charter neither creates such an office, prescribes the duties thereof, nor provides any compensation for the persons who perform the same, there is nothing in its provisions which can in any way affect the validity and force of the declaration of the act that such compensation must be paid out of the county treasury. The treasury of the city and county of San Francisco is, for that purpose, a county treasury.

The remaining objection is that the appointment of these probation officers is an act of the executive department of the state, and that the judge of the superior court, being an officer of the judicial department of the state, cannot be vested with power to exercise functions belonging to the executive department. Article 3 of the Constitution provides that "no person charged with the exercise of powers properly belonging to one of those departments shall exercise any functions appertaining to either of the others, except as in this Constitution expressly directed or permitted." In People v. Provines, 34 Cal. 525, this court decided that this provision of the former Constitution, which is in the identical language above given, referred to the respective departments of the state government, and not to the local county and municipal governments which the Legislature might establish. The superior court is one of the courts of the state, and the judge of that court may perhaps be classed as a person charged with the exercise of powers belonging to the judicial department of the state. But the probation officers in question are not officers of the state government. They are minor officers of the local county government. The appointment of such officers is not necessarily a part of the duties or functions of the executive department of the state government, according to the system outlined in the Constitution. Perhaps the Legislature, after creating such county offices, could authorize the state executive to appoint persons to fill them, but it is no part of the constitutional scheme of government that such appointments should be made by state officials. The judge of the superior court, when he appoints these probation officers, does not exercise functions intended to be described in the Constitution as those appertaining to the executive department of the state. It is apparent that the act does not conflict with this provision of the Constitution.

Furthermore, the appointment of persons to discharge duties of this character, acts necessary to be done to enable a court to transact its judicial work in an orderly and expeditious manner, or necessary or even merely convenient to the exercise of its jurisdiction, has always been recognized as a power incidental to the judicial office. The Legislature may indeed provide for the appointment of such assistants of the court by the executive department, or by election of the people, and thus relieve the court of the burden of choosing such persons. But if the Legislature or the Constitution should fail to provide such persons, a court invested with jurisdiction would have all the powers necessary to its convenient exercise, and could appoint such assistants as might be required. And doubtless the Legislature can authorize the court to appoint such assistants. Instances are not wanting. The Supreme Court is authorized to appoint bailiffs, secretaries, phonographic reporters, a libarian, and janitors. Code Civ. Proc. § 265; Pol. Code, §§ 769, 2314; Code Civ. Proc. § 47. The district courts of appeal are authorized to appoint a stenographer and a bailiff. Pol. Code, § 758. These powers are not given to the courts by the Constitution. They have never been considered a part of the functions of the executive department of the state. The judges of the superior courts appoint receivers, referees, phonographic reporters, and guardians, each of whom may be said to be assistants of the court, necessary to the exercise of its jurisdiction. The functions of these probation officers are in some respects similar to those of guardians, in others like those of a bailiff or sheriff, and in others not unlike those of an attorney. The appointment of persons to discharge such duties is clearly not a necessary part of the functions of the executive department of the state government.

Indeed, it may be said that the selection of officers is not, per se, abstractly speaking, an exclusive function of the executive department. It may be done by the people by election. The executive department has power to appoint the executive officers pertaining thereto, if no provision for their election is made, and in that case such appointment will be a part of the duties of that department. But if assistants are required for the judicial or legislative departments, and no provision is made for their election, there is nothing in the Constitution that can properly be construed to require that the appointment of such assistants must be committed to the executive department. There is much force in the concurring opinion of Justice Sawyer in People v. Provines, supra, page 541 of 34 Cal., that the appointment of an officer is not strictly or essentially either a legislative, executive, or judicial act, within the meaning of article 3 of the Constitution.

For the reasons here given, we are of the opinion that the appointment of the probation officers in the city and county of San Francisco was lawfully delegated to the judge of the superior court, and that the salary provided by the act is lawfully payable out of the treasury of the city and county.

Let the writ issue as prayed for.

UNITED REAL ESTATE & TRUST CO. v. BARNES, Superintendent of Streets.

(L. A. 2,457.)

Appeal and Error (§ 781*)—Questions Reviewable—Moot Questions.

An appeal from a judgment dismissing a suit to enjoin the sale of land for a delinquent assessment taken after payment under protest to avoid a sale will not be dismissed as presenting a moot question, the questions whether on the reversal of the judgment the superior court may under its equity powers order a refund of the money paid under protest, and as to the liability of the sureties on the undertaking on the issuance of the temporary injunction, involve the merits.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 781.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; T. L. Lewis, Judge.

Action by the United Real Estate & Trust Company against T. L. Barnes, as Superintendent of Streets of the City of San Diego. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Motion to dismiss appeal denied.

Wadham & Pritchard, for appellant. Ward & Wells, for respondent.

BEATTY, C. J. Plaintiff sought to enjoin the defendant from selling its lot in San Diego to satisfy a delinquent assessment for opening a street through an assessment district created by resolution of the city council. The ground of the action was the alleged fraud of the council in adjusting the boundaries of the district, and fraud in the assessment. A temporary injunction was issued some time in 1908. In February, 1909, defendant's demurrer to the second amended complaint was sustained, and, plaintiff declining to amend further, the action was dismissed. Upon the dismissal of the action the defendant again offered the lot for sale, to prevent which plaintiff paid, under protest, the amount of the assessment, penalties, and costs amounting to over $1,100, and on April 2d took this appeal from the judgment. The motion to dismiss is based upon the ground that the payment of the assessment, etc., put an end to the controversy and leaves only a moot case. It is not, however, by any means clear that it is a moot case, for evidently the claim of the plaintiff to recover the money paid under protest involves the same questions that are involved in this appeal; and it claims that in this action, if the judgment should be reversed, the superior court, as a court of equity, could and should order the defendant to refund the money paid under protest as a condition of being allowed to answer to the merits. This is a serious question—new in this state—which has not been adequately presented in the briefs filed on this motion, and it is too much involved in the merits of the case to be decided on a motion to dismiss the appeal.

There is a question, also, as to the right of appellant to have the judgment of this court on the merits of his case, in view of the liability of his sureties on the undertaking required upon the issuance of the temporary injunction—a question also new in this state—and upon which we prefer to reserve our opinion until the question above stated has been disposed of.

Motion denied.

1. Public Lands (§ 37*) — Certificate of Desert Location—Title.

Where, in an action for land claimed under a certificate of entry as a desert location, described as the south half of section 33 of a designated township and range, the evidence showed that the description in the certificate was based on the description in a private survey, and that the land in controversy was under the government survey in sections 34 and 35, the certificate showed no title, for the description in the certificate must mean the south half of section 33 as finally located by an official survey of the federal government.

2. Public Lands (§ 37*)—Desert Location—Possession—Evidence.

Where there was no evidence that a claimant to a desert location had possession of it when the adverse claimant entered on the land in September, 1907, or that the claimant was in possession at any time within one year, before the adverse claimant entered, and it did not appear that any one was ever on the land on behalf of the claimant, except in January, 1906, when some men and teams were employed a little more than a day and a half at work on a small part of the land, there was nothing to support a claim of possession by the claimant previous to the entry of the adverse claimant.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Action by J. H. Edgar against James McNair. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

M. W. Conkling, for appellant. F. C. Farr and R. D. McPherrin (D. S. Ewing, of counsel), for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Plaintiff sued for possession of property in Imperial county described in the complaint as "the south half of section 33, township 15 south, range 15 east, S. B. M." The complaint alleged his quiet, peaceable, and exclusive possession of the land for more than one year; defendant's wrongful entry and taking possession of the property on September 20, 1907; plaintiff's written demand for restoration of the premises, and defendant's refusal to comply with it; and plaintiff's damage in the sum of $150. The answer denies plaintiff's peaceable or exclusive, or other, possession, or that while plaintiff was occupying, or in possession of it, defendant entered upon said land or any part thereof, or took or held possession of it, or any part of it. Judgment was in favor of plaintiff, and this appeal is from that judgment, and from the order denying a motion for a new trial.

Plaintiff introduced in evidence a receipt showing that he had made a payment of $80 to the land office on August 21, 1905, for desert land, using the same description as that employed in the complaint. He testified that soon after receiving his certificate of entry from the land office, he caused a small amount of clearing and leveling to be done upon the property, and made arrangements with his brother, a contractor, to prepare the entire tract for irrigation; that in November, 1906, he bought 320 shares of water stock in Imperial Water Company No. 1, and had it applied to this tract. It was in evidence that locating water stock upon a tract of land claimed by a settler under the desert land act was the usual method of complying with the requirement that $1 per acre each year should be expended for the reclamation of the property.

Defendant's claim was based upon a purchase of the asserted interest of one Hollingsworth, who testified at the trial that he entered upon the land in October, 1904, did a small amount of work, and in August of the following year performed labor worth $85. Mr. Hollingsworth also stated that he made application to the land office for a desert location on the property, using the section number employed by the Bothwell survey, but that his application was rejected on the ground that the land was covered by a filing of one McKinney. From this decision he took an appeal, which was still pending when he testified.

There is much learning displayed by counsel for both litigants in discussing the effect of the various surveys in Imperial Valley and the status of claimants asserting rights to property described according to their lines. The Bothwell survey and that called the "Imperial" were private ones. Mr. Edgar used the former in getting the proper description, as he supposed, of his land. While it was asserted at the trial that the United States land office recognized the Bothwell survey, there is nothing to indicate that Edgar explained to the registrar how he got his description. The land is described as the S. ½ of section 33, township 15 S., range 15 E., S. B. M. This, of course, must mean the south half of that section as finally located by the approved official survey of the United States. One of the witnesses for defendant testified with reference to the property in dispute: "The land in question by Imperial Land Company survey would be the N. W. ¼ of section 36, and the N. E. ¼ of 35. By the Henderson survey it would be the E. ½ of the N. E. ¼ of 34 and the N. W. ¼ of 35 and the W. ½ of the N. E. ¼ of 35; that is, practically. I mean by the Henderson survey the township survey recently made by United States Deputy Surveyor A. A. Henderson, the most recently approved government survey." It will thus be seen that by the Henderson survey—the only official admeasurement of that land—the property in dispute is part of sections 34 and 35. The respondent's certificate, therefore, purports to give him title to land of which he has never had or claimed possession—i. e., the land which the Henderson survey would describe as the south half of section 33—but the land which is the subject of this litigation is placed by the official and conclusive survey, that of Henderson, in parts of sections 34 and 35. Edgar, therefore, gains nothing as to this land by his certificate, and has shown no title. He is forced to rely wholly on an asserted previous possession. The evidence is not sufficient to support a finding that Edgar had such possession of the land, or that he held it when McNair entered upon the property. Nor is it shown that he was in possession at any time within one year before McNair entered. W. A. Edgar, respondent's brother, did some work upon a small part of the land in controversy in January, 1906. Some men and four teams were employed a little more than a day and a half at that work. It does not appear that any one was ever on the land at any other time on Edgar's behalf. Such a showing was insufficient to support a claim of a possession previous to that of appellant.

A person could agree to pay in certain installments a subscription to a trustee for stock in a corporation to be subsequently formed, after a specified amount had been subscribed for such purpose, upon demand therefor, payment not depending upon the creation of the corporation, and would be liable thereon, regardless of any obligation due to the relation of stockholder, and hence the fact that such person's name was not included in the articles of incorporation would be no defense.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 215; Dec. Dig. § 76.*]

2. PARTIES (§ 6*)—PLAINTIFF—REAL PARTY IN INTEREST.

Where a person contracted with a trustee to buy stock in a proposed corporation, the agreement being solely for the benefit of such corporation, the promise was in legal effect to pay to the corporation when organized, and, though the corporation was not named in the contract, no formal assignment thereof from the trustee to the corporation was necessary to enable the corporation to sue thereon; it being the real party in interest and entitled to sue under the express provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 367, though the trustee, being a trustee of an express trust, might also sue under the express provisions of section 369.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Parties, Cent. Dig. §§ 6-8; Dec. Dig. § 6.*]

3. CORPORATIONS (§ 90*)—STOCK—SUBSCRIPTIONS—ACTIONS—DEFENSES.

In an action on a contract to buy $1,500 worth of corporate stock and pay therefor upon calls for 50 per cent. of the amount subscribed, it was no defense that the calls were for a less sum than 50 per cent., the subscriber not being prejudiced thereby; nor, where such subscriber had voluntarily paid all but $700 of the subscription, could she escape liability on the ground that such balance was less than 50 per cent. of the whole sum subscribed.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frederick W. Houser, Judge.

Action by the Horseshoe Pier Amusement Company against Luella Sibley and husband. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. On rehearing after a judgment of affirmance in the District Court of Appeal. Affirmed on opinion of the Court of Appeal.

Tanner, Taft & Odell, for appellants. Force Parker and Anderson & Anderson, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. The judgment and order of the lower court in this case was affirmed by the District Court of Appeal and this court granted a rehearing in order that we might further consider the effect upon the contract, which was the basis of the action, and upon the rights arising therefrom, of the organization of the plaintiff corporation without including the name of Luella Sibley in the list of subscribers. A further study of the matter has convinced us that while, under certain circumstances, such action might operate as an estoppel against the corporation, preventing it from pursuing its claim that the defendant was a stockholder, this is not a case for the application of the doctrine of estoppel announced in Monterey & Salinas Valley R. R. Co. v. Hildreth, 53 Cal. 123. In addition to that which is written upon this subject in the opinion of the District Court of Appeal, it might be added that Mrs. Sibley, who made certain payments under the contract to the corporation long after its organization, is herself perhaps estopped from asserting that she was not a subscriber to the capital stock. If the action were reversed and she were suing for the delivery of stock, the corporation which had accepted payments from her under her contract could not successfully defend upon the ground that her name did not appear upon the list of subscribers to the capital stock. Such payments and their acceptance evidence a mutual obligation binding upon both parties. Perhaps this phase of the matter could not be considered under the present form of the pleading; but, if a new trial were ordered, doubtless the court would permit such proper amendments as would justify a ruling upon the result of her voluntary payments to a corporation from which she had demanded no stock. We are satisfied, however, with the opinion of the District Court of Appeal, which we hereby adopt:

"Defendants appeal from a judgment and an order of court denying their motion for a new trial. George Sibley is made a party defendant by reason of the fact that he is the husband of Luella Sibley, also known as Mrs. George Sibley.

"The action is founded upon a certain agreement alleged to have been signed by defendant, as follows: 'I hereby subscribe $1,500 to be used in the construction and fitting out of a Pleasure Pier running from or near the foot of Pier avenue to or near the foot of Marine street, in the cities of Ocean Park and Santa Monica, Cal., and amusement buildings and structures connected therewith; and I hereby agree to pay to the Ocean

Park Bank, trustee, or its assigns, upon demand, in two payments of 50 per cent. each, at any time after the sum of $40,000 (including my subscriptions) has been subscribed for said purpose, the second payment, however, not to be called for until at least 60 days after demand made for the first. It is expressly understood that this is a subscription for stock in a corporation to be hereafter formed to build, maintain, and operate said pier, buildings, and structures; and that I am to receive stock in said corporation when formed in the proportion that my said subscription bears to the total capitalization of such corporation. Mrs. Geo. Sibley.'

"The court found: That defendant Mrs. George Sibley executed and delivered this agreement to the Ocean Park Bank, as trustee, for the use and benefit of plaintiff, which was thereafter incorporated and created pursuant to and in consideration of said agreement and a number of similar agreements theretofore executed and likewise delivered. That plaintiff is the corporation referred to in said agreement as the corporation to be thereafter formed to build, maintain, and operate the pleasure pier and structures contemplated in said agreement. That in accordance with the terms of said agreement plaintiff did construct and fit out said pleasure pier and is now the owner and in the actual possession, control, and operation thereof; that more than $40,000 had been subscribed for the purpose contemplated in said agreement; that calls were made for the amount of said subscriptions as follows: In November, 1905, 20 per cent.; February, 1906, 30 per cent.; May, 1906, 25 per cent.; June, 1906, 25 per cent. That defendant paid $800 on account of the subscription made in said agreement, and, although demand therefor was made, refused to pay the remainder thereof, amounting to $700. That at the time of making the demand for said $700, the balance of defendant's subscription, plaintiff tendered to her the amount of capital stock in said corporation which her subscription bore to the total capitalization thereof. That no representations other than contained in said agreement were made to said defendant for the purpose of inducing her to sign the same.

"At the trial it was stipulated that the name of defendant Sibley did not appear in the articles of incorporation of said company as one of the stockholders thereof, nor in any of the papers or proceedings relating to the organization of the company, or subsequent increase of the capital stock thereof. Notwithstanding this fact, the court found that by virtue of said agreement defendant Sibley was a subscriber to the capital stock of the corporation.

"Appellant's chief contention is that this finding is not supported by the evidence, and that by reason of such stipulation plaintiff is estopped from claiming defendant to be a subscriber to the capital stock, for the reason that her name did not appear as a stockholder in the articles of incorporation. In support of such claim appellant cites the case of M. & S. V. R. R. Co. v. Hildreth, 53 Cal. 123. In that case the action was by a corporation to recover assessments levied upon stock alleged to have been owned by the party sued. The only point involved therein was the defendant's obligation to pay the assessments levied upon the stock, the ownership of which he disclaimed. In the case at bar, however, the obligation of defendant Sibley is not founded upon her ownership of stock in plaintiff corporation, nor upon any assessment levied thereon in accordance with the provisions of section 332 of the Civil Code; but such obligation rests solely and alone upon the written agreement and promise to pay the sum subscribed to be used in the construction of the pleasure pier and amusement buildings and structures connected therewith. Clearly, the contract is a valid one. Under the terms thereof, the payment of the amount subscribed did not depend upon the creation of the corporation; but she agreed to pay the same to the trustee named at any time after $40,000 had been subscribed for such purpose, upon demand therefor, in installments of 50 per cent. each, the second installment being payable not less than 60 days after the first payment. While she was entitled to the stock, delivery of which was tendered her, the question of her membership therein is wholly foreign to the controversy; plaintiff's right to recover, as we have seen, resting upon an express promise to pay, not upon an obligation due to the relation of stockholder. West v. Crawford, 80 Cal. 19, 21 Pac. 1123; San Joaquin L. & W. Co. v. Beecher, 101 Cal. 70, 35 Pac. 349. 'A stockholder may expressly agree to pay the amount of his subscription immediately, or at stated times, and thus relieve the corporation of the duty of making calls. He will be liable to pay upon such contract according to its terms.' Kohler v. Agassiz, 99 Cal. 9, 33 Pac. 741; California Southern Hotel Co. v. Callender, 94 Cal. 120, 29 Pac. 859, 28 Am. St. Rep. 99.

"Appellant also insists that, in the absence of an assignment of the agreement by the trustee to whom the subscription was made payable, plaintiff cannot maintain suit to enforce payment. In view of the findings heretofore referred to, and the further finding that said agreement 'was made solely for the benefit of plaintiff,' no formal assignment was necessary. That plaintiff was not named in the agreement is immaterial, for, notwithstanding such fact, it clearly appears that the subscription was made for its benefit and in contemplation of its creation. 'In legal effect, the promise of defendant was to pay to the plaintiff corporation when organized.' Marysville, etc., Co. v. Johnson, 93 Cal. 538, 29 Pac. 126, 27 Am. St. Rep. 215. Plaintiff was the real party in interest, and therefore could maintain the action. Code Civ. Proc. § 367; Western Development Co. v. Emery, 61 Cal. 611. Its right in this respect is unaffected by the fact that the Ocean Park Bank, as trustee of an express trust, might also, by virtue of the provisions of section 369, Code Civ. Proc., have maintained a like suit.

"There is no merit in the contention that the calls or demands as made were for a less sum than 50 per cent. of the amount subscribed. Defendant could not be prejudiced by such fact. Moreover, she, having voluntarily paid all of her subscription except a balance of $700, is in no position to insist that she be released from her obligation upon the ground that such balance is less than 50 per cent. of the whole sum subscribed.

"A number of objections are urged to the rulings of the court in admitting testimony; but they are largely based upon appellant's theory that the contract was nonenforceable by reason of the fact that defendant's name was omitted from the articles of incorporation, and are fully answered in discussing that point.

"There was no abuse of discretion on the part of the court in reserving its decision upon defendant's motion for a nonsuit. It was properly denied.

"A careful examination of all the points to which our attention has been called in appellant's brief discloses no prejudicial error, and, as said by this court in Los Angeles National Bank v. Vance, 98 Pac. 58, 'upon every principle of right and justice, as well as upon authority,' the judgment and order should be, and are, affirmed."

CRAIG v. SUPERIOR COURT OF SAN JOAQUIN COUNTY et al. (Sac. 1,741.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 155*)—OFFICERS—REMOVAL—JURISDICTION.

Under Const. art. 20, § 16, relating to the terms of office of any officer or commissioner, which was amended on November 6, 1906, by adding the proviso that, in case of any officer or employé of any municipality governed under a legally adopted charter, the provisions of such charter with reference to the term of office or dismissal of such officer shall control, where the provisions of a freeholders' charter provide for the removal of municipal officers by the municipal authorities, the superior court has no jurisdiction to remove such officers under Pen. Code, § 758, and the following sections, providing for the removal of civil officers, otherwise than by impeachment, for certain misdemeanors.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 185*)—OFFICERS—POLICE DEPARTMENT—REMOVAL—AUTHORITY.

Const. art. 11, § 8½, provides that freeholders' charters may provide for the regulation and government of boards of police commissioners and the municipal police force. Stockton City Charter (St. 1905, p. 851), § 131, places the police and fire department under a board of three commissioners elected by the city council; section 135 (page 851) provides that the officers and members of such departments shall be appointed by the board, and prohibits removals except for cause established after due investigation and trial as therein provided. Section 136 (St. 1889, p. 610) authorizes the board to hear all charges against any officer or member and to take such action thereon as is most conducive to the efficiency of the departments, and section 143 (St. 1905, p. 852) makes any member or employé guilty of any legal offense, inefficiency, etc., liable to reprimand, suspension, or dismissal. Charter, § 32, defines the duties of the mayor and requires him to lay before the council or city or district attorney any misconduct or neglect of official duty which he may discover. Held, that the charter provisions contemplated that the police and fire commissioners should have exclusive authority to dismiss members of the police and fire departments pursuant to such provisions, so that the superior court had no jurisdiction of proceedings to remove a policeman of the city of Stockton under Pen. Code, § 758, and the following sections, providing for the removal of civil officers for certain misdemeanors in office.

In Bank. Application for writ of prohibition, prayed to be directed against the Superior Court of San Joaquin County and Hon. W. B. Nutter, Judge thereof. Writ issued.

Clary & Louttit, for petitioner. Geo. F. McNoble and Max Grimm, for respondents.

ANGELLOTTI, J. Plaintiff was at the time of the institution of this proceeding captain of police and a policeman of the city of Stockton. The object of the proceeding was to obtain a writ of prohibition restraining the superior court of San Joaquin county from trying him upon an accusation presented to said court by the grand jury of San Joaquin county under the provisions of section 758 et seq. of the Penal Code, providing for the removal of civil officers otherwise than by impeachment, charging him with certain misdemeanors in office. The sections referred to provide for an accusation in writing made to the superior court by the grand jury against any district, county, township, or municipal officer, for willful or corrupt misconduct in office, notice to the accused, a trial by jury, and, in the event of conviction, a judgment "that the defendant be removed from office." The main claim of plaintiff and the only one that it will be necessary to consider is that, by reason of certain provisions of the Stockton charter, the exclusive jurisdiction in the matter of the removal from office of officers, members, and employés of the police and fire departments of the city of Stockton is with the board of police and fire commissioners of that city, and that the superior court is therefore without jurisdiction in the matter of this accusation.

In the case of Coffey v. Superior Court, 147 Cal. 525, 82 Pac. 75, a similar contention was made on behalf of the chief of police of the city of Sacramento, and it was held that the provisions of the Sacramento charter were not such as to show an intention to confer exclusive jurisdiction on the city trustees, the official body vested in that city with the control of the police department; the court saying: "There is nowhere in the charter any provision which in terms confers exclusive jurisdiction upon the board of trustees to proceed against and remove municipal officers, nor is there apparent in any of the charter provisions an intention that its provisions should supersede the provisions of the general law as found in the sections of the Penal Code relative to the removal of delinquent officials from office."

Subsequent to the decision in the Coffey Case, viz., on November 6, 1906, section 16 of article 20 of the state Constitution, relating to terms of office, was amended by adding the following proviso: "Provided, however, that in the case of any officer or employé of any municipality governed under a legally adopted charter, the provisions of such charter with reference to the tenure of office or the dismissal from office of any such officer or employé shall control." This amendment was in line with what was declared in Dinan v. Superior Court, 6 Cal. App. 221, 91 Pac. 808, to be "the policy of the state, and the tendency of the late decisions and constitutional amendments to broaden the scope of municipal corporations governed by charters as to their own affairs, to allow them to govern themselves, and to prescribe their own rules and regulations as to affairs which are purely municipal." There can be no serious question that the object of this constitutional provision was to make it clear that provisions of a freeholders' charter should control in the matter of the dismissal from office of any officer or employé of a municipality, and it was very properly recognized in the opinion of the learned District Court of Appeal in this proceeding that such provisions "would not control" if such an officer or employé can be removed by the superior court under the sections of the Penal Code heretofore referred to, where the charter provisions contemplate that the whole matter of removals shall be in the hands of the appropriate municipal authority. The question, then, is whether the charter provisions of the city of Stockton do so contemplate.

It is to be borne in mind that section 8½ of article 11 of the Constitution provides that it shall be competent to provide in freeholders' charters, "(3) for the manner in which, the times at which, and the terms for which the members of the boards of police commissioners shall be elected or appointed; and for the constitution, regulation, compensation, and government of such boards and of the municipal police force." By the charter of Stockton, the police and fire departments are placed under the management of a board of three commissioners, elected by the city council. Section 131, Charter; St. 1905, p. 851. Section 135 of the charter provides: "The officers, members and employés of the police and fire departments shall be appointed by the board, but no appointment or removal shall be made for political purposes, nor shall any removal be made except for cause established to the satisfaction of the board after due investigation and trial, as herein provided." St. 1905, p. 851. By section 136 of the charter (St. 1889, p. 610) the board is invested with power to hear and determine all complaints of misconduct, inefficiency, "or other charges" against any officer, member, or employé, and "to take such action thereon as shall be most conducive to the maintenance, discipline and efficiency of said departments," and section 143 (St. 1905, p. 852) provides that any officer, member or employé "guilty of any legal offense, inefficiency," etc., "shall be liable to be punished by reprimand, forfeit of pay for a specified time, suspension or dismissal from the department of which he may be an officer, member or employé."

It appears to us that these provisions very clearly show the intention that the matter of employment, retention, and dismissal of officers, members, and employés of the police and fire departments of the city of Stockton shall be in the hands of the police and fire commissioners of that city, their control thereof to be exercised in accord with the provisions of the charter, free of any interference at the hands of any other authority as long as their acts are in accord with the charter provisions. Not only are they given the management of those departments and expressly invested with power to hear and determine all complaints for any cause, and to take such action as, in their judgment, shall be most conducive to "the maintenance, discipline and efficiency of said departments," including not only the removal of the offender (which is the only penalty under the Penal Code provision), but also the imposition of a lesser penalty, such as suspension, forfeit of pay, or reprimand, if they deem it conducive to the best interests of the department to which the offender belongs, but it is further expressly explicitly provided that no "removal" of any officer, member, or employé shall be made "except for cause established to the satisfaction of the board, after due investigation and trial." It would be difficult to express more clearly than is done by these various provisions that the commissioners shall be the sole judges in the matter of complaints against any officer, member, or employé of these departments, involving simply the question whether he should be removed from his office or employment. Of course, as was said by the District Court of Appeal, in Dinan v. Superior Court, supra, if any such officer or employé should commit an offense against the laws of the state, "he would be subject to trial under such laws," and to punishment thereunder; but the provisions of the Penal Code here involved "deal only with the removal from office for misconduct in office"—a matter which, under our Constitution, so far as officers and members of the police department of the municipality are concerned, may properly be regulated by the provisions of a freeholders' charter of such municipality.

The provisions of the Sacramento charter involved in Coffey v. Superior Court, supra, were essentialy different from those of the Stockton charter that we have referred to. The general intent to invest exclusive control in the municipal authorities was nowhere apparent, and the charter was entirely destitute of any provision to the effect that officers or members of the police department should not be removed except for cause "established to the satisfaction of the board." Under these circumstances a section of the Sacramento charter relative to the duties of the mayor, requiring him, among other things, to lay before the "board of trustees, city attorney, or district attorney" any official defalcation, willful neglect of duty, or official misconduct of an officer which he may discover, "in order that the public interests may be protected and the person in default be proceeded against according to law," was given some weight in determining whether it was intended by the charter framers that the jurisdiction of the board of trustees in the matter of removal should be exclusive. A very similar provision is to be found in section 32 of the Stockton charter, defining various duties of the mayor, it being provided that such information shall be laid before "the council, city attorney, or district attorney," and much reliance is placed on this provision by counsel representing the defendants. But we think that, in view of the presence in that charter of the other provisions to which we have referred, provisions which substantially, in the language of the Coffey Case, "in terms confer exclusive jurisdiction upon" the board of police and fire commissioners in the matter of removals from the police and fire departments, this provision is not important in the consideration of the question before us. There is ample room for the application of this provision without applying it to the matter of removal of members of the police and fire departments, to which matter, in view of the other provisions, it apparently has no application.

The case before us, in its material facts, does not differ from the case of Dinan v. Superior Court, 6 Cal. App. 217, 91 Pac. 806, in which the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco was restrained from trying a similar accusation against the chief of police of that city and county, on the ground that the charter thereof provided the exclusive method in such cases. There is no substantial difference between the provisions of such charter and the charter of Stockton in regard to such matters. The San Francisco charter gave the same ample powers to the police commissioners as does the Stockton charter to the police and fire board, and it was provided that "no member of the department shall be subject to dismissal for any cause, * * * except after a fair and impartial trial before the commissioners." This provision occupied the same relative position in the charter of San Francisco as does the provision against removal in the Stockton charter, being in that portion thereof devoted to the powers and duties of the commissioners invested with control of the police department. It means the same thing as does the Stockton provision. We entirely approve the views expressed by the District Court of Appeal in that case.

From what we have said, it follows that the superior court of San Joaquin county is without jurisdiction to entertain the accusation against petitioner.

Let a peremptory writ of prohibition issue as prayed.

Sloss, J., dissenting.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court. Orange County; Z. B. West, Judge.

Action by the Providence Jewelry Company, a corporation, against A. Nagel. Defendant had judgment, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

F. C. Spencer, for appellant. Tipton & Cailor, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The district court of appeal for the second district having failed to agree on a decision in this case it was certified to this court for determination. The following opinion written by Justice Allen of that court and concurred in by Justice Taggart, is approved and adopted as the opinion of this court:

"Appeal by plaintiff upon a bill of exceptions from a judgment rendered in favor of defendant. The action was one for the price and value of merchandise of the market value of $379.30 alleged to have been sold and delivered by plaintiff to defendant. The answer denies the sale or the acceptance of the goods upon any promise or agreement to pay the said sum of money or any price or at all.

"We forbear any discussion of questions raised as to the sufficiency of the evidence to support certain averments in an answer denominated a separate and distinct answer, for the reason that all of the testimony adduced upon the trial, the admissibility or the effect of which is questioned by the specifications, was admissible under the general issue raised by the denial. Wendling, etc., Co. v. Glenwood, etc., Co., 153 Cal. 411 [95 Pac. 1029]. Upon the trial of the action, the court found that the allegations in the plaintiff's complaint which averred the sale and delivery of the goods under a contract of purchase were untrue. Appellant specifies as error the incorrectness of this finding. The record discloses that upon the trial plaintiff offered in evidence an order received by plaintiff for the shipment of the goods mentioned. The essential portions of this order were as follows:

" 'Following is a list of goods for our $379.30 order:

" 'On condition that the purchaser complies with all the terms of this order at the time and in the manner stated hereon, promptly meets any obligations entered into with the Providence Jewelry Company, uses ordinary diligence in the sale of these goods, will sell nothing at a less profit than is usually charged on jewelry, and will make out and send to the Providence Jewelry Company, by mail quarterly, a report showing the goods on hand, at which time he will take advantage of the exchange privilege herein set forth, the Providence Jewelry Company guarantees that the gross profitts from the sale of the goods purchased herein shall be fifty per cent. of the amount of this order, and if the profits do not amount to fifty per cent. as above provided, the Providence Jewelry Company will buy back and pay the original invoice price for all goods remaining on hand unsold, or will pay by Chicago or New York draft a sufficient amount to make up the deficiency, at the expiration of this agreement. Terms of payment: Six per cent. discount for cash in fifteen days, or one-fourth of the amount due in six months, one-fourth in eight months, one-fourth in ten months, one-fourth in twelve months, without interest. The above terms of credit will only be allowed if acceptances to our order are given within fifteen days from date of invoice. Otherwise terms are net cash 30 days. Same terms shall apply on all re-orders for these goods.' Here follows an itemized statement of the goods, with the catalogue price, occupying several pages of manuscript, followed by the following:

" 'The Providence Jewelry Co. will replace free of charge any article not wearing satisfactorily. Exchange privilege. Any goods contained in this order may be exchanged for different styles, patterns or other articles purchased in this order, any time within three years and after compliance with terms of settlement. The Providence Jewelry Co. will send purchaser of this order 500 advertising cards, 500 commutation cards and 100 silver spoons, wild-rose pattern, extra plate, for advertising purposes to be distributed as follows: Purchaser shall furnish names of 100 persons, to each of whom the Providence Jewelry Company will mail three advertising cards and an order on purchaser for one spoon; each order when properly filled out with the name and address of three persons, to each of whom the holder of the order has delivered an advertising card, shall be good for one spoon at purchaser's store. Additional spoons will be given by purchaser with every $10 purchase of merchandise at his store. Purchaser agrees to account for spoons by sending all receipted orders to the Providence Jewelry Co. Date Feb. 1, 1907.

" 'Providence Jewelry Co., Rock Island, Ill.

F. O. B. transportation companies, either at distributing point or at factory point, the above described goods, and no others, on the terms and conditions herein set forth, and no others, all of which I have read and found complete and satisfactory.

"'[Signed] A. Nagel.

"'Providence Jewelry Co. will send their bond in the sum of $300 to the merchant before he commences selling their goods.'

"It further appears in evidence upon the part of plaintiff that under this order the goods were shipped to defendant, and the bond of $300 conditioned upon the faithful performance of the contract was forwarded by plaintiff on February 7th; that on February 21st Nagel notified the company that the jewelry had arrived; that he had sent the names of the families some days ago; that he was in a dilemma as to whether he had made a mistake, and, 'if so, I am in for it.' Thereafter plaintiff wrote defendant a letter the effect of which was to notify him that plaintiff would insist upon the contract as one of sale. It further appears that the acceptances mentioned in the order were forwarded to Nagel, who, in reply, notified the plaintiff that he refused to sign the acceptances.

"There was evidence offered upon the part of defendant tending to show that this written order offered in evidence by plaintiff was signed under the following circumstances: That the representative of plaintiff called at defendant's place of business and proffered to put in a stock of jewelry in a case about four feet long; that he would be around every three months and check up the goods that had been sold by defendant and replace them with new goods; that he would send a case so that when the defendant got ready to turn the jewelry over, in case he did not want to handle the jewelry, they could pay him back the freight; that he was induced to sign the order because the representative told him he had nothing to lose in this proposition, that plaintiff carried the stock; that the representative had no samples of the goods, nothing but a catalogue; that this representative made the selection of all the goods included in the order and inserted the list in the order after it was signed and delivered; that, when defendant received the goods, he did not open the package, but shipped it shortly thereafter by express to the plaintiff, who refused to receive it from the express company, in whose hands it still remains subject to plaintiff's order. This he did for the reason that he could see from the correspondence that they claimed it was a sale instead of a commission proposition; that when they sent him the four acceptances he then discovered that it was an attempt to effect a sale; that he also returned the guaranty bond. Another witness in behalf of defendant, who was present, testified that the representative of plaintiff told the defendant that, if he did not want to keep the business up, he could return the goods; that the case in which the goods were held and the goods all would belong to plaintiff and that Nagel was to pay only for just what he sold; that the representative was to come around every three months collecting and everything that was tarnished he would replace with new goods; that the representative picked out the goods, and said, if they did not sell well, they would make a change, because they wanted the goods sold; that on these representations he handed the paper introduced by plaintiff as the order, but then incomplete, to Nagel, and told him to sign it so that they would ship the goods, and they would put them in and it would be practically the same as on commission; that Nagel signed the paper and handed it back to him, 'and I don't think he had time to read it. He just wrote his name across the back and handed it to him.'

"We are of opinion that it cannot be said that there was no testimony to justify the findings of the court, that this transaction did not amount to a sale. The written order upon its face would indicate that an absolute sale was not intended; in fact, it is so adroitly worded that the true intent can scarcely be gathered from the terms of the instrument. It is such a paper as might well trap the unwary, and, when its peculiar terms are considered in connection with the testimony offered by the defendant that it was executed under a direct representation and statement that the title to the goods did not pass and that they were to be received by defendant and sold upon commission, there is sufficient to warrant the finding of the court.

"The objection interposed by plaintiff to oral testimony in relation to the circumstances under which the order was signed were not well taken. As said in Maxson v. Llewelyn, 122 Cal. 199 [54 Pac. 734]. The receipt of such testimony is not to vary or contradict the writing, 'but it goes upon the idea that the writing offered in evidence was not the instrument of the party whose name is signed to it, that it was procured under such circumstances by the other side as estops that side from using it or relying on its contents; not that it may be contradicted by oral testimony, but that it may be shown by such testimony that it cannot be lawfully used against the party whose name is signed to it.' The testimony of the defendant's witnesses which was accepted by the court as true clearly indicates that the minds of the parties did not meet, that there was in fact no contract between them as appears in the written order, and that the same was executed under such circumstances as would estop plaintiff from claiming any benefit thereunder. It seems clear that a fraud was practiced upon defendant by this representative of plaintiff, and that his signature to the order was procured by misrepresentation and fraud sufficient to vitiate the instrument. The defendant had a right to rely upon the representations of plaintiff's agent that the written instrument presented for signature was but an order to send the goods for sale on commission, and plaintiff, in an action between the original parties, is not in a position to say that, having practiced this fraud, defendant must still be bound because he did not distrust plaintiff and signed without an independent examination. We do not think the rule that the injured party must show that he has availed himself of the means of information existing at the time of the transaction before he will be heard to say that he was deceived by the misrepresentations of the other party should be carried to the extent of holding that, under the circumstances of this case, defendant should be bound by a written instrument at variance with the terms of the actual agreement, and which he was induced to sign by misrepresentation upon the part of plaintiff. Los Angeles, etc., Co. v. New Liverpool Salt Co., 150 Cal. 27 [87 Pac. 1029]. We are not prepared to say that the evidence showing fraud in this case was not clear and convincing. The trial court appears to have given it that effect and with its judgment we are content.

Ex parte ROBERTS. (Cr. 1,576.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 13*)—STATUTORY PROVISIONS—CONSTRUCTION.

Where a statute begins, "all persons," etc., and proceeds to state several apparently independent offenses and sets off each clause defining such offenses by appropriate punctuation, ending with a provision imposing a punishment for its violation, the language relating exclusively to each offense is not affected by that describing the other offenses; each being construed as if it stood alone, and was read in connection with the general words applying to all the offenses created.

2. GAMING (§ 72½,* New, vol. 8, Key No. Series) — OFFENSES — RECEIVING MONEY AS STAKEHOLDER—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Pen. Code, § 337a, makes every person who receives, registers, records, or forwards any money wagered by or for any other person or sells pools upon the result of any contest of skill, speed, etc., of man or beast or upon any chance or contingency, or who, being the owner, lessee, or occupant of any building, etc., knowingly permits the same to be used for any of those purposes or therein employs any device for recording wagers, etc., or becomes a custodian for gain, hire, or reward of any money wagered upon such result, punishable by imprisonment. Held, that the first clause created a separate offense and forbade any person from receiving money wagered by or for another upon any contingent event.

3. GAMING (§ 83*) — PROSECUTIONS — COMPLAINT—CONSTRUCTION.

A complaint charging that accused without consideration or reward became the custodian of $10, then and there wagered by two others with each other upon the result of a horse race, only charged an offense under the first clause of the statute, and not under the last clause punishing one who as owner, etc., permits any room to be used for the purposes stated in the first clause.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Gaming, Cent. Dig. § 219; Dec. Dig. § 83.*]

4. GAMING (§ 63*)—STATUTES — REPEAL — INCONSISTENT CLAUSE.

Since the first clause of the statute requires that the person receiving the money must have received it as custodian for the parties to the wager in order to constitute an offense, irrespective of whether the stakeholder owns or leases a place for such business or receives a reward, while the second clause in effect permits the receipt of wagered money, if not received for gain in some of the places named therein, the latter clause is inconsistent with part of the first clause forbidding the receiving of wagered money as a stakeholder under any circumstances, so as to make it inoperative, under the rule that, where a later clause in a statute is irreconcilably inconsistent with a preceding clause, the later clause repeals the former as far as inconsistent therewith.

In Bank. In the matter of the application of W. W. Roberts for a writ of habeas corpus. Writ granted, and petitioner ordered released from custody.

Carroll Cook and Henry Ach, for petitioner. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Raymond Benjamin, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

SHAW, J. The petitioner was arrested upon a complaint which it is claimed alleges a violation of section 337a of the Penal Code. He contends that it does not charge any public offense whatever, and upon that contention he has sued out a writ of habeas corpus. It is admitted that no crime is charged against him, unless it be under the aforesaid section.

The charge in substance is that, without consideration, gain, hire, or reward, at some place in San Francisco not described, he became the custodian and depositary of $10 in money, then and there bet and wagered by two other persons with each other, upon the result of a horse race then about to take place. Although comprising but a single sentence, section 337a of the Penal Code creates many distinct offenses. It begins by the phrase "every person," and each subsequent clause is connected therewith by appropriate punctuation. It is written in the disjunctive throughout, and the several offenses therein described are apparently as distinct and independent of each other as if they had been enacted in separate sections. In general, when such form of expression is used, the effect of the language pertaining exclusively to each offense described is not affected or modified by the words used solely in describing the other offenses, but the description of each is to be construed as if it stood alone, and were read in connection with the general words applying to all. The section contains two clauses which it is necessary to compare and construe, in order to determine the sufficiency of the charge. Separated from the other parts of the section and placed in paragraphs in the order in which they occur, they are as follows: "Every person * * * who receives, registers, records or forwards, or purports or pretends to receive, register, record, or forward, in any manner whatsoever, any money, thing or consideration of value, bet or wagered, or offered for the purpose of being bet or wagered by or for any other person, or sells pools upon any such result; * * * or who, being the owner, lessee, or occupant of any room, shed, tenement, tent, booth or building, float or vessel, or part thereof, or of any grounds within this state, knowingly permits the same to be used or occupied for any of these purposes, or therein keeps, exhibits or employs any device or apparatus for the purpose of recording or registering such bets or wagers, or the selling of such pools, or becomes the custodian or depositary for gain, hire or reward of any money, property or thing of value, staked, wagered or pledged, or to be wagered or pledged upon any such result: * * * is punishable by imprisonment in a county jail or state prison for a period not less than thirty days and not exceeding one year." The words "such result" in these clauses refers to a previous clause reading as follows: "Upon the result of any trial or contest of skill, speed, or power of endurance, of man or beast or between men or beasts, or upon the result of any lot, chance, casualty, unknown or contingent event whatsoever." The language of the first clause in order, relating to the receiving of money or things bet or wagered, is not in itself ambiguous or uncertain in meaning. As plainly as words can declare, it forbids every person from receiving money bet or wagered by or for any other person upon the result of a horse race, or upon any contingent or unknown event. It may require some stretch of credulity to believe that the Legislature could have enacted a penal law making an act which may be so trivial a felony, but, when a reading of the act discloses that it has been enacted, there can be no misunderstanding of its meaning or effect, if it stands alone and without qualification.

The complaint plainly shows that it was not intended to charge a violation of the second clause, but exindustria, to exclude that clause from consideration. It does not aver that the petitioner was the owner, occupant, or lessee of any place of the kind specified in that clause, or at all, and it states that he became a custodian and depositary of the money "not for gain, hire or reward," thus eliminating the conditions essential to the commission of a crime under the second clause. If it describes an offense at all, it is an offense defined in the first clause. In effect, one who receives money of another becomes the custodian thereof, and conversely, one who becomes a custodian of money receives it. If the rule that the exact language of the statute need not be followed in charging an offense and that words of like import will suffice, particularly in a complaint for a preliminary examination, is applied, the complaint in substance charges that the petitioner received the money alleged to have been wagered. If this be so, the complaint charges an offense under the first clause, if that clause is not modified, qualified, or partially repealed by the second clause. Whether or not it is so affected is the only question to be decided.

To constitute a criminal acceptance of such money under the first clause, it is necessary that it be received for the use of the parties to the bet or wager, and not as the due or right of the person receiving it. He must take it as their property, and not as his own. If he receives it in payment of a debt or as a gift, he commits no offense, and the fact that it was the identical money or thing which had been wagered by the party or parties from whom he received it is immaterial. In that case he would be no party to the bet or wager which the law intends to denounce as criminal. In order to constitute a crime under the first clause, therefore, the person receiving the money must do so as custodian or depositary for the parties to the bet or wager and must act as such for some period of time, however brief. If that clause alone is considered, it would be immaterial that he does not keep, lease, or own a place for such business or that he receives it neither for gain, hire, or reward. Under the second clause, it is necessary that both of these elements shall exist to constitute the crime there defined. The second clause in effect excepts and permits all receiving which is not for gain, hire, or reward and which is not done in some one of the places mentioned by one who uses or occupies such place for that purpose. It is therefore to that extent inconsistent with that part of the first clause which forbids the receiving of such money for the use of the parties to the bet or wager anywhere, or under any circumstances. (We speak now of one who receives the money, and not of one who merely owns or leases such a place and permits its use by others for such purposes.) The rule applicable to a statute in which a later clause is found to be irreconcilably inconsistent with a preceding clause is that the clause later in position operates as a repeal of the former clause, so far as it is inconsistent. "The part of a statute later in position in the same act or section is deemed later in time, and prevails over repugnant parts occurring before, though enacted to take effect at the same time. This rule is applicable where no reasonable construction will harmonize the parts." 1 Lewis' Suth. Stat. Const. § 280. See, also, Emeric v. Alvarado, 64 Cal. 609, 2 Pac. 418; Pol. Code, § 4484; Harrington v. Rochester, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 551; Branagan v. Dulaney, 8

Colo. 412, 8 Pac. 699; Powers v. Barney, 5 Blatchf. 203, No. 11,361; Ex parte Thomas, 113 Ala. 1, 21 South. 370; Hand v. Stapleton, 135 Ala. 162, 167, 33 South. 689; Van Horn v. State, 46 Neb. 77, 64 N. W. 365; Omaha, etc., Co. v. Kragscow, 47 Neb. 611, 66 N. W. 658. Applying this rule, it is clear that the provision of the first clause, so far as it relates to the mere receiving of money or property bet or wagered, is practically inoperative, and that the only conditions under which the receiving alone will be criminal are those mentioned in the second clause. As the complaint against the petitioner expressly negatives the existence of some of these conditions, and fails to aver the others, and does not charge that he either registered, recorded, or forwarded the money received, as specified in the first clause, it fails to charge an offense under either clause of the section. The petitioner is entitled to his discharge.

What we have said concerning the inconsistency between the two clauses applies only to the part of the first clause relating to the "receiving" of money or things bet or wagered. It has no necessary bearing upon so much of the first clause as relates to a person who "records, registers, or forwards" such money or things. Those acts are different from merely receiving and involve other elements, intents, and results.

It is ordered that the petitioner be released from custody under the warrant, and that his bail upon the issuance of the writ herein be exonerated.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.

HENSHAW, J. I concur in the judgment for the following reasons:

Section 337a of our Penal Code is in all essentials (saving that of the penalty prescribed) an exact re-enactment of section 351 of the Penal Code of the state of New York. It is a familiar rule that, when one state enacts a statute taken from the books of a sister state, the construction which the courts of the latter state have put upon the statute is of great value and of high persuasive force in its interpretation. If a reading of this statute did not clearly disclose, as I think it does, that its principal, if not its sole, object is to prevent bookmaking and pool selling, the construction which the courts of New York have put upon it would resolve all possible doubt. The courts of New York were called upon to consider this law in the light of a provision of their Constitution of 1894, which provided (article 1, § 9): "Nor shall any lottery, or the sale of lottery tickets, pool selling, bookmaking, or any other kind of gambling hereafter be authorized or allowed within this state, and the Legislature shall pass appropriate laws to prevent offenses against any of the provisions of this section." No such provision is found in the Constitution of California, and, as this state adopts the common law where the statutes are silent, it follows, as at common law, that the mere laying of a bet or wager upon an indifferent subject is not illegal. "The distinction has always been observed," says Wharton, Criminal Law, par. 2, p. 446, "between betting or gambling and maintaining a gambling house or a place to which people resort to gamble. While at common law wagers on indifferent subjects were legal and might be enforced, a gambling house or a resort for gamblers was a public nuisance, for which its keeper might be indicted." And the Court of Appeals of New York, upon this subject has said (People v. Stedeker, 175 N. Y. 57, 67 N. E. 132): "The same distinction has obtained in this state, where ordinary betting has never been made a crime, * * * while the keeping of a gambling house, selling lottery tickets, and the profession of a common gambler have been subject to severe punishment." This opinion, it is pointed out in People ex rel. Collins v. McLaughlin, 128 App. Div. 599, 113 N. Y. Supp. 188, was rendered in 1903, eight years after the enactment of section 351 of the New York Penal Code in practically its present form. In the last-cited case the defendant was charged with a violation of the section in having "received" $5 at the race course of the Brooklyn Jockey Club as the result of a bet which he had made upon a horse race; the bet having been made and accepted orally with one John Rall. The court declared in terms that section 351 of the Penal Code was intended to prevent bookmaking and pool selling; that is, the business of taking and recording bets and wagers and acts which are incidental to that business, and does not make it a crime to receive a sum of money as the result of a bet upon a horse race which was made and accepted orally. We may pause here to say that it would certainly be a singular law which would make it no crime to lay such a wager and for the winner to receive the money, and yet would make it a crime if one became a stakeholder of such wager without gain, hire, or reward. The Court of Appeals of New York in People ex rel. Lichtenstein v. Langan, 196 N. Y. 260, 89 N. E. 921, construing this law, reaffirmed the declaration in People v. Stedeker, supra, saying that "in this state an ordinary bet has never been made a crime, while the keeping of a gambling house has been subject to severe punishment. The laying of odds standing alone does not, therefore, constitute a crime. If a man should offer to bet the ladies of his party a pair of gloves to a box of candy, it would be the laying of odds and publishing the same. To hold him to be a bookmaker would, in my judgment, be a departure from the rule which gives to the terms of the statute their ordinary and accepted meaning, and would be a construction which was not within the contemplation of the Legislature. The vice of bookmaking chiefly consists in soliciting and in the inducing the public to take chances in the carefully figured and planned scheme of the bookmaker, and this, in order to be profitable to him, requires the writing out of the list of the odds laid on some paper or material so that they could be seen by those who were solicited to invest."

With the light thus thrown upon the meaning, the purpose, the scope, and intent of the statute, the question immediately under consideration is easily answered: Is a man who without consideration to him paid, or to be paid, and not for gain, hire, or reward, becomes the custodian and depositary of a sum of money already wagered between two citizens, guilty of a felony? The very language of the law is against such a construction. And, bearing in mind that at common law the laying of a wager upon such an event was not a crime, the mere depositary of the money or things wagered himself could not be guilty of a crime. The language of section 337a in effect declares that "the custodian or depositary for gain, hire or reward is alone guilty." In other words, the law is directed against one who for gain, hire, or reward has become such a depositary, who thus is engaged in a business violating the spirit of the law aimed against pool selling, bookmaking, and professional gambling. Elsewhere the section under consideration makes one guilty of a felony "who receives, registers, records or forwards, or purports or pretends to receive, register, record or forward in any manner whatsoever any money, thing, or consideration of value bet or wagered, or offered for the purpose of being bet or wagered by or for any other person, or sells pools upon any such result." A reading of this language, with its context, makes it apparent that the "receiving" there under consideration does not make the mere reception as a stakeholder a crime, but it is a receiving in aid of the condemned purposes of bookmaking and pool selling, a receiving which is a part of the scheme of registering, recording and forwarding the money bet, in aid of the actual bookmaker or pool seller. Not only is this quite apparent from the context, but it is the precise construction which has been put upon the language in New York, where the attempt was made to convict one who had received $5 as the result of a wager. In People ex rel. Collins v. McLaughlin, 128 App. Div. 599, 113 N. Y. Supp. 188, a historical review is had of the legislation in New York upon this subject, and the reasons for the enactment of this especial provision are given. In brief, it appears that bookmaking and pool selling upon race tracks in the state of New York were not illegal, though it was a felony to sell pools or make books elsewhere than at an authorized race track. The poolroom people outside of the race tracks "thereupon devised a scheme by which they claimed to be merely forwarders of the money deposited by betters with them. They pretended to receive the same as common carriers to send to the race tracks where it could be bet. This is clearly shown by the opinions in People v. Wynn [12 N. Y. Supp. 379], decided in December, 1890, affirmed on opinion below, 128 N. Y. 599 [28 N. E. 251], and People v. Fisher [17 N. Y. Supp. 162], decided in December, 1891." It was to meet this condition that the language which we have been considering was adopted in New York. Thus one who becomes a depositary of a thing wagered for the purpose of recording and forwarding the wager, and so aids the business of bookmaking and pool selling, or one who becomes a depositary of things wagered for hire, gain, and reward, and thus becomes a professional aid to gambling, are one, and both under the ban of the law. But as the law nowhere denounces as criminal the mere laying of a wager, so it would be preposterous to say that it denounced as a criminal one who became the depositary of such wager, not by way of aiding the poolselling business, and not for hire or reward, but as a mere matter of accommodation to the better.

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 157*)—LEASE—IMPROVEMENTS—TIME.

Under Civ. Code, § 1657, providing that, where no time is specified for the performance of an act, a reasonable time is allowed, where a lease requiring the lessor to make improvements is silent as to time, they must be made within a reasonable time.

2. TRIAL (§ 395*)—FINDINGS—SUFFICIENCY.

A general finding that "no allegation contained in the amended complaint or in the answer thereto is true, save and except as hereinbefore found," is too vague and indefinite for any purpose.

3. HIGHWAYS (§ 44*)—"LOCATION."

The word "location," as used in Pol. Code, § 2689, relating to the establishment of highways, refers to proceedings designed to fix the line of the highway at a time prior to its actual construction and opening.

4. TRIAL (§ 396*) — FINDINGS — RESPONSIVENESS TO ISSUES—"LOCATED."

In an action to rescind a lease for failure of defendant lessor to make certain improvements before the commencement of the term, the answer alleged the pendency of proceedings to open and establish a road, and averred that the location of the improvements was to be fixed after the road had been definitely located through the land, and convenient to the road when it was opened and ready for travel. Held that, while the term "located" as applied to a road is of uncertain significance, and may refer to the fixing of the line which the road is to occupy or to the actual construction of the road, it was meant as used in the answer to describe the act of the public officials in determining the place which the road was to occupy, and hence a finding that the improvements were to be placed after the road was located "and built" was beyond the issues.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, San Luis Obispo County; E. P. Unangst, Judge.

Action by Victor H. Schwarting against Emory W. Carpenter. Judgment for defendant, and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

S. V. Wright and T. A. Norton, for appellant. W. H. Spencer, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. Action on the part of lessee to rescind a written lease, and recover moneys paid in advance on account of rental reserved therein. Judgment went for defendant, and the appeal is from an order of the court denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial.

By the terms of the lease, dated September 1, 1906, the premises, consisting of 340 acres of land, were demised for a period of five years, commencing on October 1, 1906. The lessor, defendant herein, covenanted that he would erect on the land a house of not less than five rooms, together with a barn, and furnish the materials for making other minor improvements; plaintiff agreeing to furnish the labor of one man in the performance of the work. The lease was silent as to the time when these improvements were to be made. On October 13, 1906, nothing having been done toward making the improvements, plaintiff served upon defendant a notice of his intention to rescind said contract of lease, and demanded the repayment of the amount which he had upon the execution of the lease paid to defendant on account of rental of the premises.

The grounds for rescission stated in said notice and in the complaint were the failure on the part of defendant to make the improvements called for in the lease, and that defendant had failed and omitted to deliver possession of the premises on October 1, 1906. The only questions requiring discussion here are those relating to the first ground. If there was no default by the lessor with respect to the improvements, the court's findings, sufficiently supported by the evidence, showed a good excuse for the failure to deliver possession at the beginning of the term.

As has been said, the lease was silent on this subject, and contained no express stipulation concerning the time when the improvements were to be made. In the absence of any other agreement, the lessor would have been obliged to perform the stipulated acts within a reasonable time. Civ. Code, § 1657. The complaint alleges an understanding that the improvements should be made prior to the commencement of the term, and further avers that with reasonable diligence the defendant could have completed said improvements before the commencement of said term. The answer denies all the allegations of the complaint. In addition, it alleges that on September 1, 1906, the county of San Luis Obispo was taking legal steps to open and establish a county road from Oceano to Pismo, passing through the lands described in the lease; that the plaintiff and the defendant agreed that the location of the improvements to be placed on the land by defendant would be fixed and determined "after said road had been definitely located through said land, and convenient to such road when the same was opened and ready for travel; that said road, and the line and route thereof through said land, was not definitely located until October 25, 1906." The finding was that the parties agreed "that the improvements * * * should be placed thereon as soon as the defendant could do so after a county road from Oceano to Pismo was located and built through said land; that said road through said land was not built through said land until on or after October 25, 1906." This was the only finding on the question of the time agreed upon for the erection of improvements. There was no specific finding on plaintiff's averments that such improvements were to be erected before the commencement of the term, and that with reasonable diligence the defendant could have completed them by that time. The general finding that "no allegation contained in the amended complaint or in the answer thereto is true, save and except as hereinbefore found," is "too vague and indefinite for any purpose." Perkins v. West Coast Lumber Co., 120 Cal. 27, 52 Pac. 118.

The judgment was evidently based upon the special finding regarding the agreed time for the making of the improvements. As to this the appellant contends, and we think rightly, that the finding is beyond the issues. The allegation of the answer is that the improvements were to be placed after the proposed road had been definitely located. The term "located," as applied to a road, is of uncertain significance. It may refer to the fixing of the line which the road is to occupy (Foster v. Park Com'rs, 133 Mass. 321; Turner v. Road Company, 33 Ind. 317); or to the actual construction of the road upon the ground (Moule v. Road Co., 6 How. Prac. [N. Y.] 37; Railroad Co. v. Jones, 2 Cold. [Tenn.] 574; Westfield Borough v. Tioga Co., 150 Pa. 152, 24 Atl. 700). Whether one or the other meaning is to be given depends upon the context. The word "location" appears in section 2689 of the Political Code, a part of the chapter relating to the establishment of highways. As there used, it plainly refers to proceedings designed to fix the line of the highway at a time prior to its actual construction and opening. The answer in this case undertook to describe proceedings under this very chapter. But, apart from this consideration, we think there can be no doubt that the word "located," as used in the answer, was meant to describe the act of the public officials in determining the place which the road was to occupy. The pleading alleges the pendency of proceedings by the county to open and establish a road. It states that the location of the improvements was to be fixed after the said road had been definitely located through said land, and convenient to the road when the same was opened and ready for travel. The addition of the adverb "definitely" is significant. It would have been useless if the word "located" had meant actually constructed. Again, the pleader himself distinguishes between the terms "located" and "opened and ready for travel." The only fair interpretation of defendant's answer is that he alleged an agreement whereby the erection of the improvements was to be deferred until the line of the proposed road should be definitely established and known, so that the improvements should be convenient to such road when the latter should be actually built.

The finding of the court was, however, that the parties agreed that the improvements should be erected as soon as the county road was located and built through said land, and that the road was not built until October 25, 1906. The effect of this finding was to excuse the delay of the defendant upon a ground not asserted in the answer. Whether the presence of a finding beyond the issues is ground for new trial need not be decided. The point is presented by the record in another way. The plaintiff objected to evidence of the time when the road was actually constructed, basing his objections specifically on the ground that the answer alleged that the improvements were to be erected "as soon as the county road should be located, not as soon as it should be built or constructed." The objection was overruled. This was error, and the error was clearly prejudicial, since it led directly to the making of a finding upon which the court obviously based its conclusion.

Numerous other points are made by the appellant, but we think the foregoing discussion disposes of the only matters of importance which seem likely to arise upon a new trial.

The order is reversed.

JENSEN v. DORR. (L. A. 2,441.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 28, 1910.)

1. Maritime Liens (§ 73*)—Attachment.

The attachment provided for by Code Civ. Proc. § 813 et seq., affording a special statutory procedure for the enforcement of liens upon vessels, and authorizing a writ of attachment, is entirely distinct from the ordinary attachment described in section 537, subd. 1 of which precludes an attachment against a resident defendant, where the debt is secured by a lien, unless the security has become valueless; the attachment under section 817, which provides that plaintiff may have the vessel attached as security for the satisfaction of any judgment that may be recovered, presupposing the existence of a lien, and being issuable only where there is such lien and for the purpose of aiding in its enforcement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Maritime Liens, Cent. Dig. §§ 113, 114; Dec. Dig. § 73.*]

2. Maritime Liens (§ 73*) — Attachment — Necessity for Affidavit.

As Code Civ. Proc. § 813 et seq., do not mention an affidavit for an attachment to enforce a maritime lien, none is required.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Maritime Liens, Cent. Dig. § 115; Dec. Dig. § 73.*]

3. Maritime Liens (§ 73*)—Attachment—Effect of Filing Affidavit.

No affidavit being required in such proceedings, the attachment could not be vitiated by plaintiffs' having filed a useless and superfluous affidavit, nor by the fact that such affidavit contained a misstatement regarding an immaterial matter.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Maritime Liens, Dec. Dig. § 73.*]

4. Maritime Liens (§ 73*)—Enforcement by Attachment — Improper Direction of Writ.

Code Civ. Proc. § 819, provides that on an attachment in foreclosing a lien upon a vessel the writ must be directed to the sheriff of the county to which the vessel lies, and require him to attach such vessel with its tackle, etc., and keep the same, etc., it being a special writ, giving authority to seize specific property only; and in such a proceeding a writ following the terms of the general attachment law (Code Civ. Proc. § 540), directing the sheriff to attach and safely keep all the property of defendant within his county, or so much thereof as may be sufficient to satisfy plaintiff's demand, is insufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Maritime Liens, Cent. Dig. § 115; Dec. Dig. § 73.*]

5. Maritime Liens (§ 73*)—Enforcement by Attachment — Improper Direction of Writ.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 823, providing that attachments on vessels may on motion be discharged in the same manner as attachments in other cases, and sections 556, 558, providing that a writ of attachment must be discharged if upon motion it appears that the writ was improperly or irregularly issued, a writ for a maritime attachment directed as provided by the general attachment law must be discharged, regardless of whether the sheriff did in fact levy on any property other than the vessel.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; T. L. Lewis, Judge.

Action by Lawrence Jensen against Fred Dorr. From an order denying defendant's motion to dissolve an attachment, he appeals. Reversed.

Wilbur Bassett, for appellant. Patterson Sprigg, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. Appeal by defendant from an order of the superior court of San Diego county denying his motion to dissolve an attachment. The complaint in the action was in 19 counts, each of which set up a cause of action for services or material furnished and used in the construction of the yacht "Yankee Girl," owned by the defendant, Dorr. The total sum demanded was $4,001.76, for which plaintiff claimed a lien upon said vessel, under the terms of section 813 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Upon the filing of the complaint, the plaintiff filed an affidavit, in the form prescribed by section 538 of the said Code, averring, among other things, that the payment of the contract in suit "has not been secured by any mortgage or lien upon real or personal property or any pledge upon personal property." At the same time an undertaking on attachment in the sum of $500 was filed. Thereupon, a writ of attachment, in the form prescribed by section 540, was issued out of said court to the sheriff of Los Angeles county, and said sheriff made return that he had attached the yacht "Yankee Girl," with its tackle, apparel, and furniture. Thereafter the defendant moved the court to dissolve and discharge the attachment upon the grounds: (1) That the attachment was improperly issued in that the contracts sued upon are alleged in the complaint to be secured by a lien upon personal property; (2) that the attachment was irregularly issued in that the affidavit is false in the statement that the amount sought to be recovered had not been secured by any lien upon personal property; and, (3) that the writ was irregularly issued in that it did not direct the sheriff to attach the vessel "Yankee Girl," with its tackle, apparel, and furniture, as provided in section 819 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The motion, as already stated, was denied, and the defendant appeals.

Under subdivision 1 of section 537 of the Code of Civil Procedure, an attachment can issue in an action against a resident defendant only where the debt is unsecured by lien, mortgage, or pledge, or where the security has become valueless. The requisite fact must appear by affidavit. Section 538. The first and second grounds of the motion to dissolve are based upon the proposition that the plaintiff's demand was, by virtue of section 813 of the Code of Civil Procedure, secured by a lien upon the vessel; such lien being antecedent to and independent of any seizure. The Great West v. Oberndorf, 57 Ill. 168; Bennett v. Beadle, 142 Cal. 239, 75 Pac. 843. From this the appellant draws the inferences that an attachment could not issue upon such secured debt, and that, in any event, the attachment was irregularly issued because based upon an affidavit which falsely stated that the debt was not secured. These positions are not well taken. The attachment provided for in the chapter of the Code relating to actions against steamers, vessels, and boats (Code Civ. Proc. § 813 et seq.) is entirely distinct from the ordinary attachment described in section 537 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The section which gives a lien upon vessels in certain cases is followed by other sections providing for the manner of enforcing such lien. The action is to be brought against certain defendants, if known (section 814); the form of the complaint and the manner of service of summons (sections 815, 816) are prescribed; and it is then provided that the plaintiff may have the vessel attached as security for the satisfaction of any judgment that may be recovered (section 817). The writ in a given form (section 819) is to be issued by the clerk upon receiving an undertaking (section 818). There are further provisions as to the execution of the writ (section 820) and the release of attached property by undertaking (section 822). Here is a special statutory procedure designed to permit the enforcement of liens upon vessels, and authorizing a writ of attachment to facilitate that end. Obviously, the provisions of subdivision 1 of section 537, precluding an attachment in an action against a resident defendant where the debt is secured by a lien, unless the security has, without the act of the plaintiff, become valueless, can have no application to such proceedings against vessels or their owners. The attachment under section 817 presupposes the existence of a lien. It can issue only where there is such lien, and for the purpose of aiding in its enforcement. For the same reason, the ordinary affidavit on attachment, showing a debt unsecured by lien, is entirely inappropriate to the case of an action to foreclose a lien upon a vessel. Since the sections covering such actions make no mention of an affidavit, we must conclude that none is required. If this be so, the plaintiff's writ cannot be vitiated by his having filed a useless and superfluous affidavit, nor by the fact that such affidavit contained a misstatement regarding an immaterial matter. Thorn v. Alvord, 32 Misc. Rep. 456, 66 N. Y. Supp. 587.

But the very reasons which lead us to hold that the first and second grounds of defendant's motion are without merit force the conclusion that the third ground was well taken, and should have been sustained. As respondent must concede, the general attachment law did not authorize an attachment in this case, and the issuance of the writ can be supported only as a proceeding under the statutory provisions regarding claims against vessels. It was essential, therefore, that the steps taken should have been in substantial compliance with the terms of these provisions. Proceedings for attachment, whether in ordinary cases or in actions to enforce liens against vessels, are created by statute, and must, in each of such classes of cases, follow the terms of the law governing that class. Edwards v. Cooper, 28 Ark. 466.

Where the attachment is sought in aid of an action to foreclose a lien upon a vessel, the Code requirement is that the writ "must be directed to the sheriff of the county within which the steamer, vessel, or boat lies, and direct him to attach such steamer, vessel, or boat, with its tackle, apparel, and furniture, and keep the same in his custody until discharged in due course of law." Code Civ. Proc. § 819. It is a special writ which gives authority to seize specific property only. The writ here issued, however, followed the terms of the general attachment law (Code Civ. Proc. § 540), and directed the sheriff "to attach and safely keep all the property of said defendant Dorr * * * within your said county, or so much thereof as may be sufficient to satisfy the said plaintiff's demand. * * *" This was essentially different from the writ to which plaintiff was entitled under the vessels statute. In place of process authorizing a seizure of the yacht "Yankee Girl" alone, the sheriff was armed with a writ empowering him to seize any property of the defendant, and this in a case in which, under the averments of the complaint, a general attachment could not issue.

It is of no consequence that the sheriff did not in fact levy on any property other than the vessel. Under section 823, attachments on vessels may, on motion, be discharged in the same manner, and on like terms and conditions, as attachments in other cases. Sections 556 and 558, thus imported into the procedure for enforcing liens against vessels, provide that a writ of attachment must be discharged, if upon motion, made before or after levy, it appears that the writ was improperly or irregularly issued. "Under these sections it is immaterial whether much or little or any property of a defendant has been actually levied upon, but the court must, upon proper application therefor, discharge the writ of attachment thus wrongfully issued." Kennedy v. Cal. Sav. Bank, 97 Cal. 93, 31 Pac. 846, 33 Am. St. Rep. 163; Sparks v. Bell, 137 Cal. 414, 70 Pac. 281.

By a proviso recently added to section 558 (St. 1909, p. 253), a motion to discharge for irregularity may now be met by proper amendment of the affidavit, undertaking, or writ. But this enactment was not in force when the motion in the present case was made, and, besides, it does not appear that plaintiff made any attempt to correct the defective writ.

The order is reversed.

1. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT (§ 36*) — DISBARMENT OF ATTORNEY—GROUNDS.

That misconduct charged against an attorney may also render him liable to punishment under the criminal laws does not necessarily deprive the court of power to hear disbarment proceedings against him; Code Civ. Proc. § 287, subd. 2, authorizing removal of an attorney for any violation of the oath taken by him or of his duties as such attorney.

3. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT (§ 44*)—OFFICE OF ATTORNEY—VIOLATION OF DUTY.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; George H. Hutton, Judge.

Proceedings for disbarment of William J. Danford. From a judgment of disbarment and an order denying a new trial, respondent appeals. Affirmed.

J. D. Reymert and Wm. J. Danford, for appellant. O'Melveny, Stevens & Millikin, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. Upon an accusation purporting to charge William J. Danford, an attorney at law, with a violation of his professional duties, a hearing was had in the superior court of Los Angeles county, and that court gave judgment depriving the accused of the right to practice as attorney or counselor in the courts of the state of California. This is an appeal by Danford from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for new trial.

The first point made is that the accusation fails to state facts justifying disbarment, and that therefore appellant's demurrer should have been sustained. The accuser, Catherine E. Smith, alleged, in effect, that on May 1, 1908, Danford was an attorney at law, entitled to practice before the superior court of Los Angeles county, and held himself out to the public as an attorney at law. Said Catherine E. Smith consulted him relative to her defense in a certain case then pending in the district court of the United States for the Southern district of California, entitled "The United States of America v. Mrs. C. E. Smith." It was alleged that Danford then and there falsely, fraudulently, and unlawfully represented and stated to said accuser that he could and was authorized to practice in the said district court of the United States, and could and was able to represent her as her attorney in said action in said court. At the same time he requested her to pay him the sum of $500 for services to be rendered by him as her attorney in defending said action in said court, and she paid said sum, believing and relying upon his statements and representations. In fact, Danford was not authorized to or admitted to practice as an attorney at law in the United States district court, and could not represent or appear for Mrs. Smith as her attorney in said action or before said court, and, as is averred, his representations in this regard were false, were known by him to be false, and were made with the intention of misleading and deceiving the accuser, and inducing her to pay to the accused the said sum of $500. In June, 1908, it is alleged, Danford obtained from Mrs. Smith the further sum of $2,500, upon the representations, made with knowledge of their falsity, that he could and would represent her in said action, and that if she would pay him the said $2,500, he would cause said action against her in the district court to be "wiped out," discontinued, and disposed of.

It is argued that the complaint charges a public offense, and that an application for disbarment, in advance of the termination of a criminal prosecution for such offense, should not have been entertained. The fact that the misconduct charged against an attorney at law may also render him liable to indictment and punishment under the criminal law does not necessarily deprive the court of power to hear disbarment proceedings against him. Section 287 of the Code of Civil Procedure authorizes the suspension or removal of an attorney for various causes, including, "(1) His conviction of a felony or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude, in which case the record of conviction shall be conclusive evidence; (2) * * * any violation of the oath taken by him, or of his duties as such attorney and counselor." Where disbarment is sought upon the mere ground that the accused has been guilty of a public offense involving moral turpitude, but not necessarily connected with the practice of his profession, it has very properly been held that a case for disbarment is not made until there has been a conviction of the offense. In re Tilden, 87 Cal. xxi, 25 Pac. 687. In the Tilden Case the charge was that the accused had committed larceny, but it was not alleged that the act had been done in the discharge of any professional relation. There was no attempt to show a ground arising under any part of section 287 other than subdivision 1. Under that subdivision, a conviction was essential. But, as pointed out in later cases, an attorney may be disbarred for a violation of his professional duties, i. e., for any ground coming within the terms of subdivisions 2, 3, or 4 of section 287, notwithstanding the fact that the charge against him might also be made the basis of an indictment or information. Ex parte Tyler, 107 Cal. 78, 40 Pac. 33; In re Wharton, 114 Cal. 367, 46 Pac. 172, 55 Am. St. Rep. 72. See, also, In re Treadwell, 67 Cal. 358, 7 Pac. 724; Ex parte Wall, 107 U. S. 265, 2 Sup. Ct. 569, 27 L. Ed. 552. "If * * *" says this court in Ex parte Tyler, supra, "an attorney is charged with a violation of his professional obligations, either to his client or to the court, or with professional delinquency in matters pertaining peculiarly to the relations between him and his client, it is no defense to a proceeding for his suspension or disbarment that the same transactions may render him liable to a criminal prosecution." In re Delmas, 139 Cal. xix, 72 Pac. 402, is not to be taken as laying down a different rule. The refusal of the court to proceed in that case was based primarily upon the ground that the Supreme Court would not entertain an original proceeding for disbarment in the absence of a showing of good reasons for the failure to first resort to the superior court, which is vested with concurrent jurisdiction in this class of cases. The opinion declares, further, that an application for disbarment preferred by a private individual, who has a remedy for his alleged grievance by ordinary civil or criminal process, will not be considered. In re Stephens, 102 Cal. 264, 36 Pac. 586. We do not understand that this rule was intended to be applied to the superior courts, as well as to this court. At any rate, it was limited to cases in which the accusation was without the sanction of a bar association or of some responsible public officer. It appears here that the charge against Danford was authorized by the Los Angeles Bar Association, and was prosecuted by attorneys directed by that body to act in the matter.

We have no doubt that the facts alleged show a violation of appellant's oath and of his duties as an attorney. Code Civ. Proc. § 282. The relation between attorney and client is "a fiduciary relation of the very highest character, and binds the attorney to most conscientious fidelity—uberrima fides." Cox v. Delmas, 99 Cal. 104, 123, 33 Pac. 836. It is one which precludes the attorney from obtaining any personal advantage by abusing the confidence reposed in him by his client. In re Burris, 101 Cal. 624, 36 Pac. 101. The allegation here is that the accused, by means of a misrepresentation, induced his client to pay him a large sum for services which he was not, and knew that he was not, in a position to perform. This was a plain breach of the obligation of fidelity imposed upon him by the law and by the employment which he accepted.

The contention that the finding of guilt is contrary to the evidence cannot prevail. The testimony of the accuser and her witnesses supports every material allegation of the complaint. It is true that the testimony introduced by the appellant contradicted the accuser in various particulars, but the resulting conflict was as we have so often said, one to be determined in the trial court. It cannot be said that the representation that Danford was entitled to practice in a federal court was not material. Ordinarily, an attorney licensed to practice in all the courts of a state, as Danford has been, will, on motion and showing of good moral character, be admitted to the bar of the various inferior federal courts. The admission may, in a sense, be regarded as a merely formal matter. It was not so, however, in this instance for the record shows that, when a motion was made in the district court to have the appellant admitted to practice there, an objection to his admission was interposed, and action upon the motion was indefinitely deferred.

At the close of the trial, the accused requested the court to make written findings of fact and conclusions of law. This the court declined to do, and its refusal is assigned as error. We find no statutory provision requiring findings in a case of the character of the one before us. Written findings were not required under the common-law practice, and are necessary only where a statute so provides. Sections 632 and 633 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which declare that the decision must be in writing, and that the facts found and the conclusions of law must be separately stated, are included in title 8 of part 2 of said Code. Part 2 is entitled "Civil Actions." The requirement of findings, with some other details of procedure found in Part 2, applies only to civil actions and to those special proceedings—for example, matters of probate—(Code Civ. Proc. § 1713) to which such provisions are specially made applicable. Lyons v. Marcher, 119 Cal. 382, 51 Pac. 559. Proceedings on an accusation against an attorney are prescribed by sections 287 to 297 of the Code of Civil Procedure. These sections outline a complete scheme, covering the details of charge, process, plea, trial, and judgment. Section 295 authorizes an oral denial of the accusation, without oath. The procedure is in almost all respects dissimilar to that provided for civil actions, and, as it makes no mention of findings, there is no reason for holding that the Legislature intended to import the need of findings into it. This court has uniformly treated disbarment proceedings as peculiar to themselves, and governed exclusively by the Code sections specifically covering them. Thus, it has held that the statute of limitations applicable to civil or criminal applications is no bar (Ex parte Tyler, supra); that the accused is not entitled to a jury trial (In re Wharton, 114 Cal. 370, 46 Pac. 172, 55 Am. St. Rep. 72); and that the accuser has no right to an appeal (In re Thompson, 114 Cal. xvii, 45 Pac. 1034).

The transcript contains a copy of a purported notice of intention to move to vacate the judgment, on the ground that the judge presiding was not a citizen of the United States. This is followed by copies of affidavits and exhibits relied on by appellant to establish the ground of his motion. In like manner appear counteraffidavits and an order striking said notice of motion, with its accompanying affidavits and exhibits, from the file. The appellant assigns the refusal to vacate the judgment and the order striking out as error. His point cannot receive favorable attention for two reasons: (1) The motion to vacate the judgment is not a part of the judgment roll, and can be brought before this court for consideration only when the papers used on the motion and the action of the court are authenticated by a bill of exceptions. Herrlich v. McDonald, 80 Cal. 472, 22 Pac. 299; Melde v. Reynolds, 120 Cal. 234, 52 Pac. 491; Bank v. Goodsell, 137 Cal. 420, 70 Pac. 299; Skinner v. Horn, 144 Cal. 278, 77 Pac. 904. In the record before us there is no authentication by means of such bill, or otherwise. (2) The motion was, on its face, without merit. The fact, if it had been a fact, that the judge presiding at the trial was an alien, and therefore ineligible, made him none the less a de facto officer. His right to hold the office could be questioned only in proceedings regularly instituted for that purpose. It could not be attacked collaterally by motion to set aside his official acts. People v. Sassovich, 29 Cal. 480; People v. Hecht, 105 Cal. 621, 38 Pac. 941, 27 L. R. A. 203, 45 Am. St. Rep. 96.

No other points are made by appellant.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

LOEHR v. BOARD OF EDUCATION et al.

(Civ. 670.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. Feb. 23, 1910. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court April 22, 1910.)

1. Schools and School Districts (§ 141*)—Teachers — Grades — Certificates—Limitation.

The law recognizes but three school grades, namely, primary, grammar, and high school; and certificates authorizing teachers to instruct in these grades qualify the teacher for service only in the grade or grades covered by the certificate, hence it is in the statutory sense that the court must regard the term "grade" when seeking a limitation upon the powers of the board of education to transfer and assign teachers.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Schools and School Districts, Cent. Dig. §§ 301–304; Dec. Dig. § 141.*]

2. Schools and School Districts (§ 141*)—Teachers—Appointment—Transfer — Assignment—Dismissal.

In the absence of a constitutional or statutory limitation, boards of education may exercise an unlimited discretion both in the employment and dismissal of teachers, and in their transfer and assignment.

3. Schools and School Districts (§ 141*)—Teachers — Consolidation of Classes — Discontinuance of Schools—Retirement of Teacher.

Pol. Code, § 1791, defines the general powers of city and county boards of examination. Section 1793 provides that holders of city or city and county certificates are eligible to teach in the cities or cities and counties in which the certificates were granted, in schools or classes of grades corresponding to the grades of their certificates, etc. Held, that teachers elected without definite tenure have the right to hold their position while competent and faithful, and are subject to dismissal only for insubordination, etc., though boards of education may consolidate classes and discontinue a school or class in the interest of economy or for other good cause, and in such event to determine what teacher shall be retired.

4. Schools and Schools Districts (§ 138½,* New, vol. 9, Key No. Series) — Teachers — Transfer.

Under Pol. Code, § 1793, the board of education has power to transfer a teacher from class to class or from school to school, providing the teacher shall be retained in some class in a school of the grade which the certificate qualifies him to teach in.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Mandamus by Adeline M. Loehr against the Board of Education and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed, with directions.

Percy V. Long and John T. Nourse, for appellants. C. M. Fickert and I. F. Chapman, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal by the defendants from a judgment of the superior court in favor of the plaintiff in a mandamus proceeding.

The trial court awarded plaintiff a peremptory writ, by which the board of education of the city and county of San Francisco was commanded to admit plaintiff to the position of teacher of a class designated as "A first grade" in a common public school of said city and county, and to approve, allow, and order to be paid her demand for $83 per month as compensation for services as teacher of such grade.

The case was submitted to the court upon an agreed statement of facts, from which it appears that plaintiff was the holder of a high school certificate, granted by an order of said board of education, which rendered her eligible to teach in any of the public schools of said city and county. In June, 1903, plaintiff was elected to the position of teacher in the primary grade, and placed upon the substitute list without any regular assignment. Thereafter she was assigned and transferred at various times to different schools and classes, all of the primary department, until June, 1906, when, her probation period having expired, she was by a resolution of the board of education elected a regular teacher in the department and placed upon the unassigned list until such time as her services would be required. In August, 1906, she was assigned as a teacher of a class of first grade and second grade pupils in the Sheridan Annex School at a salary of $83 per month. She remained there until June, 1907, when, at her request, she was granted a leave of absence until August 19, 1907. At the termination of this leave, she learned that she had been placed on the unassigned list of teachers. The reason of this action by the board of education is not indicated in the agreed statement of facts; and, unless for such moving cause as was held sufficient to sustain similar action in Bates v. Board of Education, 139 Cal. 145, 72 Pac. 907 (where, in the interest of economy the plaintiff's class had been consolidated with others), it would be held to constitute a violation of her rights as defined in Kennedy v. Board of Education, 82 Cal. 483, 22 Pac. 1042, and Fairchild v. Board of Education, 107 Cal. 92, 40 Pac. 26. The significance of this action of the board, however, is lost in what subsequently occurred, for it further appears from the agreed statement of facts that whatever may have been the cause of the placing of the plaintiff upon the unassigned list the board did again in November, 1907, assign her to the Marshal Primary School, to take charge of the B third grade, which position carried a salary of $76 a month. She refused to accept this assignment, and subsequently made a number of demands to be assigned to an A first grade class in the Sheridan Annex School, or to a class of similar rating in any other school paying a like salary, but such demands were not complied with. She has refused to accept assignment to a class having a different rating, or to a different grade, or to any class or grade carrying a different salary.

The questions presented by these facts call for a definition of the powers of the board of education in the transfer and assignment of teachers. That the board ought to have wide discretion in such matters would seem to be dictated by the necessity of maintaining the efficiency of the department. No doubt it often occurs that a teacher assigned to a particular class forming a part of a particular grade is shown by experience to be better suited to the instruction of a different class forming part of a different grade. In such event, it is reasonable to suppose that the Legislature intended that the board of education should be vested with discretion to make a reassignment of the teacher to such class; and, unless there is something in the statute plainly requiring a different construction, we should be reluctant to decide that boards of education do not possess this power. These considerations caused the court in Kennedy v. Board of Education, supra, at page 492 of 82 Cal., at page 1045 of 22 Pac., to express the reservation: "We do not wish to be understood as holding that the board of education has not the power to transfer a teacher from one school to another of the same grade. The statute does not guarantee to a teacher the right to teach in any particular school, but to continue as such teacher in a certain grade, and the transfer of teachers from one school to another may be necessary for the good of schools, and should not be prohibited." The term "grade" as used in that decision, we assume, was employed in the statutory sense. In the agreed statement of facts reference is made to the "A first primary grade," and the "B third grade," from which we infer that the public schools of the city and county of San Francisco have been so classified as to permit the application of such generic designations to all classes having the same course of instruction. Indeed, it is a matter of common knowledge that such a classification is made by the school authorities of the various counties and cities of the state. Pupils are said to belong to the first, second, third, or other grades, as the case may be, and to this fact some confusion of thought may be attributed. Such classification into grades is made by boards of education for the purpose of dividing the course of study or curriculum into convenient periods. There is nothing in the statute, however, which recognizes their existence. The law itself recognizes but three principal grades, namely, primary, grammar, and high school grades. Certificates authorizing teachers to instruct in these grades are issued accordingly as primary, grammar or high school certificates, and, as such, qualify the teacher for service only in the grade or grades covered by the certificate. It is in this statutory sense that we must regard the term "grade" when seeking a limitation upon the powers of the defendant to transfer and assign teachers, as it will not be pretended that the asserted right of the teacher to teach a particular class within a particular grade, in preference to another class within the same grade, can be upheld without express statutory authority. On the contrary, it has been uniformly held in this state that in the absence of a constitutional or statutory limitation, boards of education may exercise an unlimited discretion in the employment and dismissal of teachers, as well as in their transfer and assignment. Kennedy v. Board of Education, supra; Barthel v. Board of Education, 153 Cal. 376, 95 Pac. 892; Stockton v. Board of Education, 145 Cal. 246, 78 Pac. 730; Bradley v. Board of Education, 1 Cal. App. 212, 81 Pac. 1036; Harby v. Board of Education, 2 Cal. App. 418, 83 Pac. 1081. Therefore, unless there is some provision of the law denying the board of education the right in its discretion to transfer and assign teachers, it must be held in this case that the assignment of the plaintiff to the Marshall Primary School, to take charge of the "B third grade," was a valid transfer and assignment.

Plaintiff contends that there is such a limitation contained in section 1793 of the Political Code. That section has been held to confer upon teachers elected without definite tenure the right to hold the position while competent and faithful, and to be subject to dismissal only for insubordination or other causes specified in section 1791 of the same Code. To this statement of the rights of the teachers must be added the qualification expressed in the case of Bates v. Board of Education, 139 Cal. 145, 72 Pac. 907, that power resides in boards of education to consolidate classes and to discontinue a school or class in the interest of economy or for other good cause, and in such event to determine what teacher shall be retired. Section 1793 in part provides: "The holders of city, or city and county, certificates, are eligible to teach in the cities, or cities and counties, in which such certificates were granted, in schools or classes of grades corresponding to the grades of such certificates, and when elected shall be dismissed only for insubordination or other causes, as mentioned in section seventeen hundred and ninety-one, of this Code, duly ascertained and approved by the boards of education of such cities, or cities and counties." It will be observed that the section makes teachers eligible to teach only in "schools or classes of grades corresponding to the grades" of their certificates. There is nothing in this section, however, placing any limitation upon the power of the board of education to transfer a teacher from class to class, or from school to school. All that the statute seems to require is that the teacher shall be retained in some class in a school of the grade which the certificate qualifies him to teach in. However, it is sufficient for the purposes of this case to say that while plaintiff was transferred from one class to another, to which a slightly lower salary was attached, nevertheless she was not removed from the statutory grade to which she was elected, and, as we find nothing in the law preventing the board of education from making such transfer, it follows that the board acted within its powers, and that its action is valid. The Legislature certainly intended to leave such freedom of action in a board of education as would permit it in its discretion to make such assignment or transfer of a teacher as is complained of in this case. In Kennedy v. Board of Education, supra, the teacher was transferred from one school to another of lower grade, and the court observes: "She was removed fom the grade in which her certificate and the statute entitled her to teach."

As we have seen, the placing of the plaintiff without cause upon the unassigned list while away on a leave of absence was unauthorized by law. Upon her return she was entitled to immediate assignment, and the fact that she had been wrongfully placed on the unassigned list did not operate to deprive her of her right to draw the salary incident to the position from which she had been wrongfully removed. This right existed from the date of her return, August 19, 1907, until November 26, 1907, when she was, as we have held, lawfully assigned to a class in the primary grade. We hold, therefore, that she is lawfully entitled to a salary of $83 a month from August 19, 1907, to November 26, 1907, and the court below should have issued a writ of mandate, directing the defendants to approve, allow, and order to be paid such salary. But her refusal to accept the assignment and enter upon the discharge of the duties of a teacher in the "B third grade" in the Marshall Primary School at a salary of $76 a month was a refusal on her part to perform the services which she was legally required to perform, and she cannot legally refuse to perform such services and insist upon the payment of the salary incident thereto. "The public schools," as was pertinently observed in Bates v. Board of Education, supra, "were not created, nor are they supported, for the benefit of teachers therein, * * * but for the benefit of the pupils and the resulting benefit to their parents and the community at large."

Section 1793 confers the right of indefinite employment upon those who are "the holders of city or city and county certificates." And it has been repeatedly held, in accordance with the plain language of the section, that this right is conferred only as an incident to the holding of a city certificate as distinguished from a county, state or special certificate. Stockton v. Bd. of Education, 145 Cal. 246, 78 Pac. 730; Barthel v. Bd. of Education, 153 Cal. 376, 95 Pac. 892; Bradley v. Bd. of Education, 1 Cal. App. 212, 81 Pac. 1036. Defendants contend in this case that the holder of a high school certificate is not the holder of a city certificate within the contemplation of the section quoted, but the views we have expressed render the determination of this point unnecessary at this time.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to the trial court to enter judgment in accordance with the views herein expressed.

We concur: COOPER, P. J.; HALL, J.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Curtis D. Wilbur, Judge.

Action by Minnie Justis and another against the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railway Company, a corporation. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

E. W. Camp and A. H. Van Cott, for appellant. C. F. McNutt and McNutt & Hannon, for respondents.

TAGGART, J. This is an action to recover damages for injuries received by the plaintiff Minnie Justis while riding as a passenger upon one of defendant's trains through the territory of Arizona; she having a ticket, issued by defendant's agent, entitling her to passage from Los Angeles, Cal., to Kansas City, Mo. Judgment was for plaintiffs in the sum of $1,975, and defendant appeals from the judgment.

The principal defense of appellant was based upon a written release and settlement of all damages arising from the injury, and a receipt therefor, signed by Mrs. Justis while on the train in the state of Kansas two days after the collision in which she was hurt. It is contended by appellant that, under the law of Arizona, and particularly under certain sections of the Revised Statutes of that territory which were read into the record and considered as evidence, without objection, the damages which could be recovered by plaintiffs, or either of them, on the cause of action stated, became and were the separate estate of the wife, and not the property of the community.

We are much inclined to the view of respondents' counsel that the discussion of the cause of action before us upon the theory that it is an ordinary action sounding in tort has "led us a chase in the wilder-ness." Section 2100 of the Civil Code of the state provides that "a carrier of persons for reward must use the utmost care and diligence for their safe carriage," etc. In applying this section to instructions given in cases relating to injury to passengers of common carriers, the rule relating to such cases clearly distinguishes them from ordinary actions in tort. Kline v. Santa Barbara, 150 Cal. 741, 90 Pac. 125; Valente v. Sierra Railway, 151 Cal. 534, 91 Pac. 481. Even at common law, the party injured might in such a case elect between the breach of the contract to deliver him in safety and the wrong which justified an action ex delicto. Sheldon v. Steamship Uncle Sam, 18 Cal. 527, 534, 79 Am. Dec. 193.

The complaint here states a cause of action against the defendant for a violation of the obligation assumed by it to carry Mrs. Justis in safety to her destination, as indicated by the ticket which its agent sold to her. While the ticket purchased by her, when considered alone, might be deemed merely a receipt, containing only a part of the contract made, yet it was evidence that there was a contract. It was evidence of the payment of her fare and of her right to be carried according to its terms, even though it did not express all the terms of the contract. Sloane v. Southern Cal. Ry. Co., 111 Cal. 685, 44 Pac. 320, 32 L. R. A. 193; Ames v. Southern Pacific Co., 141 Cal. 728, 732, 734, 75 Pac. 310, 99 Am. St. Rep. 98. The facts alleged in the complaint sufficiently state a cause of action based upon the contract created by the purchase of the ticket and the provisions of the Code. The findings are sufficient to sustain a judgment upon the same theory. We may then consider the cause of action as one based upon a contract. So regarded, the contract was made at Los Angeles, its implied terms are to be supplied from the laws of the state of California, and it is to be interpreted by the laws of this state.

The right to recover damages for such an injury by a judicial proceeding is property in this state (Civ. Code, § 953); and when acquired after marriage by husband or wife, or both, it is community property (section 164). McFadden v. Santa Ana, 87 Cal. 464, 25 Pac. 681, 11 L. R. A. 252; Neale v. Railway Co., 94 Cal. 425, 29 Pac. 954. The right of action for an injury to the wife and the money recovered therefrom being community property, the wife could not bring an action without making her husband a party, and could not, of course, alone, execute a release or satisfaction of the obligation. The husband and wife, however, may join in such an action. Williams v. Casebeer, 126 Cal. 82, 58 Pac. 380; Paine v. San Bernardino, 143 Cal. 658, 77 Pac. 659. As the wife alone could not release the obligation of defendant to the community for her injury, neither could she elect the form of action in which the damages for that injury could be recovered.

While the complaint and findings, in the absence of demurrer to the former, sustain the judgment upon the theory that the action is on the contract, the complaint supports and the evidence justifies the finding of the trial court that, "under the laws of Arizona, a cause of action for such personal injuries to the wife and the fruits thereof were community property," if the action be considered as based upon the tort instead of the contract. The same conclusion would be reached whether the Arizona law introduced is considered as "evidence," or as a law to be construed as such, notwithstanding it is required by the statute to be introduced in evidence in the same manner as the facts in the case. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1900, 1901, 1902, 1903; Cummings v. O'Brien, 122 Cal. 204, 54 Pac. 742.

Of the sections of the Revised Statutes of Arizona contained in the record only sections 3104, 3106, and 3111 need be specially mentioned, as these are the ones chiefly relied upon to sustain appellant's view that the wife had authority to discharge the claim for damages. Section 3106 provides: "Hereafter married women of the age of eighteen years and upwards shall have the same legal rights as men of the age of twenty-one years and upwards, except the right of suffrage and of holding office, and except the right to make contracts binding the common property of husband and wife," etc. (The italics are ours.) Section 3104 is as follows: "All property acquired by either husband or wife during the marriage, except that which is acquired by gift, devise or descent, or earned by the wife and her minor children, while she has lived, or may live, separate and apart from her husband, shall be deemed the common property of the husband and wife, and during the coverture personal property may be disposed of by the husband only; but the wife must join in all deeds and mortgages affecting real estate, except unpatented mining claims." The section which furnishes the basis for most of the arguments in the briefs is section 3111, which reads as follows: "The marital rights of persons married out of this territory, who may move to this territory, shall, in regard to property acquired in this territory, during the marriage, be regulated by the laws of this territory." Considered alone, the last section does not affect the material rights of the plaintiffs here, since they are not persons married out of the territory who have moved into it, but are residents of the state of California. Appellant contends, however, that by the application of the rule expressio unius, etc., to this section, the general rule declared in section 3106 would govern, and therefore the wife, by the law of Arizona, would have the same legal rights of contract in relation to injuries to herself that any man of 21 would have as to injuries received by him. We cannot accept this interpretation of the section. The general effect of the statutes of Arizona before us, other than section 3111, is to declare the law of that territory with respect to common property to be practically the same as that of this state, and the introduction in evidence of these statutes served merely to confirm the presumption which should have governed the decision of the superior court, in which the case was tried, if no such evidence had been introduced. In re Hancock's Estate, 106 Pac. 58. The effect of section 3111 was to bring within the operation of the laws of the territory relating to marital rights in property acquired in the territory the one class, to wit, persons married out of the territory who have moved into it. If the rule invoked by appellant were applied here, all persons not mentioned must be excluded and all other classes, including persons married in the territory, as well as those married elsewhere, who had not moved into the territory, would, as to property acquired by them in the territory, be excluded from the benefit of the laws of the territory affecting marital rights. It is apparent that the Legislature of the territory never intended such a result.

Respondents contend that the section is but the useless relict of a departed condition, a condition which existed at the ingrafting of community rights into the American system in all the Pacific Coast states and territories when that territory became a part of the United States, and which, having served its purpose, has, in all the other jurisdictions, been removed from the statute books by appropriate legislation. There is much to sustain this view, but we do not think we are driven to the necessity of accepting either the impossible and inconsistent construction of section 3111 by appellant, or to eliminate the section from consideration on the ground of decay, disuse, or laches, as urged by respondents. The reasonable interpretation of it would seem to be that it was intended to admit certain persons married out of the territory to the benefits of the community laws of the territory. Of those not affected by the express terms of the section, the resident, whose marriage occurred in the territory, under the laws of the territory, would be governed by its general laws. Persons married out of the territory and who have not moved into it would be governed, as to personal property acquired by them in the territory, by the well-established, almost universally acknowledged rule that the law of the domicile must prevail in the absence of express statutory provision. The law of California thereby became the law of Arizona as to these plaintiffs, and the finding of the trial court that the cause of action for the personal injuries to the wife was community property was a proper deduction from the law and evidence.

Judgment affirmed.

T. Z. Blakeman, for appellant. James M. Allen, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. Appeal from an order denying a motion to tax costs on appeal.

Teresa Bell applied to the court in which the estate of Thomas Bell, her deceased husband, was pending, for an order of family allowance. Nineteen creditors appeared and opposed the application. An order granting the allowance was made. From this order the creditors appealed. Eighteen of them joined in a single notice of appeal. A separate notice was given by the nineteenth, the National Bank of D. O. Mills & Co. The appeals came up separately; that of the eighteen being numbered S. F. 4,582, and that of National Bank of D. O. Mills & Co., S. F. 4,583. In each case the order was by this court reversed. 153 Cal. 331, 95 Pac. 372; Id., 153 Cal. 345, 95 Pac. 378. In due time the successful appellant in No. 4,583 filed its memorandum of costs, claiming costs in the sum of $577, made up as follows: For printing transcript, $544.50; paid clerk of superior court for certifying to transcript, $22; paid clerk of Supreme Court for filing transcript, $10; fees of clerk of superior court on filing remittitur from Supreme Court, 50 cents. The respondent (appellant here) moved the court to tax the costs by striking out the items for printing and for certifying transcript on the ground that they were excessive and unnecessary.

The position of the appellant is that she had already paid the full cost of printing and certifying the transcript in 4,582; that this transcript, with the exception of the notice of appeal, is an exact duplicate of that filed by the appellant in 4,583; and that there was no occasion for filing two transcripts. The affidavits bearing on these questions present various points of conflict. It is, of course, plain that, in support of the order appealed from, we must assume that every such conflict was resolved by the trial court in favor of the respondent. The credibility of the witnesses, whether testifying orally or by affidavit, is for the trial court. Reading the record in the light of this elementary rule, we find that the trial court had before it evidence justifying it in believing this to be the state of facts: Of the 19 creditors who opposed Mrs. Bell's application for family allowance, 2, D. O. Mills and National Bank of D. O. Mills & Co., appeared and were represented by Mr. James M. Allen. The other 17, including one Louisa J. Thompson, were represented by Mr. J. F. Leicester. Mr. T. Z. Blakeman appeared as attorney for the petitioner, Mrs. Teresa Bell. The reason for the taking of a separate appeal by the National Bank of D. O. Mills & Co. was that Mr. Leicester, on behalf of Louisa J. Thompson, refused to join said National Bank in taking an appeal. Before the filing of a transcript on either appeal, Mr. Leicester, at the request of Mr. Allen, wrote a letter to Mr. Blakeman, requesting him to stipulate that both appeals might be heard on a single transcript. At that time the transcript on the appeal taken by Louisa J. Thompson and others (No. 4,582) had already been printed, and, by adding thereto a copy of the notice of appeal of the said National Bank, the same would have become a full and correct transcript for use on the appeal numbered 4,583. Mr. Blakeman replied by a letter stating that he would not stipulate as requested, as he might prejudice his rights by so doing. Mr. Leicester then wrote to Mr. Blakeman offering to stipulate in such manner and form as to protect any rights of Mrs. Bell to object to either of said appeals, and stating that any form of stipulation would be satisfactory to his firm if it would permit the hearing of both appeals on one transcript. To this Mr. Blakeman replied that he declined to sign any stipulation in the matter or to consent that said appeals might be heard on one transcript. Thereupon the National Bank of D. O. Mills & Co. prepared and filed its separate transcript.

This showing fully justified the court below in charging the cost of printing the additional transcript to the unsuccessful party. It is, of course, true, as claimed by appellant, that only such costs as are necessary should be allowed. Bank of Woodland v. Hiatt, 59 Cal. 580; Miller v. Highland, 91 Cal. 103, 27 Pac. 536. As a party aggrieved, the bank had a right to appeal from the order (Est. of Fretwell, 152 Cal. 573, 93 Pac. 283), and we see no ground for holding that it did not have the absolute right to appeal separately, if it so desired. Be that as it may, the taking of a separate appeal was made necessary here by the refusal of another party to join the National Bank in appealing. Under the rules of this court (Rule 2 [78 Pac. vii]), it became necessary for the appellant bank to file its transcript within a certain time after the filing of its notice of appeal. There is no rule or statute authorizing an appellant to dispense with the filing of a transcript by making reference to a transcript on file in another appeal. Nor do we find any case in which it has been held that the appeals of separate independent appellants should be embodied in a single transcript. This course appears to have been followed in Emeric v. Alvarado, 64 Cal. 529, 2 Pac. 418; but the decision neither holds nor intimates that it is the duty of the different appellants to unite in the filing of a transcript. In Sharon v. Sharon, 68 Cal. 326, 9 Pac. 187, the court was dealing with several appeals taken in one case by the same party. Indeed, it is difficult to see how one appellant can compel another to unite with him in the printing and filing of a transcript. In such case the necessity for filing a second transcript might be obviated by a stipulation of all the parties. Here the appellants in the two appeals offered to make such stipulation, but the respondent refused to join. It does not lie in her mouth, after such refusal, to complain that an additional transcript was printed and filed. If she had been willing to have the two appeals considered on a single record, her assent to the proposed stipulation would have accomplished the purpose. Her conduct was the direct cause of the printing and filing of two transcripts, and the resulting burden properly falls upon her. It is suggested that the National Bank might have obtained from this court an order that the two appeals be heard on a single transcript. There is no rule providing for such order. It is at least doubtful whether it would be made over the objection of a respondent insisting that the filing of separate transcripts is essential to the protection of his rights. At any rate, where such insistence has influenced the action of the appellant in filing his transcript, the respondent should not be permitted, after the disposition of the appeal, to shift his position and claim that the filing was unnecessary.

Appellant's contention that the charge for printing was excessive is based upon evidence to the effect that the transcript in 4,583 was printed from the same forms as those used for the transcript in 4,582, and that for that reason the proper cost of printing was much less than the amount charged. But, as against this, the printer's affidavit shows that the forms used in printing the one transcript had been distributed before the other was ordered. The trial court had the right to believe this statement and act upon it.

The charge of $22 for certifying the transcript is justified by the affidavit showing that Mr. Blakeman had refused to join in certifying (by stipulation) to its correctness. Rule 11 of this court (78 Pac. ix). There is no merit in the point that Mr. Leicester's affidavit to the effect that Mr. Blakeman had returned the transcript to Mr. Allen "with his refusal to certify" was hearsay and inferior evidence, and therefore not entitled to be considered as against an adverse showing. It does not appear to be hearsay. For aught that is shown, Mr. Leicester may have been present when Mr. Blakeman communicated his refusal to Mr. Allen. He testified positively to the fact, and we have no right to assume that he was undertaking to state matters not within his own knowledge.

The order is affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SHAW, J.

In re GIRD'S ESTATE. (S. F. 5,399.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 4, 1910. Rehearing Denied May 4, 1910.)

1. BASTARDS (§ 13*)—LEGITIMATION—RECOGNITION.

Under Civ. Code, § 230, providing that "the father of an illegitimate child, by publicly acknowledging it as his own, receiving it as such with the consent of his wife, if he is married, into his family, and otherwise treating it as a legitimate child, thereby adopts it as such; and such child is thereupon deemed for all purposes legitimate from the time of its birth," it is necessary, in order to sustain a decree for distribution of a decedent's estate to illegitimate children, that the jury find that decedent was their father, that during minority he publicly acknowledged each as his own child, and received it into his family as his own child, and otherwise treated each child as if it was his legitimate child, and the existence of a family is essential.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bastards, Cent. Dig. §§ 16, 17; Dec. Dig. § 13.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 994*) — REVIEW — QUESTIONS OF FACT—CREDIBILITY OF WITNESS.

The effect of an attempted impeachment of a witness or of evidence affecting his credibility is a question not reviewable by the Supreme Court under Code Civ. Proc. § 1847, making "the jury the exclusive judges of his credibility."

3. BASTARDS (§ 5*)—ILLEGITIMACY—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.

Where nonaccess by a husband is shown to a reasonable certainty, the positive testimony of the wife that another is the father of her children is competent evidence of their paternity.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bastards, Cent. Dig. §§ 7, 8; Dec. Dig. § 5.*]

4. BASTARDS (§ 6*) — LEGITIMATION — EVIDENCE.

No different rule applies as to the sufficiency of evidence to support findings of legitimation of a bastard by the public acknowledgment of its paternity by the father and receiving it into his family than applies in other cases.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bastards, Cent. Dig. §§ 9, 10; Dec. Dig. § 6.*]

5. BASTARDS (§ 13*)—LEGITIMATION—PUBLIC ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

The words "publicly acknowledging," as used in Civ. Code, § 230, providing for legitimation of a bastard by the father "publicly acknowledging" that he is the child's father, must be taken in their ordinary sense.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 6, p. 5772.]

6. BASTARDS (§ 6*)—LEGITIMATION—EVIDENCE OF RECOGNITION.

In a proceeding for distribution of a decedent's estate, evidence held to sustain the findings that decedent was the father of two illegitimate children, and that he publicly acknowledged them as his own, and received them into his family.

7. BASTARDS (§ 13*)—LEGITIMATION—RECEIVING INTO FAMILY.

"Family," as used in Civ. Code, § 230, providing for the legitimation of a bastard by "receiving it * * * with the consent of his wife, if he is married, into his family," means no more than that the father must have a home, a settled place of habitation of which he is the head, into which he must receive the child, with the consent of his wife, if he be married; and brothers and sisters, who never live with him, are no part of his family.

8. TRIAL (§ 106*)—ARGUMENT OF COUNSEL.

Parties are not entitled as a matter of right to be heard by as many separate attorneys as they see fit to present, and a party who is allowed full opportunity to present argument by one counsel cannot complain that the court excluded argument by another who had testified in the case, and who knew before the trial that he would be a witness, and was warned by the court before testifying that under a rule of the court he would not be permitted to argue the case if he testified, and no reflection was cast on his evidence by refusing to allow him to argue the case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 267; Dec. Dig. § 106.*]

9. BASTARDS (§ 5*) — WITNESSES (§ 344*) — PROOF OF PARENTAGE—IMPEACHMENT—EVIDENCE OF IMMORALITY.

In a proceeding for distribution of a decedent's estate claimed by two illegitimate children, the mother who was the wife of another man, and who had testified to her relations with decedent, was asked on cross-examination how many men she had had sexual intercourse with since her husband left her, and who they were. Held, that an objection was properly sustained on the ground that it was too general, as it should have been limited to the time at or about the time of conception, and it was not proper in order to impeach the witness, as questions on cross-examination to show general immorality or specific acts of immorality are not allowable, the impeachment of witnesses being limited to the mode prescribed by the Code of Civil Procedure.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bastards, Cent. Dig. §§ 7, 8; Dec. Dig. § 5;* Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 1125; Dec. Dig. § 344.*]

10. BASTARDS (§ 6*)—PROOF OF PARENTAGE.

In a proceeding for distribution of a decedent's estate claimed by two illegitimate children, the evidence showed that the mother had lived with decedent for a number of years both before and after the birth of her children. Held, that testimony that the witness had seen decedent and the mother having sexual intercourse after the birth of the younger child was admissible as tending to show the relations between decedent and the mother, and as bearing on the probability of decedent's being the father of the children.

11. WITNESSES (§ 383*)—IMPEACHMENT—INCONSISTENT STATEMENTS—COLLATERAL MATTERS.

Where a witness testifies to declarations made by decedent, and on cross-examination states that he never kept a memorandum of all the things decedent told him, and did not remember telling R. and C. that he had done so, it is not error to refuse to admit evidence by R. and C. to show that he had stated that he had kept such a memorandum, the matter attempted to be brought out being collateral to the issue.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 1224; Dec. Dig. § 383.*]

12. BASTARDS (§ 5*)—ILLEGITIMACY—DECLARATIONS BY MOTHER.

In a proceeding for distribution of a decedent's estate claimed by two illegitimate children, the mother testified that decedent was the father of the children. Held, that evidence of a declaration by the mother to a physician shortly before the birth of one of the children that she was pregnant by another man, and that she desired to be rid of the child by an operation, was properly excluded, as the mother was not a party to this proceeding, and her declarations were not binding on the children on the question of their paternity.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bastards, Cent. Dig. §§ 7, 8; Dec. Dig. § 5.*]

13. WITNESSES (§ 388*)—IMPEACHMENT—CONTRADICTORY STATEMENTS—FOUNDATION—NECESSITY.

In order to impeach a witness by proof of inconsistent statements, a foundation must be laid in the examination of the witness.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 1233; Dec. Dig. § 388.*]

14. TRIAL (§§ 187, 240*) — INSTRUCTIONS — CREDIBILITY OF WITNESS—ARGUMENTATIVE INSTRUCTIONS.

In a proceeding to distribute a decedent's estate claimed by illegitimate children, the mother testified that decedent was their father. Held, that an instruction that, "of the women who are mothers of nameless children, there are few indeed who would hesitate at fraud, or to whom perjury would be a crime," was properly refused, as being argument and on the weight of testimony.

15. BASTARDS (§ 13*) — LEGITIMATION — INSTRUCTIONS.

An instruction in a proceeding for distribution of a decedent's estate in which it was sought to show legitimation of illegitimate children of decedent under Civ. Code, § 230, is properly refused, which informs the jury that to hold that there had been an adoption under that statute would require "liberality of construction destructive of language of the statute itself."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bastards, Cent. Dig. §§ 16, 17; Dec. Dig. § 13.*]

16. BASTARDS (§ 13*) — LEGITIMATION — ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF PATERNITY.

Under Civ. Code, § 230, providing for the legitimation of illegitimate children by the father receiving them into his family, the children may be received into the father's family without the father acknowledging his paternity to every relative, friend, and acquaintance who visits his house after their birth.

17. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1057*)—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR—EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE.

Exclusion of evidence to establish a point established without conflict by other evidence is not prejudicial.

18. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1058*)—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR—EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE.

Sustaining objections to questions on cross-examination, asked for the purpose of showing bias, is harmless, where the witness' testimony fully covers the subject-matter of the questions.

19. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1058*)—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR—EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE.

Where a witness has testified that another witness has made statements to him as to the paternity of her illegitimate child, refusal to allow him to testify that a letter written by the mother contained the same statements was not prejudicial error.

20. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 316*)—DISTRIBUTION OF ESTATE—RESERVATION OF ASSETS.

Where application is made by heirs of a decedent for distribution of his estate, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1658 et seq., relating to "partial distribution prior to final settlement," there having been no presentation of the administrator's final accounts, and the court finds that the estate "is but little indebted, and may be distributed * * * without loss to the creditors," it is error to order a distribution of all the estate, although the bond required by each petitioner under Code Civ. Proc. § 1661, has been given, such distribution being proper under Code Civ. Proc. § 1665, only on final settlement, but enough should be reserved to pay decedent's debts and the expenses of administration and the inheritance tax without recourse to the bonds, but if land belonging to the estate is mortgaged and is ample security for the debt, such debt may be disregarded, as under Code Civ. Proc. § 1661, the land mortgaged is subject to the mortgage after distribution.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Thomas C. Denny, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Henry Gird, deceased. From a decree distributing all the property of the estate, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, the administrator of the estate and decedent's two brothers and a sister appeal. Decree of distribution reversed, with directions to make a decree of partial distribution, and the order denying a new trial affirmed.

J. W. Rose and J. A. Barham, for appellants. C. H. Pond and R. L. Thompson, for respondents.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal from a decree distributing all of the property of the estate of deceased to William Stephen Bennett and Nellie Florence Bennett, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial made by the administrator of said estate and two brothers and a sister of deceased. The application for distribution was one made under section 1658, Code Civ. Proc., by said distributees, claiming to be adopted children of deceased under the provisions of section 230, Civ. Code. This claim being opposed, the application was heard by the court and an advisory jury, and the latter found in response to questions submitted to them that deceased was the father of said petitioners, that he publicly acknowledged each during its minority as his own child, that he received each during its minority into his family as his own child, and that he otherwise treated each child during its minority as if it was his legitimate child. The trial court adopted these findings of the jury.

It is earnestly contended that the evidence is not sufficient to sustain these findings. All of them are essential to the affirmance of the decree, section 230, Civ. Code, providing that: "The father of an illegitimate child, by publicly acknowledging it as his own, receiving it as such with the consent of his wife, if he is married, into his family, and otherwise treating it as if it were a legitimate child, thereby adopts it as such; and such child is thereupon deemed for all purposes legitimate from the time of its birth." Different views have been entertained by justices of this court whether the existence of a family into which the child can be received is essential to an adoption under this section, but that question has been finally determined in the affirmative by this court in Estate of De Laveaga, 142 Cal. 158, 169, 75 Pac. 790.

Material facts of the case concerning which there is no dispute are as follows: Deceased was born July 29, 1837, and died intestate April 4, 1907, leaving an estate valued at about $21,000. He left two brothers and a sister, the brothers residing in Los Angeles county, and the sister residing in the state of Illinois. In 1853 or 1854 he settled in Alexander Valley, Sonoma county, on what was thereafter known as the "Gird Ranch," and this continued to be his home until the time of his death. He was never married. No person claiming relationship to him ever resided there with him other than the petitioners here. About the year 1865 or 1866 Mr. and Mrs. Fletcher, husband and wife, came to this ranch, bringing with them a half Indian girl about three years old, called Alice. For a time Fletcher worked for the deceased on the ranch, but left the neighborhood within two or three years and never returned. Mrs. Fletcher and Alice remained on the ranch, Mrs. Fletcher doing the general housework, and Alice helping as she grew older until at the time of her marriage she was doing a great part of the housework and much farm work outside. During all of this time deceased, Mrs. Fletcher and Alice lived in the same house and ate at the same table, Mrs. Fletcher and Alice sleeping in one room and deceased in another. Deceased was a highly educated man, and took an interest in teaching Alice to read and write. He always treated her kindly and much as any one would treat a child in his household. She finally married one Owen Bennett and lived with him as his wife for a short time, when they separated and she resumed her life on the Gird ranch with Mrs. Fletcher and deceased, but the marriage between Bennett and herself was not dissolved until after the death of deceased. The manner of living was the same as before her marriage, she continuing to occupy a sleeping room with Mrs. Fletcher, and deceased occupying another room. She worked about the ranch as before. She was never paid any wages. On May 22, 1885, she gave birth to William Stephen Bennett, one of the petitioners. Deceased sent for and paid the doctor. The boy was kept on the place and there grew to manhood, being treated practically as any boy raised on a farm. As he grew older he worked on the ranch and attended the public school. Deceased always manifested a kindly interest in him, and assisted him in his education. He always went by the name of Bennett, and was registered at school under that name. He was never paid any wages for his work. In the year 1895, Mrs. Bennett gave birth to the other petitioner, Nellie Bennett, who thenceforth was one of the household. This child was always known as Nellie Bennett. Deceased always treated her kindly. The evidence very clearly establishes that Mrs. Bennett's husband was not the father of Nellie. It must also be taken as establishing that he was not the father of Stephen. The only evidence as to the year of the marriage was to the effect that it occurred in the year 1880, and there was no evidence to contradict that given to the effect that Bennett and Alice separated not later than the year 1881, and never thereafter cohabited or even saw one another until long after the birth of Nellie, except on one occasion when Alice saw him at a distance, saving and excepting evidence to the effect that Alice had on several occasions admitted to others that Stephen was Bennett's child. The evidence was clearly of such a nature that we cannot say that the jury and court were not warranted in concluding that Stephen was not Bennett's child.

The only evidence that deceased was the father of these children was that given by Alice, and that afforded by the circumstances under which all the parties lived, certain alleged admissions of deceased, and his general treatment of Alice and the children. This evidence was of such a nature that an appellate court cannot hold, however much it may doubt the correctness of the conclusion of the trial court, that the conclusion of the trial court on the question of paternity is without sufficient support in the evidence. Alice testified positively that she commenced to have sexual relations with deceased in the year 1884, and that he was the father of both Stephen and Nellie. There was evidence given of statements and conduct on her part that was inconsistent with her testimony, but the effect of this attempted impeachment was purely a question for the trial court. Nonaccess by the husband being clearly shown, or at least being shown to a reasonable certainty, the positive testimony of Alice as to the paternity of her children was competent evidence, and, under the law, sufficient basis for a finding by the jury on the question of paternity. It may reasonably be argued that corroboration of her evidence is to be found in the fact that these children were apparently accepted by deceased without demur or objection as a part of his household, and were treated and brought up as his own children would have been, and that he, Alice, and the children all continued to live as members of one family ordinarily live. In addition to this, two witnesses testified positively that just after the birth of Nellie deceased declared in their presence, another person also being present, when some question was suggested as to the paternity of Nellie, that Stephen and Nellie were his children, and one of these witnesses testified that he heard deceased say many times that Stephen was his son, and Stephen testified that deceased told him that he was his son. Learned counsel for appellant is in error in his claim that a different rule may be applied by this court in cases of this character in determining the sufficiency of evidence to sustain the findings from that applicable in other cases. What was said by Justice Fox in the Matter of Jessup, 81 Cal. 423, 21 Pac. 976, 22 Pac. 742, 1028, 6 L. R. A. 594, quoted in counsel's brief, was said solely with reference to the proper construction of a statute from the standpoint of policy, and, while it might constitute good material for argument to the trial court or jury on the question of the weight to be given by them to certain evidence, cannot be taken as laying down any rule of law. Estate of Sandford, 4 Cal. 12, involved no other question than whether an alleged written acknowledgment sufficiently complied with the terms of a statute. In Hite v. Hite, 124 Cal. 389, 57 Pac. 227, 45 L. R. A. 793, 71 Am. St. Rep. 82, only three of the justices concurred in any expression of opinion that might serve as a basis for the contention that an appellate court would ever review the finding of a trial court in regard to a matter where there is substantial evidence to support the finding, and we do not construe anything in the opinion signed by these three justices as intimating any such doctrine. By section 1844, Code Civ. Proc., it is provided: "The direct evidence of one witness who is entitled to full credit is sufficient for proof of any fact, except perjury and treason." But, says counsel, there are eight separate reasons why Alice Bennett was not "entitled to full credit," such as swearing to her own adultery, admissions, and inconsistent acts. In reply, we can only point to section 1847, Code Civ. Proc., which, after declaring the manner in which a witness may be impeached, declares "and the jury are the exclusive judges of his credibility." Both the trial judge and jury concluded that she was a witness entitled to full credit, and their conclusion on that question is not open to review by us. See Fowden v. Pacific, etc., Co., 149 Cal. 151, 161, 86 Pac. 178.

We do not deem it open to serious question that the evidence is sufficient to support the conclusion on the part of the trial court that deceased treated both Stephen and Nellie as if they were his legitimate children, and will not unnecessarily prolong this opinion by discussing the evidence in regard thereto. "The criterion referred to in the statute is the treatment usually accorded to legitimate children." Estate of Heaton, 139 Cal. 237, 73 Pac. 186.

A more serious question exists as to whether the evidence sufficiently shows that deceased publicly acknowledged Stephen and Nellie as his children to sustain the findings of the trial court to that effect. The language of section 230, Civ. Code, is simply "by publicly acknowledging it as his own." There is no provision as to what shall constitute "a public acknowledgment," and the words of the statute must be taken in their ordinary sense. Blythe v. Ayres, 96 Cal. 532, 577, 31 Pac. 915, 19 L. R. A. 40; Townsend v. Meneley, 37 Ind. App. 127, 74 N. E. 274, 76 N. E. 321. In Crane v. State, 94 Tenn. 86, 28 S. W. 317, a prosecution for bigamy, the statute provided that the testimony of a bystander who witnessed the ceremony and "the public acknowledgment of the party charged shall be competent evidence." The court said: "Criticism is directed to the term 'public acknowledgment of the party charged,' and it is insisted that this means some acknowledgment before a court or other public tribunal. We do not so construe the law, but any acknowledgment of the fact of marriage, by confession or conduct, in the presence of one or more individuals, would answer the requirement of the statute. It need not be in the shape of a public avowal, made in the courts, or in the market place, or from a housetop, but can be made as well by acts and conduct recognizing the marriage, as by oral statements to third persons." In Blythe v. Ayres, supra, it was said in the main opinion, signed by three of the justices, that "this acknowledgment was also public, for, as we have seen, the thought of concealment of the paternity of the child never entered his mind." In the light of what is said in the various authorities as to the meaning of such terms as "public acknowledgment," we are of the opinion that there was sufficient evidence to support the conclusion of the trial court. The circumstances surrounding the birth of these children, and the conditions existing in the household of deceased before and after their birth, coupled with his treatment of them, and his interest in them, were of such a nature, in the absence of any statement to the contrary by him, as to constitute evidence of a general acknowledgment of paternity to the community. In the face of circumstances which might well be accepted as calling for explanation as to the true situation if he was not the father of these children, he never expressly denied that he was such or made to any living person, so far as the evidence shows, any explanation why these children were accepted by him as a part of his household. Of course, he was under no obligation to make any explanation to any one, but in the absence thereof he could not complain if the community accepted, as they might very reasonably do, that he was the father of these children. In addition to the evidence of this character there was the evidence of his declarations to three persons on the only occasion when the question of the paternity of these children appears to have been raised in his presence, to the effect that they were his children, and also the evidence of a witness to the effect that he had heard deceased on many occasions say that Stephen was his son. It may be proper to say again, as we said in regard to the witness Alice Bennett, that the question of the amount of credit to be given to these witnesses was one solely for the trial court. That the children always went by the name of Bennett and that deceased on two separate occasions introduced Stephen as Mr. Bennett or Mr. Steve Bennett, once to his attorney and once to a stranger, do not destroy the effect of the evidence given in support of the children's claim. Nor is the fact that he did not say anything about the matter to his brother when he visited his home shortly before his death of such importance, under the circumstances, as to forbid the conclusion of public acknowledgment. The many reputable witnesses called by appellants to show absence of express acknowledgment to them or in their presence amounted to no more than that they had never heard any such acknowledgment made by deceased, but as to practically all of such witnesses there was nothing to indicate that there was in the circumstances anything to call for an acknowledgment to them. While the case, both on the question of paternity, and that of public acknowledgment, may not be a very strong one in favor of claimants, we are constrained to hold that it was sufficiently strong to support the findings of fact of the trial court thereon, and that being so those findings are conclusive on us, however we might decide the matter had we the right to review findings of fact made on conflicting evidence.

It is claimed that the evidence is insufficient to support the conclusion that he received these children "into his family." If his household in Sonoma county is to be regarded as "his family," within the meaning of section 230, Civ. Code, it cannot be questioned, of course, that the evidence was sufficient. In Estate of Bennett, 134 Cal. 323, 66 Pac. 371, this court said: "The meaning which is to be given to the word (family) is to be determined by the context, and also from a consideration of the subject-matter to which it relates. Every case must depend upon its particular circumstances. Mr. Jarman says (Jarman on Wills, p. 941) 'family' is not a technical word, and is of flexible meaning. Anderson's Law Dictionary defines the word: 'In its modern comprehensive meaning, a collective body of persons living together in one house.' It is sometimes used to include parents with their children, whether dwelling together or not. The word has also a broader and secondary meaning, which includes all the offspring or descendants of a common progenitor, but is not to receive this construction unless such intention is manifested from the context." Webster defines it as: "The collection of persons forming a domestic household, including parents, children, servants, and sometimes lodgers." By the Century Dictionary it is declared to be: "The collective body of persons who form one household under one head and one domestic government, including parents, children, and servants." In their concurring opinion in Blythe v. Ayres, 96 Cal. 592, 31 Pac. 927, 19 L. R. A. 40, Justices McFarland and De Haven said: "Either a widower or a bachelor, as we all know, may have a family, viz., 'a collective body of persons living together under one head or manager.'" In Garner v. Judd, 136 Cal. 394, 68 Pac. 1026, this court, in bank, said, speaking through Chief Justice Beatty: "We have no doubt that when a man has a home where he lives, with a woman whom he holds out to the world as his wife, he has a family within the meaning of section 230, Civ. Code, into which he must receive an illegitimate child in order to legitimate it under that section." In Estate of De Laveaga, 142 Cal. 169, 75 Pac. 790, this court was careful to limit its language as to the necessity of the existence of a family into which the child can be received as one of the cardinal conditions prescribed for an adoption under section 230, Civ. Code, by saying "having a family, or at least a home in which he can receive him" is such a condition. The words of section 230, "receiving it * * * into his family," imply a receiving into a place of which he is the head—of which he has control. As used in this section the word "family," in our opinion, means no more at most than that the father must have a "home," a settled place of habitation of which he is the head, into which he must receive the child, such receiving to be with the consent of his wife if he be married. The brothers and sisters of deceased, who never lived with him in California, constituted no part of his "family" within the meaning of that section.

It is claimed that the trial court committed many errors in the trial of this case.

On objection of respondents, the trial court precluded J. W. Rose, Esq., one of appellants' two attorneys, from arguing the case to the jury or the court. The reason for this action on the part of the trial court was that Mr. Rose was an important witness for appellants and testified on their behalf, and there was a rule of the court purporting to preclude counsel who gave evidence in a case from participating in the argument thereof. The evidence given by Mr. Rose related to matters of such a nature that it must have been known before the commencement of the trial that he would necessarily be a witness, and at the time he was called as a witness he was warned by the court that he would be precluded from arguing the case if he testified. The reason for the refusal was stated by the court in the presence of the jury to be that the rule precluded one who was a witness from arguing a case. The suggestion that the court by this refusal cast any reflection on Mr. Rose or his evidence is unwarranted. We do not deem it necessary to discuss the question of the validity of the rule of the superior court of Sonoma county invoked by respondents. We can well see that the facts of a case might be such as to make its application such an unwarranted deprivation of a party's rights as to constitute an abuse of discretion. In this case appellants were not deprived of the right to argue this case by counsel of their own selection. The record shows that J. A. Barham, Esq., was one of the attorneys of record for appellants, participating throughout all the proceedings in this case, and practically conducting the trial on the part of the appellants. It further shows that the cause was argued to the jury by respective counsel. Counsel were fully advised by the court at the time Mr. Rose was called as a witness that he would thereby render himself ineligible to argue the case as counsel, and we are warranted in assuming that Judge Barham made his preparation for argument accordingly. Without intending to reflect in the slightest degree upon the ability of Mr. Rose in the matter of argument to a jury, we have no hesitation in saying that it would be absurd to hold that any prejudice may have accrued to appellants by reason of the refusal of the court to allow any additional argument to that of Judge Barham, especially when they were fully advised a sufficient time before argument that such would be the ruling of the court. Appellants were not deprived of any statutory right. Parties are not entitled as a matter of right to be heard by as many separate attorneys as they see fit to present. The trial court may exercise a reasonable supervision of such matters, and under ordinary circumstances, if a party is allowed full opportunity to present argument by one counsel, he cannot complain of any deprivation of his rights in this behalf. Certainly no statute prescribes that he shall be entitled to present separate arguments by different counsel.

Alice Bennett was asked on cross-examination: "Since Mr. Bennett left how many men have you had sexual intercourse with, and who are they?" An objection to this question was sustained, the court holding that the question was too general as to time and should be confined to the "time or around the time of gestation." A subsequent question of the same nature directed to "at or about the time immediately before the conception of Nellie" was then asked, and the witness answered that deceased was the only one. Error is alleged in sustaining the objection to the former of these questions. The authorities are practically in accord to the effect that evidence tending to show unchaste conduct of the alleged mother with other men is allowable only in so far as it has a bearing upon the question of the paternity of the child—in so far as it tends to show that another is or may be the father of the child, and hence that it must be directed to a time at or about the time the child was begotten. See 3 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) 822; 5 Cyc. 661; State v. Lavin, 80 Iowa, 555, 46 N. W. 553. The question here, one directed solely to mere acts of sexual intercourse, was not so confined, but, on the contrary, embraced a period of over 20 years. The only other basis on which it could be claimed to be a proper question was that of impeachment of the witness. But it is thoroughly settled that "questions on cross-examination, tending to show the general immorality of the witness, or specific acts of immorality, should never be allowed in any case for the mere purpose of discrediting or impeaching the witness. * * * The Code of Civil Procedure prescribes the method of impeaching witnesses, and they can be impeached in no other way than therein provided." People v. Harlan, 133 Cal. 16, 20, 65 Pac. 9, 10. See, also, Sharon v. Sharon, 79 Cal. 673, 22 Pac. 26, 131. The ruling of the trial court sustaining the objection was correct.

Complaint is made that the court should have stricken out certain evidence given by witness Sanders. The evidence was given on direct examination without objection, and was practically that he had come upon deceased and Alice while they were engaged in an act of sexual intercourse. On cross-examination it was developed that the witness was uncertain whether the incident occurred shortly before or shortly after the birth of Nellie, the younger child. The motion to strike out was based on the ground that the witness said it was after the birth of Nellie. Assuming this to be so, we nevertheless are of the opinion that the evidence was proper as tending to show the extent of the intimacy between Alice and the alleged father of her children, and to corroborate the testimony of Alice as to the nature of the relations existing between them as members of the same household before and after the birth of Nellie. In People v. Jamieson, 124 Mich. 164, 82 N. W. 835, a bastardy case, it was held that "acts of intercourse and undue familiarity both before and after the alleged act resulting in conception are admissible, as bearing upon the probability of the intercourse at the time stated in the complaint." See, also, 5 Cyc. 662, declaring that evidence of the intimate relations existing between the mother and alleged father is admissible, and that evidence of previous or subsequent intercourse is competent to show the probability of the particular act having occurred.

The trial court did not err in sustaining objections to questions asked witnesses Ralph Rose and Arthur Cochrane for the purpose of showing that witness Sanders, who had testified to declarations on the part of deceased, stated shortly before the trial that he kept a memorandum of all the things that deceased told him during his stay at the Gird ranch. On his cross-examination by appellants, Sanders had testified that he never kept such a memorandum, and that he did not remember telling Rose and Cochrane that he had done so. This was clearly a collateral matter elicited on cross-examination. In Faulkner v. Rondoni, 104 Cal. 148, 37 Pac. 886, it was said, quoting from People v. Devine, 44 Cal. 448: "A recognized rule, or rather qualification of the rule, governing the impeachment of the credit of a witness by proof of contradictory statements elsewhere made by him, is that the matter involved in the supposed contradiction must not itself be merely collateral in its character, but must be relevant to the issue being tried"—citing many authorities. See 1 Greenl. on Ev. §§ 449, 461 "e," "f." As to such a collateral matter, the answer of Sanders could not be contradicted by appellants, but was conclusive on them.

It was sought by appellants to show certain declarations by Alice to a physician, Dr. Coffman, some few months before the birth of Nellie, to the effect that she was "in the family way" by one Smith, and that she desired to be rid of the child by an operation. This proposed evidence was properly excluded by the trial court. Alice was not a party to this proceeding, but only a witness on behalf of her children. Evidence of these declarations by her to the physician would have been pure hearsay, in no way binding on her children as evidence on the question of paternity. Being contrary to her evidence given on that question, the declarations, waiving other objections thereto, would have been admissible by way of impeachment of Alice as a witness, but a complete answer to appellants' claim in this regard is that no foundation was laid for any such impeachment on the examination of Alice.

There was no error in refusing to give appellants' requested instruction 1, commencing "I instruct you that, of the women who are mothers of nameless children, there are few indeed who would hesitate at fraud, or to whom perjury would seem a crime," etc. It was not only open to the objection of being in part pure argument in favor of appellants' side of the case, and an instruction on the weight to be accorded the testimony of certain witnesses, but it also in terms informed the jury that to hold that there had been an adoption under section 230, Civ. Code, would require "liberality of construction destructive of language, of the statute itself." There was no prejudicial error in modifying appellants' requested instruction 3. Appellants' requested instructions 4 and 5 were properly refused. They were to the effect that deceased did not receive the children into his family unless he acknowledged his paternity to every relative, friend, and acquaintance who visited his house after their birth. This certainly is not the law.

It was established without conflict that there were always several hired men working on the Gird ranch. Exclusion of other evidence going simply to that extent was, therefore, not prejudicial error.

If any of the rulings sustaining objections to questions asked Sanders on his cross-examination for the purpose of showing bias on his part were erroneous, the effect of the errors was obviated by the testimony given by the witness, in which he fully covered the subject-matter of such questions.

The refusal of the trial court to allow the witness Hopper to testify as to the contents of a letter said by him to have been given to him by Alice to be given to Smith was not prejudicially erroneous. The theory of appellants was that the letter contained statements by Alice showing that Smith was the father of Nellie. But Hopper fully testified as to statements then and at other times to the same effect made by Alice to him. Additional evidence by him showing similar statements by her in a lost writing could not have added to the effect of his evidence already given.

What we have said disposes of all points made in appellants' briefs that require notice, except the claim that the trial court erred in distributing all the residue of the estate to the petitioners. It must be held that there is merit in this claim. The application of petitioners was one under section 1658 et seq., Code Civ. Proc., the sections relating to "partial distribution prior to final settlement," there having been no presentation of the accounts of the administrator—a prerequisite to final distribution. By the decree all the property of deceased, both real and personal, and specifically all cash, money in bank, and every other article of personal property, is distributed to the petitioners, share and share alike, and the bond for $2,000, required by the court of each petitioner under section 1661, Code Civ. Proc., having already been given, the decree orders the administrator to forthwith deliver to the petitioners all of the property distributed. While the trial court might have been warranted in finding that all debts of the deceased except the mortgage debt had been paid, it did not so find. It did find to the contrary that "the estate * * * is but little indebted, and may be distribu[illegible] as prayed for without loss to the creditors of said estate," evidently proceeding upon the theory that the creditors would be protected by the bonds ordered. It is manifest that our law does not contemplate the distribution of all the property of an estate under partial distribution proceedings or prior to the settlement of the final account of the executor or administrator. Such a distribution can be had only upon the final settlement of the accounts of the executor or administrator, or thereafter. Section 1665, Code Civ. Proc. The court in probate must necessarily retain until such time what may reasonably be anticipated as necessary to pay debts and expenses of administration. "Creditors are not to be deprived of their lien upon the assets of the estate, and given a bond in lieu thereof. The court should see that sufficient assets are left, after partial distribution, to pay them, without recourse to the bond. The requirement of a bond is only additional security to provide against unforeseen liabilities, and against errors in judgment." In re Painter, 115 Cal. 635, 641, 47 Pac. 700. This is as applicable to expenses of administration as it is to debts of the deceased. The court here should have distributed to the petitioners a portion only of the residue of the property, reserving what it deemed a sufficient portion to pay any unpaid claims (including any probable deficiency on the mortgage claim, if any), and also to pay such expenses of administration as had been incurred and remained unpaid, and also such expenses of administration as might reasonably be incurred prior to settlement of the final account. If the land mortgaged constituted ample security for the mortgage debt, such debt could be disregarded so far as partial distribution was concerned, the land mortgaged being subject to the mortgage after distribution as before. Section 1661, Code Civ. Proc.; Estate of Mitchell, 121 Cal. 394, 53 Pac. 810. Nothing has been said on this appeal as to the inheritance tax due under the act of 1905, which, of course, is also payable out of the property remaining for distribution.

The decree of distribution appealed from is reversed and the matter remanded, with directions to the lower court to make a decree of partial distribution to the petitioners upon the findings and decision filed July 27, 1909, distributing to said petitioners all the property of decedent except such portion thereof as it may deem advisable to retain until final settlement of the accounts of the administrator for the purpose of paying debts and expenses of administration, upon the giving of such bond by the distributees under section 1661, Code Civ. Proc., as the court may deem proper, and subject to the payment by the distributees of the amounts due as inheritance tax under the act of March 20, 1905 (St. 1905, p. 341). The order denying a new trial is affirmed.

In an action by a sister against her brother to establish a trust in her favor in land alleged to have been conveyed by their mother to defendant for plaintiff's benefit, evidence is admissible that four days before the deed was made the mother had executed a will devising the land to plaintiff, and that on defendant's suggestion, and his oral promise to hold the land for plaintiff, the deed was made and the will destroyed.

3. Trusts (§ 365*)—Enforcement—Laches.

Where land was conveyed by a mother to her son on his oral promise to hold the same for the benefit of his sister, and he complied with the terms of such trust for many years by paying to the beneficiary the rents and profits, an action to enforce the trust brought in less than a year after his repudiation is not barred by laches.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Geo. A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Action by Virginia C. Cooney, administratrix of Margaret J. Cooney, deceased, against Thomas J. Glynn. Defendant had judgment, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Bishop & Hoefler and Bishop, Hoefler, Cook & Harwood (Alfred J. Harwood, of counsel), for appellant. Sullivan & Sullivan and Theodore J. Roche, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an appeal by the plaintiff from a judgment entered in favor of the defendant upon motion for a nonsuit at the close of plaintiff's evidence. The action was begun by the deceased, Margaret J. Cooney, in her lifetime. The present plaintiff was substituted during the pendency thereof upon the death of Margaret J. Cooney.

The complaint states a case to enforce a constructive trust in real estate. In substance it shows the following facts: Bridget Gallagher was the mother of Margaret J. Cooney, the original plaintiff, and of Thomas J. Glynn, the defendant. In the year 1891 she resided at the house of the defendant, Glynn, living with him as a member of the family. She was then about 76 years of age. The relations between them had been confidential and intimate for many years before that time. He had been accustomed to transact business for her and she relied upon him and trusted him implicitly with respect thereto. On the 23d of March, 1891, Mrs. Gallagher executed a will wherein she devised the premises in controversy to her daughter, Margaret J. Cooney. A few days thereafter the defendant suggested to Mrs. Gallagher that it would be more advantageous to cancel the will and convey the property to him, and he promised that if she would do so he would hold the same in trust for the use of Margaret J. Cooney. Thereupon, Mrs. Gallagher, assenting thereto, destroyed the will, and, relying upon his promise to hold the property in trust for his sister, executed to him a deed purporting to be a gift of the property to him. There was no other consideration for the conveyance. It was made upon the express understanding that he would hold the property in trust for his sister, and pay or apply the rents thereof to her use and benefit, and convey the same to her upon demand. Thereupon he went into possession of the property, collected the rents and profits, and applied them in part to the use and benefit of Margaret J. Cooney until December, 1904, at which time he began to apply the whole thereof to his own use, and refused to convey the premises to her. She thereupon demanded a conveyance to herself, which he refused to make.

The evidence was sufficient to establish the material allegations of the complaint. With regard to the trust, it was shown that during the year 1890 Mrs. Gallagher began to reside with Glynn as a member of his family; that she was the mother of Glynn and Mrs. Cooney; that she had executed a will on the 23d of March, 1891; that on the 27th of March in that year she executed the deed in controversy; and that the deed was made in pursuance of an understanding between Glynn and Mrs. Gallagher that he would hold the property in trust for his sister, Mrs. Cooney, and that he would receive the income therefrom, and pay it to his sister or for her use. One of the reasons for making this arrangement was a fear that, if it was put in Mrs. Cooney's control, her husband would induce her to sell the property and that it would thereupon be dissipated. It also appeared that the lot immediately adjoining the property in controversy was owned by Glynn, that there was a belief that the two would sell to better advantage if sold together than if sold separately, and, also, that if a building were to be erected it could be done more advantageously by erecting a single building upon all the lots and dividing the income therefrom according to the respective interests, and that it was expected that at some time this could be done, or that a sale would be made, and that Glynn could manage the matter better if he held the title to both. Glynn took possession of the premises, and from that time until 1904 proceeded to collect the rents therefrom. Thereafter, to Mrs. Cooney's children, he repeatedly admitted that he was holding the same in trust for the benefit of his sister. In each instance he assured them that it was all right, that he was holding the property for their mother, and that he had so adjusted his affairs that if anything happened to him it would be hers upon his death. He applied the rents to her satisfaction, and, for the most part, to her use or to the use of her family. There is evidence to support the conclusion that, until the year 1904, he never denied his trust obligation, but always, upon inquiry, avowed his intention to fulfill it and to convey the property to Mrs. Cooney at the proper time.

Upon these facts it seems perfectly clear that the case made was that of a constructive trust in favor of Mrs. Cooney, and that the nonsuit was improperly granted. It has been established by a number of decisions in this state that where confidential relations exist between two parties, and one of them executes a conveyance of real estate to the other, upon a parol promise by the other that he will hold it for the benefit of the grantor, or for the benefit of some third person in whom the grantor is interested, there being no other consideration for the conveyance, a trust arises by operation of law in favor of the grantor, or in favor of the third person, for whom the property is to be held. It is the violation of the parol promise which constitutes the fraud upon which the trust arises. If made in good faith, and if it is of a continuing nature, the performance of it for a time does not prevent a trust from arising when it is broken and repudiated. Brison v. Brison, 75 Cal. 525, 529, 17 Pac. 689, 7 Am. St. Rep. 189; Id., 90 Cal. 323, 334, 27 Pac. 186; Jones v. Jones, 140 Cal. 590, 74 Pac. 143; Broder v. Conklin, 77 Cal. 330, 338, 19 Pac. 513; Alaniz v. Casenave, 91 Cal. 41, 46, 27 Pac. 521; Nordholt v. Nordholt, 87 Cal. 552, 26 Pac. 599, 22 Am. St. Rep. 268; Feeney v. Howard, 79 Cal. 525, 529, 21 Pac. 984, 4 L. R. A. 826, 12 Am. St. Rep. 162; Odell v. Moss, 130 Cal. 356, 62 Pac. 555; Hayne v. Hermann, 97 Cal. 259, 32 Pac. 171; Butler v. Hyland, 89 Cal. 575, 26 Pac. 1108.

The entire question is discussed at great length in Brison v. Brison, supra, and it is unnecessary to elaborate upon it here. The other cases cited illustrate numerous phases of the question in which it was attempted to distinguish the Brison Case. It is here attempted to distinguish it because in that case the plaintiff was the grantor, and the constructive trust, as it was claimed, arose in his favor, whereas here the trust is not claimed on behalf of the grantor of the deed, but on behalf of Mrs. Cooney, a daughter of the grantor, and it is said that a trust cannot be thus created in favor of a third person. The case of Hayne v. Hermann, supra, was of the same character. In that case the land was conveyed by plaintiff's father to his wife, the defendant, who was plaintiff's mother, upon the express understanding that she would hold the property in trust for the grantor during his life, and after his death for the plaintiff and the defendant in equal proportions. After the death of Mr. Hermann, the daughter began the suit against her mother to enforce a trust as to the undivided one-half of the property. It was held that the case was not distinguishable in principle from that of Brison v. Brison, and that the trust arose by operation of law, and could be enforced by the third person as a beneficiary.

It was claimed by the plaintiff that four days prior to the execution of the deed in controversy Mrs. Gallagher had executed the will wherein she devised the property in controversy to Margaret J. Cooney, and that, at the suggestion of the defendant, the will was destroyed, and the deed executed to him instead thereof upon his promise to hold the property for the benefit of Mrs. Cooney. Upon the trial, the court rejected all evidence concerning the contents of the will and the execution thereof. This was clearly erroneous. It seems that the evidence was rejected upon the theory that, as the will was destroyed and had never been admitted to probate, it was absolutely void even as evidence, referring to the case of McDaniel v. Pattison, 98 Cal. 86, 27 Pac. 651, 32 Pac. 805. It is true that it is there declared that as a dispositive instrument an unprobated will is without effect. But, under the circumstances appearing here, the fact of the execution of the will by Mrs. Gallagher, the devise of this property to Mrs. Cooney, its subsequent destruction at the instance of the defendant, and the execution of a deed in lieu thereof to the defendant in trust for Mrs. Cooney, would be material and competent evidence to establish the constructive trust alleged. The evidence should have been admitted.

It is claimed that the action is barred by the statute of limitations and by laches. It appears from the evidence, however, that the defendant at all times recognized his obligations to hold the property for Mrs. Cooney and to apply the income therefrom to her use or in accordance with her direction. It is also shown that he did so apply the rents and profits, or at least the greater part thereof, and that he at no time repudiated the trust until within less than a year prior to the beginning of the action. The case in this respect is similar to Butler v. Hyland, supra, Odell v. Moss, supra, and Hovey v. Bradbury, 112 Cal. 620, 44 Pac. 1077. In Butler v. Hyland the property was conveyed by a third person to the aunt of plaintiff under circumstances which created a trust in favor of the plaintiff, a trust arising by operation of law. The terms of the trust were that her aunt should hold the property in trust for the plaintiff, and that was the purpose for which the conveyance was made. The plaintiff was a member of the family of her aunt. The rental value was small, and none of it was ever paid to plaintiff, but she knew her aunt was paying the taxes, assessments, and repairs. A period of nearly 20 years elapsed after the conveyance was made before the beginning of the action, and the plaintiff was of age for 16 years before the action was begun. It was held that where the promises which induced the conveyance are of a continuing nature, as in that case, and especially between members of one family, the doctrine of laches does not necessarily bar the action until there is a repudiation, or some act which would give notice to the beneficiary that the trustee no longer acknowledged any obligation to comply with the terms of the parol promise. The other cases are similar in character. The principle established by them is that, in cases of this character, neither the statute of limitations nor the equitable doctrine of laches begin to operate until the trustee begins to act in hostility to the continuing obligation imposed by the parol agreement or understanding.

The respondent makes the point that a constructive trust cannot be raised by any agreement made after the execution of the conveyance. This may be conceded to be correct, but the case shown by the evidence is not of that kind. The declarations of the defendant, which were made to the children of the deceased Mrs. Cooney a few days after the execution of the conveyance, were not declarations constituting a promise made at that time to hold the property in trust, but they were statements by him admitting that at the time the deed was executed he had made these promises. They constituted evidence therefore of what had occurred at the very time of the transaction, and were not subsequent promises made by him.

The evidence was not in all respects consistent. If the case had been submitted upon the merits, and thereupon the court below had made findings and given judgment for the defendant, it may be that there would be found enough in the evidence to support that judgment upon appeal to this court, in view of the limited power of the court to review the decisions of the trial courts in cases submitted to it upon the merits. But upon an appeal from a judgment of nonsuit, the rule regarding conflicting evidence is almost exactly the opposite of what it would be in considering the same evidence after a decision upon the merits. Upon a nonsuit the evidence is to be taken in the sense most favorable to the plaintiff, merely contradictory evidence against the plaintiff is to be rejected, and the plaintiff must prevail if there is enough evidence to make out the case alleged, although there may be contradictory evidence which, if given effect and allowed to prevail, would defeat plaintiff. We have not attempted to relate the evidence contradictory to the facts above stated. In any event the reversal is necessary because of the exclusion of the evidence concerning the will.

The judgment is reversed.

A licensee, operating under permission from a city to tear up a public street for the purposes of its business, is bound to restore the street, and to use due precautions to protect the public while the work is in progress, and cannot escape responsibility for injuries occurring from its failure to do so, on the theory that the restoration of the walk was under the control of an independent contractor.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 301*)—REVIEW—SCOPE—MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

Where prejudice of the jury was not assigned as a ground for a new trial in appellant's notice of intention to move, it could not be considered on appeal, under Code Civ. Proc. § 659, subd. 4, providing that when the motion for a new trial is made on the minutes of the court, for errors of law occurring at the trial, and excepted to by the moving party, the notice must specify the particular errors on which the party will rely.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 705*)—VERDICT—EXCESSIVENESS—REVIEW.

The alleged excessiveness of a verdict cannot be reviewed on appeal, where the transcript does not give the testimony with reference to plaintiff's injuries.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1066*)—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR.

Where there was no evidence showing that plaintiff was negligent, appellant could not complain of an instruction authorizing a finding against it, notwithstanding plaintiff was negligent, because it had not specially pleaded plaintiff's contributory negligence, while prohibiting a finding against appellant's codefendant, who had pleaded plaintiff's contributory negligence in case the jury found he was negligent.

5. PLEADING (§ 84*)—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—CODEFENDANTS.

Where, in an action for injuries against codefendants, one of them specially pleaded plaintiff's contributory negligence, and the other did not, it was proper to charge that plaintiff might recover, notwithstanding his contributory negligence against the one, though he could not against the other, and this, though plaintiff's complaint charged that he was injured by reason of defendants' negligence without fault on his part, on which issue was joined.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; W. L. James, Judge.

Action by Augustias A. Kirk against the Santa Barbara Ice Company and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying the motion of defendant ice company for a new trial, it appeals. Affirmed.

Day & Day, for appellant. H. C. Booth and L. H. Roseberry, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. This is an appeal by the Santa Barbara Ice Company (a corporation) from a judgment against it for damages in the sum of $500, and from an order denying its motion for a new trial.

The action was for personal injuries caused by an obstruction placed on a sidewalk in the city of Santa Barbara by Charles C. Pike, one of the defendants herein. He had restored the cement which had been torn up for the purpose of digging a trench, in which pipes were laid connecting a certain shop, owned by one Abraham, with the refrigerating main of the ice company located beneath the street. George E. Voorhees, Jr., an officer of the ice company, in whose name its franchise to lay pipes in the streets of the city of Santa Barbara had been obtained, was also a defendant, but a motion for nonsuit in his behalf was granted by the court, as it appeared that the corporation was the owner of the franchise, and that Mr. Voorhees had acted for it in obtaining the authority to lay the pipe for the refrigerating system.

It appears from the evidence that the Santa Barbara Ice Company caused the digging of the trench across the sidewalk to Abraham's place of business, and that the earth was replaced, after the installation of the pipe, by the company's workmen under direction of a foreman employed by the corporation. Pike, who was a cement worker, called upon Abraham, and solicited the contract for repairing the sidewalk. He was referred to Grant, the acting manager of the ice company, with whom he communicated by telephone. His account of the conversation over the wire differs from that of Grant, but the jury evidently acted principally upon Pike's testimony. According to Pike, Grant expressed surprise that application for the contract to do the work should be made to him, as he and Abraham had talked the matter over, and he had left it to Abraham. He said that there were other repairs to the sidewalk needed in addition to those made necessary by the digging of the trench, that he had told Abraham to have the sidewalk repaired, and that the ice company would be responsible for that part of the work required to cover the break in the sidewalk produced by the digging of the trench. After reporting this conversation to Abraham, Pike did the work of restoring the sidewalk and placed boards and earth over that part of it which had been rendered necessary by the excavation made for the ice company. This obstruction was not protected by barriers nor lights. Over it the plaintiff fell, and sustained the injuries for which the jury awarded her damages. Witness Grant remembered the fact that he had conversed with Pike and had referred him to Abraham. He also testified that Abraham had agreed to fix the sidewalk, but admitted that if Abraham required it, he (Pike) was "to have the sidewalk fixed to cover up the trench."

From this evidence the jury was justified, we think, in concluding that the Santa Barbara Ice Company, through its manager, delegated to Mr. Abraham the selection of some one to restore that part of the sidewalk broken in the process of preparing to lay the pipe. As a licensee operating under its permission to tear up a public street for the purposes of its business, it was bound to restore that street and to use due precaution for the protection of the public while the work was in progress. It cannot escape responsibility upon the theory that the restoration of the sidewalk was under the control of an independent contractor, for its franchise imposes upon it a duty to the public which it cannot evade by the mere device of authorizing some person to have the work done. In such cases the rule respondeat superior applies. Colegrove v. Smith, 102 Cal. 223, 36 Pac. 411, 27 L. R. A. 590; Luce v. Holloway, 103 Pac. 886.

Appellant's counsel contend that a verdict which exonerates Pike and holds the ice company responsible for plaintiff's injuries is absurd, and while they concede the point that the ice company "cannot complain of an error of the jury or court which exonerates one defendant and holds another responsible, if the latter is in fact responsible," they earnestly assert that the verdict shows prejudice on the part of the jurors against the corporation. Whether or not this contention be correct we need not determine, for no assignment of error on the ground of the jury's prejudice appears in the notice of intention to move for a new trial, and therefore the point cannot be here considered. Code Civ. Proc. § 659, subd. 4. Even if we could consider the matter of prejudice we could not say whether or not the verdict was excessive because the transcript does not give the testimony with reference to plaintiff's injuries.

The court gave the following instruction: "Contributory negligence is such negligence on the part of the plaintiff as contributes directly or proximately to cause the injury suffered. A person is negligent who fails to use such care as a person of ordinary prudence and caution should use under the same conditions and circumstances. Defendant Pike has pleaded as a part of his defense that plaintiff was negligent, and that her negligence contributed to cause the injury suffered by plaintiff. This is a special defense, and is not pleaded in the defense set forth in the answer of defendant Santa Barbara Ice Company. Therefore, if you find that the defendant Pike was negligent in the particulars set forth in plaintiff's complaint, and that through his negligence plaintiff was injured, but also find that plaintiff failed to use ordinary care, and that her own negligence contributed to cause the injury suffered by her, then she cannot recover as against defendant Pike. On the other hand, if you find that the defendant Santa Barbara Ice Company was negligent in the particulars set forth in plaintiff's complaint, and that through its negligence plaintiff was injured, then you should find a verdict against said defendant Santa Barbara Ice Company, notwithstanding you may find that plaintiff's own negligence may have contributed to cause her injury." Of this instruction appellant complains upon the grounds: (1) That the issue of contributory negligence was raised by the allegation in the complaint that the injury occurred without fault or negligence on plaintiff's part, and the traverse thereof in the answer; (2) as there was but one act of negligence of which complaint was made, and that was Pike's, his special plea of contributory negligence should have been available for all purposes of the case; (3) that the case was necessarily tried with this issue before the jury; (4) that no competent evidence on the issue of contributory negligence could have been excluded from the jury; (5) that the case was, as a matter of fact, tried upon that issue. It is unnecessary, however, to consider this instruction critically, for no evidence is recorded in the statement of the case tending to show contributory negligence, nor does anything with reference to that issue appear, except, perhaps, inferentially from the special finding of the jury that plaintiff used ordinary care and prudence in approaching the obstruction on the sidewalk. For aught that appears in the record, it may have been conceded by defendant that no contributory negligence existed. To justify us in reversing a case because of error in an instruction appellant must show that harm resulted from giving the special instruction. Los Angeles Cemetery Ass'n v. City of Los Angeles, 103 Cal. 461, 37 Pac. 375; Chapell v. Schmidt, 104 Cal. 511, 38 Pac. 892; Allen v. McKay, 120 Cal. 337, 52 Pac. 828; Edwards v. Wagner, 121 Cal. 376, 53 Pac. 821; State Loan & Trust Co. v. Cochran, 130 Cal. 245, 62 Pac. 466, 600. If the instruction were erroneous, and if the jury had found plaintiff guilty of contributory negligence while finding in favor of Pike and against the ice company, then, perhaps, the latter would have cause for complaint; but we cannot see how harm resulted to it, in view of the finding that there was no contributory negligence. We think, moreover, that the instruction as an abstract proposition of law is correct, although its bearing upon the case as disclosed by the statement is not obvious.

From the foregoing discussion and the conclusions reached, it follows that the judgment in favor of plaintiff and the order denying appellant's motion for a new trial must be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

PEOPLE v. CORD. (Cr. 1,554.)

1. HOMICIDE (§ 203*) — EVIDENCE — DYING DECLARATIONS.

A statement, made by one making a dying declaration, that he entertained no hope of recovery; that he made the declaration in that frame of mind—was competent and sufficient to show that he was without hope of recovery, though he also stated that he did not know what the future had in store for him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 432; Dec. Dig. § 203.*]

2. HOMICIDE (§ 218*)—EVIDENCE—DYING DECLARATION — SENSE OF IMPENDING DEATH — QUESTION FOR COURT.

Whether or not one making a dying declaration was without hope of recovery is a question of fact for the trial court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 458, 459; Dec. Dig. § 218.*]

3. HOMICIDE (§ 203*)—EVIDENCE—DYING DECLARATIONS.

The fact that one who had been fatally wounded had not been told by his physician that his wound was fatal did not render a dying declaration inadmissible, when it was made under the belief that he could not recover.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 437; Dec. Dig. § 203.*]

4. HOMICIDE (§ 203*)—EVIDENCE—DYING DECLARATIONS—"DYING PERSON."

Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, providing that in criminal actions the declaration of a dying person, made under a sense of impending death, may be admitted in evidence, is declaratory of the existing law that the belief that a fatal wound had been received, and that death was about to ensue, was sufficient to render a dying declaration admissible, and a person who had been fatally wounded, and who was in sore distress therefrom, and who believed that he would not recover, and who was soon about to die, was a "dying person," and a statement made in that belief relating to the cause of his injury is admissible, where it appears that he subsequently died from the direct effects of the wound, though he may have revived after making the statement, or may have lived a considerable time thereafter, and may have again begun to hope for recovery.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 435; Dec. Dig. § 203.*]

5. HOMICIDE (§ 204*)—EVIDENCE—DYING DECLARATIONS.

A person was shot, the bullet piercing the cartilage of the third rib and entering the arch of the aorta, and fell down into the aorta, and rested on one of the semilunar valves opening from the left ventricle of the heart. In some unknown manner the puncture of the aorta became closed, and so remained for more than two weeks, when for some reason it again opened, causing almost immediate death from bleeding. The day after he was shot he made a dying declaration, after he had stated that he entertained no hope of recovery. Some three or four days after he was shot he was taken to a hospital for an operation, and he remained in the hospital until the day before his death, a period of two weeks. During that time he had recovered sufficiently to go out riding several times and walk upstairs with assistance. Held, that his declaration was admissible as a dying declaration.

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 854*)—TRIAL—SEPARATION OF JURY.

The fact that a juror in a homicide case was, with the consent of accused, allowed during a recess to go, in charge of an officer, to visit his sick wife in the city, where the trial occurred, was not ground for reversing the conviction, where it was shown that while he was away nothing was said to him, and that the other jurors were locked up, and were inaccessible to any person.

7. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 854*)—TRIAL—SEPARATION OF JURY.

Where a jury in a homicide case were permitted to separate while deliberating on a verdict under such circumstances as to make it appear that they might have been tampered with, a new trial should be granted, unless there is affirmative proof explaining the separation, and showing that accused was not prejudiced thereby; and, where this burden is met, a new trial should be denied.

8. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1158*)—REVIEW—FINDING OF TRIAL COURT.

The court, on appeal from an order denying a new trial in a homicide case, on the ground of the separation of the jury while deliberating, must accept as true the evidence unfavorable to accused.

9. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 854*)—TRIAL—SEPARATION OF JURY.

While the jury in a homicide case were at luncheon, a fire broke out in a barn a block distant from the hotel. One of the jurors was a brother of the landlady of the hotel, and the landlady told the jury that as the roof of the hotel was on fire, the waiters could not continue to serve them, and she asked her relative to get the hose, which was in the kitchen, and the juror did so, and carried it from the kitchen through the dining room to the sidewalk in front. All of this was in the immediate presence of the jurors and the officer, with the exception of an instant, while he was in the kitchen. As the jurors started out to the sidewalk one of them ran upstairs, out in front on a balcony over the sidewalk. The juror came down into the street, and with several other jurors walked across to the opposite side, and remained there a few minutes watching the fire. Another juror took a bucket of water and put out a small fire on the sidewalk, and another juror gave directions to an acquaintance on the street to take care of his horse. No one spoke to either of the jurors about the case. Held to justify a finding that the jury was not tampered with, so that the court properly refused to grant a new trial.

10. WITNESSES (§ 355*)—IMPEACHMENT—EVIDENCE—GENERAL REPUTATION.

A witness may not be impeached by proof of a bad reputation for truth, unless he is held in such bad repute generally in the community in which he lives; for, under Code Civ. Proc. § 2051, it is the general reputation that is to be proved, and a witness to the reputation must at least be acquainted with the prevailing impression in the community, as disclosed by actions, conduct, or conversations relating to the character in issue, though it is not necessary that the witness should know that the majority of the community have that impression.

11. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 736*)—TRIAL—PROVINCE OF COURT AND JURY — ADMISSIBILITY OF IMPEACHING EVIDENCE.

The court must determine whether general reputation of a witness in the place of former residence is too remote in point of time to be allowed in evidence as impeaching evidence.

12. WITNESSES (§ 352*)—IMPEACHMENT—EVIDENCE.

Where one had neither resided nor done any business in a county for 20 years, but had resided some 200 miles from his former residence, evidence on the subject of his reputation in the county of his former residence was properly excluded.

13. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 485*)—EVIDENCE—OPINION EVIDENCE—HYPOTHETICAL QUESTION.

Where the uncontradicted evidence showed that the wound inflicted on decedent was necessarily fatal, a hypothetical question, put to a physician to elicit his opinion that the immediate cause of death of decedent might have been the reopening of the hole in the aorta inflicted by the wound, by reason of some movement or exertion then made by decedent, was properly excluded.

14. WITNESSES (§ 286*) — EXAMINATION — CROSS-EXAMINATION—REDIRECT EXAMINATION.

An examination on redirect examination, not called for by the cross-examination, and not competent as original testimony, is properly excluded.

The information charged the defendant with the murder of one John P. Pawley on the 27th day of January, 1908. It appeared that on that day he shot Pawley with a pistol, inflicting a wound from which Pawley died on February 17, 1908. Upon the trial a statement purporting to be a dying declaration of Pawley was admitted in evidence, over the objection of the defendant. It is insisted that this ruling was erroneous for two reasons: (1) Because it was not shown that it was made by Pawley in the belief that he was about to die, and under a sense of impending death; and (2) that at the time he made the statement Pawley was not "a dying person" within the meaning of that term in the statute providing for the admission of dying declarations. Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 4.

1. The section cited declares that in criminal actions the declaration of a dying person, made under a sense of impending death, with respect to the cause of his death, may be admitted in evidence. The evidence is clearly sufficient to warrant the conclusion that the statement in question was given under a sense of impending death. It was made on January 28th, the day after the deceased received the fatal wound. He was then at his home, lying in bed, and weak from loss of blood caused by the wound. Before making the statement he was informed that he would be asked to relate the facts about the shooting, and that it was necessary first to ask whether or not he thought there was any hope that he would get well. To this he answered: "I don't see no hope in the world." Being then asked, "That is the way you feel?" he said, "I don't entertain no hope at all." After his statement was made and taken down in shorthand, the following conversation occurred between him and the district attorney: "Now, this statement you are making to us, you are making it in view of impending death? Yes, sir. And without any hope of recovery? Yes, sir. We don't know anything about what the future has, but I have no hope of any recovery. That is the way you feel? Yes, sir; the condition of my mind. And it is in that frame of mind that you are making this? In that frame of mind I am making this statement." This shows all that the statute requires on this point. His belief that he could not recover from the wound, and his understanding that he was giving the account of the manner in which he received it, under a solemn sense of approaching death, was clearly indicated by his testimony. The effect of the statements by him as to his mental condition was not destroyed by his remark, after giving the statement, that "We don't know what the future has." This was a mere statement of an obvious conclusion which any person might make under any circumstances. It did not necessarily indicate that he thereby meant to qualify the statement that he was without hope of recovery. Whether or not he was without such hope was a question of fact to be determined in the court below. The evidence taken was competent for that purpose, and is legally sufficient to sustain the conclusion that he was without hope of recovery, and believed that death would soon take place. The evidence does not show that his physician had previously told him that the wound was fatal, but we know of no rule of law which makes such information a necessary prerequisite to the admission of a dying statement. He had been shot in the breast at the junction of the third rib with the breastbone. He was thereby rendered unconscious for a considerable time, and had lost a great deal of blood; the pleural cavity being found full of blood a few days afterwards. He was affected so that he could not breathe easily, except by lying in a half-reclining position, and he was suffering from pain. All these circumstances would give reasonable cause for grave apprehension of fast approaching death in the mind of a person so situated.

2. The claim that he was not, at that time, a dying person is founded on the fact that he lived for more than two weeks after making the statement, and that, until a few hours before his death, he was thought to be recovering. In this respect the case is remarkable, considering the nature of his wound as shown by the autopsy made after his death. It was found that the bullet, a 38 caliber, had pierced the cartilage of the third rib and the edge of the breastbone and had entered the arch of the aorta, and had then fallen down into the aorta and had rested upon one of the semilunar valves opening from the left ventricle of the heart. If the puncture of the aorta where the bullet had entered had remained open, the man would have died from arterial hemorrhage within a few minutes after he was shot. In some manner unknown it became closed and so remained until the time of his death, when for some reason it again opened, causing almost immediate death from the bleeding. It was the opinion of the physicians that immediately after the shooting the orifice was by some means closed long enough to allow the formation of an organized blood clot over it, which kept it closed until the blood clot had become somewhat disorganized, and that then the puncture opened, letting the blood flow and causing death at once. That the bullet had been, in the meantime, resting within the aorta upon the semilunar valve was shown by the fact that there was a thickening of the valve at the place where it was found, caused by inflammation, which must have been produced by irritation continuing for a considerable period of time. A blood clot was found at the place where the aorta had been pierced by the bullet. Some three or four days after he was shot he was taken to a hospital to have performed upon him the operation of drawing off the blood which had entered the pleural cavity. Nearly two quarts of blood were at that time drawn off by means of a needle. He was in the hospital thereafter until the day before his death, a period of two weeks. During that time he had recovered sufficiently to go out riding several times, and to walk upstairs with assistance. When he left the hospital the bullet had not been located, and the physicians, being ignorant of its situation, then expected that he would recover.

We have no decisions in this state declaring the meaning of the phrase "a dying person," in section 1870 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It does not mean that in order to make such declaration admissible the person making it must be at the time in the act of expiring, or in the final death struggle. It is seldom that a human being in that stage of dissolution is capable of making any statement whatsoever in the nature of a connected or reliable narrative or account of a past transaction. To admit such declarations only when made by a person in that condition would practically exclude them altogether, or render them useless for any purpose. We think the intention of the codifiers was to express, as clearly and comprehensively as was compatible with the necessary brevity, the rule on the subject of the admissibility of dying declarations as it had previously existed. By this rule it was not necessary that the person should be at the time in the throes of death, or that he should die immediately, or within any specified time thereafter, in order to give the declaration probative force. 1 Greenleaf on Ev. § 158; Roscoe, Crim. Ev. *p. 37 (8th Ed.) 61; 21 Cyc. 978; State v. Nash, 7 Iowa, 381; Hall v. Commonwealth, 89 Va. 177, 15 S. E. 517; Swisher v. Commonwealth, 26 Grat. (Va.) 963, 971, 21 Am. Dec. 330; State v. Reed, 53 Kan. 773, 37 Pac. 174, 42 Am. St. Rep. 322; State v. Kilgore, 70 Mo. 553; State v. Tilghman, 33 N. C. 513. It was considered that the belief that a fatal wound had been received, and that death was about to ensue therefrom, would deter such person from uttering a willful untruth about its cause, if not as effectively as would the sanction of an oath, reinforced by the earthly penalty for its violation, at least sufficiently to justify its admission as evidence of the facts recounted. Where a person has been fatally wounded, is in sore distress therefrom, and believes that he will not recover, and is soon about to die, his statement, made in this belief, relating to the cause of his injury is admissible, if it appears that he subsequently died from the direct effects of the wound, although he may have revived after making the statement, or may have lived a considerable time thereafter, and may have again begun to hope for recovery. Such person is to be deemed "a dying person" within the meaning of the statute from the time the wound is received until death results from the injury, and his statement during that period, made in view of death and with the belief that it is near at hand, may be proven to establish the cause of death. In the present case the evidence shows that this wound was necessarily fatal, and that his dissolution therefrom was in progress continuously from the beginning to the close. The remarkable thing is that he lived so long in such a condition. He was never on the road to recovery, as appellant contends, but was constantly on the brink of death from a recurrence of hemorrhage. He believed his death imminent at the time he made the statement. The fact that he and others may have afterwards entertained a false hope of recovery could not have affected the solemnity or veracity of his statement, nor have made him other than a dying person, in the sense of the statute, at the time the statement was made.

3. It is contended that the jury was allowed to separate, after having been put in charge of an officer, during the trial, and before the case was finally submitted to them. One juror, whose home was in Visalia, where the trial occurred, was allowed to go, in charge of a deputy sheriff, to visit his wife, who was sick. This occurred during a recess of the trial, the juror was separated from the other jurors less than an hour, and the defendant's attorney had consented to the visit. It was shown that while he was away nothing was said to him about the case, and that the other jurors were locked up and were inaccessible to any person. There is no merit in the objection.

4. It is also claimed that there was a separation of the jury after they were charged, and before the verdict was returned. The jury was sent out to consider their verdict on June 2d and returned the verdict in the afternoon of the next day. They were taken to the Elder house on June 3d for luncheon, and were there seated at a table with the officer in charge. No one else was at that table. While they were eating luncheon a fire broke out in a barn one block distant from the hotel. As might be expected, the evidence as to what then ensued is conflicting. The court below decided against the defendant, and therefore we must accept the evidence unfavorable to him as true. One of the jurors, Mr. Cottle, was a brother of the landlady. When the news of the fire was first heard by the jury they remained at the table a few minutes. Then the landlady told them that, as the roof of the hotel was on fire, the waiters could not continue to serve them, and she asked Cottle to get the hose, which was in the kitchen, the door from the kitchen into the dining room being wide open. Cottle did so, and carried the hose from the kitchen through the dining room to the sidewalk in front. All this was in the plain view and immediate presence of the other jurors and the officer, with the exception of an instant while he was in the kitchen. As he returned the jurors all arose and walked with him as he came from the kitchen into the dining room, and on out to the sidewalk, except one juror, Mr. Kellenberg. Kellenberg asked the landlady if he could assist her, and she asked him to run upstairs and assist persons there. As the other jurors started out to the sidewalk, Kellenberg ran upstairs and through a bedroom or hallway, out in front upon a balcony or porch over the sidewalk. He did this so quickly that when the officer reached the street with the other jurors Kellenberg was already on the porch, holding a ladder, while another person carried a bucket of water up the ladder to the roof to extinguish the fire. Kellenberg then came down into the street, and with several other jurors walked across to the opposite side of the street, and remained there a few minutes, watching the fire at the barn. They were about 60 feet away from the others at that time, but all of them were in plain view of the officer. One of them, Ballou, took a bucket of water and put out a small fire on the sidewalk. While this was occurring another juror, Sellers, gave directions to an acquaintance on the street to take care of his (Sellers') horse. No one spoke to either Kellenberg or Sellers about the case. The officer testified that he kept the jurors in view and within hearing, except as above stated, and as close together as he could under the circumstances, and that they did not talk to any one, nor have any chance to do so. While the jurors were thus out in the street other persons were coming and going about in rather close proximity to them. It would, of course, be improbable that there would be any talk about the case under these circumstances. Cottle was out of sight but an instant in going from the open kitchen for the hose; and, as he was very quick about it, it is a reasonable inference, if not a necessary conclusion, that he neither spoke nor was spoken to, in that moment, upon any subject. Where the jury has been permitted to separate while deliberating upon a verdict, under such circumstances as to make it appear that they might have been tampered with, a new trial should be granted, unless there is affirmative proof upon behalf of the people explaining the separation, and showing that the defendant was not prejudiced thereby. People v. Adams, 143 Cal. 210, 76 Pac. 954, 66 L. R. A. 247, 101 Am. St. Rep. 92; People v. Brannigan, 21 Cal. 339; People v. Symonds, 22 Cal. 352. If this burden is met by the people, a new trial should be denied. We think in this case there was reasonably strong proof that the jury was not tampered with, and that defendant suffered no prejudice from the confusion and slight separation growing out of the alarm of fire. There was other evidence showing greater confusion and a more complete separation; but, as, before stated, we must take the view most favorable to the prosecution in support of the decision of the trial court. There was no attempt to show the slightest bad conduct on the part of any member of the jury, or any effort by any person to approach or influence them in any way. The following cases support the conclusion that there was no conduct on the part of the jury prejudicial to the defendant. People v. Bemmerly, 98 Cal. 301, 33 Pac. 263; People v. Sansome, 98 Cal. 239, 33 Pac. 202; People v. Leary, 105 Cal. 495, 39 Pac. 24; People v. Bush, 68 Cal. 627, 10 Pac. 169; People v. Wheatley, 88 Cal. 119, 26 Pac. 95; People v. Yut Ling, 74 Cal. 570, 16 Pac. 489.

5. The witness Anderson, for the defendant, testified that he was well acquainted in a certain community in Santa Clara county, where the deceased, Pawley, had formerly lived; that he knew Pawley there; that he had been a deputy sheriff and policeman there for 27 years; that he knew Pawley's reputation in that community at that time for truth, honesty, and integrity, and that it was bad. This evidence was stricken out by the court. He did not testify that he knew the general reputation of Pawley for truth, honesty and integrity, and the facts elicited in his cross-examination show that he knew nothing of Pawley's reputation, except what he had heard from three police officers on one occasion during a trial before a justice of the peace more than 20 years before, in Santa Clara county, where Pawley then lived; that these officers were talking about Pawley's testimony at that trial, and that the witness Anderson had seen Pawley but twice in his life, and that was more than 20 years before his death. It was also in evidence that for the last 20 years of his life Pawley had not lived in Santa Clara county, and had not done business there, but had lived in Tulare county, some 200 miles from his former residence. A witness may not be impeached by proof of a bad reputation for truth, unless he is held in such bad repute generally in the community in which he lives, or is generally known. It is the general reputation that is to be proven. Code Civ. Proc. § 2051. The ultimate fact to be established is his actual personal character, and it is considered that the general opinion of his character held by persons who know him is of probative value as evidence of his real character. Hence the witness to such reputation must at least be acquainted with the prevailing impression in the community, as disclosed by actions, conduct, or conversations relating to the character in issue, although it is not necessary that the witness testifying should know that the majority of the community have that impression. 16 Cyc. 1276, 1277. The question as to what territory and what people comprise the "community," especially in large cities, is not here involved. It is a question for the court to determine whether or not general reputation in a place of former residence is too remote in point of time to be allowed in evidence. 16 Cyc. 1277. In the present case the deceased had not resided in Santa Clara county for more than 20 years before the shooting. It is obvious from these rules of law governing the subject that the court below, so far as appears, did not abuse its discretion in striking out the evidence of Anderson on the subject of the reputation of the deceased on motion of the district attorney.

6. The court properly refused to allow a hypothetical question to be put to a physician, intended to elicit his opinion that the immediate cause of the death of Pawley might have been the reopening of the hole in the aorta by reason of some movement or exertion then made by him. The wound inflicted by the defendant would nevertheless be the proximate cause of the death. The uncontradicted evidence was that it was necessarily fatal; and, even if not so, the proposed opinion would not have affected the proposition that Pawley suffered death at the hands of the defendant. If the opinion had been given as proposed it would have been immaterial to any issue in the case. Furthermore, the witness in answer to previous questions on cross-examination had stated that he hardly thought such a thing possible.

7. Another witness testified that Pawley's reputation for peace and quiet was bad. On redirect examination the court refused to allow him to testify further in regard to Pawley's temper when he became angry. There had been nothing in the cross-examination calling for such testimony as an explanation, and it was not competent as original testimony for the defendant.

We do not consider it necessary to discuss the alleged errors in giving and refusing instructions. They were not, as defendant claims, of a character to mislead the jury, but were correct in law, and were applicable to the case as submitted to the jury.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

In re GHIO'S ESTATE.

ROCCA v. THOMPSON.

(Sac. 1,669.)

1. TREATIES (§ 7*) — CONSTRUCTION — OPERATION AS TO STATE LAWS.

An intent of the federal government to materially abridge by treaty the autonomy of the several states and interfere with and direct the state tribunals in state proceedings affecting private property within their jurisdictions will not be deemed to exist, unless the language used plainly expresses it, or necessarily implies it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Treaties, Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 24*)—RIGHT TO APPOINTMENT—ITALIAN CONSUL GENERAL—"LAWS OF THE COUNTRY."

The treaty between the United States and the Argentine Republic of July 27, 1853 (article 9, 10 Stat. 1009), provides that if any citizen of either of the two contracting parties shall die without will in any of the territories of the other, the Consul General or consul of the nation to which decedent belonged, or the representative of such Consul General or consul, may intervene in the possession, administration, and judicial liquidation of decedent's estate, conformably with the laws of the country, for the benefit of the creditors and legal heirs. Held, that the phrase "laws of the country," so far as the United States is concerned, means the local laws of administration and procedure of the respective states, and qualifies the right and the method of intervention, as well as the procedure after intervention takes place, so that if a consul intervenes he must do so in the manner, to the extent, and for the purpose prescribed by the laws of the jurisdiction where the property is situated, and the Italian Consul General, under the treaty of May 8, 1878, between Italy and the United States (article 17, 20 Stat. 732), providing that the respective Consuls General, etc., shall enjoy in both countries all the rights which are or may hereafter be granted to the officers of the same grade of the most favored nation, would not have the right to be appointed administrator of the estate of a subject of Italy resident in California, leaving property there with his heirs resident in Italy, in view of the California law providing that the public administrator of the county shall officiate in such a case.

3. TREATIES (§§ 7, 8*) — CONSTRUCTION—"INTERVENE."

In the construction of treaties, words are to be taken in their ordinary meaning as understood in the public law of nations, and not in any artificial or special sense impressed upon them by local law, unless such sense is clearly intended, and where a treaty admits of two constructions, one restrictive of rights that may be claimed under it and the other favorable to them, the latter is to be preferred; and as the treaty with the Argentine Republic of July 27, 1853 (10 Stat. 1005), giving the Consul General or consul of either nation the right to intervene in the administration and judicial liquidation of the estate of a subject of his nation dying in the other nation, intestate, relates to local proceedings for the settlement of estates, the word "intervene," used therein, should be given the meaning it usually has in that connection, which, in proceedings in rem, does not usually include the right to take the property from the custody of the court or officer upon whom the law imposes the duty of administering and distributing it, and hence the word in the treaty will be deemed to imply an intention to give a right to the consul to appear as a party in a pending administration or action carried on by another person, and not a right to institute and carry on the proceeding itself, especially as the object of the treaty to allow the consul to represent the subjects of his country who are interested as heirs or creditors would be fully met by such construction.

4. PARTIES (§ 38*) — INTERVENTION—"INTERVENE."

Intervene," when applied to matters of law, means to interpose in a lawsuit so as to become a party to it, and at civil law signifies the act of a third person who becomes a party in a suit pending between other persons.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; Frank H. Smith, Judge.

Proceedings for settlement of the estate of Giuseppe Ghio. From an order granting letters of administration to George F. Thompson as administrator, Salvatore L. Rocca appeals. On rehearing, after judgment in the District Court of Appeal. Affirmed.

The opinion of the District Court of Appeal (per Hart, J., concurred in by Chipman, P. J., and Burnett, J.) is as follows:

"On the 27th day of April, 1908, Giuseppe Ghio died, intestate, in the county of San Joaquin, this state, leaving an estate consisting of personal property of the value of about $1,061.85. The deceased, at the time of his death, was a resident of San Joaquin county, but a citizen of Italy. His surviving heirs are a widow and three minor children who were, at the time of his death and when the proceeding here involved was heard in the court below, residents of Italy. Both the public administrator of San Joaquin county and Salvatore L. Rocca, the Consul General of the kingdom of Italy, in and for the states of California, Oregon, Washington, Nevada, and the territory of Alaska, petitioned for letters of administration of the estate of said deceased. The court, upon the hearing of the matter of the petitions of the contesting petitioners, made an order granting letters of administration to George F. Thompson, the said public administrator, and, necessarily, refusing to grant letters to said Salvatore L. Rocca, Consul General, etc. This appeal is prosecuted from said order.

"The ultimate question submitted here for determination is one of more than ordinary magnitude. It involves the important proposition of whether foreign consular officers stationed and representing their governments in the United States are entitled, under and by virtue of the rights conferred upon them by the provisions and stipulations of the treaties subsisting between this and the governments they so represent, to supersede the public administrators in the matter of the administration of the estates of aliens (citizens of the countries they represent) denizened in this country, dying here intestate and leaving estates within the jurisdiction of our local courts. It is not claimed that there is any provision contained in the treaty between this government and the kingdom of Italy which, in terms, authorizes the exercise by the consular officers representing the latter government in the United States of the power and right contended for here by the appellant. It is, however, the contention that under the 'most favored nation clause' of said treaty the Consuls General of Italy, stationed here, are, by virtue of the provisions of article 9 of the treaty between this government and that of the Argentine Republic, entitled to exercise the power and right claimed by the appellant in preference to the public administrator.

"The Italian treaty with this government provides that Consuls General of Italy are entitled to 'all the rights, prerogatives, immunities and privileges which are now or may hereafter be granted to the officers of the same grade of the most favored nation.' Article 9 of the Argentine treaty reads as follows: 'If any citizen of either of the two contracting parties shall die without will or testament in any of the territories of the other, the Consul General or consul of the nation to which the deceased belonged, or the representative of such Consul General or consul in his absence, shall have the right to intervene in the possession, administration and judicial liquidation of the estate of the deceased, conformably with the laws of the country, for the benefit of the creditors and legal heirs.' U. S. Treaties 1904, p. 24; 10 Stat. 1009.

"Whether the position of appellant is tenable or otherwise rests and hinges entirely upon the meaning of the word 'intervene,' as used in the foregoing article of the Argentine treaty, and, therefore, upon the correct interpretation of said word as so employed his contention must either be sustained or rejected. In support of his contention, appellant cites the following authorities: In re Fattosini, 33 Misc. Rep. 18, 67 N. Y. Supp. 1119; In re Lobrasciano, 38 Misc. Rep. 415, 77 N. Y. Supp. 1040; In re Wyman, 191 Mass. 276, 77 N. E. 379, 114 Am. St. Rep. 601; Devlin on the Treaty Power, § 202.

"The construction given by the foregoing authorities of the language of the provision of the Argentine treaty upon which appellant relies to sustain his position is that the Italian consul, under the 'most favored nation clause' of the Italian treaty is entitled to the possession, for the purposes of administration, of the property of an Italian subject dying intestate and leaving estate within his consular jurisdiction. The cases of In re Logiorato, 34 Misc. Rep. 31, 69 N. Y. Supp. 507, and Lanfear v. Ritchie, 9 La. Ann. 96, hold to opposite views, and maintain that the full extent of the right and power prescribed to the Italian consul is to 'intervene' in such cases as the one at bar in the sense in which that word is used in our local statute law, and that such is the true interpretation of the word 'intervene,' as used in the Argentine treaty. In other words, it is held in the last-mentioned cases that to intervene is to 'come between,' and 'the right to intervene in a judicial proceeding is a right to be heard with others who may assert demands or defenses.' (Italics ours.) This is, obviously, the meaning of intervention or of the right to intervene as prescribed in our local Code. Section 387, Code Civ. Proc. The effect of the construction thus given the provision of the Argentine treaty, that the Consul General 'shall have the right to intervene in the possession, administration and judicial liquidation of the estate of the deceased, conformably with the laws of the country,' etc., is that said language means nothing more than that such intervention or such right to intervene shall be in accordance with the procedure or rules laid down by our local laws concerning the right to intervene in any case or under any of the circumstances indicated therein. In other words, assuming that, by virtue of the terms of the 'most favored nation' clause contained in the Italian treaty, the Italian consul, as to the estate or property of a subject of the kingdom of Italy, dying intestate in this country, is brought within the rights conferred by article 9 of the Argentine treaty, he is thus limited to the exercise of the right or power only of making himself a party to the proceedings in administration as an intervener, but must do so according to the mode prescribed for intervention by our Code, for the prosecution or defense and protection of the rights of the creditors and of the rightful heirs of the deceased or the legal successors to his estate, and not as an administrator of the estate in preference to the officer created by our local laws and invested with the power and right and duty to administer the estates of persons dying intestate, leaving estate situated here, but having no lawful heirs within the jurisdiction of the state.

"Mr. Devlin, in his very excellent volume on the treaty power, seems to approve the construction of the language of article 9 of the Argentine treaty as expounded by the New York Supreme Court in the case of In re Lobrasciano, supra, for, without comment, he repeats the language as used in that case that 'the power conferred upon the consul by the words above quoted (the right to intervene) is not limited by the succeeding words, "conformably with the laws of the country for the benefit of the creditors and legal heirs." These words relate merely to the procedure of administration,' proceeds Mr. Devlin, 'and not to the right to administer.'

"In the case of In re Wyman, supra, the Supreme Court of Massachusetts, holding with the contention of appellant here upon the construction of article 9 of the Argentine treaty, and applying such construction to the rights of the Russian vice consul under the 'most favored nation' clause of the Russian treaty, brushes aside the ruling in the Louisiana case of Lanfear v. Ritchie, supra, by declaring that the decision was rendered and filed 'at a time when we might expect the doctrine of state rights to be strongly insisted upon.'

"It is an established and incontrovertible principle that a treaty negotiated by the government of the United States with a foreign power becomes, upon the adoption of such treaty, a part of the law of every state of the American Union, and that where the provisions and stipulations of the treaty are at cross-purposes with the statute of any state the latter must succumb to the former. This principle is essentially an indispensable attribute of the treaty-making power vested alone in the general government, and is expressly declared in the second subdivision of article 6 of the federal Constitution in the following language: '* * * All treaties made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land; and the judges in every state shall be bound thereby, anything in the Constitution and laws of any state to the contrary notwithstanding.'

"The courts, with few exceptions, in the construction of the scope and effect of the treaty-making power delegated to and therefore exclusively vested in the federal government, have gone to the extreme limits, and recognize nothing within the rights reserved by the states to themselves which must not give way to the force of treaty stipulations. The federal courts have uniformly held this power to extend even to the abrogation, pro tanto, of all and every character of state legislation involving subjects of exclusive internal cognizance, where the stipulations of treaties and the provisions of local statutes conflict. As stated, this proposition proceeds from the fundamental principle of our system of government 'that the Constitution, laws, and treaties of the United States are as much a part of the law of every state as its own local laws and Constitution.' Hauenstein v. Lynham, 100 U. S. 490 (25 L. Ed. 628); Foster & Elam v. Neilson, 2 Pet. 253, 7 L. Ed. 415; The Cherokee Tobacco, 11 Wall. 616, 20 L. Ed. 227; Mr. Pinckney's Speech, 3 Elliott's Constitutional Debates, 321. And the same principle is enunciated and sustained by some of the state courts, as in the New York and Massachusetts cases cited and relied upon by appellant and to which we have hitherto referred. See, also, People, etc., v. Gerke & Clark, 5 Cal. 381.

"There is not, and there could never be, since the establishment of the general government by the adoption of the federal Constitution, any doubt that the treaty-making power of the federal government must, from the very necessities of our complex governmental system, be sufficiently broad to cover and include all of the usual subjects of treaties between different nations. Yet, it is not to be wondered that questions involving the extent to which the power could be exercised presented for judicial solution, when the nation was still young, many perplexing and troublesome problems, and that, as an act of Congress attempting to deal with subjects clearly within the reserved rights of the states in contravention of such rights would be void as being in excess of the power of the national government, the early judges were to no little extent startled at the proposition that said government could accomplish through treaty stipulations what it was powerless to do by congressional legislation. Under the decided cases in which this power has been defined, we are unable to find the line beyond which the government may not extend its exercise.

"In the case of In re Logiorato, supra, in which, as we have seen, the contention of appellant as to the construction of the language upon which he relies in the Argentine treaty is controverted and discarded, the learned surrogate concedes 'that a solemn treaty of the United States with Italy is of binding force, and that it must control all courts, even to the extent of ousting them of jurisdiction or of changing the rules of their procedure.' (Italics ours.) And, thus we are led to inquire: May the federal government, through a treaty compact, change the nature of the preliminary proceedings, the mode of trial, and the rules of evidence established by the local Legislatures in criminal cases in which the laws of the commonwealth are charged to have been violated by citizens of another country who are residents of this? If so, why does not the power extend to the changing of the mode and character of the punishment to be imposed in all cases of infraction of the local criminal laws by foreigners denizened here? Is it legitimately within the treaty-making power, as applying to aliens residing in this country, to change our procedure and the character of our system of pleadings in civil cases in law and in equity? We shall not undertake to answer these questions. Nor are we to be understood as declaring that, under the treaty-making power granted by the states to the central government, it would not constitute the exercise of competent authority to stipulate or provide for the trial in our state courts (we are not now speaking of the practice in consular courts, which are not state or local tribunals, and in which the practice and procedure must, necessarily, be prescribed and regulated by congressional legislation or perhaps by treaty negotiations, or by both) of alien residents by any mode or procedure upon which this government and another power might agree, however radically different such mode or procedure might be from that authorized by the system established by our local Legislatures. We neither affirm nor deny the proposition, for, as we have said, we are unwilling to venture an opinion, based upon the decisions we have examined, as to the limitations, if, indeed, there be any, upon this power, except that it cannot be so used as to change the character of the government or to be inconsistent with the nature and structure thereof or the objects for which it was formed. The discovery of the exact and precise limitations upon the exercise of this power by our national government, keeping in view the rights which the states have reserved to themselves or have never given away, is a task which may well be commended to the genius and industry of some curious publicist.

"But we think that it can be safely laid down as an incontrovertible proposition that, where a foreign power, under the stipulations of a treaty with this government, claims rights which do not intrinsically or in themselves constitute the 'usual subjects' of treaties, such rights must be granted in language so clear and unmistakable that no serious question can arise as to the intention of the high contracting parties in relation thereto, and that in no case should the enjoyment of such rights be vouchsafed upon a strained or far-fetched construction.

"It may happen, and perhaps in the history of our foreign relations it has happened, that, in some particular instances, in order to promote and maintain the friendly commercial and political comity so essential to the peace, prosperity, and happiness of all civilized countries, requests are made or concessions asked and granted by treaty stipulation (in consideration of the concession of similar rights to this government) as to certain rights which, in strictness, do not involve or appertain to subjects which are peculiarly and inherently of international concern; that is to say, subjects which in themselves are not indispensably necessary to the maintenance of full and complete international amity. Such requests or concessions, if granted, are obviously acceded to for no other reason than that they are requested, or, perhaps, demanded, and not because they relate to the usual subjects of treaties. We can readily understand how, for instance, in the absence of an express provision in the treaty with regard thereto, a foreign power maintaining treaty relations with this government, could insist under the 'most favored nation' clause upon privileges as to our public educational advantages equally with the other governments in conventional amity with this, for the very obvious reason that the subject of education is one of universal interest and concern to all civilized governments. Such a subject naturally comes within the category of the 'usual subjects' of treaties. So with all those subjects with reference to which Congress possesses the sole power of legislation, as, for instance, the tariff, interstate commerce with its various ramifications, and like questions.

"This leads us to the consideration of the specific question submitted here for decision.

"As we have already explained, the Italian consul claims the right to administer upon the estate involved in this controversy by virtue of the 'most favored nation' stipulation of the Italian treaty by reference to the effect of said stipulation upon the provisions of article 9 of the Argentine treaty. As before stated, the determination of the question is dependent upon the construction which may be properly put upon the language of the Argentine treaty by which it is provided that the consul of a foreign county is entitled to 'the right to intervene in the possession, administration, and judicial liquidation of the estate of the deceased, conformably with the laws of the country, for the benefit of the creditors and legal heirs.' We may as well say, in limine, that we do not agree with the appellant's construction of the language of article 9 of the Argentine treaty. The New York and Massachusetts cases which are cited in support of his construction are entitled to great weight in the consideration of the question, as are likewise, the views of Mr. Devlin, who has furnished the profession with a learned and valuable treatise on the Treaty-Making Power; but we are not satisfied with the conclusion reached by those writers and are of the opinion that it cannot be sustained upon principle or sound reason.

"In the first place, we see nothing in the right to administer upon the estate of a deceased alien, dying intestate and leaving property in this country, which justifies the conclusion that such right constitutes one of the 'usual subjects' of international treaties. The subject is one, on the contrary, which in itself, it seems to us, cannot and could not affect international relations or become an essential feature of the most perfect commercial and political relations between this and other governments. The object of the administration of estates of deceased persons in this country is: First, to protect the creditors thereof; and, secondly, to execute, as to the legal heirs, the law of descents. The rights of creditors are paramount to those of the heirs, but it is the duty of the courts and other officers charged with the responsibility of administering such estates to watch and protect the interests of both with equal vigilance and good faith. This being done, the object of administration is fully and effectually accomplished. Administration of the estates of deceased persons, like that of the estates of minors and incompetents, is a subject, as before suggested, essentially of local concern and possesses none of the characteristics of international importance. And this is equally true where the deceased is an alien resident and his legal heirs citizens and residents of a foreign country. The duty of administering the estate faithfully in the latter case is as binding upon the local officers charged with its performance as if the deceased and his heirs were citizens of this country. The legal heirs of the deceased in the case at bar, although citizens and residents of Italy, are undoubtedly entitled to the residue of the estate of said deceased after the payment of creditors and the expenses of administration. This right, flowing from treaty stipulations, has often been so adjudicated and sustained by our courts, and it involves a proposition which constitutes an appropriate subject of the treaty-making power. The full extent of the interest, therefore, of a foreign government in the estate of a citizen of the country over which that government prevails dying intestate here is to see that the alien heirs of the latter or those entitled to succeed to his estate receive in full all that they are entitled to. In other words, such government is interested to the extent only that it may insist that the rights of its own subjects in this country shall be fully conserved and protected. This being so, is it to be supposed, in the absence of an express provision in the treaty to that effect, that this government intended, at the time of the execution of the treaty between it and the kingdom of Italy, that, under the 'most favored nation' clause, the consular officers of the latter stationed here should be authorized to oust a duly created local officer, specifically clothed with the power and duty of administering upon such estates as the one involved here, of his right to exercise the duties of his public office? We cannot be persuaded that such was the intention. There is no reason of which we can conceive why such should have been or was the intention. There is every reason why the intention was not to thus trespass upon the rights of the states and thereby set at naught a local statute specifically enumerating those entitled to administer upon the estates of persons dying intestate and leaving property within the jurisdiction of our local courts.

"Foreign consular officers stationed in this country should, undoubtedly, as they always are, be invested with plenary power to protect not only the general rights of the governments to which they belong, but also the individual personal and property rights of citizens of their countries who are denizens of this. And where, as in the case at bar, such officers are given the right by treaty to intervene in the administration of the estates of citizens of their own country dying intestate here—that is, given the right to officially and as parties to the proceeding for that purpose to exercise such surveillance over such estates as to enable them to fully protect the interests of the estates and all interested therein—they are thus given a power as plenipotentiary in extent as they are entitled to exercise, and the power so given and limited is not inconsistent with the rights of the states. In California (and we presume the same may be done in most if not all of the states) the probate court has the power to appoint and authorize an attorney to represent and protect the interests of absent heirs to all estates, and to the extent of his authority such attorney may in a sense intervene in the administration of those estates. While the right to appoint an attorney for that purpose is not expressly authorized by statute, but is a part of the inherent power of the probate court, it would not for a moment be contended, if the law provided that an attorney should be so appointed and 'intervene' in behalf of absent heirs, he would thus be clothed with authority to administer upon such estate in preference to those enumerated in section 1365 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

"We think the clear intention of the Argentine treaty was to confer no greater right upon consular officers in cases like the present one than to see that the public administrator administers the estate so as to fully protect and preserve the interests of the creditors and heirs; that is, to see that the estate shall first discharge its obligations to its creditors and then to require the devolution of the residue upon those who are citizens and residents of a foreign country who are legally entitled to the same.

"But we are not without very excellent authority that the meaning here given to the word 'intervene' and the language following the use of that term, 'conformably with the laws of the country,' is correct.

"In the case of In re Logiorato's Estate, supra, the learned writer of the opinion thus disposes of the question: 'It will be observed that the right assured to the Consul General is to "intervene," and that this intervention is to be "conformably with the laws of the country." To intervene is to "come between" (Webst. Dict.), and the right to intervene in a judicial proceeding is a right to be heard with others who may assert demands or defenses. It is not a right to take possession of the entire corpus of a fund which is the subject of the proceeding. A right to intervene "conformably with the laws" of the state of New York is something different from a right to set aside the laws of the state, and take from a person who, by those laws, is the officer intrusted with the administration of the estates of persons domiciled here, and who leave no next of kin within the jurisdiction, the right and duty of administering their assets. * * * The eminent text-writers cited in the opinion of the learned surrogate (in the Fattosini Case) do not intimate that the courts of civilized states, acting under general laws framed for the protection of foreigners equally with their own citizens must grant administration, contrary to the terms of those laws, to consuls, under any circumstances whatever. Thus in Wools. Int. Law, p. 154, the learned writer, in enumerating the duties of consuls, includes the power "of administering on the personal property left within their consular districts by deceased persons, when no legal representative is at hand, and when law or treaty permits, and thus of representing them, it may be, before the courts of the district." Consuls may accept administration, but no right to override the local law is suggested. See, also, Wheat. Int. Law (3d Ed.) 167, 168.'

"Caleb Cushing, as Attorney General of the United States, in a letter addressed to Mr. Cavalcante D'Albuquerque, envoy of the Emperor of Brazil, defined the meaning of the word 'intervene' as employed in international law. 8 Op. Atty. Gen. 99. This letter was written in the year 1856, three years subsequently to the conclusion of the treaty between the Argentine Republic and the United States, and therein the following language is used: 'The administration of the estate of a foreign decedent is primarily a question of the local jurisdiction, and his consul can intervene only so far as the local law may permit.' In the same letter, at page 99, the learned Attorney General proceeds: 'In all these cases, the consul of the decedent's country has no jurisdiction; he may intervene by way of advice or in the sense of surveillance, but not otherwise as consul and of right. Thus, if the decedent, being a foreigner, leaves in the state a minor heir, the consul of his country may intervene to see that he have a proper guardian to secure his interests in the succession.' It will thus be noticed that Mr. Cushing's interpretation of the word 'intervene' corresponds with that which we hold to be the correct meaning of the term as it is used in the Argentine treaty.

"Mr. John Hay, as Secretary of State, addressed an official letter, dated February 3, 1900, to Senator E. O. Wolcott, in which he said: 'With regard to the second inquiry, pertaining to the last clause of article 3, it may be said that the right of a consular officer to appear personally in behalf of the absent heirs or creditors until they are otherwise represented, does not imply that consular officers have the status of attorneys or are to perform the duties of a public administrator. By the law of nations a consular officer is the provisional conservator of the property within his consular district belonging to his countrymen deceased therein. The United States Consular Regulations direct our consular officers, when the foreign local authorities institute proceedings in relation to the property of deceased Americans who leave no representatives in the foreign country, to intervene by way of observing the proceedings, but it is not understood that this involves any interference with the functions of a public administrator.'

"But we think it is unnecessary to address further consideration to the question in controversy.

"Though in view of the construction we have given the Argentine treaty, it is not necessary to decide the question, we may suggest that it is a matter of serious doubt whether the 'most favored nation' clause in a treaty can in any event be invoked to secure advantages and privileges to a government granted by treaty to another country than the one seeking them to avail itself of such privileges, except where such advantages and privileges may be granted freely and without consideration. If, for example, it clearly appeared from the language of the Argentine treaty that the consular officers of the Argentine Republic were accorded the right to administer upon the estates of citizens of that country dying intestate in this, in preference to the public administrator or to any of the other persons mentioned in section 1365 of the Code of Civil Procedure, in consideration of a like privilege or right conceded to any of the diplomatic officers of this government stationed in the Argentine Republic, then we doubt very much whether the 'most favored nation' clause in other treaties could avail to give such governments the same right. This, it seems to us, would be particularly true where, as we have held to be the fact here, the privilege or right sought to be exercised under said clause does not spring from or belong to, intrinsically, any of the usual subjects of treaties. But, as stated, we do not feel that we are called upon to determine this question. An able consideration of the proposition, however, may be found in the opinion of Attorney General Cushing, rendered in the year 1855, in response to a request therefor from the Secretary of State (6 Op. Atty. Gen. p. 148), and also in the cases of Bartram v. Robertson, 122 U. S. 116, 7 Sup. Ct. 1115, 30 L. Ed. 1118, and Whitney v. Robertson, 124 U. S. 190, 8 Sup. Ct. 456, 31 L. Ed. 386.

"Other points are urged and discussed in the briefs, but we do not deem it necessary to consider them.

"For the reasons herein expressed, the order appealed from is affirmed."

Ambrose Gherini, Clary & Loutitt, and R. K. Barrows, for appellant. Eustace Cullinan, John E. Budd, and Cullinan & Hickey, for respondent. John J. O'Toole, amicus curiæ.

SHAW, J. Salvatore L. Rocca appeals from an order of the superior court granting to George F. Thompson, as public administrator of San Joaquin county, letters of administration upon the estate of Giuseppe Ghio, deceased, and refusing the application of said appellant for such letters. The appeal was submitted to the District Court of Appeal of the Third District and decided in favor of the respondent. A rehearing in the Supreme Court was ordered, because, as treaty rights were involved, it was deemed advisable that the highest state court should consider the matter. Giuseppe Ghio, at the time of his death, was a resident of San Joaquin county, Cal., and a citizen of the kingdom of Italy. He left a small estate situated in San Joaquin county. His heirs at law are his wife, Maria, and three minor children. All of them reside in Italy. The appellant is the Consul General of the kingdom of Italy for California, Nevada, Washington, and Alaska territory. The deceased died intestate on April 27, 1908, in San Joaquin county.

The sole question for consideration is whether or not where a citizen of Italy, being a resident of California, dies intestate, leaving property in this state, and his lawful heirs all reside in Italy and are citizens of that country, the Consul General of Italy is entitled to letters of administration upon his estate, in preference to the public administrator of the county of his residence.

The appellant bases his claim to such letters upon the provisions of the treaty of May 8, 1878, between Italy and the United States. The clauses relating to this subject are articles 16 and 17, which are as follows:

"Art. 16. In case of the death of a citizen of the United States in Italy, or of an Italian citizen in the United States, who has no known heir, or testamentary executor designated by him, the competent local authorities shall give notice of the fact to the consul or consular agents of the nation to which the deceased belongs, to the end that information may be at once transmitted to the parties interested."

"Art. 17. The respective Consuls General, consuls, vice consuls and consular agents, as likewise the consular chancellors, secretaries, clerks or attaches, shall enjoy in both countries, all the rights, prerogatives, immunities and privileges which are or may hereafter be granted to the officers of the same grade of the most favored nation." 20 Stat. 732.

Under article 17, the appellant, as Consul General of Italy, claims the rights which are given to Consuls General of the Argentine Republic by the treaty between that country and the United States, concluded July 27, 1853 (10 Stat. 1005). The last clause of article 9 of that treaty is as follows: "If any citizen of either of the two contracting parties shall die without will or testament, in any of the territories of the other, the Consul General, or consul of the nation to which the deceased belonged, or the representative of such Consul General or consul, shall have the right to intervene in the possession, administration, and judicial liquidation of the estate of the deceased, conformably with the laws of the country, for the benefit of the creditors and legal heirs." Page 1009.

Article 6 of the Constitution of the United States declares that: "This Constitution, and the Laws of the United States which shall be made in Pursuance thereof; and all Treaties made, or which shall be made, under the Authority of the United States, shall be the supreme Law of the Land; and the Judges in every State shall be bound thereby, any Thing in the Constitution or Laws of any State to the Contrary notwithstanding." And section 10, of article 1, further provides that: "No state shall enter into any treaty, alliance, or confederation." We will assume that the treaty-making power of the federal government is so far superior to the lawmaking power of Congress that it would authorize the federal government to control by treaty the power of the states to confer and limit the right of administration of estates and the power of the state courts to appoint administrators, so far as the estates of resident citizens of foreign countries are concerned. See, on this subject, note to Yeaker v. Yeaker, 81 Am. Dec. 536. If this is the case, the treaty with the Argentine Republic, if construed in accordance with appellant's contention, supersedes, in part, the provisions of our Code of Civil Procedure of California, giving the right of administration of the estates of persons dying intestate to the public administrator, in the absence of resident legal heirs, and gives to the consular agents of that country a paramount right to letters upon the estates of citizens of that country residing here, who die intestate leaving real or personal property in this state and no resident heirs. The favored nation clause of the Italian treaty would give the like right to the appellant, as Consul General of Italy, in the present case.

Similar favored nation clauses are found in the treaties with Austria-Hungary (Treaty of 1870, art. 15, 17 Stat. 831); Denmark (Treaty of 1826, art. 8, 8 Stat. 342); Japan (Treaty of 1894, art. 15, 29 Stat. 852); Kongo (Treaty of 1891, art. 5, 27 Stat. 929); Korea (Treaty of 1882, art. 2, 7 Fed. Stat. Ann. 680); Russia (Treaty of 1832, art. 8, 8 Stat. 448); Spain (Treaty of 1902, art. 28, 33 Stat. 2120); Switzerland (Treaty of 1850, art. 7, 7 Fed. Stat. Ann. 842); Tonga (Treaty of 1886, art. 11, 25 Stat. 1442); and Zanzibar (Treaty of 1886, art. 2, 25 Stat. 1439). Foreign consuls and consular agents are given the same "privileges" as those of the most favored nation by the treaties with Belgium (Treaty of 1880, art. 2, 21 Stat. 777); Costa Rica (Treaty of 1851, art. 10, 10 Stat. 922); France (Treaty of 1853, art. 12, 10 Stat. 999); Germany (Treaty of 1871, art. 3, 17 Stat. 922); Greece (Treaty of 1902, art. 2, 33 Stat. 2123); Honduras (Treaty of 1864, art. 10, 13 Stat. 705); Netherlands (Treaty of 1878, art. 3, 21 Stat. 663); Paraguay (Treaty of 1859, art. 12, 12 Stat. 1097); Persia (Treaty of 1856, art. 7, 11 Stat. 710); Roumania (Treaty of 1881, art 2, 7 Fed. Stat. Ann. 773); and Servia (Treaty of 1881, art. 2, 22 Stat. 968). The treaty of 1903 with China gives Chinese consuls here the same "attributes, privileges and immunities" as those of the most favored nation. Article 2, 7 Fed. Stat. Ann. 487. The consuls from the countries thus given the same "rights," "prerogatives," or "powers," being those embraced in the list first given, could doubtless claim the same rights as those of Italy, with respect to estates of citizens of their respective countries dying here. Perhaps those included in the second list would claim the same right as a "privilege" within the intent of the respective treaties. The treaty of 1887, with Peru (25 Stat. 1461, art. 33), which terminated in 1899 by notification from Peru, provided that the consuls of each country, in the absence of heirs or representatives, should, ex officio, be the executors or administrators of the citizens of their country who died within their consular jurisdiction.

The question presented would directly affect the right of administration upon the estates of all citizens of all the above-named countries residing in this state, of whom there is doubtless a large number. It is also of grave importance because its solution in favor of the appellant necessarily ascribes to the federal government the intent, by means of its treaty-making power, to materially abridge the autonomy of the several states and to interfere with and direct the state tribunals in proceedings affecting private property within their jurisdictions. It is obvious that such intent is not to be lightly imputed to the federal government, and that it cannot be allowed to exist except where the language used in a treaty plainly expresses it, or necessarily implies it.

So far as we are aware, the exact point has not been considered in any of the states except Massachusetts and New York. In New York it has arisen only in the surrogate courts of two of the counties, New York county and Westchester county. The surrogate court of the latter county held that the Consul General of Italy was entitled to letters of administration upon the estate of a citizen of Italy who died leaving property in that county, in preference to the county treasurer, who, by the state law, was entitled as public administrator, in the absence of heirs and creditors. In re Fattosini, 33 Misc. Rep. 18, 67 N. Y. Supp. 1119. The same court, in a similar case, apparently decided that the Italian consul was entitled, by virtue of his office, to maintain a proceeding in the surrogate court, before any grant of letters of administration, to obtain possession of the effects of the deceased, in order that the consul might administer the same under the direction and control of the court. It does not appear that letters had been granted to the consul. In re Lobrasciano's Estate, 38 Misc. Rep. 415, 77 N. Y. Supp. 1040. The surrogate court of New York county held, in a similar case, that, where the public administrator refused to act and the Italian consul was legally competent under the state law, he would be entitled to letters, under the statutory provision that, when in such case the public administrator refused to act, any person legally competent might be appointed. But his right in preference to the public administrator was denied. In re Logiorato's Estate, 34 Misc. Rep. 31, 69 N. Y. Supp. 507. The Massachusetts Supreme Court decided that, under the most favored nation clause of the treaty with Russia and by referring to the treaty with the Argentine Republic, the Russian vice consul had a right to administer, paramount to that of the public administrator, in the case of a citizen of Russia who died in Massachusetts leaving personal property there; his legal heirs being in Russia. McEvoy v. Wyman, 191 Mass. 276, 77 N. E. 379. In a Louisiana case (Lanfear v. Ritchie, 9 La. Ann. 96) the Swedish consul applied for an order that he supersede the duly appointed public administrator in the possession of the estate of a deceased citizen of Sweden, whose heirs were Swedish subjects residing in Sweden. The contention was that this was guaranteed by the treaty with Sweden. The treaty then in force did not contain any favored nation clause, nor purport to give to consuls in either country the right to administer the estates of its deceased citizens. The court denied his application on that ground, and also on the ground that a treaty could not control the state courts. In Aspinwall v. Queen's Proctor, 2 Curteis, 241, the English court held that the United States consul, as such, had no right, under the act of Congress of 1792, to administer upon the estate of an American traveler who died while in England leaving property there. The court said that "the crown is the party to see that the property of any person dying in its dominions goes into proper hands," and that the law of the United States could not be allowed to control, even if it purported to do so.

We do not agree with the Supreme Court of Massachusetts and the surrogate of Westchester county, N. Y., in regard to the meaning and effect of the Argentine treaty. They held that the right given thereby "to intervene in the possession, administration and judicial liquidation of the estate of the deceased, conformably with the laws of the country," included the right to be appointed administrator of the estate in place of the person who, might be designated by the laws of the particular state to be such administrator and who had either been previously duly appointed by the local state court, or was applying for such appointment. It appears clear to us from this language that, whatever right was given, it was intended to be a right which should conform to the laws of the country, and that, in view of the well-known complex form of our government, the phrase "laws of the country," so far as the United States is concerned, means the local laws of administration and procedure of the respective states. If the right asserted is necessarily contrary to those laws, it cannot be said to conform to them. Our law declares that in the absence of next of kin entitled to inherit, the public administrator shall take charge of and administer the estate for the benefit of the creditors and heirs. The right claimed under the treaty is that, in such a case, the consul of the country of which the deceased was a citizen shall take charge and administer; a right directly in conflict with our law. The contention of the appellant is that the only effect of the phrase "conformably with the laws of the country" is that the consul, when appointed, must administer the estate in compliance with the local law of administration. The more obvious interpretation is that the phrase qualifies the right and the method of intervention, as well as the procedure after intervention takes place; that is, that, if the consul intervenes, he must do so in the manner, to the extent, and for the purposes prescribed and allowed by the laws of the local jurisdiction in which the property is situated. This is the grammatical effect of the qualifying clause.

Whether the matter in hand is the possession, the administration, or the judicial liquidation of the estate, the treaty secures to the consul only the right to "intervene" therein. The word "intervene" is here used with reference to a proceeding in a judicial tribunal. In that connection the word has a settled meaning. The dictionaries declare that when applied to matters of law it means: "To interpose in a lawsuit so as to become a party to it." Cent. Dic.; Stand. Dic. Bouvier defines intervention at common law thus: "The admission, by leave of court, of a person not an original party to pending legal proceedings, by which such person becomes a party thereto for the protection of some right or interest alleged by him to be affected by such proceedings." And in the civil law as "the act by which a third party becomes a party in a suit pending between other persons," citing Pothier Procés Civiles, lère part, c. 2, S. 6, 3 (1 Bouv. Dic. [Rawle's Ed.] 1114). A similar definition is given in our Code of Civil Procedure (section 387).

Appellants say that the word should be construed according to its literal meaning, "to come between," and that "to come between," in the possession and administration of an estate, means to have a preferred right to act as administrator, if it refers to a time before the appointment is made, or to supersede any other appointee, if used in reference to any subsequent time. This claim is based on the assertion that an intervention was unknown in the civil law, from which it is supposed the Argentine Republic takes its system of legal procedure, and also upon the principle that in construing treaties words are to be given their popular rather than their legal signification.

The Constitution of the Argentine Republic was adopted on May 25, 1853. It was avowedly modeled upon the Constitution of the United States, which it closely follows, both in general plan and in specific provisions. Its government is federal in form, with "provinces" which correspond to our states; each having power to make its own local laws subject, however, to the civil, criminal, commercial, and mineral codes when such should be enacted by the national Congress. Argentine Const. arts. 105, 108, and 67 [10], vol. 9, Senate Exec. Doc. The treaty with this country was made in July, 1853. At that time the public men of that country must have been very familiar with the form of government of the United States and with the fact that it committed local affairs to the several states. It is not probable, therefore, that the words of the treaty under consideration were chosen with the intent to have the international agreement become a part of, and in part supplant, the laws of the states of the United States, or of the provinces of Argentina, in matters committed solely to the states or provinces. The assertion that an intervention, as our law defines it, was not known in civil law countries, is shown to be without foundation by the foregoing citation of Bouvier to Pothier, and also by the fact that our own Code definition of an "intervention," and that of many of the other states, is taken from the Code of Louisiana. Horn v. Volcano W. Co., 13 Cal. 69, 73 Am. Dec. 569. The procedure and jurisprudence of that state, as is well known, was derived from the Code Napoléon and from the system in use in the early Spanish American colonies, both of which are adaptations of the civil law. Justice Field said, in Geofroy v. Riggs, 133 U. S. 271, 10 Sup. Ct. 298 (33 L. Ed. 642), with regard to the construction of treaties: "As they are contracts between independent nations, in their construction words are to be taken in their ordinary meaning as understood in the public law of nations, and not in any artificial or special sense impressed upon them by local law, unless such restricted sense is clearly intended. And it has been held by this court that where a treaty admits of two constructions, one restrictive of rights that may be claimed under it and the other favorable to them, the latter is to be preferred." Appellant quotes this canon of construction as decisive of the sense in which the word "intervene" is to be understood. The court in that case held that the phrase "in all the states of the Union," in the clause of the treaty with France giving citizens of France the right to inherit the property of citizens of the United States, included the District of Columbia. The subject in hand and the context indicated that the phrase was used, in the most comprehensive sense, to include the entire country. But treaties are subject to the same rules of interpretation as other documents. The clause of the Argentine treaty relates to legal proceedings for the settlement of estates and the words used are to be given the meaning they usually have when used in that connection. The right to intervene in a legal proceeding partaking of the nature of a proceeding in rem is not usually understood to include the right to take the property from the custody of the court, or from the officer upon whom the laws of the country impose the duty of administering and distributing it. The object and purpose of the treaty would be fully met by allowing the foreign consul to represent the citizens of his country who are interested as heirs or creditors in case they are not present or otherwise represented, giving him the right to appear in court for them, either officially, or in their name, to protect their interests, and requiring that he be served with notices to them, when notice is required. The use of the word "intervene" implies an intention to give a right to the consul to appear as a party in a pending administration or action carried on by another person, and not a right to institute and carry on the proceeding himself. He has, in addition, a duty pertaining to his office imposed upon him by his own government, that of seeing to the safe-keeping and proper disposition of the effects of citizens of his country who may die while traveling, or while temporarily present in the country to which he is accredited, or even while residing therein, and for that purpose, in the absence of any other representative of the deceased having a better right, he may "intervene in the possession" of the estate, conformably with the laws of the country. The custom of nations would permit this, and it may be that, if the public administrator refuses or fails to apply, the consul may petition for and receive letters to himself as the official agent for the persons interested. But the treaty is not to be understood as giving him such right in preference to those upon whom it is devolved by the laws of the country when they are present and ready to accept its possession and discharge their duty concerning it. The theory of respondent is, in our opinion, in harmony with the spirit and purpose of the treaty and is in accord with the obvious meaning of the language used.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

F. J. Hambly, for appellant. Rogers, Bloomingdale & Free, for respondent.

HALL, J. Plaintiff appealed from the judgment in favor of the defendant and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

The action was brought to recover from defendant the sum of $725, which it is alleged she orally promised to pay plaintiff in consideration of the release and discharge by plaintiff of an antecedent and existing obligation due to plaintiff from one S. A. McPherson (the husband of defendant). Subdivision 3, § 2794, Civ. Code. The court found in favor of plaintiff as to the existence of the obligation alleged to be due from S. A. McPherson to plaintiff, but found that defendant did not promise or agree to pay plaintiff $725, or any other sum, for a release or discharge of such obligation, and that plaintiff did not cancel or release such obligation. Plaintiff attacks the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings in favor of defendant. That the evidence in the record is sufficient to support the finding that defendant did not promise or agree to pay plaintiff the sum of $725 or any other sum we have no doubt.

Plaintiff and S. A. McPherson had had certain dealings for the sale of certain land belonging to said McPherson. S. A. McPherson had sued plaintiff, and had recovered a judgment for the possession of the land against plaintiff, who had appealed therefrom. Plaintiff had brought suit against said S. A. McPherson for commissions as a broker for the sale of a portion of the land, and this suit was pending. He also asserted a claim against one Frisbie in connection with the same matter. S. A. McPherson had left the state, and plaintiff, Frisbie, and defendant met in Oakland at the residence of Frisbie. At this meeting the terms of a settlement were arrived at as between plaintiff and Frisbie. Plaintiff testified that it was also agreed between him and defendant that she would pay him $725 for a release and discharge of his claims against her husband. The parties met the next day at the office of M. C. Chapman, an attorney, where an agreement between plaintiff and Frisbie was drawn up by Chapman and executed by plaintiff and Frisbie. A writing was also drawn in the form of an agreement between plaintiff and defendant. This was neither signed by plaintiff nor defendant, and, while the things to be done by plaintiff are fully set forth in the writing, the amount of money to be paid by defendant to plaintiff in consideration thereof is left blank. The writing is unilateral in form, and was only intended to be signed by plaintiff, and recites that "for and in consideration of the sum of —— dollars * * * to me in hand paid," etc., which is followed by words of present release and discharge of plaintiff's demands against defendant's husband, and covenants to satisfy and discharge of record a certain contract, and to dismiss the pending suit against defendant's husband. Plaintiff, of course, does not rely upon this writing, but testified that, both at Frisbie's house and at Mr. Chapman's office, defendant orally made the promise to pay him $725. As to what he testified concerning what took place at the office of Mr. Chapman he is supported by the testimony of Mr. Chapman. On the other hand, defendant testified that she made no such promise either at the house of Mr. Frisbie or at Mr. Chapman's office. She only received a copy of the writing to submit to her husband's attorney at San Jose. Her testimony is corroborated by Mr. Frisbie. The effect of his testimony is that no settlement was agreed upon by Mrs. McPherson. She was undecided what to do, and wished to consult her advisers at San Jose before agreeing to a settlement. Defendant testified that she said: "You can draw up all the papers you wish, but I will never pay it as long as I feel as I do at the present time. * * * The talk all the way through was that I would go to San Jose to see my attorneys before I would decide differently. * * * I did not promise to pay the $725; I was to consult the lawyer before I made any decision whatever."

The brief of appellant is largely addressed to matters that affect the credit to be given the witnesses. With this, however, this court has nothing to do. That much of the testimony was read from depositions does not affect the rule. But it is fair to say that the testimony was given more than 12 years after the transaction occurred, and it is not surprising that the witnesses are not clear as to everything that was said. It is significant, however, that the amount that it is claimed defendant agreed to pay was not inserted in the document that was prepared as evidence of the settlement. If she had finally agreed to pay $725, no reason appears why the amount should not have been inserted. On the other hand, the leaving of the amount blank is entirely in accord with her claim that she did not agree to any payment, and wished to consult her attorney before agreeing to any settlement.

As the finding that defendant never made the promise sued on is sustained by the evidence, it becomes immaterial as to whether or not the other findings in favor of defendant are supported by the evidence or not. The finding in favor of defendant as to the alleged promise is controlling as to the judgment.

Our attention is also briefly called to some alleged errors in admitting testimony. We find nothing under this head that would justify a reversal. Most if not all the rulings objected to relate to evidence directed to the issue found in favor of plaintiff.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thos. F. Graham, Judge.

Action by Izetta Jewell against the Colonial Theater Company, a corporation, and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed in part and affirmed in part.

F. J. Castelhun and F. C. Castelhun, for appellants. F. H. Dam, for respondent.

HALL, J. Plaintiff recovered judgment against all the defendants for the principal sum of $300, and the defendants appealed from the judgment and the order denying their motion for a new trial. Defendants jointly demurred to the complaint generally, and upon the grounds of uncertainty and ambiguity. The demurrer was properly overruled. It fairly appears from the complaint that defendants are indebted to plaintiff in the gross sum of $506.75 for services rendered as an actress and for traveling expenses incurred, under an express contract, whereby defendants agreed to pay plaintiff said sum therefor. It was not necessary for the complaint to show how much was for services and how much was for traveling expenses. Any uncertainty in this regard could have been cured by a bill of particulars. Code Civ. Proc. § 454; Pleasant v. Samuels, 114 Cal. 34, 45 Pac. 998; McFarland v. Holcomb, 123 Cal. 84, 55 Pac. 761. Defendants in a joint answer denied the allegations of the complaint, and set up a counterclaim in the sum of $350 for money alleged to have been advanced and loaned to plaintiff by defendants. The court found that defendants were indebted to plaintiff in the sum of $300 for services rendered and for traveling expenses incurred, under an express contract, whereby defendants agreed to pay plaintiff said sum, and found against defendants on the counterclaim; and the main question presented by the record is as to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain these findings.

Plaintiff was engaged at New York by Frank Bacon, acting for Martin Kurtzig. The contract was in writing, and signed "Izetta Jewell. Martin Kurtzig, by Frank Bacon," and by its terms plaintiff was engaged as an actress to play leading business for a season of 52 weeks, beginning on or about September 17, 1906, at a weekly salary of $100 per week. The contract also provided that "the said manager shall pay all expenses of transportation of the person and baggage of the said actor during travel and fare both ways. This contract may be canceled at any time after the first performance by either party giving two weeks' notice in writing to the other." This contract was dated August 11, 1906, and, as before stated, signed "Martin Kurtzig, by Frank Bacon." Kurtzig testified that Bacon was authorized to enter into such contract for him, and that he was the manager of the defendant corporation, for whom the contract seems to have been made. The evidence shows without conflict that the plaintiff came to San Francisco from New York under this contract, and commenced services thereunder as an actress in the Colonial Theater in San Francisco, and so continued until the 6th day of May, 1907, when the theater was closed, and she was dismissed, without any previous notice, and without any fault upon her part. It was shown without conflict that her salary for the last week was not paid, save that she herself testified that she had drawn $41.25 thereon. She was not given the two weeks' notice required by the contract, nor paid for the two weeks following her dismissal, although the evidence was uncontradicted that when a leading actress is discharged without the two weeks' notice it is the universal custom to pay the full two weeks' salary for that period. It was shown that the fare to New York was $83, and that had not been paid her.

It is thus apparent that when she was discharged she was entitled, under the written contract, to a balance of $58.75 for the week preceding her discharge, $200 for the two weeks following her discharge without notice, and $83 for return fare to New York, making a total of $341.75. The court found for her in the sum of $300, and we think that this finding, under the circumstances above detailed, should be sustained. It is true that some of the items above set forth are not in strict accord with the issues presented by the pleadings, in that it is alleged that the traveling expenses had been "incurred," when in fact she had not yet bought her ticket to New York. But no objection was made to the evidence upon this ground, and the case seems to have been tried upon the theory that such proof was within the issues. If such objection had been made, the pleading could, and doubtless would, have been amended so as to conform to the proof. Under the contract introduced in evidence she was entitled, when discharged, to payment of her return fare. For these reasons we think the finding is sustained so far as it affects such of the defendants as are bound by the contract with plaintiff, a point which we shall discuss later.

We have assumed thus far that the finding upon the counterclaim is sustained. It is clear from the evidence that certain moneys were advanced or loaned to plaintiff, either by Kurtzig acting for himself, or for the company. There is a conflict as to the amount. But there is evidence that after plaintiff arrived in San Francisco it was orally agreed between her and certain of the individual defendants acting for the company that her salary should be increased from January 1, 1907, to $125, of which she should be paid $100 in cash each week and the balance $25 credited against her indebtedness, and that this was done until her indebtedness was fully paid. So far as this was a variation of the written contract it was only admissible so far as it was executed. A written contract may be altered by an executed oral agreement. Civ. Code, § 1698. This evidence showed an executed oral alteration, and sustained the theory that the advancements to plaintiff had been fully repaid.

We now come to the question as to what defendants are shown to be liable for the debt due to plaintiff. Defendants did not plead a misjoinder of defendants, but nevertheless only such as are shown by the evidence to be liable may be held for the indebtedness. Rutenberg v. Main, 47 Cal. 214. The evidence does not show any liability upon the part of either Bacon or Mandlebaum. On its face the contract showed that Bacon was acting only as the agent of Kurtzig, and the evidence is without conflict that he had authority to act as such agent. He is therefore not liable, and the findings against him are not sustained by the evidence. The same is true of Mandlebaum. Whatever he did was as manager for the Colonial Theater Company, and after plaintiff knew who the principal was. The evidence shows that the Colonial Theater Company was the principal for whom the contract was made, and it is liable. Kurtzig is liable, as he bound himself by the terms of the contract without disclosing his principal.

Some other points are made as to rulings of the court, but we do not think any are of sufficient importance to require discussion or a reversal of the order or judgment.

The judgment and order are reversed as to the defendants Frank Bacon and F. Mandlebaum, and affirmed as to defendants Colonial Theater Company, a corporation, and Martin Kurtzig.

Albert H. Elliot, for appellant. James G. Maguire and Joseph Leggett, for respondent.

COOPER, P. J. This action was brought to recover the sum of $1,845.60 for millwork furnished by plaintiff, to be used and which was used, in the construction of a building for the defendant. The court filed findings, upon which judgment was entered in favor of defendant. This appeal is from the judgment and the order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial.

There is no controversy as to the following facts: That the building was constructed for defendant; that the cost of the building exceeded $1,000, and that there was no contract in writing, and no contract of any kind filed for record; that one Bugbee was the architect who drew the plans and specifications, and one Johnson was the superintendent in personal charge of the construction of the building; that the millwork was furnished by plaintiff, and was of the reasonable value of $1,845.60; that plaintiff has not been paid for said millwork; that no lien was filed against the building.

The court found in effect that plaintiff did not furnish the millwork to defendant at her instance or request, and upon this finding judgment was ordered in favor of defendant. It is here claimed that this finding is not supported by the evidence, and that is the main question, and, in fact, the only question that need be considered in this case.

On behalf of the plaintiff, Bugbee testified that he drew the plans and specifications for the building, and that he was to receive 10 per cent. on the total cost of the building for his services in drawing the plans and superintending the construction; that he informed defendant that he would have to employ a superintendent to take charge of the hiring of the labor and purchasing the materials and to let the subcontracts, and that defendant would have from time to time to advance the money as needed to pay for such labor and materials; that to this the defendant consented, and that the witness, in pursuance of such arrangement, employed Johnson as superintendent, agreeing to pay Johnson one-half of the 10 per cent. which he was to receive, and that either himself or Johnson purchased the necessary materials, employed the labor, let the subcontracts and paid for the same with moneys advanced by defendant as needed; that he told defendant that he thought the building could be constructed for a total cost of $8,000, but afterwards several changes were made at the request of defendant, such as putting in basins and wardrobes in each room, which considerably increased the cost. Johnson testified on behalf of the plaintiff that he was the superintendent in charge of the building, and that the contract or arrangement was made in his presence substantially as testified to by Bugbee; that he ordered the labor and materials from time to time; that plaintiff furnished the millwork at his request; that he had every laborer sign a pay roll which was turned over to defendant, and that she gave the witness money to pay the men according to the pay roll; that defendant would come on Friday or Saturday to look at the pay roll, and then go to the bank and get the money with which to pay the men, and then hand the money to the witness; that defendant did this 15 or 20 times; that the witness kept a pay roll in his own handwriting from which he refreshed his memory, and that defendant paid the following items: November 10th, $26.25; December 8th, $34.95; January 26th, $12.50; December 19th, $72.95; February 9th, $169.25; February 16th, $361.60; February 23d, $207.20; March 2d, $396.95; March 9th, $254.75—which said items were on the pay roll for labor. The witness continued from such pay roll to give other items for labor—plumbing and other materials which were furnished for the building and used in the construction thereof. He further testified that for getting the bills and the money to pay them promptly 2 per cent. discount was allowed, and defendant desired to and did get such discount; that defendant went with witness to the bank and introduced him, and asked the bank to let witness have money from time to time on her orders, and that he did often go and get the money with which to pay the bills upon the orders given him by defendant; that the changes and extras in the building in deviation from the original plans as made from time to time added $2,000 to $2,500 to its cost.

If the above quoted testimony is true, the defendant is liable to the plaintiff as a matter of law, for the reason that Bugbee and Johnson were her agents in the purchase of the materials, which included the millwork.

Defendant's counsel further insist that the evidence offered by defendant shows that she made an oral contract with Bugbee, by the terms of which he was to construct the building as an independent contractor for $8,000. Defendant testified in her own behalf, and her statement of the contract is as follows: "I wish to say that he suggested the $8,000 himself, and when I could get $5,000—the bank notified me that they had collected $5,000 insurance, and I went to Mr. Bugbee, and asked him what we could do with that on the lot. He said for '$8,000 I could put you up a rooming house with sixty rooms,' and I said, 'A temporary building?' He said, 'Oh, no; a building that will last twenty years.' I said, 'I will see if the bank will let me have $3,000 more in addition, and let you then know.' The bank allowed me the loan of $8,000—$3,000 in addition to what I had received from the insurance—and then I went to Mr. Bugbee, and said we can get no more, and I had no more, and he said he could do it, and he began to excavate and got Mr. Johnson to excavate—not much excavating, it was more clearing away the bricks from the lot." The witness further said that Mr. Bugbee agreed to construct the building for $8,000; but in order to arrive at the truth we must examine her testimony as a whole.

In cross-examination she testified that she paid out $2,440, in addition to the $8,000 for the construction of the building, and also $300 additional for clearing the lot. She also admitted that she paid the following amounts for material and labor on the building, to wit: Plumbing, $1,000; the Linwood Company, $600; painting, $150; hardware, $154; Christian Lumber Co. bill, $150; electric wiring, $23; that the roofing was $63, of which she had paid $40 and was paying $10 a month on that. She further testified that there was a balance of $300 due for lumber, which she had agreed to pay; and further as follows: "Mr. Bugbee always promised to give me an accounting, but he went away without doing it. Q. What do you mean by that? A. I wanted to know how much it was. Q. You wanted to know how much the labor bill was? A. Yes, sir. Q. And Mr. Bugbee said he would give you an accounting? A. Yes, sir. Q. How many times did you ask him for such an accounting? A. I would remind him and he would put me off. * * * Q. In the talk with Mr. Bugbee concerning the construction of this building, what was said about his compensation? A. He said that $8,000 would cover everything. He said he could contract for the building, but he didn't like to sign a contract because he was doing all his work this way, and he had been able to save one woman a thousand dollars by not having a contract. Q. That is, by not letting out a contract to a contractor? A. By not having a contract he was able to do the work cheaper for the owner by not having a contract. Q. By not having a contract with whom? A. With the owner—the person that was building. Q. He told you that by not having a contract with the owner that in another case he had saved the owner $1,000? A. Yes, sir. Q. Because he said he could buy the materials cheaper by paying cash? A. Yes, sir. Q. What was said by you or him about paying Mr. Bugbee for his services? A. There was nothing said. Q. What was agreed upon, or what was determined upon between you and Mr. Bugbee, as to what was to be paid for his services? A. He said that he could make it all in the commissions that he was to have. Q. The commissions from whom? A. The people he was dealing with—buying from—by paying cash he knew how and when to buy, and so on, and that would cover everything. Q. As I understand you, he was to buy the material? A. Yes, sir. Q. And he was to get his pay by the commissions from these people that sold the material to him? A. Yes, sir."

It was further shown that the defendant, in her verified answer filed by her in a prior suit brought in the superior court by Johnson against her relative to the same building, stated in said answer as follows: "That in or about the month of November, 1906, M. G. Bugbee individually on his own behalf entered into an agreement with the defendant, by which M. G. Bugbee personally and individually agreed to furnish plans for and erect and construct the building mentioned in plaintiff's complaint for the defendant at a gross cost not exceeding the sum of $8,000." The witness was further asked and answered as follows: "Q. Did Mr. Bugbee agree with you that if the building should cost less than $8,000 he was to pocket the difference between the building cost and $8,000? A. No, sir; he told me about how he had treated others, and I supposed he had the same benevolent intentions towards me, but he didn't say—we didn't have any agreement that if it cost less than $8,000 that either he or I should have what was left. Q. It wasn't your intention that if the building cost $6,000 that Mr. Bugbee was to get the difference? A. He said he saved an owner in one case a thousand dollars—he might be able to do it for somebody else."

Mrs. Moody, the daughter of defendant, testified as to the contract as follows: "In my presence he told my mother that he could put up the house for $8,000, and I turned to him and said, 'Mr. Bugbee, does that include everything?' and he said, 'Yes.' I said, 'Your fees and everything?' and he said, 'Yes, that includes everything.' I don't remember anything more that was said." In cross-examination Mrs. Moody said that in the conversation between her mother and Mr. Bugbee nothing was said about Bugbee's compensation. The following questions were asked her and answered as follows: "Q. Then at that conversation between your mother and Mr. Bugbee, you did discuss the question of Mr. Bugbee's fees? A. No, sir; the price of the building. Q. I will ask you at that time was anything said about Mr. Bugbee's compensation? A. No, sir. Q. Nothing was said about it? A. No, sir. Q. Nothing at all was said about what Mr. Bugbee was to get out of this? A. No, sir. Q. What was Mr. Bugbee to get out of it for building the building? A. I do not know. Q. Didn't you just testify, Mrs. Moody, that Mr. Bugbee said that the $8,000 would include his compensation? A. Yes, sir; but I didn't know how much that was to be. Q. Then there was something said about Mr. Bugbee's compensation? Didn't you ask him if it also included his fees? A. No, sir."

When we view the above evidence on the part of the defendant, we do not think it of sufficient dignity to raise a conflict. A contract is the meeting of minds upon and agreement to a definite thing. The contract as stated by the architect and by the superintendent is reasonable and consistent with each and every act of the parties done in pursuance thereof and in connection with the building. An oral contract for $8,000 is out of the ordinary way of doing business. There was nothing said about the time or the amount of the payments, or the manner in which they should be made. If such a contract was made defendant would not have any concern with the payment of the bills except in so far as to prevent liens upon her property. She would not have to get an accounting from Bugbee as to the bills paid. She would not have sworn in a different case relating to the same contract that the agreement was that Bugbee would build for "not to exceed $8,000." The defendant testified that Bugbee was to get his compensation by charging and collecting a commission from the materialmen. That is wholly inconsistent with the agreement to pay Bugbee $8,000 to construct the building; and not only this, but the benefit of the discount on the bills was received by the defendant as they were paid by her or under her direction.

The testimony of Mrs. Moody, the daughter, is equally unsatisfactory. She does not state anything said about the time, manner, or amount of payments; and while she testified in direct examination that she asked Bugbee if the $8,000 included "his fees and everything," in almost the next breath in cross-examination she said that nothing was said about Bugbee's compensation; that she did not ask him if the $8,000 included his fees. If Bugbee had been the original contractor he would have taken the receipts, had the benefit of the discounts on the bills, and retained the bills instead of their being receipted and given to the defendant. The defendant would have taken receipts from Bugbee for payments on the contract, but no such receipts were produced. The acts and conduct of the parties speak with more force than bare words. The question cannot be answered by the defendant merely saying, "The contract was $8,000." We look for the truth to the facts and the entire history of the transaction. No reasonable person could read the testimony in this record and have a doubt remaining as to the fact that the building was constructed for the defendant on a percentage basis, and that she was responsible for the materials purchased and used in its construction.

The judgment is reversed.

SALES (§ 52*)—VALIDITY—VIOLATION OF STATUTE.

In an action for the price of metallic disks to be used as money in defendant's business college, evidence held not to show that such disks were, contrary to law, in the likeness and similitude of genuine coins of the United States.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Frank F. Oster, Judge.

Action by George W. Randall against D. R. Glass. From the judgment and from an order denying his motion for new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. W. Stephenson, for appellant. H. Conner, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an action to recover the agreed price of certain metallic disks which plaintiff made and delivered to defendant pursuant to an order for the same given by defendant. The disks were not designed to represent money, but intended to be used in place thereof in pretended business transactions conducted by the students of the business college of defendant. Defendant appeals from the judgment and an order of court denying his motion for a new trial.

As a defense to the cause of action defendant alleged "that said disks are in likeness and similitude as to design, color, and inscription of the coins of the United States * * * issued as money by and under the authority of said government"; his contention being that the disks are counterfeits of the United States coins, the making of which is contrary to law, and hence the agreement to pay for the same is nonenforceable. As to the issue thus tendered the court found "that none of said disks so made and delivered to defendant by plaintiff are in likeness and similitude as to color, design, and inscription of any of the coins issued as money by the United States government, or the Republic of Mexico." Other than the criticism of the use of the conjunctive, "and," instead of the disjunctive, "or," in this finding, which under the facts of the case is without merit, the sole ground upon which appellant contends for a reversal is that the finding is not supported by the evidence; appellant insisting that the disks so nearly resemble United States coins as to constitute counterfeits thereof. At the trial, samples of the pieces of metal were introduced in evidence as ocular proof in support of the allegation of the answer, and these exhibits are brought up with the record. They consist of copper pieces in size similar to the $5, $10, and $20 gold coins of the United States, and aluminum pieces similar in size to the minor silver coins of the United States. The edges are not milled, and in color the copper disks bear no resemblance to gold coin, and the specific gravity of the aluminum coins clearly distinguishes them from silver. The inscriptions upon these disks, while not entirely alike, are similar, and that upon one will serve as an illustration of all. On one side thereof in raised letters is the following: "San Bernardino Business College. The Famous Lightning, Legible Shorthand Taught in three months or no charge. San Bernardino, Cal." On the obverse side in raised characters covering nearly half the length of the diameter of the disk, which is otherwise smooth, is the following: "$20.00." Aside from the fact that the disks are similar in size to gold and silver coins of the United States, they bear no resemblance whatever to such coins, or those of the Republic of Mexico. They do not purport to be money, and it is clear from the record that they were not intended to be passed or used as money. Appellant might with equal reason insist that a piece of paper similar in size to a $20 bill of United States currency, one side of which contained an advertisement of his "famous lightning, legible shorthand," with the characters "$20.00" printed upon the obverse side thereof, constituted a counterfeit of the United States currency. It is incredible that any one, however illiterate or unskilled in business dealings, could be deceived into the belief that these disks constituted coins of the United States. They are not counterfeits in resemblance or similitude of the gold or silver coins of the United States, nor of any foreign country the coins of which are current or in actual circulation in the United States. Sections 5457 and 5458, U. S. Comp. St. 1901; United States v. Sprague (D. C.) 48 Fed. 828; United States v. Stevens (D. C.) 52 Fed. 120; United States v. Hopkins (D. C.) 26 Fed. 443.

The defense set up and supported by appellant's testimony is, nevertheless, unique in that he testifies in support of an allegation to such effect that the disks are not in the likeness and similitude of genuine coins, by reason of which fact "the college would be ridiculed by the scholars using it," hence he is not bound by the contract; and, if this position be deemed inadequate as a defense, he then insists that the disks bear such a striking resemblance and similitude to United States coins as to constitute counterfeits thereof, and, hence, upon grounds of public policy, he is entitled to judgment relieving him from his contractual obligations. Neither position is sustained by the record.

Judgment and order affirmed.

Where plaintiff's assignor, who had built ice machines for defendant, the price thereof to be determined by the cost of construction, rendered a statement for a balance due of $3,030.67, and defendant in reply refused to pay the statement in full, but stated that a certain amount was due, and inclosed a check therefor, but did not declare that it was in full of all demands, his letter, on the contrary, indicating that as to the balance he expected plaintiff to bring suit, and upon the return to him of a receipt on account made no objection, but arranged for a meeting to adjust the parties' differences, there was no accord and satisfaction, to constitute which there must be an offer on conditions and an acceptance with knowledge thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Accord and Satisfaction, Cent. Dig. §§ 75, 76; Dec. Dig. § 11.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank F. Oster, Judge.

Action by D. R. Weller against Will P. Stevens. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Lucien Earle, for appellant. Jones & Weller, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Action to recover a balance of $2,609.40 and interest alleged to be due upon an open account for goods sold and delivered by plaintiff's assignor to defendant. In addition to a general denial, defendant pleaded, by way of a separate defense, an accord and satisfaction. The findings as to all the issues were against defendant, and judgment went for plaintiff in accordance with the prayer of the complaint, from which, and an order denying his motion for a new trial, defendant prosecutes this appeal.

Appellant's claim for a reversal is based upon the ground that the facts proved established an accord and satisfaction, as alleged in his answer. Hence he claims the finding to the contrary is unsupported by the evidence.

It appears from the evidence that defendant employed plaintiff's assignor to manufacture certain ice machines; the price thereof to be determined by the cost of construction. The machines were constructed in accordance with the specifications therefor and duly delivered to defendant. Thereafter plaintiff's assignor sent to defendant a statement of account as to the cost of manufacturing the machines, showing a balance due of $3,030.67. Upon receipt of this statement defendant wrote a letter to the assignor protesting against the charges as being exorbitant, and showing that according to his figures the balance due was only $421.27, as to which, says he in the letter, "I am inclosing you a check for $421.27 covering the same." There was an absence of anything on the check indicating that it was delivered in full payment of the account, and there is nothing in the letter transmitting the check showing that it was intended as a payment in full of the account. On the contrary, it appears therefrom that defendant conceded a liability to the extent of $421.27, for, among other things in his letter, he says: "I consider (the charges) altogether too high, and I certainly shall not pay this price unless a jury and judge say that I shall pay the same, and, when they do, I am glad to state that the bill will be promptly paid. * * * So you see I think your bills are unreasonable and will never pay the same willingly as they now stand." And in closing he states: "I deeply regret that I cannot see my way clear at the present time to pay the bill as you have seen fit to render it." In reply to this letter, plaintiff's assignor wrote: "We inclose herewith the receipt on account for $425.27. We cannot render you receipt in full for the reason that your version of the conditions under which these machines were ordered and built cannot be accepted." And further requesting that a meeting be arranged between them in order to effect an amicable settlement of the account. Defendant replied to this, expressing his willingness to hold the suggested meeting at a date therein named by him. Defendant testifies: "I did not know prior to this statement that was rendered to me by the plaintiff what the machines were going to cost. I had conversations with the plaintiff, but could get nothing out of them. The date that I wrote to the plaintiff the letter on the 22d of November, 1906, was the first time that I knew the total price of the machines. Prior to that time I had no definite price from them as to the cost of the machines." This is substantially all the evidence touching the question at issue, and we think it clearly justified the court in finding the issue in favor of plaintiff. Defendant testifies that he intended the check to be in full payment of the account; but there is absolutely nothing in the record tending to show that he gave expression to such intention. His undisclosed intention could not bind the plaintiff. Neither upon the check nor in the letter was there any statement to indicate to plaintiff that it was intended to be in full payment. "The nature of the offer or tender by the debtor is an important consideration in determining whether there has been an acceptance and satisfaction. To constitute an accord and satisfaction it is necessary that the money should be offered in full satisfaction of the demand, and be accompanied by such acts and declarations as amount to a condition that the money, if accepted, is accepted in satisfaction; and it must be such that the party to whom it is offered is bound to understand therefrom that, if he takes it, he takes it subject to such conditions." 1 Cyc. 332. Appellant asserts that, "according to the weight of authority, where a claim is in dispute, and the debtor sends or gives the creditor a check for a less sum, which he declares to be in full payment of all demands, the retention thereof by the creditor constitutes an accord and satisfaction." This statement of the law is correct; but in the first place, it does not appear that there was any dispute prior to the receipt of the statement. Defendant received the statement and, regarding it unreasonable, refused to pay it in full, but did concede that a certain amount was due and paid it. He did not declare that it was in full payment of all demands; on the contrary, his letter clearly indicates that as to the balance he expected plaintiff to bring suit, which he declared he would not pay willingly, but that it would be promptly paid upon the rendition of judgment against him. Moreover, when plaintiff's assignor notified him they could not accept his version of the case, and inclosed a receipt on account for the amount of the check, he made no objection to such application, but at their suggestion fixed a time to meet them for the purpose of adjusting their differences as to the balance of the account which he had refused to pay.

1. JUDGMENT (§ 251*)—CONFORMITY TO PLEADINGS.

Where the complaint alleged that defendants were liable as partners, and the findings were that there was no such partnership, but defendants in effect denied liability as partners, or as individuals, they raised an issue not raised in the complaint and one upon which an individual judgment might be based.

2. JUDGMENT (§ 251*)—ACTION FOR GOODS—PARTNERSHIP—PROMISE TO PAY—EFFECT.

In an action against an alleged partnership for goods sold, where one of the alleged partners promised to pay for the goods to be sold, it was immaterial that he was not a partner with the other, or that the allegation of partnership was not proved.

3. INTEREST (§ 47*) — ACTION FOR GOODS — CLAIM — JUDGMENT — WHEN INTEREST ACCRUES.

In an action for goods sold, it was error to allow interest on the amount of the claim from the date it was found to be due, since no interest can be recovered in an action on an open account prior to the filing of a complaint.

John T. Thornton, Leo. C. Lennon and T. M. O'Connor, for appellants. Briggs & Hudner, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an action for goods sold and delivered. The case was tried by the court sitting without a jury, and judgment went for plaintiff against the defendants. The appeal is from that judgment, taken within 60 days after the entry thereof under sections 941A, 941B, and 941C of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The facts of this case are simple, and no question of difficulty is presented. The defendants claim that the goods were sold and delivered to the Ruinart Stock Farm, a corporation. Plaintiff, on the other hand, alleged in its complaint that the defendants were copartners, doing business under the name of Ruinart Stock Farm, and were liable as such for the goods and supplies furnished. The evidence introduced by the defendants tended to prove that the goods were, as claimed by them, sold and delivered to the Ruinart Stock Farm, and in corroboration of this evidence it was shown by the plaintiff's books of account that the merchandise in question was in fact charged to the Ruinart Stock Farm. Plaintiff, however, introduced evidence that Gaston M. Ashe represented to the manager of the plaintiff that he, with his brother and codefendant, would be personally responsible for said goods; that, upon being asked by said manager how the account should be charged, Gaston M. Ashe said that it had better be charged to the Ruinart Stock Farm, and, accordingly, the merchandise was so charged. There is no evidence in the record showing that the defendants were partners, and the court found they were not, and the record shows that Gaston M. Ashe had no authority to represent to plaintiff that R. Porter Ashe would be liable personally for the supplies furnished.

The complaint alleges that the defendants are liable as partners, while the findings are that there was in reality no such partnership; wherefore defendants suggest that the judgment should have been rendered in their favor. But they, in effect, denied liability as partners or individuals, and thus, it may be said, raised an issue not raised by the complaint, and one upon which an individual judgment might be based. Flinn v. Ferry, 127 Cal. 648, 60 Pac. 434; Vance v. Anderson, 113 Cal. 532, 45 Pac. 816; Doble Co. v. Keystone, etc., Co., 145 Cal. 491, 78 Pac. 1050. However, it appearing that Gaston M. Ashe had promised to pay for the goods to be sold, it makes no difference that he was not a partner with R. Porter Ashe, or that the allegation of the partnership was not proved. Bates on Partnership, vol. 2, § 1068; Id. vol. 1, §§ 170, 171; Courson v. Parker, 39 W. Va. 521, 20 S. E. 583; Weimer v. Rector, 43 W. Va. 735, 28 S. E. 716; Ency. of Plead. & Prac. vol. 15, p. 955; Hunter v. Martin, 57 Cal. 365; Wallace v. Baisley, 22 Or. 572, 30 Pac. 432; Marx Bros. v. Calpepper, 40 Fla. 322, 24 South. 59; Whitwell v. Thomas, 9 Cal. 499.

The court allowed interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum on the amount of the claim from the date it was found to be due. This was error. No interest can be recovered in an action for goods sold and delivered upon an open account prior to the filing of the complaint. Pac. Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Fisher, 106 Cal. 224, 39 Pac. 758; Cox v. McLaughlin, 76 Cal. 60, 18 Pac. 100, 9 Am. St. Rep. 164; Heald v. Hendy, 89 Cal. 633, 27 Pac. 67; Easterbrook v. Farquarson, 110 Cal. 311, 42 Pac. 811; Lane v. Turner, 114 Cal. 396, 46 Pac. 290. Calculating interest at the legal rate on the principal sum found to be due from the date the complaint was filed until the judgment was rendered would give an amount less by the sum of $40 than the amount allowed as interest on the judgment.

There being no evidence to support the judgment against R. Porter Ashe, it must as to him be reversed, and it is so ordered. As we have just seen, however, there is evidence to support the findings against Gaston M. Ashe; and as to him the judgment is directed to be modified by deducting therefrom the sum of $40 as of its date of entry, and as so modified it is affirmed.

(Court of Appeal, Third District. California. March 8, 1910.)

1. Negligence (§ 108*) — Pleading—Sufficiency.

In an action for negligence, it is sufficient, under the Code, to allege that the act complained of was negligently done by defendant, and that it caused damage to plaintiff.

2. Master and Servant (§ 329*)—Injuries to Third Person — Negligence of Servant—Complaint — Sufficiency — "Reckless"—"Heedless."

A complaint for injuries caused by the explosion of a powder magazine, which alleges that the explosion was the result of the reckless and heedless act of defendant's servant in igniting the powder, alleges negligence; the words "reckless" and "heedless" implying negligence.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 300*)—INJURIES TO THIRD PERSONS—ACTS OF SERVANT—LIABILITY OF MASTER.

4. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 329*)—LIABILITIES FOR INJURIES TO THIRD PERSONS—ACTS OF SERVANT.

A complaint in an action for injuries caused by the explosion of a powder magazine, which alleges that defendant had in its employ a servant whose duty it was "to handle, carry, and take charge of the powder in said magazine," and that the magazine exploded as a result of the servant's negligence, implies that it was a part of the duty of the servant to exercise care to prevent an explosion, and, where he negligently permitted or caused the explosion, he violated his duty as a servant.

6. NUISANCE (§ 3*)—PRIVATE NUISANCE—EXPLOSIVES.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; F. B. Ogden, Judge.

Action by Xavier Fisher against the Western Fuse & Explosives Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 107 Pac. 332.

G. R. Lukens, for appellant. Reed & Nusbaumer, W. H. Orrick, M. C. Chapman, and A. A. Moore, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The appeal is from the judgment on the judgment roll alone. The only question for determination concerns the ruling of the court below overruling a general demurrer to the amended complaint.

The action was brought to recover damages for the destruction of plaintiff's dwelling house, and the gravamen of the charge is contained in the following allegations: "That on the said 19th day of July, 1898, defendant carelessly, negligently, deceitfully, secretively, improvidently, and unsafely maintained a powder magazine, which was improperly constructed, containing not less than 5,000 pounds of powder, and situated upon the corner of Clark and A streets in Melrose. * * * Defendant on said 19th day of July, 1898, had in its employ a careless, heedless, reckless, and dangerous servant, whose duty it was to handle, carry, and take charge of the powder in said magazine, and to whom it gave free access to said magazine at all times. Said servant was a Chinaman, called Ah Ung, and his carelessness, recklessness, heedlessness, and unfitness were at all times well known to defendant. On the said 19th day of July, 1898, the said powder stored in the said magazine was exploded as a result of defendant's aforesaid negligence, and by reason of the act of said servant in recklessly and heedlessly igniting said powder." The foregoing is followed by an averment that the said explosion damaged plaintiff's said property to the extent of fourteen hundred dollars.

Under the authorities, it is sufficient to allege that an act was negligently done by defendant, and that it caused damage to plaintiff. The rule is stated in Stephenson v. Southern Pac. Co., 102 Cal. 147, 34 Pac. 619, as follows: "In adopting what is known as the Code system of pleading, courts in most of the states have excepted from the general rule, requiring a complaint to state the facts constituting the cause of action in ordinary and concise language, cases founded upon negligence, or rather, they have so far modified the rule as to permit the plaintiff to state the negligence in general terms, without stating the facts constituting such negligence. This modification of a rule of Code pleading is founded in wisdom, and grows out of a fundamental rule in common-law pleading, to the effect that 'no greater particularity is required than the nature of the thing pleaded will conveniently admit.' Stephen's Pleading, 367. * * * In cases of negligence the sufferer may only know the general, the immediate cause, of the injury, and may be entirely ignorant as to the specific acts or omissions which lead up to it. * * * The term 'negligence' for the purpose of pleading is a fact to be pleaded—an ultimate fact, which qualifies an act otherwise not wrongful. Negligence is not the act itself, but the fact which defines the character of the act and makes it a legal wrong. The absence of care in doing an act which produces injury to another is actionable. The term 'negligence' signifies and stands for the absence of care. * * * As a result of the application of these principles to Code pleading in cases of negligence and to others of kindred character, it is held in this state, and in nearly all the United States, that it is sufficient to allege the negligence in general terms, specifying, however, the particular act alleged to have been negligently done." Here the particular act immediately causing the injury was the explosion of the gunpowder. This was the result of "the reckless and heedless" act of defendant's servant in igniting said powder. Both "reckless" and "heedless" imply "negligence or the want of care."

The only question, then, remaining arises from the fact that the negligent act is alleged to have been done by the "said servant" instead of by the defendant. The rule in such case is that the principal or master is civilly responsible for wrongs committed by his agent or servant while acting about the business of the principal or master and within the scope of the employment of the agent or servant. Thompson on Negligence, § 518. The same author in section 520 declares the rule more specifically as follows: "A mere statement of the rule suggests that the principal or master will in all cases be liable for wrongs committed by his agent or servant, while acting about the business of the former, and within the scope of his employment, through inattention, negligence, or want of skill. The cases already cited, and a great array of other adjudications, may be appealed to in support of this statement. It is perhaps the only branch of the doctrine upon which all the cases unite, and as to which there is no dispute. It is a rule so plain and easy of application that it could scarcely be made clearer by illustration." Among the many instances of the application of the rule cited by the author in section 521 we note only the following: "The defendant sent the servant to a factory to receive for her certain bags of paper shavings. It was arranged that the shavings should be thrown down through a hatchway beneath so as to prevent injury to passers-by. He failed to so guard it, and a person passing by was struck by one of the falling bags and injured. It was held that the defendant was liable, since her servant was acting about the very matter which he was sent to perform, the receiving of the goods. * * * The plaintiff placed her horse in care of the defendant, a livery stable keeper, to be boarded. The watchman of the defendant allowed three men, partially intoxicated, to go into the loft of the stable, which was full of dry hay, to sleep there during the night, knowing that they were smokers, and that they were in the habit of carrying pipes and matches with them. An hour and a half later the stable took fire and the plaintiff's horse was burned to death. It was held that the livery stable keeper was responsible for the act of his watchman, and that whether the watchman was negligent in allowing the three men to sleep in the loft was a question for the jury. * * * A person contracted to give a pyrotechnic display, and committed the performance of the contract to his agent. He thereby became answerable in damages to a person who was hurt through the negligence of the agent in discharging a fire bomb." In the case at bar the business of the agent was "to handle, carry, and take charge of the powder in said magazine." In other words, the care, custody, and management of the powder were committed to the servant. This necessarily implies that it was a part of his duty to exercise care to prevent an explosion of said powder. If he therefore negligently permitted or caused said explosion, the case is presented of a clear and unmistakable violation of his duty as said servant. It thus appears by necessary implication that the servant was acting within the scope of his authority, and appellant is mistaken in its contention that an express allegation to that effect is required.

On this branch of the subject respondent cites the following cases: Birnbaum v. Lord, 7 Misc. Rep. 493, 28 N. Y. Supp. 17, was a suit to recover damages for negligence on the part of a driver of defendant's wagon in running over a 12 year old boy who was crossing a street in New York City. It is therein said: "The complaint was sufficient in alleging that the wagon belonged to defendant and was driven by one of their agents or servants, although it does not otherwise allege that the latter was engaged in the defendant's business; but that is involved in the allegation that the wagon was driven by their agent or servant, for, if the driver was not engaged upon his master's business, he would be neither agent nor servant, but his own master." In Lewis v. Schultz, 98 Iowa, 341, 67 N. W. 266, the Supreme Court of Iowa said: "Appellant insists that the case was tried and submitted to the jury upon an issue not made in the pleadings or supported by the evidence; i. e., that the loss was the result of the act of a servant within the scope of his employment. The petition alleges that defendants, their servants and agents, set out the fire. Surely this raised an issue as to whether the person who set out the fire was an agent of the defendants, and also as to whether the act was within the scope of his employment."

In Louisville N. A. & C. Ry. Co. v. Kendall, 138 Ind. 313, 36 N. E. 415, we find the question considered as follows: "The complaint alleges that upon the arrival of said train at defendant's depot in the town of Salem * * * plaintiff as a passenger undertook and did get on the platform of one of the cars of said train to enter same, but that without fault or negligence on plaintiff's part, on account of the carelessness and negligence of one of defendant's agents, whose name is to the plaintiff unknown, he was by such employé of defendant pushed from the platform of said train just as the same was starting; * * * that all of said injuries were caused by and the direct result of said carelessness and negligence of one of defendant's agents in pushing plaintiff off its said train as aforesaid and wholly without the fault or negligence of plaintiff." It was held that the case was brought within the rule sustained by the authorities that "the master is liable for a tortious or negligent act of a servant committed while performing his master's service, though not previously authorized nor subsequently ratified by the master, if an injury result therefrom to one to whom the master owes protection from such injury." In Lewis v. Chicago, St. Paul & K. C. Ry. Co., (C. C.) 35 Fed. 639, a demurrer to the complaint was overruled by Justice David J. Brewer, wherein he said: "I also take it to be settled under the rules of pleading that what was equivalent to a common count under the old practice is good now as against an objection, raised by demurrer; and I think that is all that can be said about this pleading. It alleges that the defendant by one of its employés committed an assault and battery upon the plaintiff, another employé. That is the allegation in the pleading of a substantive and ultimate fact. What the particular facts may be, whether that assault and battery was committed in the line of his employment and in the discharge of a duty which he owed the defendant, the master, as an employé, does not now appear." The foregoing decisions commend themselves to our judgment, and they support the action of the court below in overruling the demurrer to the amended complaint.

There is, also, another aspect of the complaint which should not be overlooked. This is presented in the allegations that the magazine was imperfectly constructed and improvidently maintained, and that this negligence was a contributing cause of the injury. We find thus exhibited the familiar case of a nuisance, and upon this theory a cause of action is stated. The question is elaborately reviewed in Kinney v. Koopman, 116 Ala. 310, 22 South. 593, 37 L. R. A. 497, 67 Am. St. Rep. 119, and a large number of cases cited. Therein it is held that "storing and keeping gunpowder and dynamite in large quantities near dwellings in a thickly settled portion of a city, and near a public street is not a nuisance per se. To constitute such keeping a nuisance and impose liability for an accidental explosion there must be negligence in 'keeping' or in the 'manner' of keeping and storing the gunpowder." And furthermore it is said: "We are of the opinion that a count prima facie sufficiently shows a want of due care, which charges the storing of large quantities of gunpowder in a wooden building in a populous place in the city of Cullman. The demurrer was properly sustained to the count which merely charged the storing of gunpowder and its explosion without further averment showing that on account of location, quality, and surrounding circumstances it was dangerous." Here, as we have seen, the location, manner of construction, and of maintenance do appear so as to show that the said magazine was dangerous to life and to property. The distinction made in the Kinney Case, supra, is recognized and approved in Kleebauer v. Western Fuse, etc., Co., 138 Cal. 497, 71 Pac. 617, 60 L. R. A. 377, 94 Am. St. Rep. 62. It was contended there by plaintiff that the mere fact of the storage of a large quantity of gunpowder where damage might result from an explosion amounted to a nuisance per se, and he requested the following instruction which was given by the lower court: "A magazine of powder so situated that in case of explosion from any cause it is liable to injure the persons and the dwellings of persons living in the vicinity is a nuisance; and therefore, if the jury believe from the evidence that the defendant corporation maintained at the time mentioned in the complaint, at the town, or village, or place called Melrose, a magazine, and kept stored therein large quantities of gunpowder, which, in case of explosion, was liable to injure the persons, dwellings, or other property of the residents of the said town, or village, or place called Melrose, your verdict should be for the plaintiffs." This was condemned by the Supreme Court and the other line of authorities was approved, holding that whether the storing of gunpowder is a nuisance depends upon the locality, quantity, and the surrounding circumstances. The Supreme Court said: "It does not appear that, when the defendant commenced its business, it was not located in a proper place, and at that time sufficiently removed from a residence neighborhood. It was carried on with the utmost care. The damage in question resulted from a cause entirely beyond its control, and without any carelessness or negligence on its part whatever, and under the more recent and better line of authorities, as shown under the circumstances it is not responsible."

Since by appropriate allegations it appears that the magazine as constructed and maintained constituted a nuisance, it is the contention of respondent that appellant was responsible for the damage caused the plaintiff without regard to the "precipitating cause of the explosion." In other words, the negligence of appellant sufficiently appears in the said averments showing the maintenance of a nuisance, and since, in the absence of this want of proper care, the injury would not have resulted, a cause of action is stated, regardless of the further negligence in causing the explosion. This doctrine finds support in the authorities. The rule is stated in Laflin & Rand Powder Co. v. Tearney, 131 Ill. 322, 23 N. E. 389, 7 L. R. A. 262, 19 Am. St. Rep. 36, as follows: "As a general rule, the question of care or want of care is not involved in an action for injuries resulting from a nuisance. If actual injury result from the keeping of gunpowder, the person keeping it will be liable therefor, even though the explosion is not chargeable to his personal negligence"—citing a large number of cases. Under either view, therefore, the amended complaint is not open to attack by general demurrer. The proximate cause of the damage appears to have been the negligence of defendant in the construction and maintenance of its magazine and the reckless act of the servant acting within the scope of his authority—these two conditions coexisting at the time of the explosion and both contributing to the injury done to plaintiff.

The cases cited by appellant involve different facts, as will be seen from the following reference to them: The trouble in Smith v. Buttner, 90 Cal. 95, 27 Pac. 29, was that no fact was averred showing that the alleged negligence caused or contributed to the injury. As said by the court: "It is well settled that negligence may be charged in general terms; that is, what was done being stated, it is sufficient to say, it was negligently done, without stating the particular omission which rendered the act negligent. But it must appear from the facts averred that the negligence caused or contributed to the injury. To illustrate, suppose a plaintiff injured by the falling of a sign negligently and insecurely fastened by defendant. It would not suffice for him to allege the negligence in hanging the sign; that plaintiff in lawfully and without negligence, passing under it, was thrown down and injured through such negligence. This would be a mere assertion of the cause. It would be necessary to show that the sign fell upon him in consequence of such negligence, thereby causing his injury." Here, as we have seen, "what was done" is stated—that is, the powder was negligently ignited—and this, superadded to the negligence in the construction and maintenance of the plant, caused the damage. In Indianapolis & St. Louis Railroad Company v. Horst, 93 U. S. 291, 23 L. Ed. 898, it is merely stated that "a plaintiff is bound to state his case, but not the evidence by which he intends to prove it." The vice of the complaint in Going v. Dinwiddie, 86 Cal. 633, 25 Pac. 129, was that no fact was alleged showing that the justice of the peace acted without jurisdiction; the action being for false imprisonment "on a pretended charge of contempt of court." The Supreme Court properly said that "it is clear that the acts complained of were done by the defendant in his official character as a judicial officer and there is no averment in terms that said acts were without or in excess of his jurisdiction, nor are any facts averred from which such want of jurisdiction appears. And that a judicial officer is not liable for acts done in his official capacity and within his jurisdiction is as thoroughly established as any other principle of law." It necessarily followed that the omission to show affirmatively the want of jurisdiction was a vital error. An instruction of the court and not a question of pleading, as we have already seen, was involved in the case of Kleebauer v. Western Fuse & Explosives Co., supra.

Of the cases cited by appellant in support of its position that the pleading should allege that the act was done within the scope of the servant's employment and duties, in only one—Daniels v. Carney, 148 Ala. 81, 42 South. 452, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 920, 121 Am. St. Rep. 34—was a question of pleading involved. This is in harmony with appellant's view, but, as remarked by respondent, the case is against the weight of authority. It was alleged that the defendant owned the steamboat, and that it was being operated by its servants. There would seem to be no difference in principle, as suggested by respondent, between such a case and one relating to an accident on a street railway. In the latter instance surely an allegation that the motorman in operating the car was acting within the scope of his authority would not be required. This element is implied in the averment that the agency which is being operated belongs to defendant, and that it is operated by defendant's servant.

The judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Geo. E. Church, Judge.

G. Fredoni was convicted of robbery, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Henry Brickley and W. D. Foote, for appellant. Attorney General Webb, for the People.

COOPER, P. J. The defendant was found guilty of the crime of robbery, and sentenced to a term of six years in the state prison at Folsom. He prosecutes this appeal from the judgment and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

The first claim made is that the court erred in instructing the jury that: "All persons concerned in the commission of a crime, whether they directly commit the act constituting the offense, or aid or abet in its commission, or, not being present, advise and encourage its commission, are principals in any crime so committed." This instruction was again substantially repeated in a different form; and it is said that the instruction was erroneous and injurious to the defendant, for the reason that section 31 of the Penal Code makes those persons guilty of a crime who "aid and abet in its commission." A person who innocently aids in the commission of a crime would not be guilty; and, if the instruction given was the only one upon the question, and if the evidence showed that the aid given by defendant might reasonably have been consistent with his innocence, the objection would be serious; but upon an examination of the record we find that the court elsewhere instructed the jury that in order to find the defendant guilty the evidence should show "beyond all reasonable doubt and to a moral certainty that the defendant was unlawfully concerned in the commission of the crime as charged in the information," and again, that if the jury find beyond all reasonable doubt that the crime as charged in the information was committed, and "that the defendant was unlawfully concerned in its commission, and that he, the said defendant, acted together with some other person or persons in the commission of said crime, each unlawfully aiding and abetting in its commission in his own way, then I instruct you that it is all the law requires to make the defendant guilty of the crime charged." The court further charged the jury that, unless they believed beyond all reasonable doubt that a crime had been committed as charged in the information, and "that the defendant was unlawfully concerned in its commission, and that he, the said defendant, acted together with some other person or persons in the commission of said crime, each unlawfully aiding and abetting in its commission in his own way, then I instruct you that it is all that the law requires to make the defendant guilty of the crime charged." It therefore appears clear that the jury were instructed and understood that unless the defendant criminally aided in the commission of the offense, they could not find him guilty. This cured the defect in the instruction complained of. People v. Dole, 122 Cal. 486, 55 Pac. 581, 68 Am. St. Rep. 50; People v. Warren, 130 Cal. 683, 63 Pac. 83. See, also, People v. Price, 9 Cal. App. 218, 98 Pac. 547, where it was held that the use of the disjunctive "or" instead of the word "and" could not have misled the jury, and was not injurious to the defendant. Not only this, but there was no evidence even tending to show that the defendant innocently aided in the crime, and therefore the jury could not have misapplied the instruction. People v. Morine, 138 Cal. 626, 72 Pac. 166.

The next contention is that the court erred in admitting, "over the objection of defendant," evidence tending to prove a subsequent and distinct robbery. It is sufficient to say that we have examined the record, and find that no objection was made to the evidence. Therefore we decline to discuss the merits of the contention.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

GAGE v. BILLING. (Civ. 704.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. March 4, 1910.)

1. Brokers (§ 86*)—Action for Service—Evidence—Sufficiency.

Where, in an action for compensation for services rendered by an attorney in obtaining a proposition to purchase the property from defendant, the client proved that he agreed to pay a reasonable commission on the attorney securing a satisfactory purchaser, and that he failed to secure a purchaser, and the attorney merely testified that the client requested him to place the matter before parties whom he thought would handle the proposition, without denying the testimony of the client, a verdict against the client was contrary to the evidence, for the agreement testified to by the client was reasonable, and established the usual condition to such employment.

2. PLEADING (§ 327*)—BILL OF PARTICULARS—EFFECT.

A claim set forth in a bill of particulars, though not strictly within the complaint as filed, must be considered as a part of the complaint.

4. BROKERS (§ 6*)—EMPLOYMENT—COMPENSATION—WHEN EARNED.

A claim by an attorney for services in obtaining a proposition to purchase from the client certain property is a claim for services as a broker, and not as an attorney, where it appeared that charges were also made for everything in the nature of counsel, advice, and interviews with the client.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Cruz County; Lucas F. Smith, Judge.

Action by J. H. Gage against F. W. Billing. From an order denying a new trial after verdict for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Wyckoff & Gardner, for appellant. Emil Pohli, for respondent.

HALL, J. This is an appeal from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial. It is alleged in the complaint: "That within two years last past the defendant became indebted to one Emil Pohli for and on account of services rendered by said Pohli to said defendant as said defendant's attorney at law, at said defendant's special instance and request, in the sum of $2,000, the said last-mentioned sum being the reasonable value of said services." Plaintiff sued as assignee of Pohli. Upon demand of defendant plaintiff furnished a bill of particulars, in which he sets out three charges or items. The first item is for counsel and advice in regard to certain matters specified in the item, for which a charge is made of $500. The second item is for "services of said Emil Pohli, said plaintiff's assignor, in obtaining a proposition to purchase from said defendant, or from a corporation to be formed by said defendant, the right to all the lime deposits in and upon the San Vicente ranch, the property of the Santa Cruz Lime Company," for which a charge is made in the sum of $1,000. The third item is for services in interviews with defendant and his agents, and other services set forth, for which a charge is made in the sum of $500. Thereafter defendant filed an answer denying the indebtedness, and denying that Pohli ever rendered any services to defendant as his attorney at law, or any service at all, save under an express agreement, by the terms of which defendant agreed to pay a reasonable sum therefor if Pohli should secure a purchaser satisfactory to the defendant, and at a price and upon terms satisfactory to the said defendant, for certain lands, and that said Pohli attempted to secure such purchaser, but has entirely failed therein, and has not secured such purchaser for such land, or any part thereof. The case was tried before a jury. At the trial Pohli admitted a set-off or counterclaim in the sum of $750, which defendant had likewise pleaded. The jury returned a verdict for plaintiff in the sum of $1,750, less the $750, or a net verdict for $1,000.

Appellant attacks the verdict as not sustained by the evidence. Upon this point his first contention is that defendant testified explicitly in accordance with his affirmative defense that all the services rendered by Pohli to defendant were rendered under an express agreement that he should receive no compensation unless a sale was effected, and that there is no evidence in the record to the contrary. So far as the evidence in the record relates to the second item in the bill of particulars for which a charge is made of $1,000, we think that this contention is correct. Mr. Pohli testified in chief to the effect that in the latter part of 1905 defendant consulted him as an attorney in regard to his (defendant's) rights as a minority stockholder in the Santa Cruz Lime Company, which owned the San Vicente ranch, supposed to contain valuable deposits of lime, as well as valuable growths of timber. He also testified as to advice given and consultations regarding defendant's rights, and how they could best be protected and conserved. Among other things Pohli advised defendant that a practical way to deal with the question was to obtain from the controlling stockholder (Mr. Packard) an option, and attempt to take over the property himself; that a holding corporation should be formed. All this testimony was pertinent to the first item in the bill of particulars. In relation to his employment to obtain a purchaser of the property in question the witness, after giving testimony relating to the first item in the bill of particulars, said: "Mr. Billings at one time did claim he was capable of doing the whole business himself, but, being advanced in age, he would rather have some one else do it; he also claimed that he had means to do it himself; he requested me to place the matter before parties whom I thought could handle the proposition." The witness continued to the effect that he succeeded in interesting Mr. Gavin McNab, who visited the property, but no sale was effected or any terms ever agreed upon. The defendant gave testimony as to the employment of Pohli. Upon this point defendant said: "I finally asked him if he had any chance to sell any property of any kind. He said he had one probable purchaser for the property, which I described to him at the time as good as I could, so we went on, and he wanted to know what commission he was to have, and I told him I would give him a very fair commission if he would make the sale; the property being so large we could not say beforehand what the commission would be, but I would be willing to give him a commission. Pohli agreed to it, and said that that is correct; he would receive no commission unless we get to a sale."

Although Pohli was a witness and in court, and must have known whether or not defendant told the truth, he did not contradict or deny the defendant's testimony, and we find nothing in his testimony given in support of plaintiff's cause of action that necessarily or at all contradicts the testimony of the defendant as to the terms upon which he was employed or requested to find a purchaser for the property. We are not unmindful of the rule that it is not always necessary that a witness be expressly contradicted to raise a conflict; for testimony may be so improbable or contradictory in itself as to justify its disbelief. But no such case as that is presented here. The agreement for a commission or compensation only in the event of a sale is not only reasonable, but it is the usual condition attached to such employment. Indeed, in the ordinary employment of a broker or agent to sell real estate, no compensation is earned unless a purchaser is procured willing to purchase on the seller's terms. Pohli simply testified that: "He requested me to place the matter before parties whom I thought could handle the proposition." He had been advised by defendant's pleading that he relied on an express contract, under which no compensation was to be paid unless a sale was effected, and yet neither before defendant testified to the terms of such agreement, nor afterwards did Pohli take the pains to give testimony on the vital point at issue. In this connection it is significant that Pohli rendered a bill to defendant before the action was brought, and after the services were completed, for a total sum of $1,000, with a credit for the offset of $750. The two persons who knew the facts were both in court. One, the defendant, gave specific testimony, not improbable, but entirely reasonable, and showing a contract in accordance with the usual custom in such cases. He was not impeached in any way; was not even cross-examined as to the evidence in question. The other person, Mr. Pohli, did not contradict such witness, and gave no testimony necessarily in conflict with this explicit testimony of the defendant. In such a case the testimony of the witness explicitly testifying to the particular facts should be taken as true. Newton v. Pope, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 109; Lacy v. Wilson, 24 Mich. 479; Matthews v. Lanier, 33 Ark. 91.

As to the first item in the bill of particulars, we have already set forth the testimony of Pohli that tends to sustain such item. His testimony shows advice and counsel given as an attorney at law before and independent of any employment to secure a purchaser of the property or any interest therein. So likewise, as to the last item of the bill of particulars, the evidence of Pohli shows services of the same nature, and distinct from the charge set forth in the second item of the bill of particulars. But as the valuation placed upon the services set forth in the first and third items amounts to the sum of $1,000 only, and Pohli admitted the correctness of the offset of $750, the evidence relating to these items would only support a net verdict of $250.

Appellant also contends that the evidence does not support the verdict for the reason that the services set forth in the second item of the bill of particulars are not services rendered as an attorney at law, but are the services of a broker, and are neither embraced within the allegations of the complaint, nor is the value thereof recoverable, for the reason that a broker or agent employed to effect a sale or to procure a purchaser is, under the general rules of law, entitled to compensation only when he has procured a purchaser ready and willing to purchase on the employer's terms. The services charged for in the second item of the bill of particulars are not strictly within the allegations of the complaint as filed, but they are clearly set forth in the bill of particulars, which, when filed, must be treated as part of the complaint. Millet v. Bradbury, 109 Cal. 172, 41 Pac. 865; Chapman v. Bent, 133 Cal. xix, 65 Pac. 959. They were thus brought within the issues presented by the complaint read in connection with the bill of particulars. They were, however, services of a broker to secure a purchaser, and the broker failed to secure such purchaser, and for this reason, in the absence of an express contract for compensation in case of failure, the broker was entitled to no compensation. Ayres v. Thomas, 116 Cal. 143, 47 Pac. 1013; Wylie v. Marine Nat. Bank, 61 N. Y. 416; Caston v. Quimby, 178 Mass. 153, 59 N. E. 653, 52 L. R. A. 785; Fairchild v. Cunningham, 84 Minn. 521, 88 N. W. 15. We are aware that it is not always easy to separate the services that an attorney at law may render as such from the services that he may render as a broker, or in some other capacity. But in the case at bar plaintiff himself made such segregation in his bill of particulars. The second item is for "services of said Emil Pohli, said plaintiff's assignor, in obtaining a proposition to purchase from said defendant, or from a corporation to be formed by said defendant, the right to all the lime deposits in and upon the San Vicente ranch, the property of the Santa Cruz Lime Company." That this item was intended to cover only the mere matter of obtaining as a broker an offer to purchase is made perfectly clear by the charges in the other two items of the bill of particulars, where charges are made for everything in the nature of counsel, advice, interviews with defendant and his agents, the writing of letters, and communications over the telephone with defendant, examining an option, and preparing an acceptance thereof, and the like. It is clear to us that the charge of $1,000 set forth in the second item of the bill of particulars is for Pohli's services as a broker. And that is so, notwithstanding that he testified that he was not employed as a broker. Such testimony was but his opinion, and does not conclude the matter. Whether or not he acted as a broker must be determined by the nature of the service for which the charge was made. This clearly appears to have been, so far as the $1,000 charge is concerned, for obtaining an offer to purchase. This was the service of a broker. Plaintiff—that is, Pohli—made a separate and different charge for everything that he did in the matter that might be reasonably classed as the work of an attorney at law as such.

As plaintiff's assignor did not succeed in procuring an offer that was acceptable to defendant, no recovery can be had for the second item of the bill, and for this reason the verdict is not sustained by the evidence.

The instructions that appellant insists should have been given at his request were fully covered by two other instructions given by the court at defendant's request.

The order is reversed.

(Civ. 756.)

NEWSPAPERS (§ 3*)—"NEWSPAPERS OF GENERAL CIRCULATION"—REGULAR INTERVALS.

Under Pol. Code, § 4460, defining a "newspaper of general circulation" as one which shall have been established, printed, and published at regular intervals for at least one year preceding the date of publication, etc., where a newspaper had been published weekly for part of a year and daily for the balance of the year preceding the filing of a petition to have it declared a newspaper of general circulation, it was published at "regular intervals" for one year within the statute, which does not require the interval between the dates of publication to be equal from beginning to end, but only to be regular, and not spasmodic or occasional.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; J. R. Welch, Judge.

Application by the Tribune Publishing Company of Palo Alto, a corporation, to have the Palo Alto Tribune declared a newspaper of general circulation, contested by the California Press Association. From an order overruling a demurrer to the petition, contestant appeals. Affirmed.

McGowan, Squires & Westlake, for appellant. Willard, Swart, Ferrell & McGovern, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is a proceeding instituted under section 4458 et seq. of the Political Code to have the Palo Alto Tribune declared and adjudged a newspaper of general circulation, and entitled to print public or legal notices.

The only allegation of the petition material in this appeal shows that the said newspaper was printed and published in Palo Alto at regular weekly intervals from March 16, 1906, down to and including October 1, 1908, and that from said last mentioned date down to the commencement of this proceeding it was printed and published in said place at regular daily intervals. Section 4462 of said Code authorizes any one to appear and contest such a petition; and the contestant here, on behalf of the California Press Association (an organization of newspapers of general circulation), interposed a general demurrer to the petition and contested the same on the ground that the Palo Alto Tribune was not a newspaper of general circulation as defined by section 4460 of the Political Code, in that it had not been published for regular intervals for one year. This demurrer was overruled, and upon final hearing the prayer of the petition was granted. Section 4460 defines a newspaper of general circulation as follows: "A newspaper published for the dissemination of local or telegraphic news and intelligence of a general character, having a bona fide subscription list of paying subscribers, and which shall have been established, printed and published at regular intervals in the state, county, city, city and county, or town where such publication, notice by publication, or official advertising is given or made, for at least one year preceding the date of such publication, notice or advertisement. * * *"

The Palo Alto Tribune, as above stated, was published weekly during a part of the period of one year preceding the filing of the petition in the superior court, and daily during the remainder of that period; and the single question presented for determination is: Can it be said under those circumstances that such newspaper was published at regular intervals for one year? It does not appear that the efficiency of a journal would be at all impaired by a change from weekly to daily publication. It might perhaps be said, in answer to the claim of the contestant that the publication in this case was irregular, that a newspaper published every day is necessarily published every week, and the argument could be made that a newspaper published weekly for nine months, and thenceforth daily for three months, has been published weekly for a year. But we think it unnecessary to resort to such an argument, for it appears plain to us, bearing in mind the purpose of the act as well as the language of the provision in question, that the publication in this case constitutes a publication at regular intervals for one year. The section does not require the interval between dates of publication to be equal from beginning to end, but it must be regular; that is, not spasmodic or occasional.

O'CONNELL v. WALKER et al. (Civ. 566.)

ATTACHMENT (§ 115*) — AFFIDAVIT — ALTERNATIVE FORM—SUFFICIENCY.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 538, providing that the affidavit for attachment, where the claim arises upon a contract, must contain the statement that payment has not been secured, or if originally so secured that the security has become valueless, an affidavit alleging that payment of the debt has not been secured, "or" if originally so secured that such security has without any act of plaintiff become valueless, was insufficient to authorize the writ of attachment as the use of the word "or" does not state either alternative with certainty.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. V. Coffey, Judge.

Action by Kate A. O'Connell, administratrix of the estate of George P. O'Connell, deceased, against David F. Walker and others in which a writ of attachment was issued against the property of Walter J. Bartnett. From an order refusing to discharge the writ, Bartnett appeals. Reversed, with directions.

Gray & Cooper, for appellant. Daniel O'Connell, for respondent.

HART, J. The court below declined to grant the motion of the appellant to discharge the writ of attachment issued in this action, and this appeal is from the order denying said motion.

The defendants were the directors of the California Safe Deposit & Trust Company for several years prior to and at the time that said company was declared to be insolvent by the state bank commissioners in the month of December, 1907, and at the time said corporation was adjudged insolvent and a receiver thereof appointed, on the 18th day of January, 1908, by the superior court in and for the city and county of San Francisco. This action is against said corporation and the directors thereof. The complaint alleges that the plaintiff, as administratrix, etc., in the year 1907 deposited with the savings department of said company the sum of $1,774, which it agreed to pay to her on demand, and "although she has demanded said money from said company, no part thereof has ever been paid to her, and the whole of said sum with interest thereon is still due and owing to this plaintiff." It is further alleged that during the incumbency in office of the defendants, other than the corporation, as directors of the latter, the moneys and funds of said corporation were loaned on inadequate security; that they were directly or indirectly borrowed by the directors and officers of said corporation; that the officers of the corporation overdrew their accounts; that dividends were made and paid from other than the surplus profits arising from the business of said corporation; and, in divers other ways, specifically alleged, it is declared that the funds of the corporation were wrongfully diverted and converted by said directors and officers. Subsequently to the filing of the complaint, there was filed on behalf of plaintiff an affidavit on attachment, upon which a writ of attachment was issued and executed against the property of the defendant and appellant, W. J. Bartnett.

The individual liability of the directors for the claim of the plaintiff is founded on the provisions of section 3 of article 12 of the state Constitution. That section provides that "the directors or trustees of corporations and joint-stock associations shall be jointly and severally liable to the creditors and stockholders for all moneys embezzled or misappropriated by the officers of such corporation, or joint-stock association, during the term of office of such director or trustee." It is claimed, however, among other contentions against the legality of the order from which this appeal is prosecuted, that the affidavit upon which the writ of attachment was issued is fatally defective in that it does not properly adhere to the requirements of the statute prescribing the conditions upon which, only, a writ may be issued, and that said writ was therefore irregularly issued.

Among other prerequisites which are required by the statute to be observed before a writ of attachment is authorized to be issued is that the affidavit upon which such writ may alone be issued, where the claim declared upon arises out of a contract, express or implied, for the direct payment of money, must contain the following statement: "That the payment of the same has not been secured by any mortgage or lien upon real or personal property, or any pledge of personal property, or, if originally so secured, that such security has, without any act of the plaintiff, or the person to whom the security was given, become valueless." Code Civ. Proc. § 538.

The allegation in the affidavit upon the subject of nonsecurity, etc., literally follows the language of the statute and reads as follows: "And the payment of the same has not been secured by any mortgage or lien upon real or personal property, or any pledge of personal property, or, if originally so secured, that such security has, without any act of the plaintiff, or the person to whom the security was given, become valueless." The specific complaint against the validity of the affidavit as the foundation for the issuance of the writ lies in the alternative form in which it is therein declared that the claim sued on is not secured by a lien of any character. Under the decisions in this state, the point appears to be well taken. The respondent has filed no brief on this appeal, and therefore the point suggested is not combatted here.

In Wilke v. Cohn, 54 Cal. 212, an affidavit for a writ of attachment contained, as here, an allegation as to nonexistence of security for the claim which was the basis of the action in the alternative form, and the court, holding said affidavit to be insufficient and the attachment irregularly issued, says: "It would be proper to follow the language of the statute, in saying that payment had not been secured by any mortgage or lien upon real or personal property, because it includes two or more phases of the same fact, attended with the same results, namely, that no security had ever been given; but, to use the above language, and then say, 'or, if originally so secured, such security has become valueless', is not to state either with certainty. It does not say that no security was ever given; neither does it say that security was given, but that the same has become valueless." To the same effect is the case of Winters v. Pearson, 72 Cal. 553, 14 Pac. 304.

Our attention has been directed to no subsequent decision of the Supreme Court overruling the cited cases, and we assume that if the rule as therein stated had since been receded from counsel for the respondent would have called our attention thereto. As stated, under these decisions the affidavit was insufficient to authorize the issuance of the writ of attachment, and the motion to dissolve the writ should have been granted.

Some other points were made against the regularity of the issuance of the writ, but the first point suggested being decisive of the case, said points need not be noticed.

The order is reversed, with directions to the court below to discharge the writ of attachment.

Proceedings for settlement of the estate of Basil Campbell. Petition by G. Wyatt Wheeler and another for partial distribution. From an order denying the petition, petitioners appeal. Affirmed.

See 108 Pac. 676.

W. A. Gett and A. C. Huston, for appellants. Geo. Clark, W. A. Anderson, and A. G. Bailey, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. G. Wyatt Wheeler and John W. Wheeler filed their petition for a partial distribution of the above-entitled estate, claiming to be sons of Basil Campbell, deceased, by his wife, Mary Stephens, alleging that "the only other heir of said deceased is his surviving wife, Mary Jane Campbell" it is also alleged that the last will of deceased has been lately admitted to probate, and the said Mary Jane Campbell duly appointed executrix thereof. The petition was opposed by the executrix in her official capacity and by her individually, and by Leonora Williams, devisee and legatee under said will, denying the averments of the petition. The court found "that the said G. Wyatt Wheeler is not, nor is the said John W. Wheeler, the offspring or child of any marriage whatever between the person known as Mary Campbell, also known as Mary Stephens; that the said G. Wyatt Wheeler is not, nor is the said John W. Wheeler, a son or heir at law of the said Basil Campbell, deceased; that neither of said petitioners is entitled to succeed to any part of the estate of said deceased." The petition was denied by the court, and petitioners appeal from this order. The findings are challenged as unsupported by the evidence.

The will was not admitted in evidence, and respondent makes the preliminary point that the record does not show that petitioners are provided for in, or that they are omitted from, the will of Basil Campbell, deceased, "and this sufficiently justifies the finding that they are not entitled to share in the estate of deceased, and this one finding, not overthrown, is all the support the order appealed from needs." The point is apparently an attack upon the sufficiency of the petition. There was no demurrer to it, and no objection made to any of the testimony as not within the issues presented by the petition and answer. The cause was tried upon the theory that all the material issues were properly presented, with no objection from either party. The court will not allow either party now for the first time to say that there was no issue. Carroll v. Briggs, 138 Cal. 452, 454, 71 Pac. 501.

Petitioners claim that they are the sons of deceased, Basil Campbell, born to Mary Stephens while his wife. Contestants dispute the marriage, and also dispute the alleged parentage of the petitioners on the father's side. The controversy harks back to a period more than three score years ago, and is an echo of the old slave days. It seems to us that the questions presented relate to the principles of law as established and applied to a condition of facts peculiar to the system of slavery, rather than to any controversy as to what the facts are. These principles, as we conceive them to have been settled, must control the case, and in them, we think, the judgment of the learned trial court finds support, although it be admitted that the principal facts, adduced by petitioners, are deemed to be true. We will state enough of the evidence to show the facts from which we are to determine whether or not, in legal contemplation, the relation of marriage ever existed between Basil Campbell and Mary Stephens.

Basil Campbell was born a slave about the year 1830, and belonged to Catherine Stephens, at Bunceton, Cooper county, Mo.; she purchased him, when he was a boy from the Campbell estate, and he was thereafter known as Basil or Bas Stephens; Mary Stephens was also a slave and belonged to Catherine Stephens; her age is not very satisfactorily shown, but it appeared that she was probably 20 or 25 years older than Basil. From the deposition of William Wheeler, a witness for petitioners, it appeared that he was 78 years old in 1908, which would make him about the same age as Basil; he was a "superannuated Methodist preacher." He testified: "Mary Stephens was my mother; she was a slave and went by the name of the people she belonged to; my father's name was Abraham Wheeler; Mary belonged to Catherine Stephens, and Abraham Wheeler belonged to Ben Wheeler. * * * My father was Mary's first husband; have no knowledge where they were married. * * * I think my father died in 1880; my mother was married twice; I think my mother had six or seven children; my mother's eldest child was Lewis; he lived in Cooper county and belonged to the same people I did; next child was Andy, and then Walsh; I don't know who was the father of Andy, Lewis, or Walsh; I think they were by different fathers; my mother lived with Catherine Stephens, and my father lived with Ben Wheeler until he was sold; the Wheeler place is distant 2½ miles from the Stephens place." (It appeared that Abraham was sold to Judge Usher of Sheridan county, Mo.) Other witnesses speak of Mary's marriage to Abraham, which latter was probably what is known as a "slave marriage." The date of the alleged marriage of Basil to Mary is not fixed definitely, but from all the evidence it would appear to have taken place when he was about 18 years old and when Mary was probably 40. One witness for petitioners, an old colored woman, Violet Glasgow, living near Bunceton, declared that "Bas and Mary were married right here below the mill by Uncle Rev. Bas Levins, a Baptist minister." On cross-examination she testified: "I wasn't present when Bas and Mary were married; my father and mother were there; I know they were married down there where I told you; I could not tell you when they were married; it is so long ago; they told me they were married. * * * My father and mother told me that Basil and Mary were married, and I knew when they went to the wedding; I couldn't go; had to attend to the children, but I got some of the wedding cake and sweet potatoes; the Rev. Bas Levins was an old man; a colored man." No witness, other than Violet Glasgow, referred to any ceremony connected with the marriage of Bas and Mary, and the testimony of this witness generally, in other particulars, indicates that her memory was poor, and her statements not to be explicitly relied upon. Other witnesses who testified that Bas and Mary were married, witnesses familiar with the Stephens household and in a position to know the facts, testified that "they took up with each other," according to the custom among slaves, lived together and cohabited and had children, and were generally reputed to be man and wife, and on these facts they predicated their marriage.

Mr. W. H. Stephens, a resident of Bunceton, a witness for petitioners, deposed: That he knew Bas and Mary and the two boys, John and Wyatt. "I only knew of the relationship of these four negroes from what I have heard the black and white people of the neighborhood say, and Bas and Mary were considered by all of them as husband and wife in the way of the time. * * * Was there frequently between the time of the birth of John and Wyatt and the time Bas went to California in 1854; they all lived at Grandmother Stephens' place; Mary took Bas' leaving quite hard." He was asked if Bas and Mary were husband and wife according to custom, and answered: "Well, it was regarded as near as any couple; some of them had a big wedding, and some had a very private wedding, and some had none. Some had no wedding. These three were common. This didn't belong to the big class, or I would have heard about it." On cross-examination he was asked the custom among the slaves, and answered: "Some had big weddings, some private, some none—just took up with each other—so it was agreeable to the white folks, there was no objection; Bas and Mary just took up with each other, so far as I know." T. B. Stephens, a witness for petitioners, son of Catherine Stephens, 75 years old, residing near Bunceton, deposed: That he knew John and Wyatt Stephens and their mother, Mary. "Q. Who was the father? A. I could not say who their father was. Q. Who was their reputed father? A. Bas Campbell. Q. Did Bas and Mary live together on the place of your mother? A. Yes, they were together on the place. Q. What was the common understanding as to whether or not they were living together as man and wife? A. Well, that was the general understanding. Q. Your mother was living there on the place at the time? A. Yes. Q. Was this relationship known to her? A. Yes, I suppose it was. * * * Mary had five children before John and Wyatt were born; before Bas came to the place cannot say Mary was ever married; a man visited her named Wheeler, who she claimed to be her husband; * * * it was supposed that Bas and Mary were cohabiting all the time; * * * was not present when Bas and Mary were married; never heard of any ceremony; so far as I know Bas and Mary were simply living together on Mary's place, and Mary had two children during the time, and Bas reputed to be their father; after Bas left in 1854, Mary never took up with any other man that I know of. * * * I think they slept together by the approval of my mother."

Thomas S. Stephens, residing at Bunceton, 74 years old, who describes himself as a "retired capitalist," was a witness for petitioners. He deposed: "Was acquainted with Basil Campbell; I reckon I knew him when I knew anybody; knew him right here at my mother's home. * * * I went to California in 1853. Bas went to California in 1854; he went with John D. Stephens in taking cattle across; Basil was then a married man; his wife was called Mary Stephens (after her owner); she was known as Big Mary; Bas was married a long time before he left for California; he had two children named John W. Wheeler and Wyatt." He testified to having herded cattle with Bas near Knights Landing. "No one else was with us; during that time Basil talked with me about himself and his family in Missouri; * * * he said he wanted to make money enough to buy them and take them out there; * * * I knew Basil before 1844; I knew him before his marriage to Big Mary; * * * I suppose the marriage that occurred between Basil and Big Mary was recognized by Catherine Stephens; that was the custom of the country; I reckon they were married, for the Stephenses did not allow them to live together until they were married." He described the houses where the negroes slept and the room that Bas and Mary lived in. "The custom was that if one of a married couple went clean out of the country, they had a legal right to marry again; the custom was if a nigger was sold down south to go to the cotton fields, and left his wife here, of course she had the right to marry again, and he could get a wife down there; but we never looked on Bas as leaving his wife to marry anybody else, because he was speaking about coming back here and taking her and his boys back; * * * unless a man was sent entirely out of the country, a marriage was supposed to continue between slaves; I can't tell you whether Mary was divorced or separated from Wheeler; there was no law from 1840 to the Civil War, by which slaves were divorced. * * * Wheeler was sold out of the neighborhood; he was sold to a party living 40 or 50 miles away; don't know whether he got a divorce; niggers didn't get divorces; he never came back."

Jos Stephens, a witness for contestants, 72 years old, who came to California in 1854, and has lived here ever since, testified: "I have known Basil Campbell ever since I have known anybody. I knew Basil Campbell back in Missouri ever since I have known anybody. * * * I knew Big Mary. She had five or six or seven children when Bas came to California. Never while in Missouri did I hear any talk among any people in the neighborhood that Basil and Big Mary were married."

J. S. Tutt, a witness at the trial for contestants, 82 years old, formerly living near Bunceton, testified that he knew Bas and Mary there. He was asked what he knew as to whether Bas was a single or married man, and answered: "He was considered a single man, as far as I know." He testified that slave marriages were with the consent of the owners; that he knew nothing of Bas' marriage; "just my impression; I never heard of it." He was asked to explain "how a slave marriage would take place, or how one negro would get the privilege of being or staying with another." He answered: "Well, I don't know whether I can explain it exactly, Mr. Clark. In some instances they had their favorite girl or waiting maid that waited on the girls, and they generally gave them a pretty elaborate wedding, you know, and ceremony and dancing; but as a rule, you know, the other class—field hands—what we called 'outsiders,' why if a man had a notion that he wanted to live with a woman as his wife, he would go to the master and ask his permission, and if he got it, that was all there was to it." He testified that it was the right of the master to separate the slaves after they were married and allow them to have intercourse with other slaves. He testified: "My conception of a slave marriage in those days was that it was almost a marriage of convenience than anything else. It was a certain custom, too, but the man generally had the privilege, and exercised it a great deal, to quit whenever he felt like it." He testified that such intercourse as he had mentioned "was considered a slave marriage in the neighborhood," agreeable to custom there at that time. He also testified that, "in order for a negro man to cohabit with a negro woman, it was necessary to get the consent of the master," and that was considered a slave marriage "good in point of custom as long as it lasted." One or two other witnesses, who had known Bas and Mary in Missouri, testified that Bas' reputation was that of a single man.

It is undisputed that Basil came to California in 1854; that he never thereafter had any communication by letter or otherwise, with Mary; that in 1861 she went to Texas and died there about 1887; that Basil was formally married in California to Rebecca Dolton in 1866, and, after her death, he married Mary Jane Campbell in 1893. It appeared without conflict that Mary's first slave marriage was with Abraham Wheeler, who was alive when Basil "took up" with Mary, and did not die until 1880, and was never divorced from her. There was evidence that Basil visited his old home in Missouri, in 1876, and then met John W. Wheeler, and that he, at that time, spoke of both John and Wyatt as his sons. It did not appear that he made any reference to Mary as his wife, who, with Wyatt, was then living in Texas. He was then married to Rebecca Dolton, and had been for 10 years. In 1894 John wrote Basil a letter in which, among other things, he said: "I wrote you several letters since you was out here in 1876 and you didn't seem to recognize me as your son tho I always feel interested in you because I was always taught so by mother and all the white ones of the family." Basil made no reply, nor had John W. heard from him after his visit in 1876. John was never in California.

Section 1387 of the Civil Code provides that: "The issue of all marriages null in law, or dissolved by divorce, are legitimate." The section also declares that: "Every illegitimate child is an heir of the person who, in writing, signed in the presence of a competent witness, acknowledges himself to be the father of such child." No claim is here made that any such acknowledgment occurred. Nor is there any claim that Basil made such acknowledgment as is mentioned in section 230 of the Civil Code, as that section is interpreted in Estate of De Laveaga, 142 Cal. 158, 75 Pac. 790. Subdivision 5 of section 1962, Code Civ. Proc., provides that: "The issue of a wife cohabiting with her husband, who is not impotent, is indisputably presumed to be legitimate." But this latter section presupposes a marriage. The only claim to the legitimacy of petitioners, therefore, having any standing in the case must rest upon sufficient evidence that there was a marriage between Basil and Mary, and such acknowledgment by Basil of his paternity of petitioners as appears in the evidence must be viewed only as bearing upon the question of his marriage to Mary, and not as in any sense tending to establish legitimacy by acknowledgment. The crux of the case is: Was there a marriage between Basil and Mary? If there was, in legal contemplation, a marriage, the presumption of legitimacy of their children follows (Civ. Code, § 193); and legitimacy of a child may be disputed "only by the husband or wife, or the descendants of both." Civ. Code, § 195.

In the case of U. S. v. Roach, Ex. (decided in 1875) 92 U. S. 27, 23 L. Ed., bottom of p. 597, the action was against the United States to recover the value of certain cotton seized in 1863. The claimant, Hall, was a slave owned by Benjamin Roach, who filed an interpleader. Subsequently Roach died, and his executrix was made a party. Hall claimed under a contract of purchase from his master. The court said: "In order to see the proposition in its true light, it is necessary, as it were, to roll back the tide of time, and to imagine ourselves in the presence of the circumstances by which the parties were surrounded when and where the contract is said to have been made. * * * The case must be determined as if slavery had not been abolished in Mississippi, and the laws referred to were still in force there. The destruction of the institution can have no effect upon the prior rights in question." Holding against Hall's contention, the court said: "It was an inflexible rule of the law of African slavery, wherever it existed, that the slave was incapable of entering into any contract, not excepting the contract of marriage"—citing cases. "This regulation was harsher than that which obtained in regard to the Roman bondman, the Saxon villein, Russian serf, the German and Polish slave"—citing Cobb on Slavery, § 266. We derive but little aid from an examination of the decisions defining what may constitute a legal marriage generally between free men and free women capable of contracting. The statutory definition of marriage in the state of Missouri, as in our own state, precludes the possibility of a marriage between slaves. "Marriage is considered in law as a civil contract, to which the consent of parties capable in law of contracting is essential." In State v. Bittick, 103 Mo. 183, 15 S. W. 325, 11 L. R. A. 587, 23 Am. St. Rep. 869, the above is given as the statutory definition of marriage in that state. It is the same here. Civ. Code, § 55. In that case it was held, notwithstanding the statutes regulating the marriage ceremony, requiring license, etc., that a marriage according to the common law was valid. Speaking of the contract, the court said: "While it is here declared to be a civil contract, it is almost universally held to be something more than an ordinary contract. Marriage is a status, created by contract, and we formulate the definition of it as follows: Marriage is the civil status of one man and one woman capable of contracting united by contract and mutual consent for life, for the discharge, to each other and to the community, of the duties legally incumbent on those whose association is founded on the distinction of the sex. The contract of marriage in this case comes up to every requirement of this definition. It created the relation of husband and wife between defendant and Bertha, so long as they both should live. In form, then, the contract was good, and constituted a valid marriage at common law. 1 Bish. Mar. & Div. §§ 2, 3. This relation between them is indissoluble, except by death or a decree of court." The court reached its conclusion with some reluctance, but mainly because there were no words in the act declaring marriage not in conformity to the statute null and void. In Kilburn v. Kilburn, 89 Cal. 50, 26 Pac. 637 (26 Am. St. Rep. 447), marriage was defined as a contract "according to the form prescribed by the laws by which a man and woman capable of entering into such a contract mutually engage with each other to live their whole lives together in the state of union which ought to exist between a husband and his wife." Said the Supreme Court of the United States, in Maynard v. Hill, 125 U. S. 211, 8 Sup. Ct. 730, 31 L. Ed. 659: "It is a relation for life and the parties cannot terminate it at any shorter period by virtue of any contract they may make."

We might cite a multitude of cases to like effect. Mr. Schouler expresses the rule as universally held to be sound: "The word 'marriage' signifies, in the first instance, that act by which a man and woman unite for life, with the intent to discharge towards society and one another those duties which result from the relation of husband and wife." Schouler on Dom. Rel. § 12. The relation here shown, between Basil and Mary, falls far short of measuring up to the requirements indispensable to a marriage. A relation which neither party has the capacity to create, and which either party could terminate at will, or which could be terminated by their master, is not a marriage relation, and it is mockery to speak of it as such. Nevertheless, there was a universal custom of marriage among slaves, as among white people, "but this custom was a thing separate and distinct from the law which governed the marriages of the free." 1 Bish. on Mar. & Div. § 654 (New Commentaries).

The case of Johnson v. Johnson, 45 Mo 595 (decided in 1870), is cited by appellants. The action was for divorce by the wife. Both parties were negroes. Defendant was formerly a slave in Virginia, and whilst he lived there he married a negress, also a slave, by whom he had three children. His wife and children were sold to some person in Texas, and his master took him to Mexico, from whence he was brought to St. Louis, Mo. Later, in the year 1849, he married the plaintiff, then a free woman of color, and a year later he was emancipated by his master. Thereafter he continued to live and cohabit with plaintiff as his wife for about 13 years, when she left him, and commenced this proceeding for a divorce. It was pointed out in the opinion that by common consent, and universal usage existing among slaves, they were permitted to select their husbands and wives, and were known and recognized as husband and wife by their masters and the community in which they lived; "but whatever moral force there may have been in such connections, it is evident there was nothing binding or obligatory in law." Howard v. Howard, 51 N. C. 235, is cited, where it was said:

"Marriage is based upon contract; consequently the relation of man and wife cannot exist among slaves. It is excluded both on account of their incapacity to contract, and by the paramount right of ownership in them as property." So also it was said, as is further pointed out: "The duties and rights which are deemed essential to this contract are necessarily incompatible with the nature of slavery, as the one cannot be discharged, nor the other recognized, without doing violence to the rights of the owner. In other words, the subject of the contract must cease to be slaves before the incidents inseparable to the relation of marriage, in its proper sense, can attach." The court then, in the principal case, takes up the question whether slaves in a state of slavery could contract a marriage so as to be binding upon them after their emancipation. It was shown that the common law was changed in that state with reference to marriage, and the subject placed under municipal regulation. "But the authority of law was exclusively applicable to free persons, and did not reach those persons who were in a state of slavery when the marriage was contracted." In this view the court reverted to the common law and its analogous principles in the case before it. Said the court: "Though the slave could make no civil contract, and his marriage was absolutely void in legal contemplation, yet it is apparent there was the moral assent of the mind." Instancing the marriage of infants, and of insane persons, afterward held good when ratified or consummated, upon the removal of the disability, the court held that cohabitation and recognition of the relation after emancipation was an assent to and confirmation of the contract. The court said: "If, after the emancipation, there was no confirmation, by cohabitation or otherwise, it would be obvious there would be no grounds for holding the marriage as subsisting or binding." The court further said: "As the appellant, when he was emancipated, continued to live and cohabit with respondent, and constantly acknowledged her as his wife, the marriage should be recognized, and be deemed valid and binding. That in his earlier days he was previously married can make no difference. His first marriage in his then state of servitude had no legal existence; he was at liberty to repudiate it at pleasure; and by his continuing to live with respondent and acknowledging her as his lawful wife after he had obtained his civil rights, he disaffirmed his first marriage and ratified the second." This case seems to hold that had there been no subsequent ratification the court would have been forced to hold that there was no marriage.

The case of Lee v. Lee, 161 Mo. 52, 61 S. W. 630, is also cited by appellant. In that case, however, the legality of the slave marriage was not before the court; the question being as to the right of their children to inherit under the Revised Statutes of 1899. In the case of Roche v. Washington, 19 Ind. 53, 81 Am. Dec. 376, the controversy arose out of the relation of a white man and an Indian woman. The stipulated facts showed a marriage according to Indian custom, consummated by living and cohabiting together as husband and wife. Among other contentions it was urged that the marriage must be recognized under the law of nations; the Indian tribes being treated as states. Said the court: "What, then, constitutes the thing called a marriage? What is it in the eye of the jus gentium? It is the union of one man and one woman, 'so long as they shall both live,' to the exclusion of all others, by an obligation which, during that time, the parties cannot, of their own volition and act, dissolve, but which can be dissolved only by authority of the state. Nothing short of this is marriage. And nothing short of this is meant when it is said that marriages, valid where made, will be upheld in other states"—citing Story's Conflict of L. c. 5; Wheaton's L. of N. 137; Reynolds v. Reynolds, 3 Allen (Mass.) 605. In Estate of Hazzard, 13 Phila. (Pa.) 335, it was held, where a marriage had taken place between testator and wife, who were slaves in Virginia, at a time when such marriages were permitted, but not recognized as a valid contract by that state, that the children of testator born in slavery were illegitimate, and must be so considered in Pennsylvania; that they could not have inherited from each other. The court said that, the marriage not being recognized by the law of Virginia, "we are bound to respect that law, however repugnant to the present condition of society or the law, either of Virginia or our own state."

In volume 1, c. 21 (section 646 et seq.) Mr. Bishop considers: (1) Slave marriages; (2) the effect of emancipation on these marriages; (3) the status and rights of the children. He points out that there were two, if not three, reasons for the legal doctrine which denies validity to slave marriages: First, that slaves had in law no such freedom of will as is required to pass the matrimonial consent; secondly, that the duties of the husband and wife are incompatible with the duty which the slave owes to his master; third, sometimes urged, that the slave's acquisitions accrued to the latter. The author expresses some doubt as to the sufficiency of the first and third reasons, although the cases seem to be against him; but, as to the second, he says: "That the duties of husband and wife are incompatible with those of a slave is a proposition evidently sound in law, and upon it the doctrine which denies to slaves the power of matrimony may well rest." He then deduces the doctrine that since for reasons stated these customary slave marriages were valid as far as in the nature of the case they could be, "they are deemed to have been, not null in the widest sense of the word, but only null as compared with ordinary marriages, and were good in law for any purpose for which they could so be held, not inconsistent with the master's superior claims or the general policy of slavery. This rule would seldom permit validity to be assigned them in everyday litigation of the courts; hence judges would naturally speak of them as void." It is difficult to perceive any purpose for which the marriage was held good, except to distinguish the relation from that of fornication. When we consider the incompatibility of the duties of common marriage with those due from the slave to the master and the inconsistency of a true marriage relation with the master's superior claims, as well as the general policy of slavery, there remains no essential element that could give any sort of validity to such a union. It was tolerated concubinage, but not matrimonial cohabitation. What are some of the duties and reciprocal rights arising out of the sacred relation of husband and wife? Marriage necessarily supposes a home and mutual cohabitation; each has the right to the society of the other; and obligation rests upon both to live together—to adhere to each other so long as they shall live—the husband has the right to fix the domicile, and the wife's domicile merges in that of the husband, and wherever he goes she is bound to go; each spouse is entitled to the society and affection of the other, and the husband may recover damages from any person who would withhold her from him, and may sue for damages all persons who seek to entice her away; the husband is bound to support his wife, and she may not leave him so long as she is comfortably provided for. Then there are the wife's obligation to render family services; the right of the father to the custody of the children. Schouler's Dom. Rel. § 34 et seq. These and others that might be mentioned are recognized rights, duties, and responsibilities attending marriages among all civilized people, and yet not one of them attaches, as of right, to these so-called slave marriages.

Mr. Story, in his work upon the Conflict of Laws (8th Ed.) § 113, says: "The general principle certainly is, as we have seen, that between persons sui juris, marriage is to be decided by the law of the place where it is celebrated. Note, sections 80, 81. If valid there, it is valid everywhere. It has a legal ubiquity of obligation. If invalid there, it is invalid everywhere." This rule was quoted approvingly in Pearson v. Pearson, 51 Cal. 120; State v. Kennedy, 76 N. C. 251, 22 Am. Rep. 683; Estate of Hazzard, supra. Mr. Bishop says: "It is necessary that there should be one universal rule whereby to determine whether parties are to be regarded as married or not, and that the only practicable rule is to refer this question to the law of the country wherein they exchange the mutual consent to be husband and wife." Our Civil Code (section 1646) lays down the rule: "A contract is to be interpreted according to the law and usage of the place where it is to be performed, or, if it does not indicate a place of performance, according to the law or usage of the place where it is made."

Without prolonging a discussion, the present length of which is justified only by the importance of the questions and the apparent sincerity, zeal, and earnestness of appellants' counsel in urging their contentions, we find no great difficulty in reaching the conclusion that no marriage was proven ever to have taken place between Basil Campbell and Mary Stephens. When Basil and Mary "took up with each other," having their mistress' consent, they knew that the relation was but temporary; that they had no power to perpetuate it; that they could be permanently separated any moment, either by their own act or that of their mistress; that Mary had a slave husband then living, two or three of whose children were in the family. Basil left Missouri, not to return, in 1854, and though he may have then had in mind the thought of bringing Mary and the children to him some day, he took no steps to that end; he married in this state in 1866, while Mary was living; ceased all communication with Mary in 1854, who not long thereafter went to Texas and there died; he never communicated with her in any way after leaving Missouri, and indicated by his marriage here a renunciation of any relation with her—in short, the entire conduct of both parties is consistent with their acceptance of the fact that their former relation was not that of husband and wife. If it be insisted that a presumption of marriage arose from cohabitation and repute, this presumption is removed by proof of Basil's formal and lawful marriage in this state. Case v. Case, 17 Cal. 598. It was held in Jones v. Jones, 48 Md. 391, 30 Am. Rep. 466: The presumption of a marriage between A. and B., founded simply upon habit and repute, is overcome by proof of a subsequent actual marriage between A. and C. during the lifetime of B.

We do not find it necessary to dwell upon the effect which emancipation had upon these so-called slave marriages. Mr. Bishop states the doctrine as now settled: "That though during slavery the slave marriage is substantially void in law, if after emancipation the parties continue to cohabit matrimonially, it is thereby made good." And so, it was held in Johnson v. Johnson, supra, where a slave had two wives, and after emancipation he continued to live with the second one, and acknowledged her as his lawful wife, he not only ratified the second slave marriage, but disaffirmed the first.

It is said that a statute passed by the Missouri Legislature in 1865 validated the marriage and legitimatized the children. But no such statute is in evidence. The laws of another state must be proved like any other fact. Estate of Harrington, 140 Cal. 244, 73 Pac. 1000, 98 Am. St. Rep. 51; Estate of Richards, 133 Cal. 524, 65 Pac. 1034.

As already pointed out in the earlier part of this opinion, the legitimacy and right of appellants to inherit depend upon a marriage being proven; and, as we conclude that there was no marriage shown, the finding of the court is sustained.

The finding that neither of the petitioners is a son of deceased is immaterial for, in view of the other findings, neither of them is entitled to inherit, although both may be sons of deceased.

The order is affirmed.

In re CAMPBELL'S ESTATE. (Sac. 1,776.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 7, 1910.)

In Bank. On rehearing. Denied.

For opinion of the District Court of Appeal, see 108 Pac. 669.

PER CURIAM. Rehearing denied, no formal action having been taken thereon.

SHAW, J. I dissent from the denial of the application to vacate the judgment of the District Court of Appeal in this cause. I do not think that the decisions holding that a marriage contracted in good faith between slaves is not a marriage at all should be followed. And if it were conceded that such a marriage is technically null on the ground that the parties were slaves without capacity to contract, under the decisions of the courts of the slave states made during the existence of that condition, nevertheless the children born of such a marriage should be considered as legitimate under our statute. Section 1387 of the Civil Code declares that "The issue of all marriages null in law, or dissolved by divorce, are legitimate." There being no evidence in the record as to the law of Missouri where the marriage of the deceased with the mother of the petitioners took place, and where they were born of that marriage, it is to be assumed that the law of that state is the same as our own. If ever there was a law which should be broadly and liberally construed, it must be admitted that this law is of that class, when applied to a marriage which, in all respects except the capacity to enter into it, was as formally solemnized and as faithfully observed as that of free persons. I can conceive of no sound reason for refusing to apply this statute to the children of a marriage which is null only because the man and woman who entered into the relation were slaves. The question is of little future importance, but I cannot allow a doctrine which I deem so repugnant to humanity to receive even the silent sanction of acquiescence without a protest. I think it proper to add that the denial of a rehearing in this court does not necessarily mean an approval of the opinion of the district court. People v. Davis, 147 Cal. 350, 81 Pac. 718.

NATIONAL BANK OF THE PACIFIC v. WESTERN PAC. RY. CO. (S. F. 5,323.)

1. ATTACHMENT (§ 178*)—LIEN ACQUIRED.

The general rule is that a creditor who attaches property for his debt obtains a lien only on the title or interest the debtor has in the property at the time of the levy, and, if at that time all title and interest has passed from the debtor to a third person, the attaching creditor gets nothing by the levy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Attachment, Cent. Dig. §§ 528–534; Dec. Dig. § 178.*]

2. ATTACHMENT (§ 180*)—CORPORATE STOCK—LIEN—PRIOR UNREGISTERED TRANSFER.

A holder for value of corporate stock by a previous unregistered transfer in good faith prevails against an attaching creditor or execution purchaser with notice of the transfer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Attachment, Cent. Dig. § 571; Dec. Dig. § 180.*]

3. ATTACHMENT (§ 180*)—TRANSFER OF SHARES—"PERSONAL PROPERTY"—CORPORATE STOCK—LIEN.

Under Civ. Code, § 324, declaring that shares of stock in a corporation are "personal property" and may be transferred by indorsement and delivery of the certificate, and providing that such transfer is not valid, except as to the parties thereto, until the same is entered on the books of the corporation, etc., a bona fide transfer of corporate shares, though unregistered, takes precedence over a subsequent attachment or execution levied on the stock for the debt of the vendor, in whose name the shares stand on the corporation books.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 6, pp. 5346–5358; vol. 8, p. 7753.]

4. CORPORATIONS (§ 129*) — TRANSFER OF SHARES—REGISTRATION — RECITALS IN CERTIFICATE.

The right to sell, transfer, or pledge corporate stock, being given by statute, cannot be curtailed by a recital in the certificate that it is transferable only on the books of the company and on surrender of the certificate; such recital, while serving to give notice of the rights of the corporation under the statute, not changing the relative rights of the stockholder and third persons with respect to each other, nor making an unregistered transfer subject to an attachment lien.

On June 15, 1908, the plaintiff became the owner of 1,000 shares of the capital stock of the defendant corporation, previously belonging to J. Dalzell Brown. The certificate for these shares was duly indorsed by Brown and delivered to the plaintiff. The consideration paid for the stock by the plaintiff was $25,000. Brown was indebted to the defendant in a sum exceeding $50,000. On July 28, 1908, the defendant began an action against Brown to recover said debt, and caused a writ of attachment to be issued therein, which on July 29, 1908, was levied on Brown's interest in said stock. The action is still pending. At the time the attachment was levied, the transfer of tue stock from Brown to the plaintiff had not been entered on the books of the defendant corporation, as required by section 324, Civ. Code, and the defendant had no notice or knowledge of said transfer. This condition continued until March 11, 1909, when the plaintiff presented its certificate of stock to the defendant, and demanded that the transfer from Brown to plaintiff be duly entered upon the defendant's books. Defendant refused to comply with the demand, basing its refusal on the claim that, by virtue of the levy of said attachment, it had a lien upon said stock prior and paramount to the right and title of plaintiff thereto. This action was thereupon begun to compel the defendant to enter the transfer on its books and issue to the plaintiff a new certificate for the stock, free from the lien of the attachment. The judgment directed that this be done.

Section 324, Civ. Code, declares that shares of stock in a corporation are personal property, and that they may be transferred by indorsement and delivery of the certificate. It further provides that "such transfer is not valid, except as to the parties thereto, until the same is so entered upon the books of the corporation as to show the names of the parties by whom and to whom transferred, the number of the certificate, the number or designation of the shares, and the date of the transfer."

"The rights or shares which a defendant may have in the stock of any corporation" may be attached by leaving with the proper officer of the corporation a copy of the writ and a notice that the stock or interest of the defendant is attached in pursuance of the writ. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 541, 542, subd. 4. When such stock is sold on execution, the sheriff must give the purchaser a certificate of the sale. "Such certificate conveys to the purchaser all the right which the debtor had in such property on the day the execution or attachment was levied." Code Civ. Proc. § 699.

The general rule is that a creditor who attaches property for his debt obtains a lien only upon the title or interest which the debtor has in the property at the time of the levy, and that, if at that time all title and interest therein has passed from the debtor to a third person, the attaching creditor gets nothing by the levy. Tuohy v. Wingfield, 52 Cal. 319; Howell v. Foster, 65 Cal. 173, 3 Pac. 647; Ward v. Waterman, 85 Cal. 508, 24 Pac. 930. Where a statute declares a previous transfer of title void as to creditors of the transferror, there is an exception to this rule. The exception is, of course, founded upon the theory that as the law makes the transfer void as to the creditor, there is, as to him, no transfer at all, and the title to the property, for his benefit, remains in the debtor, notwithstanding a previous legal transfer good as against all other parties. Examples of this are found in the case of transfers tainted with actual fraud and transfers of personal property in good faith not followed by immediate delivery and actual and continued change of possession. The latter are conclusively presumed to be fraudulent. All such transfers are expressly declared to be void as to the creditors of the person making the transfer. Civ. Code, §§ 3439, 3440. Another example is that of a chattel mortgage not executed and recorded in the prescribed mode, which the statute declares to be absolutely void as against other creditors of the mortgagor, regardless of the good faith of the transaction. Civ. Code, § 2957. The contention of the defendant is that the provisions in section 324, declaring that a transfer of corporate stock is not valid, except as to the parties, until it is duly entered on the corporation books, is intended for the benefit of the creditors of stockholders, and, therefore, that its effect is to make an unregistered transfer absolutely void, and subject to any attachment or execution against the previous owner.

If this doctrine is correct, the logical result would be that knowledge of the attaching creditor or execution purchaser, at the time of the levy or execution sale, that there had been a prior unregistered transfer for value, would be an immaterial circumstance which would neither protect the holder of the stock, nor vitiate or affect the lien of the attachment, or the title conveyed by the execution sale. If the attempted transfer by indorsement and delivery of the certificate, without entry thereof on the books of the company, is wholly void as to the attaching creditor, the levy would create a lien superior to the title of the indorsee. It would operate as if there had been no previous transfer of the certificate by the record holder, and a registration after the levy, or a subsequent notice, would be of no avail to the indorsee. This rule prevails in the case of a levy on goods, after a sale which is void as against creditors, under section 3440, Civ. Code. Notice to the creditor, or to an intending purchaser, in such a case, that the third person holds the title, whether given before or after the levy, does not affect the attachment, nor invalidate the title of the execution purchaser. The defendant does not contend that this strict rule applies to corporate stock, but is willing to concede that a holder thereof for value, by a previous unregistered transfer in good faith, would prevail against an attaching creditor or execution purchaser with notice of the transfer. The decisions in this state on this point uniformly hold that the law is in accordance with this concession. Weston v. Bear River, etc., Co., 6 Cal. 425; People ex rel. Mead v. Elmore, 35 Cal. 653; Farmers' National Gold Bank v. Wilson, 58 Cal. 600; Blakeman v. Puget S. I. Co., 72 Cal. 321, 13 Pac. 872; Spreckels v. Nevada Bank, 113 Cal. 272, 45 Pac. 329, 33 L. R. A. 459, 54 Am. St. Rep. 348.

The defendant relies mainly on a prior decision in Weston v. Bear River, etc., Co., reported at 5 Cal. 186, 63 Am. Dec. 117, and on the decisions in Strout v. Natoma W. Co., 9 Cal. 78, and Naglee v. Pacific Wharf Co., 20 Cal. 529.

The Weston Case was an action by Weston to compel the defendant corporation to transfer certain shares of its stock to him on its books. On the first trial of the case the lower court held the unregistered transfers good, and gave judgment against the plaintiff. On appeal the Supreme Court reversed this judgment. 5 Cal. 186, 63 Am. Dec. 117. Afterwards the case was again tried, and judgment in the lower court was given for the plaintiff. Upon a second appeal this judgment was reversed. 6 Cal. 425. In the report of the first case the facts are not stated, and the plaintiff is described merely as an attaching creditor. It is not stated whether he was or was not a purchaser on execution sale, or whether he had or had not notice of the prior assignment of the certificates. It was apparently regarded as immaterial, and, as above stated, the logic of the decision would make it so. But there is no discussion or mention of the point. The court considered the effect of sections 12 and 144 of the act of April 22, 1850, upon stock transfers. St. 1850, p. 347. Section 12 is identical with section 324, Civ. Code. Section 144 declared that until there was a proper entry thereof on the corporation books, "no transfer of stock shall be valid for any purpose whatever, except to render the person to whom it shall be transferred liable for the debts of the company." Holding these provisions imperative and prohibitory, and not intended as a protection to the company alone, the court states the reason for giving the statute effect as a declaration that an unregistered transfer is void as to the creditors of the transferror, as follows: "The Legislature intended to protect the public from the frauds which might be perpetrated by a sale or hypothecation of the certificates passing the legal or equitable title, while the books of the company induced credit to the vendor, by holding him out to the world as the owner of such stock." (The italics are ours.)

In Strout v. Natoma Co., supra, the question was not involved, but the court quotes the above extract from the first Weston decision, saying: "The principle clearly established by this decision is, that the books of the corporation must constitute the test of the rights of third parties. They can look only to the books as their criterion." The citation in the opinion to "6 Cal. 425," as the place where the first Weston Case is reported seems to be a clerical error. The court does not mention the second decision, and was apparently unaware of the fact that it had declared a contrary doctrine. In Naglee v. Pacific Wharf Co., supra, the stock was attached after the transfer from Stebbins to Naglee. Before the execution sale in the attachment suit against Stebbins, Naglee applied to the company to have his transfer entered on its books. The company refused to do so, assigning the attachment as the cause. Shortly afterwards the stock was sold for its market value, on the execution, to a purchaser without notice of the transfer. Naglee sued to compel a transfer to him. The judgment denying this relief was affirmed on the authority of the Weston Cases. As the stock had been sold to an innocent purchaser, it is plain that the soundness of the decision in the first case, to the effect that a mere levy created a lien superior to an unregistered transfer, was not essential to the decision. The court says, however, that the second decision in the Weston Case was not intended to overrule or qualify the first. From this it will be seen that the doctrine of the first Weston decision was not involved in either the Strout Case or the Naglee Case, and hence the expressions in the opinions in these two cases to the effect that that doctrine is settled in this state, are not entitled to great weight, especially in the face of prior and subsequent decisions declaring the contrary rule to be settled.

Upon the second appeal in the Weston Case (6 Cal. 425) it was shown that before the action was begun, Weston, the attaching creditor, had purchased the stock at the sheriff's sale in his attachment suit against Lovell, and that before purchasing it he had notice of the prior unregistered transfers and pledges thereof. Upon this the court says: "A party who purchases at sheriff's sale, stocks of an incorporation, knowing that the certificates of such stock have been previously hypothecated, is chargeable with notice of such fact, and takes subject to the claim of the pledgee. Neither the incorporation law of 1850, or of 1853 (St. 1853, c. 65), was intended to cover a case of this kind, but applied only to transfers and purchases in good faith without notice. In the case of Weston v. Bear River Water & Mining Company, 5 Cal. 186, 63 Am. Dec. 117, this point was not presented to the consideration of the court, and the case went off on a construction of the statute only." The question whether the lien of the levy was, of itself, superior to the right of a holder of the certificate, whose transfer was not entered on the books, was necessary to this decision, for if such lien was superior it would have inured to the benefit of a purchaser even if he had notice, if the case is to be treated as a fraudulent transfer. The ruling that it was so far inferior that a subsequent notice before execution sale would destroy the lien, is directly contrary to the principle upon which the first Weston decision was based, and practically overrules it.

The other decisions heretofore cited contain repeated declarations in approval of the doctrine of the second Weston Case. In People v. Elmore, supra, after referring to the Weston and Naglee decisions, the court says that it was held in those cases that unregistered transfers of stock "are nevertheless valid as against all the world, except subsequent purchasers in good faith, without notice." This was said to be binding under the rule of stare decisis, if for no other reason. Parrott v. Byers, 40 Cal. 614, at page 625, quotes this passage from the Elmore Case, designating it as the principle established in this state. This was reiterated in Winter v. Belmont Co., 53 Cal. 431, Farmers', etc., Bank v. Wilson, supra, Blakeman v. Puget S. I. Co., supra, Spreckels v. Nevada Bank, supra, and in West Coast, etc., Co. v. Wulff, 133 Cal. 315, 65 Pac. 622, 85 Am. St. Rep. 171. In view of these repeated affirmations of the doctrine, we again declare, what has been said so often, that the principle of stare decisis applies, and that it is now too late to change the rule, even if we were not satisfied with it. For many years it has been generally understood that in this state shares of stock in a domestic corporation, thus transferred or pledged, were safe as against a mere levy of an attachment or execution against the person in whose name they stand on the corporation books, and the commercial business of the people has been carried on upon that basis. A rule thus settled and relied on should not be disturbed.

Counsel for defendant contend that the precise question here presented was not involved in any of the cases, except the first Weston Case, and that the declarations in the subsequent decisions, contrary to that case, should be disregarded as obiter dicta. Even if this were so, since the dicta have been accepted and acted upon for so many years as the established law, they should be adhered to, if possible. But, as we have shown, this rule cannot be sustained without overthrowing the principle upon which the first Weston Case rests, and every decision holding that a purchaser for value at an execution sale, with notice of a prior unrecorded transfer, obtains no title against the indorsee and holder of the certificate, in effect, overrules that case. In Farmers', etc., Bank v. Wilson, the effect of a mere levy was involved, and the court very properly stated the rule, so that the parties would understand that a future execution purchaser with notice would take only the pledgee's right of redemption. That case is direct authority for the proposition.

It may be remarked further that the reason given, as above stated, in the first Weston Case, for the rule there adopted had no foundation in the law then in force, and has none under the present law. It was founded on the notion that "the stock and transfer book" of a corporation is made a public record, accessible to all persons, intended to give notice to everybody of the status and ownership of the title to the stock, and that it is therefore available to the creditors of the stockholders and to persons dealing with them with respect to the stock. This is the law of some of the states where the rule contended for by the defendant prevails, but it is not the law of this state. Civ. Code, § 378. It was not the law with respect to mining corporations at the time the Weston Cases were decided. St. 1850, p. 368, § 144; St. 1853, p. 90, § 18. The creditors of the individual stockholders have no such right of access, and the books could not constitute notice to them. Nor could these books hold any person out to the world as the owner of any stock, since the world could not have access thereto. Stockholders and creditors of the corporation are the only persons who have the right to inspect the books. Civ. Code, § 378.

The authorities of other states having similar statutes differ somewhat in their interpretation thereof. The following cases hold that the levy of an attachment or execution is not, of itself, paramount to the right of a holder of the certificate under a prior unregistered transfer from the attachment or execution debtor: Commercial Bank v. Kortright, 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 348, 34 Am. Dec. 317; Lund v. Wheaton, 50 Minn. 36, 52 N. W. 268, 36 Am. St. Rep. 623; Thurber v. Crump, 86 Ky. 408, 418, 6 S. W. 145; Mapleton Bank v. Standrod, 8 Idaho, 740, 71 Pac. 119, 67 L. R. A. 656; Port Townsend N. B. v. Port Townsend, etc., Co., 6 Wash. 597, 34 Pac. 155; Van Cise v. Merchants' N. B., 4 Dak. 485, 33 N. W. 897; Newberry v. Detroit, etc., Co. 17 Mich. 157 (per Cooley, J.); Batesville T. Co. v. Meyer-Schmidt, etc., Co., 68 Ark. 115, 56 S. W. 784; Masury v. Farmers' N. B., 93 Fed. 603, 35 C. C. A. 476 (construing statute of Arkansas). The contrary construction is adopted in Lyndonville N. B. v. Folsom, 7 N. M. 611, 38 Pac. 253; Sabin v. Bank, 21 Vt. 353, and Application of Murphy, 51 Wis. 519, 8 N. W. 419; also in Iowa, where the statute is the same as our section 234, but the stock book is open to the public (Ft. Madison Co. v. Bank, 71 Iowa, 270, 32 N. W. 336, 60 Am. Rep. 789; Ottumwa S. Co. v. Stodghill, 103 Iowa, 437, 72 N. W. 669), and in Colorado, where the statute declares that the transfer "shall not be valid for any purpose whatever," until it is entered on the books (First Nat. Bank v. Hastings, 7 Colo. App. 129, 42 Pac. 691).

In several of the states, under statutes which do not declare such transfers invalid between the parties, but merely declare that it is transferable only on the books of the corporation, it is held that the mode must be followed in order to pass the title, and that a levy will prevail over a transfer not properly made. In other states the opposite rule is followed. We do not consider it necessary to discuss these cases. The condition of the law is well stated in 2 Cook on Corporations, at the end of section 490, as follows: "It may be added, in regard to this whole subject, that the decisions and statutes of the various states show clearly that public policy and the legitimate demands of trade have gradually caused the courts and Legislatures of the various states to establish a rule that a sale or pledge of certificates of stock has precedence over a subsequent attachment levied on that stock for the debt of the vendor or pledgor, and that the failure of the pledgee or purchaser to obtain a registry on the corporation books is not fatal to his interest in the stock." See note 1 to section 488 of Cook for list of states which have changed their statutes to conform to this rule, where the courts had previously adopted the opposite doctrine.

The certificate here in question recited that it was transferable only on the books of the company and on surrender of the certificate. This did not affect the transfer. The right to sell, transfer, or pledge corporation stock is given by statute and it cannot be curtailed by a recital in the certificate. The recital served to give notice of the rights of the corporation under the statute, with respect to transfers, but it did not change the relative rights of the stockholder and third persons, with respect to each other, nor make the unregistered transfer subject to the attachment lien.

The judgment is affirmed.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Monroe, Judge.

Action by Edwin R. Fox against R. M. Campbell. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Lucius M. Fall and Webster Davis, for appellant. H. H. Appel, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. This action was brought to determine conflicting claims to a strip of land 10 feet wide and 165 feet long, alleged by plaintiff to be a portion of his lot 10, and by defendant to be a portion of his lot 9, in block V of the Mott tract, city of Los Angeles.

Plaintiff and defendant both derive title from a common source, and their deeds convey to them their respective lots according to the map of the Mott tract found in Book 14, p. 7, of the Miscellaneous Records of the county. This map was introduced in evidence, from which it appears that lot 9 is situated at the southwesterly corner of block V, and is bounded upon the west by Grasshopper street, now Figueroa street, and on the south by First street; that the lot has a depth of 165 feet on First street, and a frontage of 60 feet on Grasshopper street. Adjacent to this lot 9 and to the north thereof is lot 10, with the same depth and the same frontage upon Grasshopper street. Admittedly plaintiff owns lot 10. Admittedly defendant owns lot 9. The south line of First street and the intersecting corner of this south line of First street with Figueroa street are established upon the ground, and undisputed. Measuring from this corner northerly along the easterly line of Figueroa street plaintiff contends that the southerly boundary line of his lot is 120 feet from that point, while defendant contends that this boundary line between lots 9 and 10 is 128 feet from the southern corner of First and Grasshopper streets. Herein lies the sole contention between the parties. The map of the Mott tract, as has been said, is the recorded plat to which the deeds of both of these parties make reference. That map shows First street to be 68 feet wide running from Grasshopper street easterly to Hope street. Moreover, by the deeds of the predecessors in interest of both these parties, First street is described as being 68 feet wide, and the witness Ward, a clerk in the city engineer's office, testifies that the city found that First street as far as Hope was 60 feet wide and "from Hope street to Figueroa it was 68 feet wide according to the map recorded in Book 14, at page 7, of Miscellaneous Records, and west of Figueroa it was 68 feet wide." Here is abundant evidence that First street is 68 feet wide. Moreover, it is evidence of the strongest character against appellant's contention, since it is evidence of the very map by reference to which his deed to lot 9 is described. The southerly corner of First and Figueroa streets being established on the ground, and it being further established that First street is 68 feet wide, it follows of necessity that the southerly line of plaintiff's lot 10 begins 128 feet from the southerly line of First street. So the court found and decreed, upon evidence so complete and so satisfactory that the shufflings and evasions found in plaintiff's testimony cannot be said to raise even a conflict against it.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; N. H. Conklin, Judge.

In the matter of the dissolution of the College Hill Land Association of the City of San Diego. From a judgment of dissolution, Catherine B. Chase and another appeal. Affirmed.

J. H. McCulloch and C. N. Andrews, for appellants. Sam Ferry Smith, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. The College Hill Land Association of the City of San Diego was a private corporation, organized for profit. It had a capital stock of $2,000,000, divided into 20,000 shares of the par value of $100 each. Eleven thousand and seven hundred and seventy of these shares were issued and outstanding. At a special meeting of the stockholders called for that purpose on February 1, 1908, at which there were present and represented 10,667 shares of the capital stock, it was unanimously decided to dissolve the corporation and distribute its assets. In conformity with this resolution the directors of the corporation, on the 24th day of February, 1908, filed a petition in due form in the superior court of the county of San Diego, seeking a decree of dissolution. The court set the hearing for Monday, the 6th day of April, and due notice thereof was given, as required by law. On the 7th day of April, Catherine B. Chase and C. W. Chase, appellants herein, claiming to be stockholders of the corporation and owners of about 340 shares of the stock, filed objections to the dissolution, and alleged grave corporate mismanagement on the part of the directors and others connected with the corporation. The hearing of the petition and the objections thereto were set for the 20th day of April, 1908. Upon that day the objectors asked for a continuance of 30 days in which to take their own depositions in New York. This request was denied by the court. The matter proceeded to a hearing, and, after evidence taken, a judgment of dissolution was rendered on that date. The court found that the objectors, Catherine B. Chase and C. W. Chase, were not stockholders of the corporation, and also found against them upon all other material allegations. The court further found that all and singular the allegations and statements in the application for dissolution were true. The judgment was rendered upon April 20, 1908, and entered April 22, 1908. The appeal was taken October 10, 1908, more than 60 days after entry of judgment. It does not permit a review of the evidence. Code Civ. Proc. § 939; Ryland v. Heney, 130 Cal. 426, 62 Pac. 616; Sather Banking Co. v. Briggs

Co., 138 Cal. 724, 72 Pac. 352; Thomas v. N. W. Mutual Life Ins. Co., 142 Cal. 79, 75 Pac. 665. The same reason forbids the consideration of other findings of fact objected to by appellants.

The objection to want of jurisdiction appearing upon the face of the petition is based upon appellants' contention that, at the time when they became stockholders, the law required a two-thirds vote of all the stockholders (Code Civ. Proc. § 1228), although in 1907 the law was amended to read that dissolution might be had upon a vote "of the holders of two-thirds of the subscribed capital stock." St. 1907, c. 254. The contention of appellants is that the law as it stood at the time when they purchased their stock conferred upon them a legal right of which they could not be deprived by any subsequent legislative enactment. There is no force in this contention. Admittedly the petition for dissolution was in the form prescribed by section 1228 as amended in 1907. Section 1, art. 12, of our Constitution provides that "all laws now in force in this state concerning corporations, and all laws that may be hereafter passed pursuant to this section may be altered from time to time or repealed." And, indeed, it is well settled that this reserve power to alter or repeal the charter of a corporation becomes a part of the contract of every stockholder of the corporation organized thereunder. Venner Co. v. U. S. Steel Corp. (C. C.) 116 Fed. 1012; Market St. Ry. Co. v. Hellman, 109 Cal. 571, 42 Pac. 225; McGowan v. McDonald, 111 Cal. 57, 43 Pac. 418, 52 Am. St. Rep. 149; Thompson on Corporations (2d Ed.) §§ 402, 408.

The court did not abuse its discretion in refusing the motion for continuance. The application for a continuance was made upon the ground that it was necessary to take the depositions of the objectors to prove that they were the parties to whom certificates of stock set forth in the objections filed were issued by the company; that they had paid all the assessments upon the stock upon which they ever had or received any notice, or of which they had any knowledge, and that their post office address and their whereabouts have been at all times well known to the secretary and other officers of the corporation. It was shown at the hearing that these objectors were the persons to whom the certificates of stock had been issued. It was also shown that the stock had long since been sold for delinquent and unpaid assessments. The affidavit in support of the motion for a continuance does not state facts which would be a defense upon the merits. It asserts merely that the objectors paid all the assessments of which they had any knowledge, but it is nowhere asserted that they had paid all the assessments levied, or that the assessment under which their stock was sold was illegal or void. It was further made to appear that the sale of their stock had been made many years ago, with ample time accorded to these appellants to have instituted a proper proceeding to set aside the sale upon the ground of its invalidity, if any such invalidity existed. Their failure so to have done exhibits a lack of diligence in itself, justifying the court in refusing the continuance.

The judgment appealed from is therefore affirmed.

CARY et al. v. LOS ANGELES RY. CO.

(L. A. 2,417.)

1. Carriers (§ 303*)—Injury to Passenger—Starting Car—Signal by Another Passenger.

There was no negligence of a street car company in the starting of a car, throwing a passenger who was alighting, the starting signal, two bells, having been given, without authority, by another passenger, neither the motorman nor conductor having any reason to believe it would be so given, the motorman believing it was given by the conductor, the conductor instantly on hearing the signal calling to the motorman not to start, and the motorman then endeavoring to prevent the starting; the company, through its motorman and conductor, not being required to anticipate and take precautions against such an unauthorized signal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 303.*]

2. Carriers (§ 315*)—Injury to Passenger—Negligence—Pleading and Proof.

The only allegation of negligence in an action for injury to a passenger on a street car being that, while he was alighting, the car was negligently started with a jerk, the fact that the car was crowded, and passengers were standing in the aisle, cannot be considered as a matter of negligence, but only as a part of the conditions existing at the time.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 315.*]

3. Negligence (§ 111*)—Pleading.

While negligence may be charged in general terms, the particular act relied on as negligence must be specified.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. §§ 182–184; Dec. Dig. § 111.*]

4. Carriers (§ 305*)—Injury to Passenger—Actionable Negligence.

While violation of Civ. Code, §§ 2102, 2184, 2185, providing that a carrier of passengers must not overcrowd or overload his vehicle, must provide a sufficient number of vehicles to accommodate all passengers who can be reasonably expected to require carriage at the time, and must provide every passenger with a seat, will establish negligence, it will not authorize recovery for injury to a passenger, while alighting, from being thrown by the starting of the car, on the unauthorized signal of another passenger; it not being shown to have any direct and causal connection with the injury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 305.*]

5. Carriers (§ 321*)—Duty of Conductor—Instructions.

The collection of fares being part of the duty of the conductor of a street car, though it is equally his duty to look after the safety of his passengers, it is not error to instruct that he was in the performance of his duty while collecting fares; it appearing that he was collecting fares when the car stopped, that before giving his starting signal he would have gone to the platform to see whether all passengers so desiring had alighted, and that before he had done so a starting signal was given by a passenger, resulting in injury to another passenger, who was alighting.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Monroe, Judge.

Action by Sarah P. Cary and another against the Los Angeles Railway Company. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Hannon & McCormick, for appellants. Gibson, Trask, Dunn & Crutcher, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. This action was instituted by plaintiffs to recover damages alleged to have been sustained by plaintiff Sarah P. Cary while debarking from one of defendant's cars. The negligence, and the only negligence charged against defendant is found in the following allegation: "And as said Sarah P. Cary was in the act of leaving said electric car, while the same remained stopped, and while in the act of stepping off of said car, the said defendant, through its agents and servants, negligently and carelessly and wantonly caused the said car to start forward with a sudden jerk, and with great force, thereby throwing said Sarah P. Cary violently from said electric car and onto the ground, whereby the said plaintiff sustained serious bodily injuries." The answer denied negligence. The case was tried upon the issue of defendant's negligence, and on that issue the jury returned a general verdict in favor of the defendant, together with a special verdict, by which latter they found that two bells were a signal used by the conductor to the motorman to start the car, and that it was not the duty of the motorman, under the rules of the company, nor was it a custom of the motormen, upon receiving the signal of two bells, to ascertain whether passengers were alighting from the rear steps. That the car stopped at a street for the purpose of allowing plaintiff to alight therefrom. That the conductor was at that time at the front of the car collecting fares. That the signal of two bells was given by some passenger standing at the rear of the car. That the motorman supposed it was given by the conductor, and at once started the car. That instantly upon hearing the two bells the conductor cried out, warning the motorman not to start, but to stop his car. The motorman thereupon endeavored to prevent the starting of the car. That the car moved only from two to six feet. That neither the conductor nor the motorman had any reason to believe that any signal, by bell or otherwise, would be given by any other person than the conductor. That the proximate cause of the injury to plaintiff arose from the unauthorized act of the passenger in giving the signal to the motorman to start the car.

The evidence abundantly supported the special verdict and findings of fact above set forth. The only question upon the verdict is whether or not the facts themselves constitute a defense. Appellants present no authorities against the proposition that the facts found by the jury show an absence of negligence on the part of the defendant, and establish that the accident occurred by the unwarranted intervention of an unauthorized stranger, against whose unexpected act the company was not bound to take precautions. That such is the law governing the conduct of defendants in such cases is abundantly settled. Thus in Krone v. Southwest Mo. E. R. Co., 97 Mo. App. 609, 71 S. W. 712, the trial court refused to give an instruction which declared: "The court instructs the jury that, if they believe from the evidence that the conductor stopped the car at Elizabeth street to let Mrs. Kirksey and plaintiff get off said car, and that Mrs. Kirksey got off, and, before plaintiff could get off, some one, not an employé of the defendant, without the knowledge or authority of the conductor, rang the bell, and gave the motorman the signal to start, and in pursuance of said signal the motorman started the car, and plaintiff fell off, then there was no negligence on the part of defendant, and plaintiff cannot recover in this case, and their finding will be for defendant." The Supreme Court said: "We cannot see upon what theory the court refused said instruction, for if it was true that some person other than the conductor, and not in defendant's employ, gave the signal which started the car while plaintiff was attempting to get off, causing her fall and injury, it was not the result of any negligence on the part of defendant, but that of a careless or mischievous stranger, over whom the defendant had no control." To the same effect are McDonough v. Third Ave. R. Co., 95 App. Div. 311, 88 N. Y. Supp. 609; Fanshaw v. Norfolk & Portsmouth Tr. Co. (Va.) 61 S. E. 790; O'Neil v. Lynn & B. R. Co., 180 Mass. 576, 62 N. E. 983; Ellinger v. Philadelphia R. Co., 153 Pa. 213, 25 Atl. 1132, 34 Am. St. Rep. 697; Gulf,

C. & S. R. Co. v. Phillips, 32 Tex. Civ. App. 238, 74 S. W. 793.

It was admitted that at the time of the accident the car was crowded, and that passengers were standing in the aisle. Appellants make complaint of the court's rulings and instructions upon this point, which were to the effect that the fact that the car was crowded with passengers would not entitle the plaintiffs to recover, and could not be considered by the jury, except as a part of the conditions existing at the time. The court's rulings and instructions in this regard were correct. The crowded state of the car was permitted to be shown as one of the conditions at the time of the accident. No negligence was alleged by plaintiffs because of the crowded condition of the car, and no causal connection between the crowded condition of the car and the accident was in any way shown. While it is permissible to charge negligence in general terms, it is nevertheless necessary to specify the particular act or acts alleged to have been negligently done. Stevenson v. S. P. Co., 102 Cal. 144, 34 Pac. 618, 36 Pac. 407; Smith v. Buttner, 90 Cal. 95, 27 Pac. 29. If appellants had desired to predicate negligence upon the crowded condition of the car they should have done so by appropriate allegation. But in this case, if they had done so, it is apparent that no different result would have been reached, since the overcrowded condition of the car was in no way the proximate cause of the accident, and it is but a matter of speculation as to whether or not the conductor, at the time actually engaged in taking up fares, would have seen the unauthorized act of the passenger who rang the starting bell if the car had not been crowded. A violation of the provisions of the Civil Code (Civ. Code, §§ 2102, 2184, 2185) will establish negligence, and where injury results from such negligence a recovery may be had. But in every case the particular negligence to avail plaintiff must have some direct and causal connection with the injury complained of. For example, it is negligence if the whistle of a locomotive engine is not sounded and its bell rung at crossings, but if the train were derailed by a misplaced switch, an injured passenger could not base his recovery upon the showing that somewhere along the journey the whistle had not been blown or the bell sounded when these things should have been done. In such a case the employer will not be liable merely because his act constituted a violation of law, but only if it proximately caused the injury complained of. So, although the violation of such a statute is negligence per se, there must be a causal connection between the unlawful act and the injury, which must be shown in the pleading and by the proof, or the action fails. Nickey v. Steuder, 164 Ind. 189, 73 N. E. 117; Hendricks v. Cooleemee Cotton Mills, 138 N. C. 169, 50 S. E. 561; McVay v. Brooklyn, etc., R. Co., 113 App. Div. 724, 99 N. Y. Supp. 266; Snyder v. Colorado Springs R. Co., 36 Colo. 288, 85 Pac. 686.

It was not error for the court to state, as it did, that the conductor was doing his duty, or was in the performance of his duty, while collecting fares. Unquestionably, and as matter of law, the collection of fares and the issuance of transfers is a part of the duty of the conductor of a street car. It is, of course, equally his duty to look after the safety of his passengers while on the car and embarking and debarking therefrom. In this case it appears that the conductor was actually engaged in taking fares at the time the car stopped, and before giving his starting signal would have proceeded to the platform to see whether all intending passengers had left the car. But before he had done so the starting signal was given.

Answers to certain special questions which the court itself directed were upon matters not in dispute and established without contradiction. In this there was no invasion of the province of the jury. Baumann v. C. Reiss Coal Co., 118 Wis. 330, 95 N. W. 139.

The court did not err in giving its instruction 4. The instruction, in hypothetical form, stated the uncontradicted facts of the accident, saying that: "If some passenger upon the rear of defendant's car, over whom the defendant had no control, gave the signal to start said car, and that the motorman in charge thereof responded to said signal and started his car," etc. It is argued against the instruction that it eliminates from the consideration of the jury the question as to whether the defendant, through its motorman and conductor, should have anticipated the unauthorized giving of the signal. But there is no word of testimony in support of this. The law is to the contrary of appellants' contention. "A carrier of passengers is not obliged to proceed to provide against casualties which have not been known to occur before, and which may not reasonably be anticipated. * * * That which never happened before, and which in its character is such as not naturally to occur to prudent men to guard against its happening at all, cannot, when in the course of years it does happen, furnish good ground for a charge of negligence in not foreseeing its happening and guarding against that remote contingency." Holt v. S. W. Mo. E. R. Co., 84 Mo. App. 443. Moreover, the jury specifically found that the motorman believed that the starting signal was given by the conductor.

No other points call for special attention.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

FRANKISH v. GOODRICH et al. (L. A. 2,308.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 15, 1910.)

1. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS (§ 32*)—BOUNDARIES—INCLUSION IN CITY.

Under Pol. Code, § 1576, providing that each city or incorporated town, unless subdivided by the legislative authority thereof, shall constitute a separate school district, outside territory belonging to a school district becomes, on inclusion within the boundaries of a city, part of the latter's school district.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Schools and School Districts, Cent. Dig. § 52; Dec. Dig. § 32.*]

2. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS (§ 42*)—HIGH SCHOOL DISTRICT—BOUNDARIES—INCLUSION WITHIN CORPORATE LIMITS.

Under Pol. Code, § 1670 (prior to its repeal in 1909), and other related sections, a high school district, so far as its territorial limits are concerned, is not a distinct entity from the school district, and, when the school district loses part of its territory by the inclusion thereof within the corporate limits of a city, the high school district also loses the same part of its territory.

3. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS (§ 102*)—HIGH SCHOOL DISTRICTS—TAXATION.

Territory of a school district, which, by inclusion within city limits, becomes part of a new high school district, is taxable in the latter district only.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Frank F. Oster, Judge.

Action by Charles Frankish against J. B. Goodrich and others. From the judgment, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Byron Waters, for appellants. Goodcell & Goodcell, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. This is in form an action by a resident taxpayer of the Ontario high school district, on behalf of himself and all other residents and taxpayers of the district, to restrain the school trustees of the Ontario school district and the trustees of the Upland school district, and the county superintendent of schools of the county, from acting as a union high school board of trustees, and from exercising or attempting to exercise any authority or control over the high school or property or the funds of the Ontario high school district; in effect, the action seeks to have defined the boundaries and status of the Ontario high school district, concerning which matters doubt has arisen, growing out of the following state of facts: The Ontario school district came into existence in 1901, and its territory comprised all of the lands of the city of Ontario, a municipal corporation of the sixth class, and certain additional outside territory adjacent to the city. The inhabitants of the Ontario school district, as thus constituted, voted to establish, and in due course did establish and maintain, a high school therein, and thus the Ontario high school district, embracing the same territory as the Ontario school district, came into and continued in existence. In 1906 the city of Upland was incorporated as a city of the sixth class. Its boundaries included a portion of the territory adjacent to the city of Ontario, which territory had formerly been a part of the Ontario school district. They likewise embraced territory which had belonged to still a third school district and which had never been a part of the Ontario district. By virtue of the incorporation of the city of Upland, all of the territory within its corporate boundaries became, by operation of law, a school district known to the law as the "Upland school district." The position of appellants is that, by the annexation to the Upland school district of the outlying territory formerly a part of the territory of the Ontario school district and Ontario high school district, the territory so annexed did not cease to be a part of the territory of the Ontario high school district, but did at once become also a part of the Upland school district; that thus, by operation of law, there was created a union high school district, composed of the Upland School district and the Ontario school district, and the defendants were therefore justified in undertaking, as they did, to control the funds and property of the Ontario high school district while acting as the trustees of the Ontario-Upland Union high school district.

It is unquestioned that the outside territory formerly belonging to the Ontario school district, upon its inclusion within the boundaries of the city of Upland, became a part of the Upland school district. Pol. Code, § 1576; Hughes v. Ewing, 93 Cal. 414, 28 Pac. 1067; Bay View School District v. Linscott, 99 Cal. 26, 33 Pac. 781; Kramm v. Bogue, 127 Cal. 122, 59 Pac. 394. But while it is admitted that the outside territory formerly belonging to the Ontario school district ceased to be a part of that school district by its inclusion within the boundaries of the Upland school district and became a part of the Upland school district, nevertheless it is insisted that this territory is not severed from the Ontario high school district, as distinguished from the Ontario school district; that it still remains a part of the Ontario high school district, subject to its burdens and entitled to its rights; and that by virtue of this, through some method not defined in appellants' brief, it is declared that "by operation of law there was thus created the Union high school district composed of Upland school district and Ontario school district."

But a reading of section 1670 of the Political Code and of the other sections bearing upon the question makes it manifest that a high school district, so far as its territorial limits are concerned, is not a distinct entity from the school district. When a school district has resolved to erect and maintain a high school, and has taken proper steps to that end, a so-called "high school district" is created. But it comprises the territory of the school district, its boundaries are the boundaries of the school district, and those boundaries are enlarged or contracted, increased or diminished, as are the boundaries of the school district. As, admittedly, the Ontario school district lost a part of its territory by the inclusion of that territory within the corporate limits of the city of Upland, so, necessarily, the Ontario high school district also lost the same part of its territory. But by that loss neither the existence nor the identity of the Ontario school district nor of the Ontario high school district was affected. It should be here said that we are not unmindful of the fact that section 1670 of the Political Code has been repealed. It is discussed as being in force, because it was in force at the time of these proceedings, and was repealed in 1909 (St. 1909, c. 311, § 3); its place being taken by the similar provisions of section 1720 et seq. of the Political Code. For obvious reasons, a high school district has its own distinct funds, property and government. Chico High School Board v. Board of Supervisors, 118 Cal. 116, 50 Pac. 275; Brown v. City of Visalia, 141 Cal. 372, 74 Pac. 1042. The high school is to be maintained at the expense of the school district, and, if the high school is discontinued, the high school property is to be sold and the proceeds, together with the high school funds on hand, go to the school district. Section 1670, subdivision 21, of the Political Code, declares that a school district cannot lie partly within a high school district of a joint union high school district and partly without; while section 1733 of the Political Code, as it now reads (Code 1910), makes the declaration the more explicit, and in terms provides that "in all cases where the boundaries of a school district comprised within any high school district shall be changed so as to exclude territory therefrom, such excluded territory shall, except as hereinafter provided, be excluded from the high school district." This is not a new declaration of law, but a declaration of the law as it has stood, put in precise words, so as to remove all doubt.

The contention that the portion of the Ontario school district now belonging to the Upland school district is still subject to taxation for the support of the Ontario high school district, and that therefore it must continue to be a part of the Ontario high school district, is without foundation in law. The territory is no longer subject to taxation in the Ontario high school district, but in the Upland school district alone. Hughes v. Ewing, supra; Bates v. Gregory, 89 Cal. 387, 26 Pac. 891.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 144*)—TITLE OF VENDOR—AFTER-ACQUIRED TITLE.

Though plaintiff did not have title to property when she agreed to convey it, if she procured the execution of a valid deed from the then owner and tendered it as vendor to the purchaser within the required time, she could sue for damages for breach of agreement to purchase on the latter's refusal to accept the deed and recover damages as vendor under Civ. Code, § 3307, making the detriment caused by breach of agreement to purchase realty any excess of the amount which would have been due the seller under the contract over the value of the property to him.

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 143*) — PERFORMANCE OF CONTRACT — TENDER—WAIVER OF IRREGULARITIES.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frederick W. Houser, Judge.

Action by Mary Backman and others against William Park and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed and remanded.

F. A. Stephenson, for appellants. W. R. Hervey, Newman Jones, and W. W. Butler, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. This action is by the vendor to recover damages for defendant's breach of agreement to purchase certain real property situate in the city of Redondo Beach. By stipulation, many of the important facts were agreed upon. At the time of the execution of the contract the title to the property stood in the name of Kate Minerva Backman Palmer, a daughter of Mary Backman, plaintiff, and there was nothing of record to disclose that plaintiff had any title to or interest in the property. But, as provided by, and in accordance with, the terms of the agreement, plaintiff immediately procured the execution of a grant, bargain, and sale deed, executed by Kate Minerva Backman Palmer and her husband, and procured from the Title Insurance & Trust Company of Los Angeles an unlimited certificate of title. On the 7th day of August, within the time limited by the contract, plaintiff tendered to the defendants the deed to the property so executed by Kate Minerva Backman Palmer and her husband, and again, on the 16th day of August, made a like tender, offering also the sum of $20 to cover taxes for the fiscal years of 1905 and 1906, the amount of which taxes had not then been determined. The defendants refused to accept the conveyance or to execute any note or mortgage as contemplated by their agreement. It is not questioned here by defendants that the agreement to purchase was in form and substance sufficient to charge them. No objection was made by them to the certificate of title or to the deed.

The court gave judgment for defendants upon the contention, on which they here rest, that as it appears that plaintiff Mary Backman, at the time of entering into the contract with defendants, did not have any title or interest in or to the property which she agreed to convey, she was not a vendor under section 3307 of the Civil Code. They further insist that their position finds abundant support in Easton v. Montgomery, 90 Cal. 307, 27 Pac. 280, 25 Am. St. Rep. 123, and Gray v. Smith, 83 Fed. 828, 28 C. C. A. 168. As to the cases which appellants cite in support of their contention that the contract was valid, and that plaintiff Mary Backman, under that contract, stood in law as a vendor, they answer that the cases are to be read in the light of their facts, and that, so read, it appears that in each instance the purported vendor had some interest or title which he could perfect.

The question is thus presented whether one who, at the time of entering into the contract, has no right or title to the land in question, may make a valid contract for the sale of that land to a vendee. In this state the question has long been settled in favor of the validity of such contracts. In Joyce v. Shafer, 97 Cal. 335, 32 Pac. 320, the first installment had been paid under an executory contract for the purchase of land. No other installments had been paid, and after the time for the payment of the last installment the vendor had conveyed the land for a valuable consideration to a third party; whereupon the vendee brought action to recover the first installment. This court, by Temple, J., first discussed the doctrine of rescission whereby, upon mutual abandonment, either party may recover the consideration paid, but declared that this was not a case for rescission, but was an effort by the purchaser, after his own default, to recover money paid by him when the vendor has not refused to complete the sale. Says the court: "The conveyance by the vendor was not a breach of the contract. One may sell land which he does not own, and yet be able, when the time of performance arrives, to furnish a good title. In the meantime the purchaser would not be at liberty to disaffirm the contract on the ground that then the vendor was unable to make a good title. It would be incumbent on him to offer to perform, or to show that at the time of performance the vendor could not furnish the title." It will be noticed that herein the rule is fairly and squarely declared, not as respondents would have it, that one may sell land to which he has an imperfect or inchoate title, but that one may sell land to which he has no title, and the contract will be valid and enforceable if at the time of performance by him he is able to convey good title. Joyce v. Shafer is approved in Shively v. Semi-Tropic, etc., Co., 99 Cal. 261, 33 Pac. 848, in Garberino v. Roberts, 109 Cal. 125, 41 Pac. 857, and finally in Hanson v. Fox, 155 Cal. 106, 99 Pac. 489, where the previous cases are reviewed, and it is said: "Nor does the fact which the court found, namely, that defendant had no title to the lots, afford any reason for the interposition of equity. In a case such as this it is permissible for one to contract to convey title to land which he does not own, and he is in default under such contract only when the vendee has performed his part of the contract and made demand for a title which the vendor is unable to furnish. Such is and always has been the settled rule in this state." Easton v. Montgomery, 90 Cal. 307, 27 Pac. 280, 25 Am. St. Rep. 123, contains no declarations of law at variance with this, and indeed if it did, of necessity it would follow that those declarations were overruled by the above-quoted utterances of this court in later cases. Easton v. Montgomery declares: "We cannot lose sight of the proposition that in this country, where values of land fluctuate rapidly, and where transfers are so frequent, it is very common for the purchaser of land to make a transfer of land before he has acquired the title. It would work great injustice to hold that no one could make a valid contract for the sale of land until he had himself become clothed with the absolute title. * * * It is not necessary, however, that the vendor should be the absolute owner of the property at the time he enters into the agreement of sale." In Easton v. Montgomery the vendee sought to justify his refusal to proceed upon the ground of a defect in the vendor's title. The court was not considering the case of a vendor without title at the time of making the contract, and its language is addressed to the situation actually before it. The court lays down the well-established rule that in every executory contract for the sale of land there is an implied condition that the title of the vendor is good, and that he will transfer to the purchaser by his deed of conveyance a title unincumbered and without defect; but the vendor sufficiently complies with this obligation if he is able to give a good title at the time when, by the terms of his contract of sale, he is required to make the conveyance. Says the court: "It is not necessary that the vendor should be the absolute owner of the property at the time he enters into the agreement of sale. An equitable estate in land, or a right to become the owner of the land, is as much the subject of sale as is the land itself, and whenever one is so situated with reference to a tract of land that he can acquire the title thereto, either by the voluntary act of the parties holding the title, or by proceedings at law or in equity, he is in a position to make a valid agreement for the sale thereof." Measured by the rule and language of Easton v. Montgomery, the plaintiffs by the tender of a good and sufficient deed to the property, within the time and under the terms limited by their contract, demonstrated their ability to acquire and transfer the title by the voluntary act of the parties who had formerly held it. Upon this subject, and in support of the doctrine of our court, reference may be made to Dresel v. Jordan, 104 Mass. 407, Daily v. Minnick, 117 Iowa, 563, 91 N. W. 913, 60 L. R. A. 840, and Logan v. Bull, 78 Ky. 607.

Gray v. Smith, 83 Fed. 828, 28 C. C. A. 168, does not express views at variance with those adopted by this court, and, if it did, it would be sufficient to say that those views, not being upon a federal question, would have no weight in overthrowing the deliberate judgments of this court. Gray v. Smith was an effort by a vendor to recover damages for the vendee's withdrawal from an executory contract of sale. But the vendor in that instance had neither title nor means of procuring title, and did not and was not able to tender title, but rested his right of action solely upon the default and refusal of the vendee to proceed. It is in view of these facts that the circuit cour used the following language: "The case presented for our consideration therefore was one in which the plaintiff made a contract to sell real estate of which he was not the owner and in which he had no right, title, nor interest, nor the ability to compel, by the law or otherwise, a conveyance from the owner. * * * One who makes a contract to sell property of which he has no title, nor the certain means of procuring title, presents no facts upon which damage to him may be predicated if the purchaser withdraws from the contract." This last declaration is in strict accord with the views of this court, with the proviso added that the time limited by the contract in which the vendor is to procure title has at the time of the vendee's withdrawal expired. Otherwise, and by the very terms of the contract, the vendor who has stipulated to make title by a certain date cannot be in default. Such in effect was the case of Burks v. Davies, 85 Cal. 110, 24 Pac. 613, 20 Am. St. Rep. 213, where the contract was a mere option, exercisable by the vendee at any time within its life, to purchase lands agreed to be conveyed by the vendor. As to some of these lands the vendor had no title, discovering which the vendee gave notice of rescission. The vendor at the time of the notice had not procured or taken steps to procure title to the lands which he did not own. As the vendee's option could be exercised at any time, it was held by this court that it became the vendee's duty to be ready, at all times within the period of the option during which a conveyance might be demanded by the purchaser, to convey good title to him of all the lands which he had agreed to sell, and his inability and unreadiness so to do justified a rescission of the option.

But the case at bar is radically and essentially different from the two which have last been considered. Here the vendor entered into a contract to make a conveyance within a given time. She made tender of full and complete title, and the tender was refused. True, the title tendered was not her own, and it is recognized that the vendee might have insisted upon title deraigned through the vendor. But their failure to object upon this ground was a waiver of the irregularity. Royal v. Dennison, 109 Cal. 558, 42 Pac. 39. The case then presented, in brief, is one where the vendor within the time limited by the contract has made good and sufficient tender of full and complete title to the land agreed to be sold. No reason in law or in equity exists for defendants' refusal to accept the tender, and for their breach of contract they are responsible in damages.

The judgment appealed from is therefore reversed, and the cause remanded.

CANFIELD v. LOS ANGELES COUNTY.

(L. A. 2,432.)

1. Taxation (§ 398*)—Corporations—Stock—Taxable in State.

Corporate stock of domestic corporations owned by citizens is taxable at full value, less the value of the corporation's property taxed in the state.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter Bordwell, Judge.

Action by C. A. Canfield against the County of Los Angeles. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Ward Chapman, for appellant. J. D. Fredericks, Dist. Atty., and Hartley Shaw, Chief Deputy Dist. Atty., for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Appeals are taken from a judgment and from an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial in this case and similar appeals are pending in two other cases which are practically identical with this one. They are Los Angeles Nos. 2,433 and 2,434, and are entitled Doheny v. County of Los Angeles, 108 Pac. 707. The briefs filed are pertinent to the appeals in all three of these cases, and it is agreed that the decision in this one shall apply to the other two. Plaintiffs seek to recover taxes paid under protest upon the ground that an assessment of stock in a domestic corporation to the individual stockholders is unauthorized and prohibited by the laws of the state of California. The superior court found that the Mexican Petroleum Company was on the first Monday in March, 1906, and thereafter, a corporation organized under the laws of this state and having its principal place of business in Los Angeles; that said corporation at that date and ever since has owned a large tract of land in Mexico, upon which many valuable wells producing petroleum are situated; that the corporation carries on its business of marketing and selling petroleum outside of the state of California; that the Mexican Petroleum Company has ever since its incorporation maintained offices in Los Angeles and governed its entire business from that city; that on the first Monday in March, 1906, there were 5,411,000 shares of the capital stock of the corporation outstanding and owned by individuals; that the value of this stock was 75 cents per share; and that the property of the corporation in California did not exceed $10,000 in value. The court concluded that plaintiff Canfield's shares (808,211 in number assessed for the sum of $323,285) had been correctly subjected to valuation by the assessor and to payment of the tax (amounting to $3,572.89). A similar conclusion of law was reached in the two cases in which the respondent Doheny sought return of the taxes paid on his stock for the years 1905 and 1906. In the former year he owned 5,400,000 shares of the stock, found by the court to be worth 15 cents a share, and this was assessed for $50,000; the amount of the tax being $550. In the latter year his holding of stock amounted to 1,729,000 shares, assessed for $691,600; the tax thereon amounting to $7,192.64.

Appellant's counsel seeks to establish the doctrine that the tax here considered is in substance a levy upon property lying outside of California and beyond the jurisdiction of this state, and that, having such extraterritorial application, it deprives the taxpayer of his property without due process of law and is therefore void, being in conflict with the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States.

These cases are practically identical in principle with Chesebrough v. City and County of San Francisco, 153 Cal. 559, 96 Pac. 288. In that case the assessor deducted the value of the corporation's property in California from the value of that of the stockholder who was assessed for almost the entire amount of the stock of the company. While here there was no such formal deduction, it will be seen that in each case now before us the difference between the actual value of the stock as found by the court and the amount for which it was assessed far exceeded the value as established by the court, of the corporation's property located within the territorial limits of the state of California. Therefore the law announced in the Chesebrough Case applies fully here. In that case this court quoted with approval from Commercial National Bank v. Chambers, 21 Utah, 324, 61 Pac. 560, 50 L. R. A. 346, as follows: "In the case at bar deductions were made from the value of the stock of the value of all real estate owned by the bank which is situate within the limits of the state, but deductions for its real estate without the state were refused by the assessor and board of equalization, but the court below ordered that the value of the real estate situate in other states should also be deducted from the value of the stock. In this we think the court erred. * * * The state has a right to fix its particular situs as to such stock (corporate stock) for the purposes of taxation, and its value for such purposes cannot be diminished by deducting therefrom the value of property not situated or taxable within the state, and over which the state can exercise no control. The bank, therefore, had no right to have the value of its real estate situate without the state deducted from the value of the stock. 'The true criterion, as fixed by the statute, is the true value of the stock, without reference to the question where, or in what manner or nature of property or security, the capital stock may be invested. Whether that be invested in real estate or other property beyond the jurisdiction of this state, the latter having control over the shares and their value, the peculiar nature and value of the investment of the capital stock of the corporations beyond the limits of the state can form no proper subject for specific deduction or abatement from the true value of the shares of stock when presented to be assessed for purposes of taxation. It is exclusively with the shares of stock, and their true value, as representing the entire corporate assets, that the tax commissioner has to deal, and not with the nature and locality of the investment of the capital stock of the corporation, except as to real estate of the company situate within this state.' American Coal Co. v. Allegany County, 59 Md. 185; Dwight v. Boston, 12 Allen [Mass.] 316, 90 Am. Dec. 149; Nevada Bank v. Sedgwick, 104 U. S. 111, 26 L. Ed. 703; Kelley v. Rhoades, 7 Wyo. 237, 51 Pac. 592 [39 L. R. A. 594] 75 Am. St. Rep. 904, affirmed in 9 Wyo. 352, 63 Pac. 935, 87 Am. St. Rep. 659. See same cases, 188 U. S. 1, 23 Sup. Ct. 259 [47 L. After some further analysis of the provisions of the Constitution and the Code applicable to the discussion, this court, in Chesebrough v. City and County, used the following language, which, unless we make a radically different rule, is decisive of the point here considered: "Applying this principle to the section in question in connection with the constitutional provisions requiring the taxation of all property, including shares of stock, at its full value, and it must be taken to mean that, when the property of the corporation in the state is taxed directly to the corporation, the shares of stock held here and subject to taxation shall not, to the extent that the property represented by it is taxed, be thus taxed. This exemption can only be extended, however, to deductions from the value of the shares of stock, the corporate property of which is situated in this state, and directly taxed to the corporation. It is the purpose of all revenue laws, as nearly as possible, to impose upon all property its just proportion of taxation, and the construction of the statute should not be had which will permit shares of stock held here, of vast value in domestic corporations whose properties are located beyond the state, to escape their just proportion of such taxation. Under these views the shares of stock of the Tacoma Mill Company held by the estate of Hanson, except to the extent that the property of the corporation in this state was actually assessed and taxed to the company, were taxable to their full value."

But in spite of the opinion just quoted and the provisions of section 1 of article 13 of the Constitution of California, the attorney for appellants quotes the applicable portion of that constitutional provision and comments upon it in part as follows: "Section 1 of article 13 provides that: 'All property in the state shall be taxed in proportion to its value to be ascertained as provided by law. The word "property" as used in this article and section is hereby declared to include stocks,' etc. Here, then, is an express declaration that it is only property in the state that is subject to taxation, and the word 'property' is construed to include stocks only as that word is used in this article and section. It seems to us that this is almost an express declaration that the word 'property' shall not be construed to include any of the things mentioned unless they are within the state. The words 'in this state' certainly do not necessarily mean property which is in fact out of the state and only in this state theoretically by virtue of some legal fiction, and so we say that, accepting the construction most consonant with the justice of the case, we should not extend it to include stocks representing properties which are physically beyond the state's jurisdiction."

When we consider the purpose of taxation, it must be apparent that there should not be a construction at variance with the ordinary meaning of the words of the above-quoted section of the Constitution. Citizens are taxed for the support of the government that protects them and their property. It would be manifestly unfair to tax one citizen for personal property of a tangible, salable kind located in California and omit the imposition of a similar burden on the possessors of equally valuable and vendible personalty, just as difficult to protect, just as much subject to the law of supply and demand in this state, because the value of that property depends in whole or in part upon the holdings of a corporation in a country where they may or may not be taxed. In Bank of Commerce v. Tennessee, 161 U. S. 146, 16 Sup. Ct. 456, 40 L. Ed. 645, it was held that "the capital stock of a corporation and the shares into which such stock may be divided and held by individual stockholders are two distinct pieces of property. The capital stock and the shares of stock in the hands of the shareholders may both be taxed and it is not double taxation."

The doctrine for which appellants contend would in many cases prevent the assessment in California to residents of this state of valuable stock in foreign corporations. This would be true, at least, in respect to the stock of those corporations having their entire property in other countries. Assessments levied upon such stock and similar credits, however, have been held to be valid even when the evidences of ownership were out of the state. Stanford v. San Francisco, 131 Cal. 34, 63 Pac. 145; Estate of Fair, 128 Cal. 613, 61 Pac. 184.

In Ohio this question has come up in practically the same manner in which it is presented here, in a case in which the assessment of stock in a foreign corporation was involved. In that case (Bradley v. Bauder, 36 Ohio St. 34 [38 Am. Rep. 547]) the court said: "But it is said that because the capital of the company is invested in real and fixed property in the state where the corporation is located, and in which state taxes upon the same are regularly levied and paid, a tax here upon the shares of stock of those residing here is a tax upon the same property, and therefore results in double taxation. The argument is: That the capital of the corporation is invested in property which is taxed in the name of the corporation, and that the shares of the capital stock, when owned by individuals, only represent proportions in the ownership of such property, and hence to tax the shares is another mode of taxing the property of the corporation, and that a tax upon both, although the tax upon one is imposed in another state, violates the rule or principle of equality established by the Constitution. This argument, however plausible it seems, has never met with favor from the courts. Double taxation, in a legal sense, does not exist, unless the double tax is levied upon the same property within the same jurisdiction. Here the property owned by the plaintiffs is not only not the same as that owned by the corporation, but its situs, so far as shares of stock are capable of one, is in a different state. * * * The constitutional power to tax shares of stock, owned by our citizens in corporations located without the state, does not depend on whether the capital of the corporation is or is not taxed in the state where the corporation is created. The power is the same, whether the capital of the corporation is there taxed or not; otherwise, the power of taxation conferred by the Constitution would be made to depend upon the operation of laws of a foreign jurisdiction—a proposition so obviously ill founded that the moment it is stated its falsity becomes apparent."

In the matter of taxing the shares of stock in a domestic corporation owning property without the state, that court has gone even beyond the doctrine in the Chesebrough Case, because it sanctions assessment of the stock without deduction for the value of the corporation's property in the state. Lander v. Burke, 65 Ohio St. 532, 63 N. E. 69.

After a careful examination of all the authorities presented, we see no reason to change the rule expressed in Chesebrough v. City and County of San Francisco, supra, and the other cases to which reference has been made herein.

The judgment and orders from which appeals are taken are therefore affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.; HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J. SHAW, J., did not sit in the foregoing cause.

LOUSTALOT v. McKEEL. (L. A. 2,460.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 19, 1910.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 843*)—REVIEW—MATTERS NOT NECESSARY TO DECISION.

Where, in ejectment for a strip of land along the boundary line between plaintiff and defendant, the court found that defendant was the owner in fee of the strip, and that plaintiff was estopped to assert any claim thereto, and the finding of estoppel is supported by the evidence, and is sufficient to sustain the judgment for defendant, it is immaterial on appeal whether the additional finding of title in fee is supported, and that question will not be considered.

2. BOUNDARIES (§ 37*)—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to support a finding that an agreement between plaintiff's predecessor in title and defendant recognized the line claimed by defendant as the true line, and that plaintiff, by acquiescence in it as the established line for almost seven years, was estopped from asserting title to the strip of land in controversy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. §§ 189-193; Dec. Dig. § 37.*]

3. BOUNDARIES (§ 46*)—ESTABLISHMENT BY AGREEMENT.

Where a boundary line is uncertain, and the contiguous owners, with equal knowledge of the facts, by parol agreement fixed a dividing line, and such line is marked by the erection or maintenance of a fence or other equivalent structure along it, and thereafter they occupied their respective lands to the boundary as agreed on, the accuracy of such line cannot be subsequently questioned by the parties establishing it or those claiming under them; no deception being practiced in locating it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. §§ 212-226, 249-251; Dec. Dig. § 46.*]

4. BOUNDARIES (§ 37*)—EVIDENCE AS TO LOCATION.

Evidence in ejectment held to show that the location of a boundary line was uncertain prior to an agreement between defendant and plaintiff's predecessor fixing the location of the line.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. §§ 184-194; Dec. Dig. § 37.*]

5. BOUNDARIES (§ 46*)—ESTOPPEL TO QUESTION LOCATION.

Where persons owning contiguous tracts of land establish a common boundary line, which may not be in fact the true line according to the call of their deeds, in which they acquiesce, and according to which they occupy their respective lands for a time equal to that prescribed by the statute of limitations, they and their successors in interest are conclusively estopped from questioning it as the true line.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. §§ 212-226, 249-251; Dec. Dig. § 46.*]

6. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF (§ 70*)—REAL PROPERTY—AGREEMENTS FIXING BOUNDARY.

An agreement by the owner of contiguous tracts of land fixing the boundary line between them is not a contract for the sale or conveyance of land, and is not within the statute of frauds.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; Felix W. Ewing, Judge.

Action by Frank Loustalot against J. J. McKeel. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

William G. Griffith, for appellant. C. A. Storke, for respondent.

LORIGAN, J. Plaintiff, alleging ownership in fee thereto, brought this action in ejectment to recover of defendant a strip of land 86 feet long and 9.8 feet wide at one end, and 4.6 feet wide at the other, lying along the common boundary line of the lands of the parties located in the city of Santa Barbara. The complaint was filed September 17, 1907. In his answer defendant denied title in plaintiff, asserted title in himself, and set up an affirmative defense of estoppel, based upon the claim that in 1897 the common boundary line being in dispute between himself and the predecessor in title of plaintiff—one Mary A. Ashley—they agreed upon a boundary line which fixed the strip of land in dispute to be on the defendant's side of the line, and that the line so agreed on was acquiesced in by the predecessor of plaintiff thereafter and up to 1906 when plaintiff succeeded to her interest in part of the adjacent property. The court found that the defendant was the owner in fee of the strip in dispute, and also that plaintiff was estopped from asserting any claim to the property against defendant by virtue of the agreement between his predecessor in title and defendant establishing a common boundary line between their lands. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment accompanied by a bill of exceptions under which he attacks the sufficiency of the findings of title in defendant and the claim of estoppel.

We shall not discuss the finding as to title because we are satisfied that the finding of estoppel was supported by the evidence, and, being sufficient of itself to sustain the judgment, it is immaterial whether the additional finding of title in fee is supported or not.

Addressing ourselves to the evidence on the finding of estoppel, it appears that in 1869 one George Hartley purchased a lot fronting on State street, being a part of block 229, in the city of Santa Barbara. The lot was rather indefinitely described in the deed, but along its southeasterly line ran a board fence, referred to in the deed as the southeasterly boundary thereof, and which divided the property he took possession of from an adjacent lot to the southeast then owned by one Mary B. Lake. The lots in the block, including those immediately referred to, were fenced off from each other. Hartley, on going into possession of the lot purchased by him, immediately built a stable upon it known as the "Dexter Stables," the building fronting on State street and running back nearly 186 feet to the rear line of the lot. The southeasterly side of the stable, and subsequently a barn, were built along and upon the board dividing fence referred to in his deed as the southeasterly boundary line of his lot, and, as constructed, embraced within their inclosure, as part of the land described in his deed, the strip in dispute except a few feet at the rear. In 1879 one Mary A. Ashley purchased from Mary B. Lake, above referred to, the lot to the southeast and adjacent to the Hartley stables. The deed to Mary A. Ashley, as did all of the deeds from her predecessors in title, called for a frontage on State street of 195 feet running northwesterly along that street from its intersection with Haley street (being the south corner of block 229) with a uniform depth northerly through the block of 450 feet. The northwesterly line of the lot (the boundary line between it and the lot of Hartley) ran at right angles to State street. We mention this particular call for the frontage on State street to refer to it again presently. In 1893 one McPhail, successor in interest of Hartley, conveyed the lot on which the Dexter stables were located to defendant. Now, while the description in the deed to Hartley included the strip in question by reference to the board fence on the southeasterly line of the lot, and the deed from him to McPhail described the land conveyed explicitly by courses and distances, and generally as the "premises known as the Hartley stable and corral," the deed to the defendant did not in terms include this strip. The deed to him was for 90 feet frontage on State street running northerly along that street from a point 137 feet northerly from the intersection of State and Haley streets (being the southern corner of block 229), with the southeasterly line running in depth 186 feet at right angles with State street. As the board fence referred to in the Hartley deed, and along and upon which the southeast wall of the stable and barn was built, did not run at right angles with State street, the strip was not included in the deed to defendant calling for the southeasterly line of his lot as being one run at right angles to State street. However, the defendant went into possession of the premises under his deed assuming that it embraced the strip in controversy upon which the stables partially stood.

In the early part of the year 1897, while Mary A. Ashley and the defendant were so in possession of their adjacent lots, physically divided by the southeast wall of the stable and barn, the former had a survey made of the land called for in her deed, and thereafter wrote to the defendant stating that his barn was on part of her property, and that, while she did not wish to sell the land, she was willing to rent it to him. Defendant called to see her about the matter, taking with him his abstract of title, and she and her attorney and defendant went over it together and discussed the matter of the accuracy of the line. At first, she claimed all that her deed called for. In this connection it will be observed that, eliminating for the moment this strip in question, there was a marked and decided conflict between the calls in the deeds of Mrs. Ashley and the defendant as to the dividing line between their lots. It is not pretended that Mrs. Ashley, or her predecessors in interest, ever had any valid claim of title to any portion of the lot actually described in the deed to defendant, or to any part of the land enclosed by the southeast wall of the stable and barn, except a narrow piece of which the strip in controversy is a part, extending from State street northeasterly to the rear of defendant's lot. Yet it will be observed from the calls in the respective deeds of Mrs. Ashley and the defendant that the deeds largely overlapped each other. The deed to Mrs. Ashley called for a frontage of 195 feet running along State street from the south corner of block 229. The deed to defendant called for a frontage of 90 feet running along State street from a point on that street 137 feet distant from the same south corner of the block. The deeds overlapped each other in frontage on State street and in depth the difference between 137 and 195 feet, or 58 feet. Mrs. Ashley under her deed could claim 195 feet along State street, while the deed of defendant called for 58 feet of this same frontage. The strip ran all through the land of the defendant and the calls of the respective deeds clearly left the true dividing line between their lands in uncertainty and doubt. But, while at first Mrs. Ashley claimed all that her deed called for, the dispute between herself and the defendant settled down to the narrow strip along their line and upon which the stables and barn were built. Mrs. Ashley insisted that under the deed to her the dividing line should run at right angles to State street, which would entitle her to the strip. The position of defendant was that the barn "had to follow the board fence" (referred to in the deed to Hartley) and had in fact followed it. After examining the abstract and discussing the matter between them, Mrs. Ashley conceded that the claim of defendant was correct, and that the line upon which the barn was built was the true line between their respective properties. At the time of this conference and adjustment as to the boundary line, there was a small piece of the strip extending from the barn to the rear of the lot which had not been built on or inclosed by defendant or his predecessors. A few days afterwards Mrs. Ashley of her own volition, and at her own expense, had a fence built extending from the barn to the end of defendant's lot along the same line of the strip on which the stable and barn were built prolonged northeasterly so as to make an actual southeasterly line between the properties of both parties. After this agreement as to the true boundary line and the building of the fence, the line of the stable and fence as built by Mrs. Ashley were recognized by both parties as the true line dividing their property. Neither Mrs. Ashley nor any of her predecessors in title were ever in possession of the strip of land in dispute. No question was ever subsequently made between Mrs. Ashley and the defendant about the dividing line. As agreed to it was acquiesced in as the true dividing line between their properties for some seven years thereafter and up to the time of the death of Mrs. Ashley in 1904 and until plaintiff purchased a portion of the adjacent lot from her estate. This was some two years subsequent to her death, and the deed from her executors included the portion of the strip for which this action was brought. Upon this evidence the court was warranted in finding that by the agreement between Mrs. Ashley and the defendant, recognizing and establishing the line along which the stable, and thereafter the fence, was built, as the true dividing line, and also by acquiescence in it as so established for almost seven years, the plaintiff as the successor in interest of Mrs. Ashley was estopped from asserting title to the strip in controversy.

The rule universally sustained by the authorities is that where the boundary line between the lands of contiguous owners is doubtful or uncertain, and they by parol agreement fix and determine a dividing line between their respective tracts, said line being marked by the erection or maintenance of a fence or other equivalent structure along it, and thereafter the parties hold and occupy their respective lands to the boundary as so agreed on, the accuracy of such boundary line cannot be subsequently questioned by the parties establishing it, or by those claiming under either of them. Cavanaugh v. Jackson, 91 Cal. 580, 583, 27 Pac. 931; Dierssen v. Nelson, 138 Cal. 394, 398, 71 Pac. 456; Young v. Blakeman, 153 Cal. 481, 95 Pac. 888, and other authorities cited in those cases.

That there was an uncertainty as to the line between their lots according to the calls of their deeds when Mrs. Ashley and the defendant agreed upon and established a dividing line is hardly open to serious question. The calls of their deeds were widely divergent as to it. The deeds overlapped each other to an extent of 58 feet, and, while no claim was insisted upon by Mrs. Ashley that the northwesterly line of her lot extended into the land of defendant as far as her deed called for it, still if it did not extend there it was uncertain where it was to be located, and while in the end the dispute between them was brought down to whether the true line should run along the old board fence, which physically divided for many years the lands of which she and defendant were actually in possession, or at right angles to State street, there was nothing in her deed which specifically called for its location along the line which she claimed controlled. The northwesterly line of her lot was 58 feet beyond the line which she was contending for, according to the call of her deed, and embraced to that extent land of the defendant to which she did not insist that she had any claim, and to which it must be conceded she had none. It is true that the deed to the defendant did not fix his line along the board fence, upon which the stables and barn were built, which was the actually disputed line, but he was in possession of it and of the strip in controversy as included within that line, as his predecessors had also been for a great many years. Had a controversy arisen between Hartley and Mrs. Ashley there can be no question but that under the calls of their respective deeds the boundary line was uncertain, and we do not perceive how it could be considered the less uncertain, as far as the calls of the deed of Mrs. Ashley are concerned, when the dispute as to it arose between her and the defendant.

But if it be conceded that according to the calls of Mrs. Ashley's deed there could be no question of the true location of the dividing line; that, as claimed by counsel for appellant, it was and is capable of ready ascertainment and location as running at right angles to State street, so as to include the strip in question; and that the parties were mistaken in believing what they established to be the true line—still the rule of law is that where parties in good faith establish a boundary line which may not be in fact the true line according to the calls of their deeds, in which they acquiesce and according to which they occupy their respective lands for a period of time equal to that prescribed by the statute of limitations, both parties and their successors in interest are conclusively estopped from questioning it as the true line.

As said in the early case of Sneed v. Osborn, 25 Cal. 619, 626: "The authorities are abundant to the point that when the owners of adjoining lands have acquiesced for a considerable time in the location of the division line between their lands, although it may not be the true line according to the calls of their deeds they are thereafter precluded from saying it is not the true line. The better opinion is that the considerable time mentioned in the cases must at least equal the length of time prescribed by the statute of limitations to bar a right of entry." Columbet v. Pacheco, 48 Cal. 395; Cooper v. Vierra, 59 Cal. 282; Johnson v. Brown, 63 Cal. 391; White v. Spreckels, 75 Cal. 610, 17 Pac. 715; Helm v. Wilson, 76 Cal. 476, 18 Pac. 604; Cavanaugh v. Jackson, 91 Cal. 580, 27 Pac. 931; Dierssen v. Nelson, 138 Cal. 394, 71 Pac. 456; Lewis v. Ogram, 149 Cal. 505, 87 Pac. 60, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 610, 117 Am. St. Rep. 151.

There can be no question under the evidence but that Mrs. Ashley and the defendant deemed the matter of the location of the true line uncertain. It may be that they were in error in this respect and that a careful examination of their respective titles by an attorney, and accurate surveys of their lots according to the calls of their several deeds, would have fixed an absolutely correct boundary line between them. But, whatever might have been possible in this respect, the fact is that the true location of the line was considered uncertain and was definitely fixed between them, acquiesced in without question for years, and each occupied their lands thereafter according to the agreed line. When they entered into the agreement, both had equal knowledge of the facts, and no deception or fraud was practiced. Under these circumstances, it is entirely immaterial whether the parties were right or wrong in believing that the true line was exactly where it should be as they established it. They were certainly in doubt as to where it should run, and adjusted the matter by making a practical location of the line where they thought it ought to be, and having acquiesced in it as so established, and having occupied their lands under the location for almost seven years—a longer period than prescribed by the statute of limitations to bar a right of entry—the line they established is conclusively determined to be the true divisional line. Courts have always looked with favor on the settlement of questions of this character by the parties in interest themselves, and when it appears that an agreement adjusting a disputed boundary line has been fairly and definitely made between them, and they have occupied their lands accordingly for a period longer than the statutory period of limitation, such agreement is conclusive, no matter whether they were mistaken or not in their belief that they were locating it along the true line. It is quite obvious that, if the fact merely that the parties were mistaken as to where the true line lay could invalidate their agreement, there never could be any stability attached to such an agreement unless the line agreed on was in truth the exact line. The policy of the law, however, is to give stability to such an agreement as a method adopted in good faith by the parties themselves to settle the controversy, and because it is the most satisfactory way whereby a true boundary line may be determined, and tends to prevent litigation. Cavanaugh v. Jackson, supra, 91 Cal. 583, 27 Pac. 931.

There is nothing in appellant's point that the agreement being in parol was within the statute of frauds. The agreement was not a contract for the sale or conveyance of land. Its only object was to settle a disputed question of boundary, and, as said in White v. Spreckels, supra, 75 Cal. 616, 17 Pac. 717: "Agreements of this character are not subject to the objection that they are within the statute of frauds, because they are not considered as extending to the title. They do not operate as a conveyance so as to pass title from one to another, but they proceed upon the theory that the true line of separation is in dispute and to some extent unknown, and in such cases the agreement serves to fix the line to which the title of each extends."

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

PERKINS v. COWLES et al. (L. A. 2,427.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 18, 1910. Rehearing Denied May 18, 1910.)

1. Corporations (§ 145*)—Stock—Transfer—Effect—Liability on Unpaid Subscriptions.

Upon the transfer of stock by the original subscribers and entry thereof by the transferees upon the corporate books, the original subscribers were released from payment of the unpaid subscription, and the transferees became liable to the corporation or its receiver in bankruptcy for payment of calls on the original subscription without an expressed promise to do so, though they believed in good faith when purchasing that the subscriptions were fully paid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 530, 531; Dec. Dig. § 145.*]

2. Corporations (§ 144*)—Stock—Transfer—Liability of Unpaid Subscriptions.

That the president of the corporation, who was also an original subscriber, represented in good faith to the transferees of his own and other stock that the subscriptions were fully paid in order to induce the latter to purchase, would not estop the corporation nor its receiver in bankruptcy from collecting the unpaid subscriptions from the transferees, he not acting for the corporation in making such representation, nor would representations to the same effect by original stockholders prevent the collection of unpaid subscriptions from the transferees.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 144.*]

3. Corporations (§ 112*)—Stock—Effect of Transfer—Bona Fide Purchasers.

Stock certificates are not negotiable instruments, and the purchaser thereof stands on the same basis as the purchaser of any other nonnegotiable instrument.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 464, 465; Dec. Dig. § 112.*]

4. Corporations (§ 144*)—Stock—Issues—Estoppel.

The issuance of stock certificates to a transferee without a statement that it is not fully paid is not equivalent to a representation that it is fully paid so as to prevent the corporation from collecting the remainder of unpaid subscriptions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 144.*]

5. Bankruptcy (§ 145*)—Collection of Unpaid Subscriptions — Right to Enforce Liability.

The amount due on subscriptions to corporate stock is a trust fund for corporate creditors, and unpaid subscriptions are a part of its assets in bankruptcy, and may be collected by the receiver in bankruptcy for creditors.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter Bordwell, Judge.

Action by Gregory Perkins, Jr., trustee in bankruptcy of the Golden Gate Laundry, Incorporated, against J. E. Cowles and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with directions to enter judgment for plaintiff.

Lawler, Allen, Van Dyke & Jutten, for appellant. Lloyd W. Moultrie, for respondents.

LORIGAN, J. This case was submitted to the trial court on an agreed statement of facts. It appears therefrom that the Golden Gate Laundry, Incorporated, was organized under the laws of this state in January, 1902, with a capital stock of $33,000, represented by 330 shares of the par value of $100 each. All the stock was subscribed for by the six original incorporators. Certain of these, being the owners of a business plant known as the Golden Gate Laundry, transferred it to the Golden Gate Laundry, Incorporated, at a valuation of $5,500. It was accepted by the latter corporation at that figure, and 165 shares of the capital stock of the corporation subscribed for by said parties was credited thereby with a payment of 33⅓ cents on each dollar per share of the capital stock subscribed for by them. Subsequently the subscribers to the remaining 165 shares of the capital stock paid into the treasury of the corporation 33⅓ cents on the dollar per share of the stock subscribed for by them. Thereupon all the stock of the corporation was issued to the original subscribers, the certificates being in the usual and ordinary form, reciting that the person named therein was the owner of a given number of shares of $100 each of the capital stock of the corporation, transferable on its books on surrender of the certificate. Some months thereafter these defendants purchased certain shares under the following circumstances: Three of the original subscribers—Rogers, McCoy, and Hedderly—being desirous of securing patronage for the business of the corporation and extending its influence, arranged with the defendants and others to purchase part of the shares held by them for 40 cents on the dollar per share. Hedderly was one of the original subscribers and president of the corporation. He and the others stated to the defendants, when soliciting a purchase of the stock by them, that the stock was fully paid up at its face or par value, and that there were no unpaid subscriptions thereon. In making this statement Hedderly acted in good faith, believing that the stock was fully paid up by the transfer of the property to the corporation from the Golden Gate Laundry. The defendants had no notice to the contrary, believed the representations as made, and stated to Hedderly and those from whom they purchased that they would not buy the stock unless it was fully paid up. Under the assurances given, the defendants then purchased a large number of the shares of the stock, which were transferred to them by the original subscribers, and such transfers entered upon the books of the corporation. The defendants ever since said transfers have been, and now are, the owners and holders of said stock. In 1904, on an involuntary petition in bankruptcy filed in the United States District Court for the Southern District of California, the corporation was adjudged a bankrupt and plaintiff was elected and duly qualified as its trustee. The bankrupt corporation, being without sufficient property to pay the debts of the corporation in full, on petition of plaintiff, as such trustee, the said United States District Court in September, 1904, ordered that a call be made of 50 per cent. of all unpaid subscriptions or balance due on the capital stock. In January, 1906, a second call for a like amount of the balance of unpaid subscriptions was made, and, the defendants having failed to make payment to the trustee of either of said calls, the plaintiff brought this action against them. The corporation itself never made any calls on account of any unpaid subscription to its capital stock. The trial court rendered judgment in favor of defendants, adopting the agreed statement of facts as the findings of the court, and this appeal is taken by plaintiff from the judgment.

It will be readily observed under the agreed statement of facts that the main question presented on this appeal is whether a stockholder who has purchased the stock of a corporation in good faith and for a valuable consideration from an original subscriber, who has not paid the full subscription price thereof, can be held liable for the unpaid subscription of which nonpayment he has no actual notice or knowledge; it in fact being represented to him by the president of the corporation, as well as the other sellers of the stock, at the time of his purchase, that the stock was fully paid for, although from the books of the corporation it appears that the stock had not been fully paid. The trial court held that under these circumstances the defendants, as transferees of the stock were not liable. But we cannot agree with that conclusion. As far as the question is affected by the representations of the president of the corporation that the stock was fully paid, that is a false quantity. We are not referred to any authority where it has been held that even a corporation itself, let alone its creditors, would be bound by any such statement of the president of the corporation. As a matter of fact the stock had not been fully paid, and, when the president stated that it was, he was not representing the corporation, and did not pretend to. Himself a stockholder by virtue of his original subscription, he was simply acting with Rogers and McCoy in an endeavor to make a sale of a portion of their stock to the defendants, in order to extend the influence and increase the patronage of the corporation by having the stock of the company distributed among a large number of stockholders. He was acting in his own behalf in an effort, with the others, to dispose of a portion of his and their stock. While it is true that he made the representations in good faith, and doubtless the others did also, it is equally true that he had no authority from the corporation to do so. At least it does not appear that he had any. He was not acting in behalf of the corporation in the sale of any stock belonging to it, but simply in the personal interest of himself and the others. His conduct could not have estopped the corporation in its right to require, if necessary and while a going concern, the full payment of the subscription price, and certainly could not estop the receiver in bankruptcy, acting in behalf of the creditors, after the corporation had become insolvent, from making a call for such payment of it, if otherwise the transferees of the original subscribers were liable therefor. Neither is it of any moment that representations that the stock was fully paid (independent of those made by the president) were made by the other original subscribers when selling the stock to defendants. There can be no question but that the original subscribers were liable to the corporation for the full subscription price, and, under the law of this state, when they transferred their stock to the defendants, and the latter caused the transfer to be entered on the books of the corporation, the former were released from liability for such payment, and the defendants in law as transferees assumed it, as far as any action by the corporation to compel its payment is concerned. No express promise on their part to assume or pay the balance of the subscription price was necessary. The corporation could, after the transfer of the stock to defendants and entry thereof on its books, look only to the defendants as its recorded stockholders to compel payment of either calls for the original subscription to its stock or for assessments thereon. Visalia, etc., Ry. Co. v. Hyde, 110 Cal. 632, 43 Pac. 10, 52 Am. St. Rep. 136; People's Home Sav. Bank v. Rickard, 139 Cal. 285, 73 Pac. 858; People's Home Sav. Bank v. Stadtmuller, 150 Cal. 106, 88 Pac. 280; O'Dea v. Hollywood Cemetery Ass'n, 154 Cal. 53, 97 Pac. 1. In view of this exclusive legal liability to the corporation for the payment of the subscription price which the transferees of stock assume by having themselves entered on the corporate books as stockholders, it would seem to be but a waste of time to give serious consideration to the proposition that a representation by a stockholder, who is an original subscriber of corporate stock, when selling his stock, that it is fully paid, would absolve both of them—the original subscriber by transfer and the transferee by the representation—from all liability to the corporation or its creditors for payment of such subscription price. A mere statement of the proposition negatives its soundness. The only right which the defendants had arising from the misrepresentation of the fact of payment was a right of action against the parties making it personally for damages and for rescission of the sale of the stock.

So that the matter of representation, either by the president of the corporation, or by him and the other stockholders, being eliminated as obviously unimportant factors in the present controversy, we are brought to the broad proposition, and the one for which in the end respondents really contend, namely, that a purchaser of certificates of stock in the open market in good faith and for value, without anything on the face of the certificates indicating that the stock has not been fully paid, takes them free from any liability for calls for unpaid subscription, either at the instance of the corporation or its creditors, although the shares are in fact not fully paid for. Whatever may be the rule in sister jurisdictions, and we are referred to cases therefrom so holding, this is not the rule obtaining in this state. In O'Dea v. Hollywood, etc., 154 Cal. 71, 97 Pac. 8, this same proposition was urged, and in answer to it this court said: "But independent of this claim of representation, the broad proposition of appellants is that, because they purchased their certificates of stock in good faith and without notice in the open market, such stock is to be deemed fully paid up, and they are protected as bona fide purchasers, even though upon the face of the certificates there was nothing to indicate that the stock had been fully paid. In effect, their claim is that certificates of stock are negotiable securities and subject to the same rules governing the transfer of such instruments. But this position under the law of this state is untenable. Whatever the rule may be in other jurisdictions (and some authorities therefrom are cited by appellants in support of their claim), it is well established in this state that certificates of stock are not negotiable instruments, either in the commercial sense or within the definition of the Civil Code, and that the stock represented by them is subject to assessment for subscription calls, no matter to whom it may be transferred. The rule in this state is that certificates of stock in a corporation are but mere evidences of the holder's right to a given share in the franchises and property of the corporation, and are not negotiable instruments. Barstow v. Savage M. Co., 64 Cal. 388, 1 Pac. 349, 49 Am. Rep. 705; Graves v. Mono Lake Min. Co., 81 Cal. 304, 22 Pac. 665; Craig v. Hesperia L. & W. Co., 113 Cal. 7, 45 Pac. 10, 35 L. R. A. 306, 54 Am. St. Rep. 316. Such certificates of shares not being negotiable instruments, the rule analogous to other nonnegotiable instruments applies, and a purchaser takes them subject to all equities in favor of the corporation. The transfer relieves him from no liability to the corporation which his transferror was under, so that, when one purchases stock and causes the transfer to be entered upon the books of the corporation, he thereafter holds his shares on the same conditions as did the stockholder from whom he purchased, he acquires under them all his rights, and is subject to all his liabilities and obligations respecting them. Visalia, etc., R. Co. v. Hyde, 110 Cal. 632, 43 Pac. 10, 52 Am. St. Rep. 136; Craig v. Hesperia L. & W. Co., 113 Cal. 7, 45 Pac. 10, 35 L. R. A. 306, 54 Am. St. Rep. 316; People's Home Savings Bank v. Rickard, 139 Cal. 285, 73 Pac. 858. Many authorities from other states might be cited to the same effect, but these from our own state declare the rule here." In that case we had occasion to examine the authorities relied on as establishing the rule for which respondents contend. 1 Cook on Corp. § 50; Clark & Marshall, p. 1741; Helliwell on Stock and Stockholders, p. 911. It will be noted, however, when these authorities are looked to and the cases they cite examined, that (with a few exceptions in the latter) the rule promulgated or declared proceeded upon the theory that certificates of stock are negotiable or quasi negotiable instruments, or at least should be so treated. In this state, however, as certificates of stock are not negotiable instruments and the purchaser of stock is no more protected than the purchaser of any other nonnegotiable instrument, the rule of the authorities cited, based on the negotiability or quasi negotiability of stock certificates, has no force here. In fact, in those jurisdictions, where the rule of nonnegotiability of certificates of stock obtains, the rule as to the liability of transferees of stock is the same as in this state. Upton v. Tribilcock, 91 U. S. 45, 23 L. Ed. 203; Webster v. Upton, 91 U. S. 65, 23 L. Ed. 384; Merrimac Mining Co. v. Levy, 54 Pa. 227, 93 Am. Dec. 697. See notes to Thompson v. Reno Bank, 3 Am. St. Rep. 829.

As far as it is insisted that the issuance of the certificates of stock without any statement that the stock had not been fully paid for, was equivalent to a representation that it had been so paid, this point is fully discussed and decided adversely to the respondent in O'Day v. Hollywood, heretofore quoted from. The certificates here involved, like the certificates involved in that case, were issued long before section 323 of the Civil Code was amended so as to require certificates issued prior to the payment of the full amount due to state the amount actually paid.

Some question is raised by respondents as to whether the unpaid subscription of the stock owned by defendants constitutes assets in bankruptcy. We think there can be no doubt about it. In Burke v. Maze, 10 Cal. App. 206, 101 Pac. 438, 440, the rule is correctly laid down as to the liability of the original subscribers. It is there said: "The amount due from the stockholders for the subscribed stock of the corporation is a trust fund for the creditors of the corporation, and such unpaid subscriptions to its stock are a part of its assets and may be collected for its creditors. Vermont, etc., Co. v. Declez, etc., Co., 135 Cal. 579, 67 Pac. 1057, 56 L. R. A. 728, 87 Am. St. Rep. 143; Walter v. Merced Academy Ass'n, 126 Cal. 583, 59 Pac. 136; Visalia, etc., R. R. Co. v. Hyde, 110 Cal. 632, 43 Pac. 10, 52 Am. St. Rep. 136. Such liability arises by virtue of the stockholders' contract of membership in the corporation, evidenced by the certificates of shares. Morawetz on Private Corporations (2d Ed.) § 128; Union Sav. Bank v. Willard, 4 Cal. App. 690, 88 Pac. 1098." But the same liability attaches to transferees on becoming stockholders of record on the books of the corporation as bound the transferrors as original subscribers. By purchasing from the original subscribers the transferees assumed, as a matter of law, all the liabilities that the transferrors of the stock to them were under, and took it subject to all their obligations. Visalia, etc., R. R. Co. v. Hyde, supra, 110 Cal. 630, 43 Pac. 10, 52 Am. St. Rep. 136; O'Day v. Hollywood, supra. Hence the defendants were liable to a call for payment of the unpaid subscriptions in the bankruptcy proceedings, and the trustee had the right to maintain this action to recover on the calls.

The judgment appealed from is reversed, with directions to the trial court to enter judgment in favor of plaintiff against each of the defendants for the amount due on the unpaid subscriptions to the capital stock of the corporation held by him when this action was commenced. The agreed statement of facts which has been adopted by the court as its finding in the case furnishes the data upon which the computation may be made and the judgment rendered.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.; HENSHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.

SHAW, J. I concur because the previous decisions of this court settle the question that in this state the issuance of a certificate of corporate stock, which upon its face does not show that it is not full-paid stock, is not a representation by the corporation that it has received the par value of the stock. If it were a new proposition, I would hold the contrary.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; E. S. Torrance, Judge.

Action by C. H. Baldwin, as administrator with the will annexed of Anderson W. Todd, deceased, and others against Joseph Foster and others. From the judgment, and from an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Reversed and remanded.

Luce, Sloane & Luce, for appellants. C. N. Andrews, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. This appeal is from the judgment and order denying defendants' motion for a new trial. The action was to quiet title to certain real estate in the city of San Diego. The real estate consists of certain town lots in the subdivision of a 5-acre tract in the west half of Pueblo lot 1128. Pueblo lot 1128 was a large tract of land containing more than 160 acres, the title to which was originally in the city of San Diego. The city made deeds to certain portions of this lot, one to Wallace of the west half; one to Porter, conveying 80 acres of the easterly portion, and one to Norton of "80 acres in lot 1128." The area of the Pueblo lot was uncertain, owing to the indeterminate easterly boundary line, according to the map. The 80 acres conveyed to Norton was unlocated, wherefore an action in partition was brought for the determination and allotment of the interests of those holding under the city's deeds. In this action in partition, entitled Norton v. Mayhew et al., interlocutory and final decrees were entered. By them a certain 5-acre tract described as lot 14, containing the lots in controversy, was set apart in common to Anderson W. Todd and eight other co-tenants. It is sufficient for the purposes of this consideration to say that plaintiffs derived title by mesne conveyances through Anderson W. Todd. Defendants claim title by virtue of sheriff's sale and deed of Todd's interest, growing out of the decree of distribution in the partition suit. The facts in this connection are, as has been said, that a five-acre tract containing the lots in controversy was set apart to Anderson W. Todd and eight others as tenants in common. The court in awarding costs decreed that the nine tenants in common to whom the five-acre tract had been awarded in severalty should "pay the sum of $21.85, the portion for which each party is liable being hereby decreed to be a first lien upon the tract of land so allotted to each of said defendants respectively." Upon failure of payment of these costs the land was sold, and it is conceded that whatever title passed by that sale vested in these defendants, and it is not disputed that if the effect of the sale was to deprive Anderson W. Todd of his interest in the land, defendants should prevail in this action.

Manifestly, then, the question of the validity or invalidity of the judgment in Norton v. Mayhew et al. is the all-important one in this case. It is made to appear that the trial court took the view that the judgment was void as to the nine tenants in common to whom this five-acre tract was partitioned, first, because it did not award them their interests in severalty; and, second, because it did not apportion the costs in severalty, but in effect made the total costs of $21.85 awarded against the five acres a lien upon the interest of each of the co-tenants, and that the sale under such judgment was therefore void. But respondent urges other objections against the validity of the judgment which demand notice. Throughout this consideration the fact is to be borne in mind that we are not reviewing this judgment under attack made on direct appeal where errors prejudicial to those appealing would call for a reversal, but we are considering it upon collateral attack, where every intendment is in favor of the judgment, and where mere errors and irregularities will not be considered. Upon collateral attack the judgment will be set aside, generally speaking, for but one of three reasons: Lack of jurisdiction of the person; lack of jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action; or an absolute lack of jurisdiction to render such a judgment as the one given. Moore v. Martin, 38 Cal. 428; Mayo v. Foley, 40 Cal. 281; In re James, 99 Cal. 374, 33 Pac. 1122, 37 Am. St. Rep. 60; Wood v. Jordan, 125 Cal. 261, 57 Pac. 997.

1. The complaint stated a cause of action. The objection to it is that plaintiff Norton is not shown to be a tenant in common with the various defendants in the Pueblo lot, for the assigned reason that the complaint shows that plaintiff Norton's deed to a floating 80 acres was void for uncertainty. Such, however, is not the law. Cullen v. Sprigg, 83 Cal. 56, 23 Pac. 222. The complaint expressly alleged that Norton was the owner of an undivided 80 acres in said Pueblo lot, and that the defendants claim an interest in the same premises. The court in its interlocutory decree found that the defendants were tenants in common. Moreover, the sufficiency of the complaint may not thus be called in question upon such collateral attack. In re James, 99 Cal. 376, 33 Pac. 1122, 37 Am. St. Rep. 60.

2. Summons in the action was not issued until after the expiration of a year. It appears that summons was issued within a year after the filing of the complaint; that subsequently after the expiration of a year, but while the summons was in full force and effect, an amended complaint was filed, bringing in new parties and process, designated "Summons as Amended," was issued, and thereafter served upon the defendants. Return of service was made within the statutory three years after the filing of the original complaint. The only change in the complaint or summons was the bringing in of new parties. The defendant Todd was a party to the original complaint and summons, and the summons as amended and served upon him was identical with the original. The court has full power to amend its process pending its service. Code Civ. Proc. § 128, subd. 8. It is contended that an order of court was necessary for the issuance of such an amended summons, and that no such order is shown. But nothing to the contrary is shown; and, where nothing to the contrary is shown, the existence of such order will be presumed in support of the judgment upon collateral attack. Dowling v. Comerford, 99 Cal. 204, 33 Pac. 853. Moreover, no authority is cited to show that summons issued after one year would be held void upon collateral attack, while in Steves v. Carson, 21 Colo. 280, 40 Pac. 569, the superior court of Colorado, under a statute similar to ours, holds it to be within the discretion of the court to direct issuance of summons after the expiration of the prescribed period.

3. Objection is made that but one referee was appointed instead of three. Section 797, Code Civ. Proc. provides that with the consent of the parties one referee may be appointed instead of three. The interlocutory decree recites that the appointment of one referee was made on consent of all parties, but the effect of the appointment of but one referee, even if it were irregular, would not be to avoid the judgment. It is an error that could not be taken advantage of or inquired into collaterally. Jack v. Cassin, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 228, 28 S. W. 832; Morrill v. Morrill, 20 Or. 96, 25 Pac. 362, 11 L. R. A. 155, 23 Am. St. Rep. 95.

4. Coming thus to the principal objection urged against the validity of this judgment, it is unquestionably true that a party in a partition suit has the right, upon demand, to secure from the court a segregated allotment to him in severalty of the land which may be found to be his. Such was the holding of the court in Emeric v. Alvarado, 64 Cal. 529, 2 Pac. 418, where the question arose upon direct appeal. Nevertheless section 760, Code Civ. Proc., makes provision for cases where, by reason of the impracticability or inconvenience of doing otherwise, the court may set apart portions or parcels to co-tenants, subsequently segregating the interests of such co-tenants. Such was the method adopted here; and, while the nine co-tenants of the five-acre tract would have had the unquestioned right, upon demand to the trial court, or upon direct appeal to this court, to have insisted on further proceedings whereby their several interests should be delimited and set over to them, the judgment in this case is in no sense void because it has assigned to them a designated tract as tenants in common. This was precisely what was done in Grant v. Murphy, 116 Cal. 427, 48 Pac. 481, 58 Am. St. Rep. 188, and the decree in partition was upheld as being proper upon direct attack, while in Linehan v. Hathaway, 54 Cal. 251, where a similar decree awarding lands to tenants in common was under review upon collateral attack, and where the contention was that the judgment was void, this court said: "We cannot so regard it. The court had jurisdiction of the parties and of the subject-matter of the action, and the judgment, if erroneous, cannot be attacked in a collateral proceeding."

5. As to the award of costs covered by sections 768 and 796 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it would seem to be proper, where a share has been set off to co-tenants, that the proportion of the costs should be made a lien upon the share without attempted segregation as to the portion of the costs which each of the co-tenants within that share should be called upon to bear. But however this may be, the award of costs as made certainly has not rendered the judgment void. The most for which respondents here could successfully contend is that the court erred in the exercise of the jurisdiction to award costs, which unquestionably it possessed, but this error within its jurisdiction cannot avail defendants upon this attack, and would not render the judgment void.

No serious question is made as to the validity of the proceedings concerning the sheriff's sale and deed. Such objections as are made are fully covered by what has been said concerning the judgment. Freeman on Execution, §§ 43, 334, 339; Boles v. Johnson, 23 Cal. 226, 83 Am. Dec. 111; Newmark v. Chapman, 53 Cal. 558; Granger v. Sheriff, 140 Cal. 190, 73 Pac. 816.

It follows herefrom that the court erred in holding the judgment in Norton v. Mayhew et al. to be invalid and void, for which reason the judgment and order here appealed from are reversed, and the cause remanded.

VAN LUE v. WAHRLICH-CORNETT CO.

(Civ. 737.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. March 9, 1910.)

1. Exemptions (§ 36*)—Extent—Double Exemptions.

A debtor may not claim the exemption given by Code Civ. Proc. § 690, subd. 3, to farmers, and also the exemption given by subdivision 6 to teamsters.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Exemptions, Dec. Dig. § 36.*]

2. Exemptions (§ 126*)—Extent of Exemptions—Election.

Where a debtor suing for the conversion of property claimed as exempt set forth his exemptions as a farmer and as a teamster, and he entertained a reasonable doubt as to which of the two exemptions he was entitled, the court at the close of plaintiff's case erred in requiring him to elect on which exemption he would stand; he being entitled under the circumstances to plead both exemptions, though he could only have one.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Exemptions, Dec. Dig. § 126.*]

3. Trial (§ 165*)—Nonsuit—Evidence.

A motion for a nonsuit admits the truth of plaintiff's evidence and of every favorable construction, inference, or presumption fairly deducible therefrom.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 373, 374; Dec. Dig. § 165.*]

4. Exemptions (§ 150*)—Extent of Right—Evidence—Questions for Jury.

A debtor suing for the conversion of exempt property seized under an execution on a judgment obtained in October, 1908, claimed exemptions as a farmer and also as a teamster, and showed that for about 10 years he farmed until the spring of 1907, when his crop was destroyed by floods. He retained his horses and some of his implements, intending to resume farming and he made reasonable but unsuccessful efforts to do so. During the interval he earned his living by teaming. On the day of the seizure of the property under execution he had all but concluded arrangements to lease a small farm. Held, that the question whether his former occupation as a farmer had been abandoned, so that his right to exemptions as a farmer had been forfeited, was for the jury.

5. Exemptions (§ 13*) — Abandonment — Change of Calling.

A person does not forfeit his right of exemptions as a member of a given calling because, while seeking in good faith an opportunity to engage therein, he accepts some other employment to earn a living for himself and family.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Exemptions, Dec. Dig. § 13.*]

6. Exemptions (§ 13*)—Forfeiture—Change of Calling.

The length of time which has elapsed since a person actively pursued a given calling is an element to be considered in ascertaining whether he has abandoned the calling, and has thereby forfeited his exemptions as a member thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Exemptions, Dec. Dig. § 13.*]

7. Exemptions (§ 4*)—Statutes—Construction.

Statutes exempting property from execution should be fairly and liberally construed, and, as far as practicable, beneficially to the debtor.

Appeal from Superior Court, Monterey County; B. V. Sargent, Judge.

Action by D. T. Van Lue against the Wahrlich-Cornett Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Daugherty & Lacey, for appellant. Sargent & Bardin and P. E. Zabala, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the defendant taken within 60 days after the entry thereof, in an action to recover damages for the conversion of property claimed by plaintiff as exempt from execution.

Plaintiff had been engaged as a farmer for about 10 years, when in March, 1907, a farm comprising 80 acres, which he held under a lease, and upon which he had been raising beets for about two years, was flooded and his crop of beets destroyed. From that time until October, 1908, when the personal property in question was attached, plaintiff engaged in the business of a teamster. During this time, however, he had retained his horses and some farming implements, intending to return to the farming business, and made various efforts to do so, but without success. In October, 1908, the defendant obtained a judgment against plaintiff in the superior court, upon which an execution was issued, and the personal property in question sold. After the property had been seized plaintiff demanded its return from the sheriff, upon the ground that he was a farmer and teamster, and that, therefore, the property was exempt from execution. Its return being refused, he commenced the present action.

The plaintiff in his complaint claims exemptions both as a farmer and a teamster. The case went to trial, and at the conclusion of plaintiff's case the court, upon motion of defendant, required plaintiff to elect whether he would claim exemption as a teamster or as a farmer. After excepting to the order, he elected to rely on his claim as a farmer, whereupon the defendant moved for a nonsuit on the ground that there was no evidence showing that at the time of the taking of the property plaintiff was a farmer. This motion was granted by the court, to which ruling the plaintiff also duly excepted. The result is that, while it is admitted in the brief of defendant that plaintiff was entitled to a teamster's exemption, he stands deprived of all exemption.

Plaintiff was not entitled to both exemptions. Subdivision, 3, § 690, Code Civ. Proc., relates exclusively to exemptions in favor of judgment debtors who are farmers (Robert v. Adams, 38 Cal. 384, 99 Am. Dec. 413; Murphy v. Harris, 77 Cal. 195, 19 Pac. 377); and subdivision 6 of the same section exempts two horses and their harness, and one cart or wagon, dray, or truck by which a teamster or other laborer habitually earns his living (Dove v. Nunan, 62 Cal. 400). While subdivisions 1, 2, and 10 of section 690 of said Code exempt certain furniture, etc., and earnings of judgment debtors, and probably apply to all vocations mentioned in the section (Robert v. Adams, supra), still we think that a comparison of subdivisions 3 and 6, and a consideration of the scope and spirit of the whole section, force the conclusion that a person cannot claim both the farmer's and the teamster's exemption. Brusie v. Griffith, 34 Cal. 302, 91 Am. Dec. 695; Harlow on Sheriffs and Constables (3d Ed.) p. 463; Morrill v. Seymour, 3 Mich. 65. But we think it was competent for the plaintiff, being in doubt as to which exemption he was entitled to, to set forth both in his complaint, as was done in this case.

In the case of Wilson v. Smith, 61 Cal. 209, the plaintiff in an action for work and labor set forth his cause of action in two counts, one upon an agreement to pay a stipulated price, and the other upon a quantum meruit; and the court held that plaintiff might state his cause of action in two forms where there was a fair and reasonable doubt of his ability to plead them in one mode only. In Remy v. Olds, 99 Cal. xix, 34 Pac. 216, 21 L. R. A. 645, the complaint contained two counts, one for damages on a contract, and the other to recover for materials furnished, etc. The defendant requested the court to require the plaintiff to elect upon which count he would rely. This the court refused to do, and the ruling was assigned as error. The court said: "Conceding that this is an action in which the same cause of action is differently stated in two separate counts, still I think the ruling correct. The right to so plead is well established here [citing cases]. Since it is allowable to state the cause of action in the alternative, using different counts in order to meet any possible phase of the evidence, a party cannot be deprived of the privilege by being compelled to strike out all causes of action save one before the trial commences. It would render the privilege a barren one." See, also, Pomeroy's Code Remedies, § 467; Rucker v. Hall, 105 Cal. 425, 428, 38 Pac. 962; Cowan v. Abbott, 92 Cal. 100, 28 Pac. 213; Stockton, etc., v. Glens Falls Ins. Co., 121 Cal. 167, 53 Pac. 565; Willard v. Carrigan, 8 Ariz. 70, 68 Pac. 538; Woodman v. Davis, 32 Kan. 344, 4 Pac. 262; Pittsburg v. Hedges, 41 Ohio St. 233; 31 Cyc. 117, 121. We think it was error for the trial court, after the plaintiff's case was all in, to require him to elect on which exemption he would stand, as the effect of the court's order was merely to require him to hazard a guess as to the case he had made out. The plaintiff was entitled to one exemption, and from the record it is plain that he entertained a fair and reasonable doubt as to which of the two exemptions he was entitled, and, in order to protect his rights he was warranted in setting forth both exemptions.

We are also of opinion that the action of the court in granting defendant's motion for a nonsuit was erroneous. A motion for a nonsuit admits the truth of plaintiff's evidence, and of every fair construction, inference, or presumption favorable to him deducible therefrom. Archibald Estate v. Matteson, 5 Cal. App. 441, 90 Pac. 723; Estate of Arnold, 147 Cal. 583, 82 Pac. 252; Estate of Welch, 6 Cal. App. 44, 91 Pac. 336. The evidence introduced by plaintiff tended to prove all the material allegations of the complaint, including the allegation that he was a farmer; and the question of whether or not he was entitled to a farmer's or a teamster's exemption should, with proper instructions, have been left to the jury. There was evidence that up to the time his crop was destroyed in the spring of 1907 he had farmed for 10 years; that after he was flooded out he retained his horses and some of his agricultural implements intending to resume the business of a farmer; and that he made every reasonable effort to do so. Indeed, upon the very day of the attachment he had all but concluded arrangements to lease a small farm. The only feature of his case which supports the theory of defendant that he was not a farmer is that he was not thus occupied for a period of about 18 months prior to the levy of the attachment, and that during this period he had earned his living by teaming. Giving the plaintiff, however, the benefit of every reasonable inference and construction deducible from the evidence, we are bound to conclude that he not only in good faith intended to resume farming, but that during the entire 18 months he made every reasonable effort to accomplish this end. We assume that farms cannot be readily rented at all seasons of the year. There can be no doubt that a person does not forfeit his right of exemption as a member of a given calling, because, while seeking in good faith an opportunity to engage therein, he accepts some other employment in order to earn a living for himself and family. No doubt the length of time elapsed since actively pursuing that calling is an element to be considered in ascertaining whether or not it has been abandoned; and while, if the question of whether the plaintiff's former occupation had been abandoned were submitted to us as a question of fact, we might hold that it had, still we think that the lapse of 18 months under the circumstances of this case did not authorize the trial court to take the question from the jury. Before citing cases to support this view, it may not be amiss to call to mind that statutes exempting property from execution should be fairly and liberally construed and, as far as practicable, beneficially to the debtor. Matter of McManus, 87 Cal. 292, 25 Pac. 413, 10 L. R. A. 567, 22 Am. St. Rep. 250; 12 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) p. 75.

In Caswell v. Keith, 12 Gray (Mass.) 351, it is said: "The distinction between withdrawing from the pursuit of a particular trade or occupation, with a determination never to resume it, and a temporary diversion from its prosecution while engaged in conducting some other business or enterprise not intended to be of permanent or durable continuance, is clear and definite. * * * To secure to himself the privileges and benefits intended to be conferred by the provisions of the statute, an artisan is not required to ply his trade without any possible intermission or the occurrence of any interruption in its pursuit. If, for instance, owing to the general stagnation of business, he cannot for a season find remunerative employment in carrying it on, or if, from personal infirmity or other intervening impediment, it becomes necessary or expedient that he should resort temporarily to some other department of industry to obtain means of supporting himself and his family, he cannot, so long as he entertains an intention to return, as soon as circumstances will permit, to occupation and employment in his trade, be said to have given up or abandoned it."

Another case holding that one does not lose his right of exemption by reason of having temporarily suspended his occupation, if he intends to return to it when he has an opportunity, is Harris v. Haynes, 30 Mich. 140. See, also, generally, 18 Cyc. 1416 et seq.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: COOPER, P. J.; HALL, J.

REED & CO. v. HARSHALL. (Civ. 668.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
March 5, 1910.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§§ 694, 704*)—QUESTIONS REVIEWABLE—RECORD.

The assignments that the evidence does not sustain the findings, and that the court erred in failing to find on a material issue, are not reviewable where neither the evidence nor the substance thereof is brought up.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 925*) — REVIEW — PRESUMPTIONS—ABANDONMENT OF COUNTERCLAIM.

Where the record on appeal does not disclose any evidence in support of the counterclaim interposed, and the trial court failed to make a finding on the counterclaim, the court on appeal will presume that there was no evidence on that issue, and that defendant abandoned the counterclaim at the trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 925.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§§ 713, 714*)—RECORD—BRIEFS—SPECIFICATIONS IN TRANSCRIPT—EFFECT.

A statement by counsel for appellant in his brief, and specifications in the transcript, unsupported by either a bill of exceptions or statement of the case, are mere extrajudicial declarations, of which the court on appeal cannot take notice.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. §§ 713, 714.*]

4. NEW TRIAL (§ 131*)—RECORD—STATEMENT OF FACTS—AMENDMENTS.

The rule that, where the defeated party's proposed statement on motion for a new trial is incorrect, the attorney of the successful party must propose amendments to correct it does not apply where no such statement was proposed by the defeated party in the first instance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Dec. Dig. § 131.*]

5. PLEADING (§ 236*)—AMENDMENT OF COMPLAINT—DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT.

Where an action by a foreign corporation, which had not designated, as required by Civ. Code, § 405, a resident on whom process might be served, and hence was not entitled under section 406 to sue, was tried on the merits and submitted for decision, the refusal to permit an amendment and supplemental answer alleging the failure of the corporation to comply with the statute was a proper exercise of the court's discretion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. § 601; Dec. Dig. § 236.*]

6. CORPORATIONS (§ 672*)—FOREIGN CORPORATIONS—RIGHT TO SUE—WAIVER.

The fact that the disability of a foreign corporation to sue because of its failure to designate a resident, as required by Civ. Code, § 405, on whom process might be served was not pleaded before the cause came to issue and trial might be taken as a waiver on the part of defendant of such disability.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 672.*]

7. PLEADING (§ 261*)—AMENDMENTS—ALLOWANCES.

It is not sufficient that a new defense proposed by an amended answer is a legal defense, but it should also be an equitable defense, before it is error to refuse to allow it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Dec. Dig. § 261.*]

8. PLEADING (§ 106*)—DILATORY PLEAS—CONSTRUCTION.

A plea in abatement, or a dilatory plea, is not favored, and must be strictly construed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. § 219; Dec. Dig. § 106.*]

9. CORPORATIONS (§ 667½*)—FOREIGN CORPORATIONS—ACTIONS—PARTIES.

Where an action by a foreign corporation had been tried on the merits, before the question of whether the corporation had paid the license tax imposed by St. 1905, c. 386, as amended by St. 1907, c. 403, requiring payment by corporations of an annual license tax, and providing that the directors in office of a foreign corporation, whose right to do business is forfeited because of failure to pay the tax, shall be the trustees of the corporation, the court, on the testimony of the directors that they were directors, was authorized to substitute the directors of the corporation as plaintiffs in lieu of the corporation, though, strictly speaking, the books of the corporation furnished the best evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 667½.*]

10. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 882*)—INVITED ERROR—RIGHT TO COMPLAIN.

A defendant, in an action by a foreign corporation, who introduced the depositions of directors of the corporation on the motion for leave to file a supplemental answer, alleging that the corporation had not paid the statutory license tax, may not complain because the court considered the same depositions on a motion to substitute the directors as plaintiffs, over the objection that the fact that the deponents were directors should be proved by the corporate books.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Trout, Judge.

Action by Reed & Co., by trustees, against Abraham Harshall. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Joseph Hutchinson, for appellant. Gavin McNab, F. H. Gould, and R. V. Whiting, for respondent.

HART, J. This action was instituted for the purpose of recovering judgment for the sum of $403, alleged to be due for personal services rendered by plaintiff for defendant. The answer, in addition to denying the validity of the claim set out in the complaint, pleads a counterclaim, alleging that the plaintiff is indebted to defendant in the sum of $427.65 for services alleged to have been performed by defendant for plaintiff at the latter's "special instance and request." The cause was tried by the court, and the plaintiff given judgment, from which and the order denying defendant a new trial this appeal is brought to this court.

From the court's findings it is learned that the sum sued for is an alleged balance remaining unpaid for certain work done under a written contract by the plaintiff for defendant, and for which the plaintiff was to receive the sum of $4,403, payable as follows: Two thousand dollars when "one-half the work herein agreed to be done by said contractor shall have been fully completed," $2,000 when all of said work shall have been fully completed, and $403 "35 days after the final completion and acceptance of said work and the filing, in the office of the recorder of said city and county of San Francisco, state of California, of the notice of completion of said work." The court found that the services had been performed as alleged in the complaint, and that there was due plaintiff the sum of $403, for which it was entitled to judgment. The court further found that, about the 1st day of November, 1906, the contract was so modified by agreement of the parties that certain of the excavations provided for by said contract might be left unperformed by the plaintiff, and that "certain other excavations on the lot described in the said contract should be made to a greater depth than those provided for in the said contract, which said modifications of contract were subsequently performed in accordance therewith by the said plaintiff;" that on the 9th day of November, 1906, the performance of the said contract was accepted by the said defendant, with the proviso that a certain small amount of work remaining undone should be completed by said plaintiff; "that thereafter, and prior to the commencement of this action, the said work so provided in said modification of said contract was completed in accordance with the terms of said modification of said contract; and that all the terms and provisions of the original contract as modified by said subsequent agreement have been performed by plaintiff." The propositions presented in appellant's briefs, and upon which a reversal of the judgment and order is urged, are: (1) That the findings are not supported by the evidence; (2) that the action was prematurely brought; (3) that the court omitted to make a finding on the counterclaim pleaded in the answer; (4) that the court erred in making several orders granting and refusing to grant certain motions made after the case had been tried, and while it was yet under submission.

With the exception of a bill embodying exceptions to the orders referred to as having been made by the court after the trial and submission of the issues involved, the record does not present any bill of exceptions or statement on motion for a new trial. In other words, neither the evidence nor the substance thereof, as taken at the trial on the merits, is brought up either through a bill of exceptions or a statement, and the appeal here, so far as the proceedings had at the actual trial of the cause are concerned, in effect amounts to nothing more than an appeal from the judgment on the judgment roll alone. Therefore there is nothing before us upon which we can review the assignment that the evidence does not sustain the findings and the alleged error of the court in failing to find upon a material issue. As to the last-mentioned point—the failure of the court to make a finding on defendant's counterclaim—no evidence being disclosed by the record, the presumption is that no evidence upon that issue was presented by the defendant, and that he abandoned the counterclaim at the trial. The appellant, in his brief, refers for verification of his declaration that a large amount of evidence was received in support of his counterclaim to folios 168, 169 of the transcript, but we find upon an examination of those folios that the reference is to the recitals involved in one of his specifications of particulars, in which it is alleged that the evidence does not justify the decision. Both the statement of counsel for appellant in his briefs and the specifications in the transcript, being unsupported by either a bill of exceptions or statement of the case, are mere extrajudicial declarations, of which we are not, of course, authorized to take notice.

What is said in the foregoing applies with equal force to the contention that the action was prematurely instituted. This claim is based upon the provision of the contract that the payment of the sum alleged in the complaint to be due plaintiff was to be postponed until after 35 days after the final completion and acceptance of the work and the filing of the notice of completion in the office of the county recorder. Counsel declares that the evidence discloses that "no such notice was ever filed," referring for support of the declaration to the folios of the transcript, at which are found specifications of the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the findings, apart from which the transcript is silent as to any evidence having been introduced upon the subject.

The authorities cited by counsel for appellant to the effect that, "if defendant's proposed statement on motion for a new trial was incorrect, the respondent's attorney should have proposed amendments to it, so as to have it correct," can, of course, have no application where, as here, no such statement was proposed by the losing party in the first instance.

The defendant excepted to the orders made on the following motions, all said motions having been made, as stated, after the case had been tried and submitted: (1) Defendant's motion for an order directing commission to issue to take the deposition of Charles H. Ingraham, at Santa Fé, N. M.; (2) defendant's motion for an order permitting him to file a supplemental answer; (3) plaintiff's motion to substitute as plaintiffs certain parties as trustees for the stockholders of said plaintiff corporation; (4) plaintiff's motion for settlement of findings; (5) defendant's motion for an order permitting him to file amended and supplemental answer.

The first and fifth of the motions in the order in which they are above presented were denied and the others granted by the court.

The order refusing to grant defendant's motion for permission to file an amended and supplemental answer, alleging plaintiff's failure to file in the office of the Secretary of State a designation of some person residing within the state upon whom process issued by authority of or under any law of this state may be served, constituted the exercise of a judicial discretion with which, under the circumstances of this case, we are not justified in interfering. The plaintiff is a foreign corporation organized and existing under the laws of Arizona. Section 405 of the Civil Code provides that the above-mentioned designation shall be filed with the Secretary of State, and section 406 of the same Code provides, as a penalty for noncompliance with the requirement of the preceding section, that "no corporation not created by or under the laws of this state is entitled to the benefit thereof, nor can any such corporation maintain or defend any action or proceeding in any court of this state until the corporation has complied with the provisions of the preceding section." It was, as stated, entirely within the discretion of the trial court to allow or disallow the proposed amended answer; but, as the defense sought to be interposed by the proposed supplemental answer involved a mere dilatory plea—a plea in abatement of the action and not to the merits—we doubt not that had the motion been granted, the court would thereby have been guilty of a clear abuse of its discretion. The motion was made after the case had been tried upon its merits and submitted for decision, and the fact that the disability of plaintiff to maintain the action was not pleaded before the cause had come to issue and trial may be taken as a waiver on the part of the defendant of such disability. Cal. Sav. & L. Soc. v. Harris, 111 Cal. 136, 43 Pac. 525; Bernheim Distilling Co. v. Elmore (Cal. App.) 106 Pac. 720; Parmele Co. v. Haas, 171 N. Y. 583, 64 N. E. 440.

Referring to the law of the state of New York similar in effect to the provisions of our law requiring all corporations to pay an annual license tax to the state, and prescribing as a penalty for failure so to do the forfeiture of the right of such corporations to do business in this state, the court in its opinion in the last-mentioned case, at page 583 of 171 N. Y., at page 440 of 64 N. E., says: "The statutes in themselves give no right of action, and are not essential elements of the cause of action stated in the complaint. They are mere revenue regulations, compliance with which is made necessary in order to acquire the right to do business here and to enforce causes of action in our courts. * * * In this case the defendant may waive the provisions of this statute and defend the action brought against him upon the merits, and unless he elects to defend or raise some question under this statute by some affirmative act or pleading, the court will simply look at the cause of action as stated—citing Crane v. Powell, 139 N. Y. 379 [34 N. E. 911]; Rowell v. Janvrin, 151 N. Y. 60 [45 N. E. 398]; Rima v. Rossie Iron Works, 120 N. Y. 483 [24 N. E. 940]. * * * In this case it appears that the defendant has answered, and the answer contains merely a general denial. It would seem to be clear, therefore, that he has waived the right to raise any question based upon the statutes referred to." Besides, "it is not sufficient," says the Supreme Court, in Bank of Woodland v. Heron, 122 Cal. 109, 54 Pac. 538, "that the new defense proposed be a legal defense; it should also be an equitable defense." See, also, Greenwood v. Adams, 80 Cal. 74, 21 Pac. 1134; Harding v. Minear, 54 Cal. 502, 506. Moreover, "pleas in abatement, or dilatory pleas, have never been favored, and are to be strictly construed." Cal. Sav. & L. Soc. v. Harris, supra; Tooms v. Randall, 3 Cal. 438; Larco v. Clements, 36 Cal. 132. In Cooke v. Spears, 2 Cal. 409, 56 Am. Dec. 348, the Supreme Court, upholding the court below in its disallowance of an amendment setting up the statute of limitations, uniquely and forcefully said: "It was claimed solely as a legal advantage, to which at one time he would have been entitled; but it is a wise conservation that it should have but its day in pleading, and no grace of right after, beyond the extent of justice."

Nor did the court abuse its discretion in allowing the substitution of the directors of the plaintiff corporation, as trustees thereof, as plaintiffs in lieu of the corporation itself. By section 10a of an act of the Legislature of 1907 (St. 1907, pp. 746, 747) amendatory of the act of 1905 (St. 1905, pp. 493, 494), requiring the payment by corporations of an annual license tax to the state, it is provided that the directors or managers in office of a domestic corporation, whose charter is forfeited, or of a foreign corporation whose right to do business in this state is forfeited, because of failure to pay such tax, are deemed to be the trustees of such corporation and the stockholders and members of such corporation, and have full power, as such trustees, to settle the affairs of the corporation, and to maintain or defend any action or proceeding then pending in behalf of or against any of said corporations, etc. The court, upon motion of counsel for plaintiff, allowed the substitution mentioned in obedience to the provisions of the act of 1907 above referred to, it appearing from a supplemental answer which defendant, by leave of the court, had previously filed that the plaintiff corporation had not paid to the Secretary of State the required license tax.

It is not pretended by counsel for appellant that, if the corporation had not paid the license tax prescribed by the law, it was not necessary to substitute as plaintiffs the directors of said corporation as the trustees thereof and of the stockholders and members of said corporation. It is the contention, however, that there was not adduced before the court competent evidence from which it could be determined who were the directors of said corporation, and therefore the proper parties to be substituted for the corporation as plaintiffs. The record contains a stipulation entered into on June 12, 1908, by the attorneys for the plaintiff and the attorney for the defendant, by which it was mutually agreed that the depositions of Walter G. Hopkins, Charles H. Ingraham, and Howard S. Reed (the substituted plaintiffs) might be taken in the city of Los Angeles, and, in pursuance of said stipulation, the depositions of Reed and Hopkins were taken before a notary public in said city, and returned to the court. Later, by agreement of the parties, another and further deposition by Reed was taken in the city of San Francisco. These depositions were introduced into the record here on motion of counsel for the defendant himself. The depositions of Reed and Hopkins, in substance, show that the corporation was created and organized under the laws of Arizona, but that its principal office is at Santa Fé, N. M.; that they and said Charles H. Ingraham are the directors of said corporation, the latter being secretary thereof and a resident of Santa Fé. It also appears from these depositions that Hopkins had, on the 30th day of December, 1906, tendered his resignation as a director and manager of the corporation, and that his resignation as manager, but not his resignation as a director, had been accepted. The deposition of Ingraham was not taken, as he was not in Los Angeles when the other depositions were taken, being then, as seen, a resident of New Mexico. The claim of counsel for appellant is that parol testimony is incompetent to prove who the directors or officers of a corporation are; that the books of such corporation constitute the best evidence of the fact. In connection with the point now under consideration, it is further argued that the court erred in its refusal to cause a commission to be issued to take the deposition of Ingraham at Santa Fé, N. M.; the contention being that, as secretary of the corporation, he had in his custody and under his control the corporation's books, from which the only competent proof of the directorate could have been obtained.

As stated in the outset, these motions were initiated and pressed to the attention of the court after the cause had been tried upon the merits of the issue, and while, strictly speaking, the books of the corporation would have furnished the highest and best evidence, in law, upon the question of who were the de jure directors of said corporation, the testimony of Reed and Hopkins was sufficient to establish at least their de facto capacity as directors, and, we think, was sufficient for the purposes of the motion to substitute them as plaintiffs and to justify the court in granting said motion. These witnesses knew whether they were acting as directors, and even if, in truth, they were only de facto directors, they were, according to their testimony, "the directors in office of the affairs of the corporation" at the time of the substitution, and, under the provisions of section 10a of the act of 1907, were to be deemed to be the trustees of the corporation for the purpose of maintaining this action. Furthermore, the depositions were introduced into the record here on the motion of counsel for the appellant himself; and, if the court erred in considering them for the purpose of the motion to substitute the directors as plaintiffs, the error is one of which obviously appellant cannot claim any advantage. Necessarily the foregoing disposes of the point against the contention of appellant that the court erred in refusing to issue a commission for the taking of the deposition of Ingraham at Santa Fé, N. M., and of necessity it follows, from the views we have expressed upon the rulings of the court with regard to the depositions that the court did only what it had to do in settling the findings.

No error appearing in the record, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

TOGNI et al. v. SLOCOMB. (Civ. 680.)

1. BOUNDARIES (§ 37*)—EVIDENCE.

Evidence in an action to determine the boundary between two city lots, depending on the location of the southern line of the block containing the lots, held to show such southern line was marked by a fence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. § 191; Dec. Dig. § 37.*]

2. BOUNDARIES (§ 48*) — MISTAKE—ACQUIESCENCE.

The question of boundary between two city lots, depending on the location of the southern line of the block containing them, such boundary being fixed by the deeds conveying them as a certain distance above such southern line, is not affected by the fact that the location of the southern line, which at the time of the survey was marked on the ground and remained identified and unquestioned for 50 years, was induced by a mistake as to the northern and southern limits of the land of the one platting the block, and that the northern boundary as so located was without his lands.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. § 241; Dec. Dig. § 48.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1051*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

Admission of a declaration of a decedent as to a mistake in locating a line, even if not admissible as against interest, as apparently considered when made, was harmless, the mistake otherwise clearly appearing.

4. EVIDENCE (§ 201*) — ADMISSION AGAINST INTEREST.

As an admission against interest, and as indicating a purchaser understood what property he was buying, the statement in his bid therefor that he was aware the northern line of the property might be in dispute, but that he would be satisfied if he got a certain amount, is admissible in an action to determine boundary.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Dec. Dig. § 201.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; W. B. Wallace, Judge.

Action by Chas. Togni and another against Henry Slocomb. Judgment for plaintiffs. Defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Larkins & Feemster, for appellant. Edwards & Smith, for respondents.

BURNETT, J. The controversy is over a small strip of land in the city of Visalia, county of Tulare. At the trial it was stipulated "that the title to the property involved was formerly in A. B. Atwell, a common grantor; that he owned the property at the time of his death; and that both parties got deeds from the administrator of his estate, and that said administrator had a right to make those deeds."

The deed to plaintiffs calls for the following tract of land: "Beginning at the southwest corner of block No. 1 of Matthew's First addition to the town of Visalia, county of Tulare, state of California, as per the official map now on file in the office of the county recorder of the county of Tulare, state of California, thence running east 264 feet to the east line of said block; thence north 120 feet; thence west 264 feet to the west line of said block; thence south 120 feet to the place of beginning." The conveyance to defendant contained the following description: "Beginning at a point 120 feet north of the southwest corner of block No. 1 of Matthew's First addition to the town of Visalia, as per official map thereof on file in the office of the county recorder of said county; thence running east 264 feet, to east line of said block; thence north 74 feet more or less; thence west 264 feet to the west line of said block; thence south 74 feet more or less to the place of beginning." As seen, defendant's land lies north of that belonging to plaintiffs, and the strip in question extends across the block from east to west and is 35 feet in width from north to south.

The settlement of the controversy depends upon the location of the southern boundary line of said block No. 1, it being the contention of respondents that said line is marked by a fence, which, renewed from time to time, has been on the ground for nearly 50 years. On the other hand, it is insisted by appellant that the true line is some 35 feet further south, and hence the northern line of respondents' property must be located the same distance south from what they claim, leaving the disputed strip covered by appellant's deed. The court found "that along the southerly boundary line as described in plaintiff's complaint, thereinbefore mentioned and forming the actual boundary line of said lot No. 1, is a fence which bounds said block on the south, and which said fence is at the point of beginning as aforesaid and the commencement of plaintiffs' lands hereinbefore mentioned, and said fence extends along the south boundary line of said block No. 1 the entire length of said block from west to east and forms the actual boundary line of said block on the south." It is conceded that if this finding is supported by the evidence then the judgment must be sustained, since the northern line of plaintiffs' land as claimed by them is only 120 feet from this fence.

That this finding is abundantly supported does not admit of any kind of doubt. Certainly, the grantors, if owning the land, had a right to fix the boundaries of the land which they conveyed. It is quite natural that they should mark those boundaries upon the ground. This we find was done at an early date. The northern and southern boundary lines of said block No. 1 were definitely fixed, and thereon fences were erected. It may be that the northern line as thus established was without the exterior limits of the property of the original owner of said lot but, as we shall see, this cannot affect the location of the line in question here. When these lines were first located it was undoubtedly believed that the northern line of said block corresponded with the section line. In this a mistake was made, but this mistake does not render uncertain the identity of said block. The northern fence was originally placed on this supposed line, and afterwards, when the street adjacent thereto, called "South Street," was widened and extended further south a distance of about 35 feet, the fence was moved south also correspondingly, reducing thereby to the same extent the depth of the northern segment of the block. The southern boundary line, however, as we have stated, has been identified and unquestioned for nearly 50 years. It was marked on the ground at the time of the original survey, it has ever since been recognized and acquiesced in by all parties, and it has been attested by the fence put there by the owners of the property with the intention of having said fence constitute a visible and substantial memorial of the southern extremity of the block. The finding of the court in this regard is "that said fence was built in 1860 on the south line of said block No. 1 of Matthews First addition; that prior to the building of said fence surveyors were on the ground and marked it off; that said fence was placed on the south boundary line of said block No. 1 after said surveyors had surveyed the ground as aforesaid; that said fence has been maintained at the same place ever since its erection in 1860 as aforesaid."

Turning to the evidence, we find that one Mary Young testified: "I have resided in Visalia 51 years, and am acquainted with block No. 1, Matthews First addition to the city of Visalia, and have been acquainted with said property ever since I can remember. I know something about a fence, on or about the south line of said block No. 1. I know only where the south line of said block No. 1 is by the fence that is there. I think said fence has been there, as well as I can remember, since 1859 or 1860. I saw the surveyors surveying there, or surveying the line of course. The fence was built shortly afterwards; could not tell who built it, but I think it was built by Joshua Lewis. * * * During all these years I never heard any of the Atwells claim any of the property south of the said fence. I have always lived down near that community; so far as my knowledge the property of the Atwells as possessed by them has always been north of said fence. All the property south of that fence was in the possession of Mr. Creighton and Mr. Griffin. * * * When that road (South street) was extended, they threw out somewhere in the neighborhood of 30 or 35 feet, because there were five or six rows of grape vines thrown out on the road; a strip of land about 30 or 35 feet wide was taken off along the north side of the piece of land the Atwells claimed inside of their fence, and they moved their fence back about 30 or 35 feet and that strip of land went into the street. The fence they moved back had been there about 29 years, as near as I can get at it."

A. T. Griffin also testified that no one to his knowledge, whoever owned any part of block No. 1, claimed any property south of that fence, and that "no other boundary line was ever put there between blocks 1 and 2."

Seth Smith, the county surveyor, testified to the establishment of the northeast corner of said block and the opening of South street, which necessitated the change of the northern boundary of the block, and that the fence was moved back accordingly.

What purported to be an official map of Matthews addition, over the objection of appellant, was received in evidence. But whether properly admitted or not is of no importance, as it is too meager to throw any light upon the disputed tract. The identification of block No. 1, at least as far as the southern boundary is concerned, is made complete by the testimony to which we have already referred, and the reference to the map may be disregarded. There can be no doubt that when a conveyance was made of a strip of land beginning at the southwest corner of said lot it was the intention of the parties and so understood that the western termination of said fence should be the initial point, as this fence was the established southern boundary of said lot.

In Banks v. Moreno, 39 Cal. 239, it is said: "In grants of real estate it is not always necessary to describe it by metes and bounds, or by a reference to actual or artificial monuments, nor by courses and distances. If the tract granted have a well-known name, and the boundaries of the tract known by that name are notorious and well defined, a grant of the tract by its name would doubtless convey the title to the whole. In like manner, a grant describing the tract by reference to the known occupation of the grantor or another—or to another instrument containing a sufficient description of the premises—would be sufficient. In short, any description will suffice which identifies the land granted with such certainty that the specific parcel intended to be granted can be ascertained either by the calls of the instrument, as applied to the land, or by aid of the descriptive features of the grant. These are familiar propositions, too well known to the profession to need the citation of authorities."

Appellant objected to the question asked of the county surveyor, "What did Mr. Atwell say about that lost corner?" The objection was overruled, and the witness answered: "If I recollect the exact words he said, it was about 33 feet north of where the true line would come." The evidence seems to have been brought within the rule permitting the declaration of a deceased person "made against his interest in respect to his real property." It is probably true, as pointed out by appellant, that the said Atwell owned at the time a strip of land on the south side of the lot, but upon appellant's theory of this case the mistake in the location of the said section line would affect Atwell's property in the same manner as if it had been adjacent to said South street. Atwell appeared to think so, as he said "the line should be straight, and the government survey should be straight and we can straighten it now better than any other time; and it hurts me worse than anybody else." But the testimony could not have affected the result, as it otherwise appears clear that the mistake was made in the original survey, and, as we have seen, this circumstance has really no bearing upon the conclusion of the trial court as to the identity of the southern boundary line of said lot No. 1.

The bid of appellant for the purchase of the property now owned by him, addressed to the administrator of the estate of the said A. B. Atwell, deceased, was admitted over objection. It was therein stated that "I am aware of the fact that the north line of said property may be in dispute, but will feel myself satisfied should I get 39 feet south of that certain fence which extends along the north side of what is known as the A. B. Atwell tract on which the brick building above referred to is situated." This was clearly admissible as an admission against interest, and as indicative of appellant's understanding of what property he was purchasing and paying for. At the time of his bid, and also, we must assume, at the time of the sale, he was satisfied with 39 feet. The only surprising thing is that he was dissatisfied with the ruling of the court confining him to that tract which he purchased and paid for.

All the points made by appellant have received careful attention, but we are convinced that the decision of the lower court is correct, and the judgment and order denying the motion for a new trial are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. WARREN. (Cr. 144.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. March 8, 1910.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1158*)—APPEAL—QUESTIONS OF FACT—VOLUNTARY NATURE OF CONFESSION.

Where there is a sharp conflict in the testimony whether a confession was voluntary, the finding of the trial court must, like its finding on any other disputed fact, be deemed conclusive on appeal.

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 531*)—CONFESSIONS—ADMISSIBILITY.

The owner of stolen property applied to the police for assistance in its recovery. During the investigation of the circumstances and before the arrest of accused, a police officer believed that accused was cognizant of the theft, and requested that he tell of the whereabouts of the property. Several days later, after the property had been recovered and further evidence of the guilt of accused obtained, accused made a confession. The police denied the testimony of accused that the confession was not made voluntarily. Held to justify the court in holding that the confession was made voluntarily.

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 394*) — EVIDENCE WRONGFULLY OBTAINED—ADMISSIBILITY.

A letter written by accused while in jail, and strongly tending to prove his guilt, is admissible in evidence, though the letter was procured by strategy and fraud.

The chief ground, and indeed the only one worthy of consideration, upon which appellant bases his contention for a reversal is that the admission in evidence of defendant's confession over his objection constituted prejudicial error. Appellant claims that the confession was not made voluntarily, but that he was induced to make it by reason of the chief of police and another officer assuring him (together with other promises which, if made, were sufficient to render the confession inadmissible) that if the valuables stolen were returned and he would "tell the whole business," the prosecution would be dropped and the case dismissed. Not only did these officers deny making the several statements and representations attributed to them by defendant, and upon the strength of which he claims to have made the confession, but they denied using any language of like import. It thus appears there is a sharp conflict in the testimony of the witnesses upon a question of fact, as to which, like any other disputed fact, the finding of the trial court must be deemed conclusive.

Upon discovering that her diamonds had been stolen from the box wherein they were placed, which box was deposited in the custody of the cashier of the bathhouse where she went in bathing, the owner applied to the chief of police to assist her in their recovery. During his investigation of the circumstances connected with the commission of the crime, and before defendant was arrested, the chief of police said to him: "I am satisfied that you know exactly where the diamonds are, and come through and tell me where they are; the game is young." We are unable to perceive how this language could be construed as a promise of immunity. The words "the game is young" have no secret or hidden meaning. The police officer was engaged in an effort to recover the stolen goods, and being satisfied that defendant was cognizant of the theft, requested that he tell of their whereabouts, thus relieving the officer from the duty of a further search. The cases of People v. Williams, 133 Cal. 165, 65 Pac. 323, and People v. Thompson, 84 Cal. 598, 24 Pac. 384, have no bearing upon the question. In the former case, the defendant's admission was excluded from evidence because it was obtained by duress, while in the latter the defendant was induced to confess by reason of the sheriff telling him, in response to an inquiry, it would be better for him to make a full disclosure. In the case at bar it is significant that the confession was not made until several days after the alleged promise of immunity, and after the officer had recovered possession of the stolen property, and obtained further evidence of defendant's guilt. The direct evidence of the officers contradicting the testimony of defendant, as well as the inferences fairly deducible from circumstances, the existence of which was conclusively shown by the evidence, or admitted by defendant, fully justified the court in holding the confession to have been made voluntarily and without promise of any kind whatsoever.

While in jail defendant wrote a letter to one who had been his accomplice in the commission of the crime. The contents of this letter strongly tended to prove defendant's guilt. It was received in evidence over defendant's objection that it was procured by strategy and fraud. In the recent case of People v. Swaile (Cal. App.) 107 Pac. 134, this court, in discussing an objection of like character, said: "Though papers and other subjects of evidence may have been illegally taken from the possession of the party against whom they are offered, or otherwise unlawfully obtained, this is no valid objection to their admissibility if they are pertinent to the issue. 1 Greenleaf on Evidence (16th Ed.) § 254a." Moreover, there was evidence tending to prove that defendant's surrender of the letter was voluntary.

Other points urged by appellant are deserving of no consideration, other than to say that they are wholly without merit.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

SANTA BARBARA COUNTY v. YATES et al. (Civ. 760.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. March 15, 1910. Rehearing Denied April 13, 1910; Denied by Supreme Court May 12, 1910.)

EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 188*)—PROCEEDINGS TO CONDEMN RIGHT OF WAY—BOND OF PETITIONERS—COLLATERAL ATTACK.

Pol. Code, § 2683, requires that the petitioners for the condemnation of a right of way for a road must accompany the petition with a sufficient bond, to be approved by the board of supervisors, in double the probable cost of the viewing and laying out or altering of any road, conditioned that the bondsmen will pay all the cost of viewing and surveying in case the prayer is not granted. Section 2690 provides that "no informality in the proceedings of the board shall vitiate said suit, but the said order of the board directing the district attorney to bring suit shall be conclusive proof of the regularity thereof." The bond presented by petitioners provided that the bondsmen "will pay all the costs of viewing and surveying in case the prayer of said petition is not granted and the said road finally not opened." Held, that the insertion in the bond of the provision "and the said road finally not opened" does not render the bond defective; and, if it did, the defect could not be attacked collaterally in the condemnation proceedings.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; Samuel E. Crow, Judge.

Proceeding by the County of Santa Barbara against Mary M. Yates and others to condemn a right of way for a public road. From the judgment of condemnation, Mary M. Yates appeals. Affirmed.

H. P. Starbuck and Canfield & Starbuck, for appellant. Wm. S. Day and Wm. G. Griffith, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is a proceeding instituted by the county of Santa Barbara to condemn a right of way for a public road. Mary M. Yates, one of the defendants in the proceeding, appeals upon the judgment roll accompanied by a bill of exceptions from the judgment of condemnation.

The sole question presented for consideration is the alleged insufficiency of the bond, which, under the provisions of section 2683, Political Code, is required to accompany the petition for the opening of the road. This section provides that: "The petitioners must accompany the petition with a good and sufficient bond, to be approved by the board of supervisors, in double the amount of the probable cost of the viewing and laying out or altering of any road, conditioned that the bondsmen will pay all the costs of viewing and surveying in case the prayer is not granted." The bond presented with the petition was conditioned that the bondsmen "will pay all the costs of viewing and surveying in case the prayer of said petition is not granted, and the said road finally not opened." It is contended that the insertion in the bond of the words italicized renders the bond void, and that the defect appearing in the bond itself objection thereto may be taken collaterally in the proceeding to condemn the property. Conceding the bond to be defective as claimed, we are nevertheless of the opinion that objection thereto upon such ground cannot be raised collaterally.

While the law requires certain preliminary steps to be taken before the board of supervisors prior to the maintenance of an action to condemn the property of nonconsenting landowners, jurisdiction to determine the sufficiency of such steps, or whether they have been properly taken, is vested solely in the board of supervisors. Its determination therein must be deemed the final judgment of a competent tribunal having jurisdiction in a proceeding entirely distinct and separate from the action to condemn. The order directing the district attorney to institute the action is in the nature of a judgment adjudicating upon the sufficiency of all prior proceedings requisite to the making of the order. If the proceedings be irregular, or any essential step therein wanting, objection thereto should be taken by obtaining a review upon certiorari of such proceedings in the proper court. Not only is this rule prescribed by section 2690 of the Political Code, which provides that "no informality in the proceedings of the board shall vitiate said suit, but the said order of the board directing the district attorney to bring suit shall be conclusive proof of the regularity thereof," but it finds ample support in the authorities. Humboldt County v. Dinsmore, 75 Cal. 604, 17 Pac. 710; County of Siskiyou v. Gamlich, 110 Cal. 94, 42 Pac. 468; County of San Luis Obispo v. Simas, 1 Cal. App. 175, 81 Pac. 972; County of Sutter v. Tisdale, 136 Cal. 474, 69 Pac. 141. In the case last cited it is said: "* * * * The form of the bond which was presented with the petition * * * became immaterial, and evidence in reference thereto * * * was properly excluded by the court." In San Luis Obispo v. Simas, supra, it is said that "none of the intermediate orders or proceedings are reviewable in this action," which "shall be determined by the court or jury in accordance with the rights of the respective parties as shown in court, independent of said proceedings before the board." While the taking of the preliminary steps required should be alleged in the complaint, it seems that the order directing the bringing of the action is in itself proof of the regularity of such proceedings.
